Mr. Lusk offered to prove that witness went to Sam to borrow money for her husband in 1869; that Sam said he had just spent part of his money on his new house, and that he had loaned the remainder to Sam Ashurst.

Witness stated that she went with Sam Ashurst to see William at a San Francisco sanitarium, as stated by Ashurst on the stand. Witness stated that the subject of a loan for herself, mentioned by Ashurst, was not broached on the occasion of the visit. Witness was with William at the sanitarium next morning, and William did not go to the Russ House to see Ashurst. Witness stated that the matter of obtaining money from William to redeem certain property had been entirely settled before this time.

Mr. Lusk asked witness what steps she had taken in 1893 to trace a Spanish woman said to hold the note, and said to be an illigitimate niece of William. The question was not allowed.

Witness held a conversation with plaintiff at the Owl lodging house in San Francisco in 1893, when plaintiff stated that William begrudged himself drinking brandy at $5 per bottle while he was in the sanatarium; that plaintiff said she could not see why he begrudged the price when he had no children and owed not a dollar in the world.

In reply to Mr. Johnson, witness said she had been employed in the mint since November 1893.

Deposition Of John W. Bowers.

Mr. Lusk began reading the deposition of John W. Bowers taken at Chico on March 4, 1892. Mr. Lusk offered to prove by the deposition that Sam worked for several parties at $40 per month; that Sam told witness he had a hard time in getting to California, and that he brought no money. The proof was not allowed. Mr. Lusk offered to prove that William was worth $50,000 at the time he turned over the 800 ewes to Sam. Objection sustained.

SATURDAY'S SESSION.

When Court convened this morning Judge Pukey announced, "I wish to say this morning that after the statement of counsel and argument upon that line of testimony that was brought out yesterday, after considering the matter, I have decided to rule that there will be no more evidence permitted or attempted to be introduced as to the business relations between and the business standing of, or the property or wealth of Samuel Murdock or William Murdock, or Sheep Sam as Samuel was called, whichever name it is. And that will be the rule of evidence in this case from this on. I have allowed the greatest latitude in regard to those matters, and the defendants have the benefit of all exceptions and rulings of the Court, and it is now the order of this Court that that line of testimony and evidence be excluded from this time on.

In regard to offers to prove, the Court will impose this rule strictly; that hereafter all offers to prove can be made in writing and handed to me, which I will pass upon promptly, or else all offers to prove must be made not in the presence of the jury. They will be excluded during such offers, if they are not made in writing.

This can be done in that way, and when the matter comes up in depositions, an exception can be taken to all of those questions without reading the question, and much less reading the answer, and if upon that point, you desire to offer proof of anything, the offer, as heretofore stated, must be made in writing, which I will promptly pass upon, or it must be made not in the presence of the Jury. They will be excluded.

I hope you understand this as I think the matter has been gone into fully with a number of witnesses, and the defendants have the benefit, of course, of all rulings and exceptions, and the record seems to be complete in that line.

"To this Mr. Lusk excepted. He said "The defendants desire to except to each branch and sub-division, that is, to the order of the Court made in reference to testimony and offers of proof this morning. The defendants desire to except to the matter as a whole and except especially to each sub-division and branch of the order."

The Court: "The record shows that I have excluded all further testimony upon the business relations of William Murdock and Samuel Murdock—their business relations and dealings and standings, and especially those of Sheep Sam as he is commonly called."

Mr. Lusk: "I take an exception to that, and also an exception to any other made in the general order this morning in reference to the depositions and offers, and to all the order as a whole, and to the subdivision."

Thus was the matter which has been engrossing the attention of the Court and attorneys for several days ruled upon and excepted to by the defense.

J. B. DeJarnatt was Called.

Mr. Lusk. Q. "Without making anything that can be considered as an offer, so that I may [illegible], I [illegible] state [illegible] want to prove in [illegible] introduced in the documents in front of me, and [illegible] to [illegible] on, then I would like to [illegible] it, which I will make in your presence or in the presence of the jury, or in any way you see fit. The branch of the case I desire to prove by Mr. DeJarnatt is the examination of the records of Colusa county, and the statements therefrom of all lands deeded in this county, as shown by the records, to William Murdock from 1873 to 1880, and a similar statement of all lands in this county, deeded to Gawn W. Murdock from 1853 up until 1880, and a similar statement of the lands deeded to Sheep Sam Murdock. The purpose of the two branches of the testimony, that is, the branch as to the finances of William Murdock, to show by them and in connection with other testimony to be offered, that all of the lands held by William Murdock were paid for out of moneys other than moneys got by him from Sheep Sam, and the part of the testimony referring to the deeds to Gawn W. Murdock, the land acquired by Gawn W. Murdock, to show that the lands acquired although deeded in Gawn W. Murdock's name, were acquired and must have been acquired by the partnership money of Samuel Murdock and his son Gawn, for the purpose of showing that all the money, that is to say, that all that could have been reasonably expected to be made out of the business owned by them was put by them into land and therefore, could not have gone from Sam to William Murdock as a consideration for this note.

"The defendants offer to show by the witness J. B. DeJarnatt, now upon the stand, that he is an experienced and qualified Searcher of Records of many years standing, living at Colusa, and that he has made a careful examination of the records of Colusa county up until the date of the division of the county in the year 1890 or 1891, and that a list offered in connection with his testimony in evidence, contains a true statement of all the deeds by which property, real property, has been conveyed in Colusa county from the year 1853 to 1891, by which real property has been conveyed to William Murdock, deceased, and that he has also made a list of the records of the county which is offered in connection with his testimony, showing all property which has been conveyed in Colusa county which appears on the records. The list of deeds—of all the deeds recorded in records of Colusa county showing conveyances of real property to Gawn W. Murdock, the husband of the plaintiff, in said county, from the year 1853 to the 1891; also the list of all property conveyed in the county, as shown by the records of Colusa county to have been conveyed to Samuel Murdock the father of Sheep Sam.

"And in connection with that testimony the defendants offer the original deeds themselves, or a certified copy of [illegible] Colusa [illegible] William Murdock from 1853 to 1891. And also offer to show in connection with these deeds, to prove by other testimony that the consideration [illegible] of the land [illegible] to William Murdock came from funds acquired by William Murdock as the products of his land and stock business, and none of it came from the funds furnished or loaned to him, or furnished to him in any manner by Samuel Murdock, the father of Gawn Murdock. And I offer in connection with that, the deeds which came from the Central Pacific Railroad Company, quite a number, 7 or 8 in all, and part from E. H. Miller, seven or eight in all. I offer to prove by the deposition of witnesses taken in San Francisco, the dates when the land was purchased and when the payments were made, and in connection with their testimony, we offer to show that payments were made from moneys other than moneys received by Wm. Murdock from Samuel Murdock, and in reference to the list of deeds conveying land from different parties to Gawn W. Murdock, we offer to show by a certified copy of the deeds themselves, that (18 in number) property was conveyed to Gawn Murdock in the county of Colusa—real estate, and for considerations aggregating in all considerable more than $50,000. The testimony being offered for the purpose of showing that the property must have been purchased out of the proceeds and earnings and had come from and the partnership business of Samuel and Gawn Murdock, his son. And for the purpose of showing that so much was used for the purpose of buying land, that it would not have been possible for Samuel Murdock, out of the business of said partnership, to have had or accumulated or had the money said to have been loaned, or alleged to have been loaned, by him to William Murdock. And in reference to the list of conveyances of land in this county to Samuel Murdock, the father of Sheep Sam, the conveyances are offered by certified copies from the records of Colusa county, and are offered for the purpose of showing that all of the land conveyed in this county to Samuel Murdock was by him held and conveyed to his grandsons, and there is offered in connection with that, certified copies of the deeds from Samuel Murdock, showing that all land received by Samuel Murdock, or conveyed to him between 1854 and the time of his death, in 1869, was held by him and conveyed by him to his grandsons. And for the purpose of showing that such land so acquired by him must have been often by the partnership property or the funds arising from the partnership business, or the business carried on, first by himself, and later, in partnership with his son Gawn, and that the two negative the idea that after the purchase of so much land, he could have had so much money left to have loaned Billy Murdock the moneys alleged to have been loaned by him to [illegible] Murdock."

Mr. Lusk also offered to prove by W. L. Bransford, searcher of records, of Red Bluff, all the deeds to property in Tehama county executed to Sam and Gawn from 1853 to 1885, [illegible] that no money was [illegible] Sam to loan William.

The attorney also offered to prove by De Jarnatt and Bransford all the mortgages held by Sam and Gawn on property in Colusa and Tehama [illegible] during the period stated, [illegible] the amount of money loaned by Sam and Gawn.

Mr. Lusk offered to prove by a [illegible] well known man whom he [illegible] that from 1860 to 1880 William was not a borrower, but a loaner of money.

Mr. Lusk offered to prove by Mary Compton, sister of William, that she lived with William from 18[illegible] to 1868, that he had many cattle and large sums which he loaned, that in 1860 William was worth $75,000 or $100,000; that Sam was poor as compared with William; that witness saw the two men at William's house in 1877 when Sam told William plaintiff was mad at remarks he made; that she had thrown his trunk out the window and driven him away.

The jury was recalled.

Adam Compton on the Stand

Adam Compton was called. Witness was a nephew of William. After William's death witness turned over all of William's checks to Lusk. William sent no seed wheat to witness' place in 1879; William drove tan horses.

These questions were asked in order to contradict the testimony of T. J. Kirkpatrick.

Witness was not allowed to tell what William had said to him just before his death, about signing the note.

Henry Compton on the Stand.

Henry Compton was called. Witness identified a memorandum book of William's which he had found after the old man's death. Witness had seen William writing in the book. Witness never saw William driving a one horse buggy.

The deposition of Samuel G. Fr[illegible] relating to financial circumstances of William and Sam was not allowed.

The jury was excluded while Mr. Lusk offered to prove similar matters by the deposition of George M[illegible]. Objection sustained.

Mr. Lusk stated that the ruling of the Court had interfered with his program for the morning and it was decided to adjourn until half past ten Tuesday morning.

Mr. Johnson had made several statements to the effect that the photographic enlargements had magnified the characteristics of the originals. General Barnes wished to take any paper in evidence, preferably the note, and have expert Kytka make a photographic enlargement of it this afternoon, in the presence of the jury, for the purpose of comparison. The Court declined to instruct the jury to be present.

THE DAILY PR

[illegible] DAILY IS-UED BY THE TRI-WEEKLY PROMOTER DURING THE HEARIN[illegible]

VOL. 3 WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, THURSDA[illegible]

CONTRARY TESTIMONY

Many Witnesses Give Evidence Which Conflicts With That Of Witnesses For The Plaintiff.

Jack Powers Recalled

When Court convened this morning Jack Powers was recalled by Mr. Johnson for further cross-examination. He was asked many questions as to how he fixed the dates of hauling lumber and grain for William Murdock as recited in his testimony of yesterday. Witness did not think William was away from home on Sept. 13th. He knew William did not go any distance from home because he was at home at night.

Henry Compton Recalled.

Henry Compton was recalled. Witness stated that William and witness' brother Ira went to Surprise Valley in 1887 and returned about September 1st. Witness visited William at the "adobe ranch" about September 15th. Witness fixed the dates by the diary kept by his sister. Witness testified that William attended Seaver's sale at Colusa in September 1887; that William spent the night preceding the sale and the night following it at witness' house.

Ira Compton On The Stand.

Ira Compton was called. Witness had assisted Adam Compton in collecting all William's papers and returned checks. All had been given to Mr. Lusk.

Witness accompanied William to Surprise Valley in 1887, where they remained three weeks. They saw T. J. Cummings, who was then William's partner in the stock business, at Surprise Valley.

Witness attended the last two days of the State Fair in 1890. William was not there at that time, but plaintiff was. Witness was introduced to plaintiff by Gawn Murdock at the Western Hotel. Plaintiff said nothing about William being at the Fair.

Chas. R. Mayhew On The Stand.

Chas. R. Mayhew of Red Bluff was called. Witness was treasurer of Tehama county from 1876 to 1878, and ex-officio tax collector.

Mr. Lusk offered in evidence a certified copy of the recapitulation of taxes of Tehama county in 1877. Mr. Lusk offered the copy in evidence to prove that Assessor Jackson Eby had in his possession only $300 or $400 at the time Cam Ashurst claims Eby loaned him $10,000 of the county money.

Mr. Lusk offered a certified copy of record of the Supervisors of July 2, 1877 for the purpose of showing when Jackson Eby turned over the assessment roll of Tehama county.

Mr. Lusk offered in evidence certain entries appearing in the cash book of treasurer of Tehama county for 1876 and and 1877. The assessments total $81,063. This amount was paid to witness as tax collector.

A copy of the road and hospital tax receipts for 1877 was placed in evidence. A copy of the null assessments of 1877 was placed in evidence. A copy of the treasurer's settlement with the county was placed in evidence; also a copy of the delinquent assessment roll of 1877.

The total sum of taxes collected in 1877 and turned over to witness as treasurer was $81,168.14.

Mrs. Mary Compton On The Stand.

Mrs. Mary Compton was called. Witness is a sister of William. Witness lived at the Garden ranch in 1887; knew William and Ira Compton went to Surprise Valley; did not believe William went to the State Fair in September of that year. Witness was not allowed to state what William said to her on his death bed about the note.

Mr. Lusk read from the deposition of the plaintiff. In it plaintiff stated that she did not know how much Sam loaned William; she heard the two men say it was $100,000 when the note was made. Plaintiff said the note was given to her instead of Sam at the latter's request. She and Sam were always on good terms. Plaintiff stated Sam paid William $20,000 in $20 pieces when the note was made; that Sam got the $20,000 by selling mutton sheep and wool; he did not get it from anybody; it arose from the sale of produce. William was at plaintiff's house three times, at least, after the note was given. Plaintiff thought William suggested making the rate of interest one per cent per month.

Notes paid by William were torn up.

B. H. Burton On The Stand.

B. H. Burton was called. Witness stated that plaintiff did not present her claim in person. Gawn Murdock never talked to witness about the claim.

Mr. Lusk offered to prove what witness' conversation with Dr. Sehorn was. The offer was not allowed as the Court had ordered Dr. Sehorn's testimony stricken out.

The defense offered ten cancelled notes of William's in evidence for the purpose of showing that he preserved such papers.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Expert Kytka was recalled to the stand. He exhibited a photograph on glass which he stated was a reduction from an enlarged photograph of the note signature back to the original size. The expert placed the glass photo over the signature of the note and stated that they tallied exactly. The Court and jury viewed the transposed signatures. The object of this reduction was to prove whether the lines of the signature are distorted in the enlarged pictures.

Kytka exhibited an enlarged picture of a small chart on which were a face, two sets of parallel lines and a protractor. The expert measured the enlarged picture to show that the parallel lines remained parallel and that other lines retained their relative positions.

Mrs. Elinor Murdock was called to the stand for the purpose of showing that a certain cancelled note for $9,000, introduced this morning was payable to "old Sam" and not to "Sheep Sam."

Mr. Johnson asked the witness if Cam Ashurst asked her on the day he first testified whether he went home on the next day after he and she visited William at the sanitarium or the second day thereafter, and that she replied on the next day. Witness denied making the statement.

L. J. Klemmer was called and stated part of Wm. Murdock's signature to a certain check in evidence was written by himself.

Mr. Lusk offered in evidence a certified copy of a mortgage recorded in Tehama county in 1876, made by W. W. Watkins to Gawn W. Murdock for $2,000; also a mortgage from Watkins to Gawn dated 1876 for $3,400; also an assignment of the two mortgages by Gawn to Sam in 1877; also a mortgage from W. W. Watkins to Sam dated 1878 for $1600; also a deed from W. W. Watkins to Sam of the land covered by the three in consideration of the sum of $9032.80; also deed from Sam to Edmund Murdock dated 1887, and another of the same date to Stanley Murdock, the two conveying all the property obtained from Watkins.

George G. Murdock On The Stand.

George G. Murdock of Upper Lake was called. Witness was a nephew of William and a son of "old Gawn" Murdock. Plaintiff and the family visited at witness' home in the fall of 1881. At that time witness had a conversation with his father and Gawn in the woods.

Witness was not allowed to state whether Gawn had said that he had got the best of his father in their settlement; that he had got nearly all the property, which was right as he had worked very hard for it.

Plaintiff and family had visited witness' home again in 1887. A conversation had been held about William. Plaintiff told witness that he ought to make up with William and get part of his property when he died as he was worth about a $1,000,000; William owed nothing and that he had a large amount in the bank; that William was worth more than the Glenn estate as he owed nothing, while the Glenn estate was in debt.

Mrs. Lizzie Smith On The Stand.

Mrs. Lizzie Smith of Upper Lake was called. Witness is a sister to George Murdock. She corroborated the testimony of the previous witness about the conversation of 1887. George Murdock asked if William was not in debt and Gawn had replied as before stated.

Witness identified several letters written to her by plaintiff and they were placed in evidence.

Mr. Lusk began reading the deposition of Sam Lewis of Red Bluff as to the reputation of Cam Ashurst. An objection was argued until the Court adjourned at 4:15 p. m. in order to allow juror Carmichael to go to Chico.

Say—Why pay $40 or $50 for a bicycle when you can buy a Hartford equipped with single tube or American Dunlop Clincher tire for $30. Again we have the Vedette at $25, another good wheel. Drop in and examine them at Freeman's.

MORE BLOWS AT MURDOCK NOTE.

EVIDENCE TO PROVE IT IS A FORGERY.

STRAIGHT CONTRADICTION OF TESTIMONY PRESENTED BY THE PLAINTIFF.

Conflict of Statements as to the Whereabouts of William at Certain Dates Vital to the Issue.

[illegible]

WILLOWS, May [illegible].—Flat contradictions of witnesses in the Murdock case have ceased to cause surprise and even impeachment proceedings have [illegible] lost [illegible] to cause more than a ripple of excitement. The defense continued today in offering rebuttal testimony aimed at the salient points of the structure Mary Helen Murdock has erected about the note which bears interest of $1000 per month.

A deal of attention has been given to the $20,000 which the plaintiff says Sam Murdock gave William on September 3, 1877, the day the alleged note was made. Cam Ashurst claims he paid Sam $10,000 of this amount on the day before, and that the money had been secretly loaned him from the funds of Tehama county by Assessor Jackson Eby. The defense claim that Eby settled with the county in July, 1877, and when he next settled in January, 1878, he turned over less than $400. Charles R. Mayhew, who was Treasurer of Tehama county at that time, was on the stand to-day with certified copies of all his own records and those of Assessor Eby for 1877, showing that Eby settled in full on July 2d.

The plaintiff and E. J. Robinson testified that William Murdock acknowledged the note to them at the State Fair in 1887. Henry and Ira Compton testified to-day that William accompanied Ira to Surprise Valley and returned on September 1, 1887. Henry Compton stated that he saw William at home on September 15th, and both the Comptons and others stated that William attended a sale at Colusa on September 20th. They did not believe he was in Sacramento in September.

Attorney Lusk read from plaintiff's deposition, made last year, her statement that she did not know how much Sam had loaned William, that she and Sam were on good terms, and that William destroyed several notes held by Sam as he paid them. Lusk introduced ten cancelled notes to show that William preserved such papers. Lusk offered certified copies of mortgages and deeds from the records of Tehama county for the purpose of contradicting minor statements of Gawn Murdock. George and Lizzie Murdock, children of William's brother, testified that Gawn and the plaintiff had told them in 1887 that William owed no money.

Expert Kytka exhibited a photographic reduction of one of his enlarged pictures to show that his lense does not distort.

[illegible] ing the trial of the Murdock note case an attempt was to-day made to impeach the reputation of a witness. As the witness in question, C. B. Ashurst, is brother of the plaintiff and a well-known man, the matter stirred up no little excitement.

Adam Compton, a nephew of William Murdock, and co-executor of his will, was first called to the stand. He testified as to the mountain trip made by his brother Ira and his uncle, William Murdock, in the fall of 1887, and said he did not believe his uncle attended the State Fair of 1887. On cross-examination he acknowledged that he was not positive as to exact dates. Ira Compton, Adam's brother, told of the trip to Modoc county with his Uncle William in the fall of 1887. He also did not think his uncle attended the 1887 State Fair. Charles R. Mayhew, who was Treasurer and Tax Collector of Tehama county in 1876 and 1877, was called and defense introduced a number of transcripts from county records, all with the purpose of showing the amount of moneys in the hands of Jackson Eby, County Assessor in 1877. Attorney Lusk said he would show that Eby could only have had $300 or $400 at that time. (Cam Ashurst had testified that he had borrowed about $10,000 of county moneys from Eby just before the date of the Murdock note.)

Mrs. Mary Compton, a sister to William Murdock, was not allowed to tell what her brother stated to her on his death-bed in January, 1891 in relation to this note. Attorney Lusk read questions and answers from a deposition of plaintiff taken last year, in which she told of her writing the note in the presence of the two, of the paying over to William of $20,000 which Samuel had accumulated from the sale of stock, and of the removal of the twenty-dollar pieces in sacks the next morning by Uncle Billy in his "one-horse shay." Ten cancelled notes made by William Murdock were offered in evidence to show his business habits, plaintiff having sworn that two later notes surrendered to him when the big note was made were torn up.

Two mortgages, dated 1875, to G. W. Murdock, plaintiff's husband, were offered by defense. The amounts aggregated $4,400. Then an assignment of these to his father, Samuel, was introduced, dated September 3, 1877. Gawn Murdock has testified that he settled with his father on this date, paying him all but $[illegible] in cash. The defense claims that the assignment above disproves this.

George G. Murdock of Upper Lake, a nephew of William Murdock, told of a visit made to his home in 1881 by plaintiff and her husband while on a trip to Ukiah. Witness testified that on this occasion plaintiff told him, in presence of the family, that he ought to go over and "make up with his Uncle Billy," as his uncle was worth a million dollars. Witness further testified that the plaintiff's husband told him that Uncle Billy did not owe anything and had a large sum of money in the bank.

Mrs. Lizzie Smith, sister of preceding witness, corroborated his testimony in detail. Defense then introduced three letters written by plaintiff to witness, and read them. They were offered to show the warm friendship then existing between the two women.

Attorney Lusk commenced to read a deposition of Samuel Lewis, taken at Red Bluff last month. The first question was as to the reputation of C. B. Ashurst and an objection stopped the reading of the answer. Plaintiff's attorney was engaged in support of his objection when adjournment time arrived. It is believed the Red Bluff depositions will cause a merry war between counsel.

FORGOT THEIR OWN SIGNATURES

Ambrose and Piper Were Poor Witnesses Against McGlade.

Former Superintendent of Streets Was Shy of Official Information.

TECHNICAL OBJECTIONS SWEPT AWAY

Judge Cook Decides Against Attorney Reddy in the Latter's Plea That There Was No Statutory Forgery.

W. F. Ambrose, former Superintendent of Streets, and Harry Piper, who was Mr. [illegible]'s Chief Deputy County Clerk, do not remember very much that is damaging to Peter W. McGlade in the forgery case now on trial before Judge Cook.

Both of these retired city officials were called as witnesses yesterday in aid Assistant District Attorney Black in fixing the responsibility for the crime by which the city was defrauded of $1,850.

They swore that they could not identify their own signatures on official documents and that had forgotten, more or less, their official actions that were supposed to have a bearing on the case.

When the McGlade case was resumed in the Superior Court yesterday morning, Judge Cook overruled Attorney Reddy's technical objection that the Street Department document on which the indictment is based does not constitute a forgery under the law even though the paper be entirely fictitious. The Court ruled that if the face of the document was forged by McGlade, that would constitute a forgery within the meaning of the law, without regard to the passing of the demand.

H. J. [illegible]wolde, in whose name the demand was before the court was prepared, testified that he had not signed the demand and that [his] signature was forged.

Ex-Superintendent W. F. Ambrose was then recalled. McGlade's written oath of office as assistant bookkeeper in the Street Department was submitted to him.

"Have you ever seen that document before?" began Mr. Black.

"I couldn't swear to it."

"Is that your signature on the document?"

"It looks like my signature, but I couldn't swear to it."

After much effort, however, Mr. Black succeeded in having the paper sufficiently identified and Mr. Reddy agreed to have it admitted as McGlade's official oath of office.

Much questioning about the routine of the bookkeeper's work in the Street Department was done, and Mr. Reddy had an objection to every question, though the objections were usually overruled.

Mr. Ambrose disclaimed all knowledge of the forged demand upon which McGlade was indicted. He couldn't positively say very much about the routine of his office during the time that McGlade was employed, most of his knowledge being merely what others had told him.

Mr. Ambrose said that he had given McGlade and all deputies authority to use the stamp of his name.

In the afternoon Harry Piper, formerly chief deputy county clerk, testified that he was unable to identify his own signature to the verification of McGlade's oath of office.

Routine testimony was given by Thomas F. Clark, formerly a deputy superintendent of streets, and T. H. McGlonie and John H. [illegible] who have been deputy clerks of the Board of Supervisors.

M. F. Higgensberger, a banker, identified McGlade's signature on the forged demand and offered several examples of the signature. The hearing was then continued to Monday, when Theodore Kytka will testify, as an expert, about the forgery.

GRAND JURY TAKES UP STRAW BOND CASES.

The Investigation Will Be Continued at a Future Session—Plea for Chief Lees and the [illegible] Department.

The Grand Jury commenced its investigation of the straw-bond [illegible] yesterday afternoon. Captain Seymour of the Police Department and Harry Wi[illegible], negro who [illegible] while out on a [illegible] bonds and was subsequently recaptured, were questioned by the Grand Jury concerning the methods of furnishing [straw] bonds for criminals. The Grand Jury learned sufficient about this [illegible] to feel called upon to continue its investigation at a special session next Monday afternoon.

The dive and gambling evil was brought up in the course of the routine work. In view of the recent activity on the part of the Police Department the Grand Jury decided that the best efforts are being made to stamp out the twin evils. Resolutions were passed approving the course of Chief of Police Lees and the Police Department and expressing the belief that the matter was receiving the proper attention. One indictment was found and Presiding Judge of the Superior Court [illegible] and was placed upon the secret file, with bonds fixed at [illegible]. It is against an offender who is not at present in reach of the authorities, and for this reason his name is withheld.

MRS. CRAVEN'S NEW SCHEME.

Seeks a Place on List of Pensioned Teachers.

WILLING TO PAY WELL FOR THE PRIVILEGE.

[illegible]

CLAIMED HE WAS PAID TO TESTIFY

Alleged Admission of a Witness.

Special Dispatch to The Call

WILLOWS, May 9.—The Murdock note case is drawing to a close. When court convened this morning Mr. Lusk said he desired to prove by Witness W. P. Harrington that William Murdock had $50,000 in bank in May, 1890. This, the attorney said, was to contradict the testimony of Witness Skiff, who swore that Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock had asked "Uncle Billy" for the payment of interest on the note and that he had refused. Attorney Johnson objected to such testimony, and his objection was sustained.

Adam Compton was called, and Mr. Lusk handed to him a note for $1,000, made by William Murdock to a man named Singletary. Mr. Compton was asked why this note was given. Mr. Lusk said he wished to show that the note was given, not for money loaned, but as a part payment on the Calvin ranch. Attorney Johnson's objection was sustained and Mr. Compton was excused.

Mr. Lusk said that with the exception of two witnesses the defense was ready to rest. Johnson wanted to know the names of these two witnesses, but the court would not allow it. With this understanding the defense rested.

Seth Millington was called. He said he had been Judge of the Glenn County Superior Court. He was present in court when Witness T. J. Kirkpatrick testified; he heard the testimony of Kirkpatrick and remembered the affidavit purporting to have been made to Kirkpatrick by Samuel Murdock. At the time of the giving of this testimony he heard Expert Carl Eisenschimel say to Expert Theodore Kytka, "Tell that affidavit, Kytka; take a photograph of it and we'll knock it out," or words to that effect.

Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock, the plaintiff, was called and told of having gone to Deadwood in April, 1891, returning home in July. Attorney Johnson said that all this was to contradict the testimony of W. S. Murdock, who had related certain conversations of plaintiff to him at her house during June, 1891. The witness denied having conversed with C. S. Young and L. S. Megginson at the Arlington, in San Francisco. She never spoke of this note to Young. She said she had heard the testimony of George G. Murdock, Mrs. Lizzie Smith and Mrs. Ellen Murdock. She remembered hurting herself at the Murdock home at Upper Lake, but she never made the remarks about "Uncle Billy" attributed to her by these witnesses.

Mrs. Murdock denied that she and Megginson left Young at the Arlington and returned with [illegible] payment was to be a "make-believe" [illegible] on the note. She also denied any knowledge of a consultation with attorneys held by Young and Megginson as to the note. She said she did not go to the bank, and never offered Young a half-interest in the note if he would attend to the collection of it.

Alexander Lake was called for the plaintiff. He lives in Clarkes Valley. He testified that two weeks ago William H. Burnight, a witness for the defense, told him in front of Putman & Walker's drug store that he was to get $100 for testifying in the case, and that Mr. Lusk was to give him [illegible] He further said that Mr. Lusk [illegible] there was more money in testifying in this case than in [illegible] intended going. [illegible]

[illegible]

MRS. MURDOCK ON THE STAND

Denies Stating the Note Was a Substitute for a Will.

CONSIDERATION NOT LOVE AND AFFECTION.

[illegible]

Witness Turner Throws Light on Negotiations Between Gavan's Wife and the Alleged Conspirators

[illegible]

WILLOWS, May 9.—[illegible] called in the Murdock [illegible] the defense [illegible] evidence was [illegible] and [illegible] testimony was given in rebuttal. Attorney Lusk asked [illegible] testimony of W. P. Harrington that William Murdock had [illegible] in the bank in May, 1890. [illegible] the testimony that Mrs. Helen Murdock had asked for the payment of interest on the note and was refused. Johnson objected and the testimony was excluded. After stating they had two more witnesses the defense rested their case.

Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock was placed on the stand in her own behalf. She denied ever conversing with C. S. Young and L. S. Megginson, also that she had never spoken of Uncle Billy [illegible] in connection with a 25 bottle of brandy. Here General Barnes commenced a searching cross-examination regarding her meeting with Young and Megginson. Plaintiff did not deny having been introduced to Young, but said she did not show him the note or state to him that the note was made as a substitute for a will. She also stated that she never made the remark about the note being given to her for love and affection. The witness positively denied having any conversation with Young other than in reference to the school [illegible] In fact, Mrs. Murdock denied almost everything testified to by deponent Young in regard to the note.

Outside of this testimony the major portion of the day was consumed by the defendants in offering depositions to show the negotiations of plaintiff with M. W. Connor of Los Angeles, J. F. Turner and Delos Pratt of San Francisco, and her statements to their relative to the forming of a syndicate to buy a half-interest in the note. The plaintiff's attorneys made a vigorous fight to exclude this testimony, [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

RILEY'S ACCUSATION.

Says His Name on the Wilson Bond Was Forged.

Grand Jury Getting Ready to Indict the Straw Bondsmen.

[illegible]

THE EVENING [illegible]

"MAMMY" IN COURT

Bitter-Tongued Negress Gets Excited.

She Interrupts Witnesses Who Testify Concerning Her Debts.

[illegible]

M'GLADE'S TRIAL.

[illegible]

MURDOCK CASE GROWS LIVELY.

The Attorneys Talk About Forgery and Cowardice.

Judge Pirkey Has All He Can Do to Restore Order

WILLOWS, May 9.—In the Murdock [illegible] ... Pratt and Turner, [illegible] ... the plaintiff would agree to pay the expenses of Pratt and Turner if they would come here and take the stand. He stated that the defense had them under their control and would bring them here if they were not afraid of a personal examination. As far as he was concerned, he believed the [illegible] forgeries. Mr. Lusk took exception to the remarks of Johnson and in reply said that if the latter would permit the defense to send a likeness of Mrs. Murdock for identification, the new depositions of Pratt and Turner would be taken tomorrow. In a very positive manner he said that he believed there was a scheme connected by the plaintiff and that Megginson was a party to it, and that this was the reason why they did not propose bringing the men here and putting them on the witness-stand.

Mr. Johnson called this a cowardly attack and moved that it be struck out. For a few minutes there was quite a lively time in court, but Judge Pirkey, after repeated raps, succeeded in restoring order.

A number of depositions were then attempted to be read by Lusk, but as they related to matters that had been passed upon in the other depositions, they were objected to and the objections were sustained. Lusk then announced that he thought the defense would rest after examining one witness in the morning.

Mr. Lusk, in opening this morning, stated that he would like to call W. P. Harrington to contradict Mr. Skiff in regard to his testimony that Mr. Murdock had $50,000 on hand to pay the note in 1890.

Objected to and objection sustained.

Mr. Compton was then called to identify a $24,000 note, given by Murdock to a certain party.

Objected to and objection sustained.

Mr. Lusk then said that the defense would rest, provided they were allowed to examine a couple of witnesses that were, on account of sickness, prevented from being here. Johnson wished him to give the names of the witnesses, which was objected to by Lusk, who was sustained by the court.

Mr. Johnson then read a deposition of R. Gernon in regard to the standing of Cam Ashurst in Red Bluff. In answer to the question, "What do you think of the character of Mr. Ashurst, as regards truth and veracity?" the deponent said: "I consider it good." The deposition of the cashier of the Bank of Tehama County was also read. The deponent stated that, so far as he knew, Ashurst's reputation for truth and integrity was good. Another deposition was read, that of G. V. Vestal of Red Bluff, who stated that he had been acquainted with Ashurst for forty years, and considered him truthful. When asked in regard to his moral character, the question had been objected to and the objection had been sustained. A number of other depositions were read from residents of Tehama county, all favorable to Ashurst.

Ex-Judge Seth Millington was then put on the stand by the plaintiff, and testified that he had overheard a conversation between Experts Eisenschimel and Kytka on the day on which T. J. Kirkpatrick testified, in which Eisenschimel said to Kytka, "Get that affidavit and photograph it, and let's knock it out."

In cross-examination General Barnes questioned the witness very closely in regard to his position in the court-room at the time, and also as to where the experts were sitting.

Mrs. T. J. Kirkpatrick was then called, and stated that she was a sister of Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock; that she was frequently at her sister's, and that her sister was not at home in June, 1881, but was at Deadwood, Butte county.

Mrs. Graves, another sister, was also called, testifying likewise that her sister was in Deadwood in June, 1881, under treatment of a Chinese doctor. The purpose of this was to contradict the testimony of William S. Murdock, who had said he was at Mrs. Murdock's place in June, 1881, and that she was present. Mrs. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Graves both said she was at Deadwood from April to July of this year.

Mrs. Murdock was called and asked if she knew the witness, W. S. Murdock, who said that he was visiting her in June, 1881, when he had a broken leg.

[illegible] ... Young and Megg[illegible] ...

I never at any time or any place [illegible] Mr. Young [illegible] ... or ask [illegible] Young or Megg[illegible] ... take [illegible] ... Mr. Young [illegible] ... regard to the note [illegible] ... to do so."

She [illegible] that Mr. Megginson did not offer to pay her $1000 on the note in the presence of Young.

In her further testimony Mrs. Murdock denied emphatically all the statements made in the deposition of Young in regard to her having any transaction [illegible] in regard to the [illegible] ... offered to give Young and Megginson half of the note for [illegible].

The case undoubtedly will end in a few days.

HE FORGED MANY NAMES.

Evidence That McGlade Operated on a Large Scale.

At the trial of Peter W. McGlade for forgery [illegible] ... street [illegible] ... testified that they [illegible] ... The fraudulent demands [illegible] ... whose names the fraudulent demands were [illegible] worked [illegible] the Street [illegible].

Charles F. Durham [illegible] Thomas P. Clark [illegible] ... the Street [illegible] whose names were attached [illegible] ... testified that these signatures were forged. Expert Kytka [illegible] testified that McGlade was the forger.

[illegible] ... McGlade produced the orders which McGlade had [illegible] ... Rivers testified [illegible] auditing the fraudulent demands by the Street Committee of the Board of Supervisors last year and ex-Auditor [illegible] clerk testified to the action on them in his office.

J[illegible] H. [illegible], assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, testified that McGlade [illegible] and receipted for the fraudulent demands after they had been acted upon officially.

J. Turner, H. Swords and J. Lynch, who were among the men in whose names fraudulent warrants were issued, testified that the signatures on warrants were forged.

The trial will be resumed today in Judge [illegible]'s court.

WILLOWS DAILY JOU[RNAL]

VOL. XXIII. WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA: WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 10, 1899.

EXPERT KNOCK

Says Murdock's Signature Was Not Traced.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Give Some Strong Testimony for the Defense.

Before the case began this morning the defense asked the privilege to recall Jas. Boyd and W. E. Bowles, as they had several questions that they desired to ask these gentlemen.

Plaintiff did not object and the request was granted.

Mr. Boyd was called and testified that he knew Jim McConnell, whom W. E. Bowles had testified was at the State Fair in 1887. Knew McConnell because he had worked for witness before he left Willows but had never seen him at a State Fair in Sacramento; and furthermore that he had never gone with him. Had never seen Wm. Murdock in Sacramento at the State Fair; would most surely have seen both men had they been there.

On cross-examination by Johnson, Boyd said he was certain about this.

W. E. Bowles followed Mr. Boyd. He was asked by Lusk if he had not, before he left Willows years ago, been arrested here for extorting money from prostitutes and Chinamen; also asked if he had not left Willows so that he would not have to stand trial for the offense.

Attorney Johnson fairly flew to his feet and said this was a very improper question and a witness should be allowed to strike down an attorney for such an insult. He asked the court to protect the witness and not allow the question to be answered. The witness had already answered "no" but Judge Pirkey said he would allow this one as witness had already answered; did not want any more along that line to be asked. Witness started an explanation about being arrested, but was immediately stopped by attorney Johnson.

Mr. Knock was then called to give expert testimony in regard to measurement of angles in "Wm" of note and 1890 deed from which the defense claims signature on the note was traced. Said he had had many years experience as a civil engineer and had made a close study of surveyors' lines and degrees. Mr. Knock said he had examined the seventy-nine photographic signatures of Wm. Murdock and also the signature to the note and deed. Said he had discovered that the "Wm" of the deed and the "Wm" of the note were not alike. "There is not a line in the 'Wm' of the deed and the 'Wm' of the note that correspond with but one exception and that is the first stroke of the 'm' of both 'Wms.'"

Expert Knock explained many differences which he said he found between other letters of the two signatures. The expert testimony of Mr. Knock contradicts almost all of that given by experts Ames, Kytka and Eisenschimel.

Mr. Knock had made several tracings of different signatures which he used in his demonstrations. Said he did not believe the signature of the note was traced from the signature of the deed.

After Knock had finished with his expert testimony, Mrs. T. J. Kirkpatrick was recalled. In answer to Johnson said she had been to Mary Helen Murdock's house on September 6, 1887. She went there to pick some geese, which Mrs. Murdock had left in her charge for the feathers. Mrs. Murdock was at home and witness was very much surprised to see her there for she thought she was at Allen Springs. Remembered the date for her house burned three days after that and this was the ninth; also remembered date by the death of Mr. Neideffer's child about that time.

As the plaintiff had no more witnesses on hand but were expecting some on the 11.20 train, court adjourned until that time. At calling of court after recess the witnesses were all present and testimony continued.

Jas. P. Matlock, Dr. West, H. P. Andrews, W. A. Fish, Chas. F. Foster, L. W. Valentine and A. L. Conard all of Tehama County, testified that the general reputation of Ashurst was good; but a few of them had heard some talk about his seducing a Dutch working girl and a colored woman.

Ashurst wanted to go on the stand to testify in regard to his character, but defense objected and objection was sustained.

Johnson, for plaintiff, said they were ready to rest their case with the exception of offering rebuttal testimony to the evidence of the two witnesses of the defense, who are expected on today's 1:20 train. Court then adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mrs. Smith, a daughter of Gawn Murdock, deceased, was called this afternoon by the defense immediately after court convened. Mrs. Smith testified that she was at Allen Springs sometime in the latter part of August, 1877 and had seen Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock there at that time and had talked with her. Mrs. Murdock wanted to make a visit to Mrs. Smith's home in Upper Lake but was warned by Mrs. Smith not to come as there were several cases of diphtheria in that neighborhood and it would not be advisable for her to visit at that time. Mrs. Smith returned to her home, but before leaving, promised Mrs. Murdock to keep her informed about the progress of the disease. Had written a letter to Mrs. Murdock on September 6th, 1877, and had sent it by a minister named John Black, who is now in Idaho, and he had taken it to Mrs. Murdock at Allen Springs. Mrs. Smith received a letter from Mrs. Murdock on September 7th. Remembered this distinctly, as a child, which witness had known well, died upon that date.

This was the date on which witnesses for the plaintiff have sworn that Mrs. Murdock was at her home near Orland.

In the cross-examination Mr. Johnson asked the witness how much she had talked to Mr. Lusk in regard to her testimony. Witness said she had talked very little about it. Said in 1881 Mrs. Murdock visited her and spoke to her about her trip to Allen Springs in 1877. Mrs. Murdock had told her that she had remained at Allen Springs until late in September. Mrs. Smith was not shaken by cross-examination and told her story in a straight-forward honest way.

ROYAL Baking Powder

Made from pure cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Allen Henry, a resident of Chico, was the star witness for the defense in regard to Allen Springs matters. He testified that the election of Sept. 5, 1877, had been impressed upon his mind, for he was a candidate for the Assembly and was defeated. On the next day, September 6th, started for Allen Springs and arrived there on the afternoon of the 7th. While standing in front of his cabin that evening saw a lady standing in a cabin door across the way from his, who was later introduced to him as Mrs. Gawn Murdock. He identified Mrs. Murdock in the courtroom as the woman he saw there.

In cross-examination said he was attracted to the lady standing in the cabin door by her elegant clothes and fine appearance. Mr. Allen's testimony was not shaken in the least by the severe cross-examination.

After Mr. Henry was excused his wife was called. Mrs. Henry said that she had spent the summer of 1877 in Allen Springs and lived next door to Mrs. Murdock while she remained there. During her stay at Allen Springs she went over into Lake County to visit the family of G. G. Murdock, but returned to Allen Springs on August 27th of the same year and had remained there until September 7, 1877 when her husband came for her and took her home the next day. She knew that Mrs. Murdock was at Allen Springs from August 27th to September 7th, for each and every day they exchanged neighborly calls.

Mrs. Henry corroborated every [illegible] in regard to her husband's trip to Allen Springs on the 7th of the month.

In cross-examination witness said she had talked several times to Mr. S[illegible] about the case, etc.

These are two of the most important witnesses which have been introduced by defense and their testimony made a sensation in the court room, which was crowded.

Expert Kytka was recalled by defense and identified some photographic signatures of the note.

Miss Maggie Murdock was not allowed to answer questions asked her by attorney Lusk and was excused.

Mrs. Lizzie Smith was recalled and corroborated Mrs. Henry as to a [illegible] to witness.

G. M. Potts was asked in regard to arresting W. E. Bowles but was not permitted to answer.

THE DAILY PROMOTER

SPECIALLY ISSUED BY THE [illegible] WEEKLY PROMOTER [illegible]

Vol. 3 WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1899. No. [illegible]

EVIDENCE ALMOST COMPLETE.

The Wheels Of Justice Grinds Slow But Exceedingly Sure---Many Important Witnesses Testify For Both Plaintiff And Defendants.

WEDNESDAY'S SESSION.

At calling of Court this morning Attorney Lusk asked the privilege to recall witnesses Lloyd and Bowles for re-cross examination, which was granted.

James Lloyd as a witness. Mr. Lusk asked him who Jim McConnel was, to whom Bowles referred yesterday and Lloyd answered that he was a man that worked for him a great many years ago. Lloyd said he was never at the State Fair with McConnel. Was at all times friendly with him. Said if McConnel had been at State Fair, he would most certainly have seen him. Further testified that he was never at State Fair with Wm Murdock.

W. E. Bowles on the stand. Lusk asked "Were you arrested for stealing money from room clerk and some prostitutes before you left Willows and were you not let go on your own recognizance and did you not leave Willows and never turn up until you came here yesterday?" This was objected to by Johnson but was overruled by Court. Bowles answered that he had not. Johnson said the question asked was very insinuative and such questions should not be allowed. Judge Pukey said the question had been answered but he would allow no more questions on that line. Witness was then dismissed with out further questions. Just before the witness left the stand he was going to say that he had been arrested and was going to explain how it happened but Johnson promptly stopped him.

Knock as an expert. T. L. Knock was put on the stand by the plaintiff. Testified that he was a civil engineer and surveyor and had about 20 or 30 years experience. Said he had made surveyors lines and degrees a study. Had examined the 79 signatures of Murdock which had been photographed by Kytka. Found that "Wm" of the deed differed quite materially from the "Wm" of the note. "Wm" of the deed was not quite so broad as the "Wm" of the note. Before Knock went any further, he was stopped by Barnes and asked from what photographs he had made these wonderful discoveries. Knock answered that he had examined the photographs taken by Kytka and supposed they were right in every particular. Found that the length of the two "Wm's" were not the same and that the angles were far from being alike. Witness took up several different portions of the two signatures and showed places where they did not correspond. Said there was, with but one exception, not a line of the "Wm" of the deed that corresponded with the same line in the "Wm" of the note. Knock had made several tracings of different signatures of Murdock and showed them to the jury and used them in his comparisons and contrasts. Said: "I do not believe that this signature to the note was traced from the signature of the deed." The stenographer had great difficulty in taking the testimony of the witness as he did not give the names of the different strokes of the letters but would merely refer to them with a pointer.

The only question asked in cross-examination was whether or not he knew how many times the photographic signatures had been enlarged. The witness could not answer. After examination of this witness was concluded a recess of 10 minutes was taken.

Mrs F. J. Kirkpatrick testified that she was over to Mrs. Gawn Murdock's house on the 9th of September, 1887, and at this time Mrs. Murdock was at home. She remembered the date because she cared for Mrs. Murdock's geese while absent and picked them for the feathers; that her horses burned and she lost them. She was very much surprised to find Mrs. Murdock at home, as she had supposed her being at Allen Springs.

After this testimony Mr Johnson asked for a recess, as witnesses would arrive on the 11:20 southbound train. The recess was granted and court adjourned until 11:25.

Jas. P. Mathock stated he was a resident of Red Bluff and had known Carr Ashurst about twenty-five years and his reputation for truth, honesty and veracity is good.

Dr. West was also a resident of Red Bluff, knew Ashurst, thought his reputation in general was good. On cross-examination said he had heard about Ashurst treating an old woman a little mean in regard to a note. Witness said he had never heard Ashurst called a "damned old thief". Had never heard about him seducing a dutch girl or a negress.

H. P. Andrews, a witness stated that Ashurst's reputation for truth and veracity was good. He said he had been employed by Ashurst as an attorney to assist Mr. Freeman in taking depositions in regard to Ashurst's character.

W. A. Fish, who had been County Clerk, Auditor and Recorder of Tehama county said Ashurst's Reputation was read in court the other day and who said Ashurst's reputation was bad.

Chas. F. Foster who had been Sheriff of Tehama county and who had also been State Senator from that district, testified that Mr. Ashurst's general reputation was alright. On cross-examination witness stated that he had interest in Maywood Colony at Corning and advertised extensively in religious newspapers in the East.

L. W. Vallentine, a witness knew Ashurst. Reputation was good. Had heard some talk about Ashurst and a negress. Witness at this time was assessor of Tehama county.

A. L. Conard, a witness, stated that he run a hotel in Red Bluff and that Ashurst's reputation was good.

At this Mr. Ashurst was called. His testimony was excluded, as it related to his own reputation.

Here Mr. Johnson rested the case of plaintiff, as Lusk wished to offer evidence in rebuttal of what these witness would say.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Notwithstanding the increased heat of the day, a great many spectators were present this afternoon when court convened at two o'clock. A great many palm leaf fans were in evidence and part of the jury with the permission of the Court, sat in the box in their shirt sleeves.

Mrs. Lizzie Smith was recalled this afternoon by the defense. Said she saw plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock at Allen Springs about the 26th or 27th of August 1877 and had a conversation with her in regard to Mrs. Murdock visiting her at her home in Upper Lake.

Mrs. Smith said she told Mrs. Murdock at that time there was several cases of diphtheria at Upper Lake, but would return and let her know about it.

On September 6, 1877, Mrs. Smith sent word to her brother minister, Rev. John Black, and got an answer from Allen Springs. Plaintiff's witnesses swore that she was at home on this date.

Mr. Johnson cross-examined witness and she had never spoken to anyone except Mrs. Smith. Also stated that she did not know any more about the question.

EXCLUDED TESTIMONY.

The defendants did not get so much testimony yesterday. Lines of testimony that they thought very important were entirely excluded by the court. The depositions of witnesses J. P. McLaughlin, Thomas J. Dunn, Delos Pratt, and M. W. Connor were to the effect that in San Francisco, about 1891, Megginson, with the authority and consent of plaintiff, was trying to get up a syndicate of five men to put in nine hundred or one thousand dollars apiece and for which they were to have a half interest in the note for collecting it and they were applied to by Megginson to go into the syndicate, which he said was the biggest thing out, much better than any corner lot. Some of them he took to the plaintiff, who confirmed Megginson's authority to get the deal up.

The defendants' theory as to the importance of this testimony is that if it was a good note for the benefit of her children, executed in good faith, she would not be trying to sell half of it, which would amount to, say, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to a syndicate of small real estate dealers in San Francisco, when no bank up in Sacramento valley had ever been shown the document or applied to for the purpose of borrowing money on it or negotiating it.

There was one deposition offered by the defendants nearly 200 pages long that was almost entirely excluded—that of a man by the name of Delos Pratt. He was the man who loaned Megginson the $3,500 to make the sham payment on the note that the witness C. S. Young testified to. This was proved, not only by Pratt but by Palmer, the cashier of the bank in Oakland where Pratt kept his money, and the actual draft that he gave Megginson and on which Megginson got the money was proved and offered in evidence at the trial. He stated that Megginson and Mrs Murdock offered him a twelve thousand dollar interest in the note if he would let them have the use of this $3,500 for the temporary purpose of making that payment, that he gave it to Megginson to use in that way in December, 1890. Megginson used it for the desired purpose and paid it back to Pratt in a day or two.

His story of his interview with the plaintiff was as follows:

"I was invited there for the purpose of having an interview with Mrs. Murdock as to this note, by Mr. Megginson, and I questioned her as to how she got the note. I told her this was a large amount, it looked like a good deal of money, and if a note of that kind was given it must be given for some consideration; there must be something as consideration, and she went on to explain then that her uncle had given this to secure her in case of death for what he wanted to give her out of his estate. Well, I asked her how he came to give it. She says that "I have always been good to him, and I think he thinks more of me than he does of the rest of his relatives." Then I said to her, "Now, if this is a straight affair why would you want to discount it so largely or give—agree to give a share of it to a stranger like Mr. Megginson?" She said she had met him at the Arlington and became acquainted with him and told him of her affairs and that he advised her that it would be better for her to transfer that note into the hands of a third party even if she did not receive but one-half of it, or something of that kind, one-half, and he induced her to assign it to him, with a promise that he was to have one-quarter or one-third when the note was collected, and that she wanted to raise some money. I asked her for what purpose she wanted the money for, and she said she thought of buying the Arlington as I understood it. Then Mr. Megginson opened up and told me how he had done, that he had gave her a check, and he had his receipt for it, but he was going to make it appear that he had paid her these sums of money from time to time, and the money was to be returned to him. Well, I said to Mr. Megginson, 'This is an unusual way of doing business. I don't like it. If you pay Mrs. Murdock these large sums of money, she must have some place to out[illegible] it. I understand she is poor.' He said that his bank books and his checks would show that he had made these payments. I says, 'That is well enough for a bluff, but I never would go into court with anything of that kind. The less you do of that you will be better off.' I told him that I didn't think that I wanted anything to do with it. I [illegible] of that kind, that I was willing after what I had learned to call it a gift, and if I got anything it was [illegible]."

FATE OF FAIR'S WILL IN DOUBT

Supreme Court Postpones Decision on the Trust Clause.

The opinions of six members of the Supreme Court [illegible] regard [illegible] [illegible] believed that the [illegible] of Justice [illegible] to the [illegible] will be required [illegible] question of the [illegible]

This [illegible] held the [illegible] of the Fair [illegible] invalid has been [illegible]. The order [illegible] the Justices to participate in the [illegible] and as Justice [illegible] was not [illegible] when the oral argument was made he is disqualified from acting. [illegible] the [illegible]

At the [illegible]

At the hearing of the case in the Supreme Court last April the attorneys who appeared [illegible] Judges [illegible] Wilson [illegible] Garber [illegible] Knight [illegible] Herrin [illegible] Robinson and [illegible]

[illegible]

A LITTLE BIRD MIXES UP WITH LAW IN THE PETER M'GLADE FORGERY CASE

CULPRIT SWALLOW BROUGHT BEFORE JUDGE COOK

It has not been the traditional "little bird" that tells things, but a little bird wandered into Judge Cook's department of the Superior Court yesterday, all rumors and flew directly to the jury-box. Court was adjourned until the intruder was captured.

Judge Cook was listening to a complicated, technical argument on one of Attorney Reddy's objections in the McGlade forgery case when the sharp complaint of a frightened swallow almost above his head and thirty feet from the floor attracted his attention. The bird had got into the courtroom and being unable to find a way out was very much alarmed at its predicament. His Honor smiled and attempted to resume business, but the bird had a sharp, shrill voice and was by no means as thoughtful of courtesy in its manner of speech as was Attorney Reddy.

This interruption continued for several minutes, the swallow's cries growing louder and more frequent. Then the bird, as many a well advised captive in the criminal court had done before it, concluded to throw itself on the mercy of the jury. It darted from the high window and, describing a semicircle above the "twelve good men and true," alighted on the right shoulder of Juror A. Heig. Juror E. P. Enright grabbed at the swallow, which screamed again and dodged to the floor. Judge Cook gave judicial sanction to the recess that had already been taken.

"We will adjourn court to catch the bird," he said with a smile.

The jurors, aided by Deputy Sheriff Dasha and Stenographer Stevens, made brief work of the pursuit and Juror J. P. Healey was the captor. Bailiff Dasha solemnly delivered the bird to Judge Cook, who held it in his hand a moment and then remarked:

"This prisoner is acquitted."

"It was probably attracted, your Honor, by the letter strokes and lines that Expert Kirks has left on the blackboard," remarked Mr. Reddy.

When the swallow had been liberated the trial of McGlade was resumed. The chief witness of the day was Melville M. Regensberger of the Hirt & Regensberger brokerage firm.

"Mr. Regensberger," began Assistant District Attorney Black, "have you in your possession any papers written by Mr. McGlade in reference to men who worked in the street department?"

"Yes, sir; I have."

Mr. Black then produced a note on which P. J. Murphy, a cigar dealer on Market street, is said to have obtained money from the brokers. It read:

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30, 1895.

No. 3,258

P. Murphy has worked 25 days on St. at $1 per day, month of June 1895.

P. A. M'GLADE,

$1 [illegible] Deputy Supt. of Sts.

"Do you offer this as an exemplar of McGlade's handwriting?" asked the court when Attorney Reddy had objected to admission of the document.

"No, your Honor, I offer it as a confession by Mr. McGlade," replied Mr. Black.

A forcible objection to the allegation of confession was made by Mr. Reddy. After a brief delay the objection was overruled.

Three similar documents were then admitted in evidence. They bore the names of T. Dwyer, J. Sullivan and William McGee. Regensberger testified that all were in McGlade's handwriting. The witness was in Europe at the time of the payment of money on the orders, and unless his partner can connect McGlade with the transactions the four documents will be stricken out, Judge Cook so stated, replying to an objection by Mr. Reddy.

In the forenoon, P. J. Murphy, declared by the prosecution to be the man named in McGlade's note about street work, testified that the name on the Regensberger document was not his signature, that he did not do any work for the street department in June, 1895, and that he had nothing to do with any claim against the city for June, 1895.

Thomas Dwyer, a fashionably attired young man of 844 Bay street, was called to testify that he had not worked twenty-four days in the streets as had been alleged in writing by McGlade.

Clerk John H. Ryan of the Supervisors' office was recalled to identify some books. Mr. Reddy cross-examined him thus:

"Mr. Ryan, have you ever taken the oath of office?"

"No, sir."

"Have you done any swearing while in office?"

"Swearing?"

"Have you administered any oaths?"

"No, sir."

"You are still in office, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir."

John Sullivan of 3036 Twenty-second street and William McGee of 826 Powell street denied that they had worked for the street department.

Thomas W. Rivers, ex-Supervisor, identified the forged warrants as having been passed by the Street Committee and the Auditing Committee.

Auditor Broderick next examined the demands and testified that they had been passed by him.

Assistant District Attorney Black has announced that he will close the prosecution this morning.

MRS. BELL SAYS SHE PAID NO MONEY FOR "MAMMY" PLEASANT'S BIG RANCH

Creditors Look for a Chance to Have Claims Settled.

"MAMMY" PLEASANT LISTENS TO THE WITNESSES

In the course of the examination of Witness Fred Bell "Mammy" Pleasant accused him of stating things which were not true. Then she engaged in a controversy with the attorneys who attempted to force her to keep quiet. She took a lively interest in all the proceedings in the trial.

CREDITORS of Mrs. Mary E. Pleasant, the old colored woman known for many years as "Mammy" Pleasant, have been skeptical in regard to her financial condition for a long time, and in order to test the matter the charge of insolvency made against her was called for trial in Judge Troutt's court yesterday.

Doubts have also arisen in the minds of Mrs. Pleasant's creditors touching the validity of her real estate transactions with Mrs. Teresa Bell, with whom Mrs. Pleasant resided at "the house of mystery," so called, at 1661 Octavia street, in this city. These doubts were deepened yesterday when it was seen that Mrs. Bell sat almost behind Mrs. Pleasant and Mr. Solo, her lawyer, and from time to time consulted with them in regard to the presentation of testimony on behalf of Mrs. Pleasant.

This manifestation of friendliness also raised the question of the genuineness of the recent reported quarrel between Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Pleasant, A. L. Black, attorney for the creditors, freely expressing his opinion that it looked like a ruse to defraud the claims of those to whom Mrs. Pleasant is indebted.

The greatest interest in the proceedings centers in the ownership of a $100,000 ranch in Sonoma county, deeded to Mrs. Bell by Mrs. Pleasant. The instrument bears date of 1891, but was not filed until 1898. The creditors contend that the transfer was not bona fide, and Mrs. Bell was called on to give her testimony yesterday afternoon.

As she took the witness chair it was gathered by her acquaintances that the yellow of litigation that have fallen to her lot since the death of her husband, Thomas Bell, have not dealt kindly with her.

Mrs. Bell testified that Mrs. Pleasant gave her the deed to the ranch over three years ago and that she delivered it to Fisher Ames, her lawyer, with instructions to have it filed if anything happened to Mrs. Pleasant. Answering interrogatories by Attorney Otto Wise of counsel for the creditors Mrs. Bell swore that she gave nothing to Mrs. Pleasant for the deed to the ranch, that she always had a deed to the property. She admitted that she never saw the deed but Mrs. Pleasant told her so and she placed implicit confidence in what Mrs. Pleasant said.

At this the opponents of Mrs. Pleasant exchanged significant glances as if to suggest that it confirmed their belief that Mrs. Pleasant's influence over Mrs. Bell is as potent as ever and that the stories of Mrs. Pleasant's eviction from Mrs. Bell's home did not grow out of any quarrel between the two women.

Fred Bell, who has been adjudged to be the son of Mrs. Bell though she vehemently denied it by swearing that she is no kin to Fred Bell's sister, Marie Bell, was called as a witness to prove the claim of a nurse employed by Mrs. Pleasant. He said that after the debt was incurred Mrs. Pleasant tried to shift the bill on to the shoulders of Mrs. Bell.

"That's not true," ejaculated Mrs. Pleasant in sharp tones.

Attorney Wise objected to such remarks and she turned on him with a command for him to keep quiet.

Judge Troutt interposed his authority and the lawyer quickly subsided; but Mrs. Pleasant kept up a running comment on the testimony of the witnesses, mostly uncomplimentary, throughout the hearing.

Fred Bell testified that Mrs. Pleasant sometimes claimed the Sonoma county ranch and sometimes said it belonged to Mrs. Bell. In this he was substantiated by F. W. Eaton. Mrs. Pleasant made a violent attack on Eaton because he spoke of her transactions as being carried "for a blind" to deceive outsiders.

Another effort to trace the ownership of the Sonoma county property will be made by the lawyers to-day.

THE GLITTER OF THE FAIR MILLIONS

Attorney Foote Presents the Case of His Client.

Marvels That Executors Object to Her Trying to Prove Her Rights.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair, as she is officially designated in the papers filed in the Superior Court, appeared before Judge Troutt yesterday afternoon to urge her right to intervene in the opposition to the probate of James G. Fair's will, heretofore begun by Charles L. Fair, son of the testator.

Attorney W. W. Foote declared that so far as the pleadings show the intervenor here is the widow of the late James G. Fair, and that she is entitled to a family allowance from the estate. He said that all his client asks is an opportunity to come in and prove her claim, and he thought it strange that her application in this behalf should be so bitterly opposed by the executors.

Mr. Foote declared that he was not particularly impressed by the decision of former Judge Slack regarding the trust clause of the Fair will. In fact he disputes now, as he did during the argument, the soundness of Judge Slack's opinion.

Criticism was also passed on ex-Judge Slack's action in turning an ejectment suit into an equitable proceeding, with an advisory jury, and Mr. Foote called on his opponents to remember that his client had eight of those jurors while her opponents had only four.

Mr. Foote remarked that it had been suggested that if this will fails, there are parties ready to produce other wills, and it might surprise counsel to learn that still other wills, not in the possession of the executors, are in existence, and they might be glad to get those papers. If the so-called Victoria will should ever be produced Mr. Foote declared that he would have the person producing it arrested for failing to file the document as by law required.

Turning to Mr. Pierson, Mr. Foote said that if opposing counsel would meet a straight-from-the-shoulder question, he would like to know which crowd of lawyers has possession of the acorn or so of wills said to be in existence.

"I have no wills," replied Mr. Pierson.

Replying to the argument by Mr. F[illegible]

Mr. Pierson said that the position of the applicant here is peculiar, to say the least. If she has a legal right to intervene in this proceeding, he would like to know why she did not enter a contest to the probate of the will before the expiration of a year after it was presented for probate.

"You know why well enough. You knew that she was in the hands of persons who misled her and wrongfully advised her," cried Mr. Foote.

Attorney Garret McEnerney took the position that if the applicant be permitted to intervene, then the contest begun by Charles L. Fair must fail, for the reason that if the lady has a right to intervene as the widow of James G. Fair, she had a right to be notified of the proposed contest; that if she is the widow now, she was the widow then, and as such widow had a right as one of the heirs to be cited to the contest; that contest proceedings as they are now are void unless all the known heirs are cited to appear in court.

Judge Troutt, by way of suggestion, asked if at the time the contest was begun any publicity had been given to the fact that this lady claimed to be the widow of James G. Fair.

Mr. McEnerney thought that the act of the deceased might be presumed to show if any such relation existed. Pending the settlement of this point an adjournment was had until [illegible] at which time further argument will be heard.

Opposition to the intervention of Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair in the contest over the estate of James G. Fair was filed by [illegible] Fair, Rachel Fair, John Fair, [illegible] Fair, Evaline Fair and Rachel Fair [illegible] objection of the persons [illegible] Attorney Bruns.

MURDOCK HEIRS REST THEIR CASE

Their Last Witnesses Barred From Testifying by the Court.

Mary Helen Takes the Stand in Rebuttal and Denies and Denies.

SOME EVIDENCE OF SUBORNATION

[illegible]

AGED MAMMY BATTLES WITH HER CREDITORS

Appears in Insolvency Proceedings.

SHE INTERRUPTS WITNESSES

DENIES SHE OWES YOUNG FRED BELL'S NURSE.

Mistress of the "House of Mystery" Takes the Stand and Again Repudiates Her Putative Children.

[illegible]

A BIRD TAKES PART IN THE M'GLADE TRIAL

Songster's Visit to Judge Cook.

TAKES PERCH ON A WINDOW

OVERCOME AT LAST BY FOUL ATMOSPHERE.

It Flies Directly Over the Head of the Accused and Drops Exhausted in the Jury Box.

[illegible]

MURDOCK CASE NEARING AN END

Arguments Will Begin To-Day.

LAST CARD OF THE DEFENSE

ALLEN HENRY AND HIS WIFE TESTIFY.

Swear That Mrs. Murdock Was Not at Home on the Day the Note Is Alleged to Have Been Executed.

[illegible]

JUST A WEEK OF ORATORY

Arguments in Murdock Case Commence This Morning.

Each Side Has Been Given Three Days in Which to Talk to the Jury.

[illegible]

EVIDENCE COMPLETE.

Testimony Presented in the Murdock Note Suit.

SIX DAYS ALLOWED FOR ARGUMENTS.

[illegible]

THE DAILY PROMOTER

[illegible] THE TRI-WEEKLY PROMOTER [illegible]

VOL. 5 WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1899. NO. [illegible]

THE GREAT NOTE CASE CLOSED.

The Suming Up And Arguments By Attorneys Will Commence Tomorrow---The Temple Of Justice Will Echo And Re-Echo With Cold Facts And Flights Of Oratory.

[illegible] Alleged [illegible]

One of the strongest blows that the defendants have struck in this case was just at the conclusion Wednesday afternoon when the testimony of Mrs. Lizzie Smith, of Upper Lake, and Hon. Allen Henry and his wife was introduced.

Mrs. Smith testified that she was at Allen Springs Aug. 28, 1877 visiting with the plaintiff, Mary Helen Murdock, that the plaintiff was very anxious to make a visit to Mrs. Smith's family in Upper Lake, but was afraid to [illegible] on account of diphtheria, which was prevailing there, that they arranged that Mrs. Smith was to keep her continually informed as to how the diphtheria was getting along, and that a little boy, Willie Kerr died on the 6th of September; that a peddler by the name of Blair brought the news to the Murdock's the same morning that the boy died, while he was on his way to Allen Springs; that they sent a note to Mrs. Murdock by him telling of the death of this boy and not to come, and that the next day, received a note from her in reply that showed that the message must have been delivered at Allen Springs on the 6th of September and the answer sent back that night or the next morning. This could not have occured had Mrs. Murdock been at home on Stony creek drawing the note as she has testified.

Mrs. Allen Henry testified that she went to Allen Springs on the 1st of July; that she had a cabin next to Mrs. Murdock's and that there were very few in that part of the Springs; that she soon got acquainted with Mrs. Murdock through their children playing together, and that they became very intimate friends, going to the hotel and store together every day and taking pleasure trips, such as to Soap creek. Mrs. Henry knew the Gawn Murdock's of Upper Lake before they moved over there. While there at Allen Springs she went over to pay them a visit, and was driven back to the Spring by diphtheria at Upper Lake. Gawn and his daughter Lizzie brought her back on the 27th of August. Her husband came after her on the afternoon of the 7th of September. At that time Mrs. Murdock was at the Henry cabin and was introduced to Mr. Henry. The Henry's packed that night and left Saturday morning, the 8th of September, reaching their residence in Dayton, Butte county, on Sunday.

Mrs. Henry testified in the most positive and strongest manner that the plaintiff was at Allen Springs in her cabin every day from August 27th until September 8th, when Mrs. Henry left.

Hon. Allen Henry testified that he ran for the Legislature that year at the election held on the 5th of September; that he was defeated; that he stayed in Chico until about midnight, until his defeat was known; that he went home and on Thursday morning started for the Springs after his wife, getting there about four o'clock Friday afternoon; that he saw the plaintiff at her cabin in a little while and asked his wife who she was; that his wife replied Gawn Murdock's wife; that Henry thought that she meant young Gawn Murdock of Upper Lake that he knew, and said he didn't know Gawn was married, and that she replied, "It is not our Gawn Murdock of Stony creek;" that later in the afternoon the plaintiff came over to the Henry cottage and he was introduced to her. Mr. Henry testified that he saw her the next morning before he left.

The testimony of each of these witnesses was very strong, and the force of it was apparent from the long cross-examination given by Johnson, which, however, failed to shake any of the witnesses in any respect, but which brought out a very good joke on Johnson. He (Johnson) asked Henry if he had not talked with Jo H. Sproul, of Chico, about the matter. Henry replied that he and Sproul were not on speaking terms. Johnson reiterated his question when Henry told that he and Sproul were about on the same terms as Johnson was with the "Examiner" editors, which produced a big laugh at Johnson's expense.

The importance of this testimony is that Mr. and Mrs. Henry are entire outsiders, having no connection with any of the Murdock family, and in every respect disinterested and if their testimony is true, it was not possible for the plaintiff to be on Stony creek at the time she says she drew the note and saw her uncle William sign it on September 5th, 1877, as she testified that she did not go back to the Springs for several days after that.

Kytka was then put upon the stand to identified some photographic reproduction of the signature of the note.

Miss Maggie Murdock was called by the defense but was not allowed to testify as Johnson objected on the grounds that witness should have been put on the stand before as she would testify to facts not brought up in their rebuttal.

G. M. Potts, witness testified that he was Marshal of Willows in 1886. Knew witness Bowles. Was asked if he arrested Bowles for the crime of extortion but was not allow to answer as an objection was raised by defense.

Among the many rich sensations that have been excluded in the Murdock case is a great deal that appeared in the deposition of the witness J. F. Turner in regard to L. S. Megginson, who wrote Turner the famous letter about not wanting to go so far with the Murdock note as to be placed in a position that would lead to perjury.

The deposition is full of statements of Megginson's to Turner about the note, and which defendants contended was proper evidence because it had been shown by Turner and a number of other witnesses that Mrs. Murdock told him that she had placed the whole thing in Megginson's hands to negotiate it, had made him her agent, and whatever he did was satisfactory to her. But it was excluded.

According to Turner's testimony, he and Megginson were on confidental terms at the time, and Megginson wanted Turner to go in with him on his purchase of half of the note and help him to pay the money to fight the note in the suit they would have with the heirs when the old man died. Afterwards they quarreled and became bitter enemies, and it was Turner who, in the latter part of 1893, gave to a detective in San Francisco the clew to the note, of which the detective first informed attorney Lusk, of Chico, by a letter written to him while the latter was at the World's Fair in Chicago. After his return, attorney Lusk investigated it, and resulted in Mr. William Murdock finding out about the note just before he died. The defendants claim that it was never intended that William Murdock should know of it before his death, and that this disclosure of Turner's heightened the enmity between him and Megginson.

The defendants offered by a number of witnesses to prove William Murdock's declaration as to the validity of this note while he was on his death-bed, but they were excluded from doing so on plaintiff's objection on the ground that, while they could introduce evidence as to anything Wm Murdock said, the defendants could not. While apparently this is the law, it evidently works an injustice in many cases. It is well known in this community what these declarations of Wm Murdock were, as sometime ago in the case the affidavits of his sister, Mrs. Compton, his nephew, Adam Compton, and Mr. Lusk were filed and published, showing in great detail how Wm Murdock first came to hear the note, his surprise and indignation over it, and his solemn statements that he never had given it; that he never had any cause to give Mary Helen Murdock a note; that he never had liked her, and that if he wanted to give all his property to any one person it would have been his favorite sister, Mary Compton. He said he had never given notes, except when buying land on two or three occasions, such as from his brother Samuel and from the railroad when they were not ready to make an outright sale. He, also, said that he had in his will given Gawn Murdock, of Stony Creek, a thousand dollars, and why should he do that if he owed him all he was worth. These statements of his are all contained in affidavits of reputable persons on file in this case.

THURSDAY SESSION.

Judge Pirkey, owing to the warm weather yesterday, today appeared in a light, new crash suit.

Expert Kytka was called by defense and was asked how many times photographic reproduction of the signature of the note was enlarged and was allowed to answer, despite the objection of the plaintiff. Said it was enlarged sixty times. Witness was not allowed to answer any more questions in regard to the similarity or dissimilarity of the signature of the note to the signature of the deed by court ruled that this had been sufficient gone into by the defense and could not be brought up by them in rebuttal. Mr. Kytka then testified that he was not in court at that time Mr Kirkpatrick testified. Said he was out chasing jack rabbits. Attention was first called to Mr. Kirkpatrick by O'Brien for the Chronicle who had Kytka make a sketch of him for the paper. On cross-examination witness said he had not asked Mr. Cannon for the affidavit at that time.

The deposition of W. V. Allen of Chico was not allowed by the court.

The deposition of W. M. Stewart, C. W. Cross and Col. A. C. Ellis was offered in evidence by Lusk to contradict the statements of the plaintiff in regard to conversations Young had with her about this note. Mrs. Murdock said he had none and defense wanted to prove that he did. Depositions were ruled out by court and Mr. Lusk, made an offer of testimony which he desired to appear in the records.

Ab Merrill was not allowed to go on the stand to tell whether or not he ever pointed Mrs. Murdock out to Mr. Henry in Sacramento.

Mr. Henry was recalled by the plaintiff for re-cross-examination. Witness had made a trip to Allen Springs in 1878 but did not see Mrs. Murdock at this time.

After a recess of ten minutes W. K. Duncan was put on the stand by the plaintiff. Knew Wm Murdock and had a conversation with him in 1880 while he was running a machine on Marshall's place. Murdock, at that time to the best recollection of witness, drove up to him in a one-horse covered rig. Witness was excused without any cross-examination.

While waiting for witnesses the point in regard to time limit was discussed. Lusk said that the defense wanted Gen. Barnes and himself to argue the case fully and completely and therefore did not want any limit to the time to be considered or enforced. The plaintiff were willing to limit the time to six hours a side but had no objection to a longer time being granted. Court said he would allow each side three days of six hours each to present their arguments. This was agreeable to both sides.

Mrs. Henry was recalled for cross-examination. Attorney Freeman asked that Mr. Henry be removed from the room while his wife was being examined and the request was granted.

Mr. Freeman went into details in questioning witness in regard to the position of her house at Allen Springs. Mrs. Henry gave description of the springs just as they are. She never hesitated. She was asked how large her house was and size of Mrs. Murdock's house, distance between them and numerous other matters in regard to different portions of the town.

Freeman could not "rattle" the witness and asked only questions that would tend to mix a witness. Mrs. Henry had been to Allen Springs in 1878. She gave minute [illegible] of [illegible] she returned home and [illegible] the [illegible] to the springs.

Mr. Henry was then called. Witness was also questioned closely about trips he and his wife made to and from Allen Springs. After attorney had completed the examination of this witness, Court adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At the afternoon session Mrs. [illegible] of San Francisco was put on the stand by the plaintiff. Had known Mrs. Murdock and Mrs. Henry in 1877 and was at Allen Springs at the same time these ladies were there. Had never seen Mrs. Henry visit Mrs. Murdock [illegible] did not think Mrs. Murdock's house could be seen from Mrs. Henry's residence as the dancing hall was between the two houses. Mrs. Glover stated that she had made the dresses for Mrs. Murdock before she went to Allen Springs and she did not have any "Dollie Varden" dress among those that she knew of. Mrs. Glover was not cross-examined by the defense.

Mrs Carroll of Orland, but formerly of Princeton, was called and testified that she was married in 1877 and spent part of the summer of that year at springs and knew Mrs. Murdock, Mrs. Glover and Mrs. Henry at this time. Said Mrs. Henry lived in a house right beyond the dance hall from Mrs. Murdock. She had left Allen Springs late in Sept., and Mrs. Henry was still there. Had never seen Mrs. Henry at the springs. On cross-examination Mrs. Carroll said that Brown of Orland had been to her house yesterday and had talked to her about the case. Also said she had talked to Mr. Lusk about the case a [illegible] days ago and had told him she did not remember much about Mrs. Murdock and she might have been away from Allen Springs several times [illegible] without knowing it.

Mr. Carroll, the husband of Mrs. Carrol stated that he was a saloon keeper of Orland but had formerly kept a [illegible] in Princeton. Mr. Carroll corroborated the statements of his wife in regard to their stay in Allen Springs.

Mrs. Murdock said she knew Mrs. Henry at Allen Springs in 1877 but was not intimately acquainted with her. Denied having received a letter from Mrs. Smith from Upper Lake on the 6th day of September, 1877. Never had "flowered" dresses at that time.

Mrs. Henry denied on stand that she knew Mrs. Glover, Mrs. Carroll or Mr. Carroll, at least could not remember of having ever seen them. Was positive that she had not stopped at Carroll's hotel in Princeton in the latter part of September 1877, and said she never saw them she was on her way from Allen Springs.

(Continued to page 3)

Mr. [illegible] took the stand and swore [illegible] stop at the hotel on [illegible] late and that she did tell them [illegible].

Mr. Johnson said he would like for the Court to allow him to take some depositions of citizens of Chico tomorrow morning to prove that Mr. Henry's reputation for truth and veracity was not good. After a recess of fifteen minutes Court announced that he would not allow these depositions to be taken as it was too late in the case. Plaintiff excepted.

A. Merrill said that he had been in Mr. Lark's room at the Crawford the other night when Mrs. Cassell was interviewed by Lark, she said that she was so little acquainted with Mrs. Murdock that she might have left Allen Springs several times and stayed away a week for all she knew.

Mrs. Lottie Smith was recalled but was not allowed to testify as her testimony was about the description of Mrs. Murdock and Mrs. Henry's cottage in Allen Springs.

Mrs. Henry took the stand and corrected a mistake she said she had made in her testimony this morning. She said she wished the record to show that she studied at Princeton in July 1877.

Mr. Henry made the same correction in his testimony. Plaintiff and defense both rested and court adjourned until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning when the argument will begin.

Evidence has closed, and although L. S. Megginson had been in town during the whole trial he was not put upon the stand as a witness, though he had figured a great deal in connection with this [illegible], and the defendants say that this is because he is sticking to the idea that he expressed in his letter to Turner, that he did not want to be put in a position that would lead to perjury in any way.

MRS. CRAVEN HAS RENEWED HER BATTLE

Now on Hearing Before Judge Troutt.

FAIR'S MILLIONS INVOLVED

FOOTE BITTERLY ATTACKS THE OPPOSING LAWYERS.

Says His Client Was Betrayed and Now She Asks but an Opportunity to Prove Her Claims.

It will be determined [illegible] whether or not Mrs. Nettie R. Craven [illegible] in the contest of Charles L. Fair [illegible] against the will of his dead father. [illegible] the widow of the deceased millionaire [illegible] in Judge Troutt's court [illegible] with her attorney, W. W. Foote, and Judge [illegible] to intervene in the contest to the will of the late James G. Fair. Opposing [illegible] formidable array of counsel gathered. Charles H. Heggerty, who with [illegible] A. Knight represents the contestant, Pierson & Mitchell, attorneys for the [illegible] of the trust will and Garret McEnerney [illegible] [illegible] widow [illegible] argument and personal [illegible].

W. W. Foote was first to address the court. "The petition which we have [illegible]

[illegible]

MRS. NETTIE R. CRAVEN.

[illegible]

PETER M'GLADE SHOULD KNOW HIS FATE TO-DAY

Case to Be Submitted This Morning.

ALLEGED FORGER TESTIFIED

DEFENSE WAS A SURPRISE TO THE PROSECUTION

Attorneys for the Accused Plainly Depend Upon Technicalities to Keep Him Out of Prison

[illegible]

PETER McGLADE.

The prosecution [illegible] sitting in its [illegible] against the accused. All officials connected with the department who had any knowledge of the [illegible] McGlade, and [illegible] were examined. Handwriting experts gave their opinions at length as to who had traced the signatures [illegible] documents and then the case of the commonwealth rested.

It was expected that a week would be occupied by the defense in an endeavor to prove that McGlade did not forge the [illegible] warrants as charged, but the defense evidently [illegible] in the various technical points raised during the trial [illegible] after McGlade had taken the stand and briefly denied that he forged the documents as charged in the indictment. Assistant District Attorney Black [illegible] the defendant and the trial was concluded as far as the examination of witnesses was concerned.

Assistant District Attorney Black's argument was purely analytical, segregating the various damaging statements against the accused from the mass of the testimony and placing [illegible] stress upon them. The opening argument did not occupy more than an hour, and then Mr. [illegible] began his address for the defense. His argument was based solely upon the contention that the prosecution had [illegible] the presumption [illegible] which the law raises [illegible] in a criminal prosecution. He also dwelt [illegible] that the forged warrants [illegible] [illegible] Handwriting Expert Kytka came in [illegible] and will [illegible]

[illegible]

DENIED THAT HE FORGED THE PAPERS.

Peter McGlade's Brief Testimony in His Own Behalf Yesterday.

"I did not forge these documents on the treasury purporting to come from the office of the Superintendent of Streets," testified Peter W. McGlade before Judge Cook and a jury in Department Twelve of the Superior Court yesterday. He denied all complicity in the transactions that led to his arrest.

"Take the witness," said Attorney Patrick Reddy, counsel for the prisoner.

"No cross-examination," said Deputy District Attorney A. P. Black, and the testimony in the case of the People against McGlade, charged with forgery, was declared closed. The charge was that McGlade, while acting as bookkeeper for the Superintendent of Streets, fabricated a number of claims, simulated the signatures of other persons, obtained the money and applied it to his own use.

Mr. Black said it was to be expected that McGlade would deny the [illegible] as he did not take the trouble to question him. Argument will be concluded to-day and it is expected that the case will be submitted to the jury this evening.

Large Photoglaphs.

Expert Theodore Kytka has informed us that he will photograph the entire courtroom tomorrow, including Judge, jury, lawyers and reporters. Said he [illegible] [illegible] would be very liberal in distributing these pictures among his friends. They will rated feel under [illegible] obligations to Mr. Kytka for the beautiful souvenir of this celebrated case which will pass on to history's [illegible] as one of the greatest ever tried in [illegible] county.

Mr. Kytka will remain with us until Tuesday, Mrs. Kytka will join him in Willows Sunday in order to hear a part of the argument in the great case. Then they will take their departure for Santa Barbara where Mr. Kytka will be a witness for the people vs. Mrs. Ida Adir who is suing the Ex-Governor of Nevada for breach of promise.

DAILY PROMOT[ER]

SPECIALLY ISSUED BY THE TRI-WEEKLY PROMOTER DURING THE HEARING OF THE MURDOCK NOTE SUIT

WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1890.

OPENING ARGUMENT.

Wm. M. Cannon Opens For The Plaintiff And Will Be Followed By F. C. Lusk For The Defense.

FRIDAY'S SESSION.

The Court was called promptly at 9 o'clock this morning. The Judge appeared in his usual neatness attired in tire spotless cream colored suit. The attorneys were all carefully and neatly groomed, with beautiful button-hole bouquets pinned tastefully upon the lapels of their coats. The jury fresh from their afternoon's vacation and good night's rest appeared eager for the fray.

All the evidence is in, and it now remains for the attorneys to sum up and present their arguments and the Judge to give his charge to the jury, and then no human power will be able to influence these twelve men, tried and true from the duty they owe to God and to man. In their hands rests the fate of the great case.

The arguments which is to continue six days is now on. The opening and closing belong to the plaintiff. In pursuant to this order the plaintiff fired their first gun this morning. Mr. Cannon said in part.

Mr. Cannon took the floor and calmly and in a conversational tone addressed the jury. He said this case like all things would have to have an end and the end of this case was now almost in sight and that he was glad it was soon to be in their hands to decide which side should have the decision; that there was not alone pecuniary interests involved in this case; There is the reputation of a woman to be cleared for if she should get an adverse decision it would stamp the mark of forgery upon the reputation of this woman who, heretofore, has walked before her fellow men with her honest and integrity unquestioned. He said that the plaintiff alleges that this note was given to Mrs. Murdock for a valuable consideration and that they had in sustension of their point what is called the burden of proof. Said: I think that a consideration equal to the face value of the note has been given but even if we had not proven this, even then, you would have to render a decision in favor of the plaintiff for we have told you just exactly how this note was signed and delivered to Mrs. Murdock and according to the law a consideration equal to the face value of a note does not have to be given to make it legal. Gentlemen of the jury, you know what I told you we would prove in the opening of the case and you also know that we have proven every point that we said we would prove, with the exception of a few minor points, which the Court excluded and to which we excepted. The attorney then criticised the opening statement of the defense and said that they had shown their side to be weak inasmuch as they did not make a clear statement of the facts that they were going to prove for, he said, they had no case.

Mr. Cannon said the facts in this case has narrowed down to one point, and that was whether or not this note was in existence before the year 1880 for the defense claim that the signature to the note was traced from the signature of the deed given to Mrs. Murdock by William Murdock in 1880 and if the plaintiff has proven that one person has seen this note before 1880, their case is proved and the defense is broken down. He said that if the jurymen should render a verdict in favor of the defense they would have to say that T. J. Kirkpatrick was a perjurer; that Gawn Murdock was a perjurer; that D. E. Alexander and E. J. Robinson were perjurers and that Mrs. Murdock was a forger.

The speaker said they had traced the note from the time it was given to Mrs. Murdock in 1877 untill the present time and had shown where it was and in whose hands it had been in through all these years. He said that the defense would say that this was not the way a business man like Wm. Murdock, showed in all his transactions, would have done, but he said, I will endeavor convince you that this was the best course Wm. Murdock could have pursued. Now I appeal to your reason, does it not seem to you that Wm. Murdock would have given such a note as this when on the day it was given, he had delivered to him $20,000 in cash besides having another note of $20,000 along with several notes of lesser sums cancelled?

Counsel went on to show the different sums of money paid by Samuel to Wm. and also spoke about the settlement between Gawn and his father. Produced receipt of Samuel from Gawn when the latter had paid to the former $8000 balance due on their settlement.

He took up the testimony of T. J. Kirkpatrick and went into it fully and brought plain and strong the affidavit signed by said Kirkpatrick in which it is alleged Samuel had made a true statement of the business relations between himself and Wm. in which this note is mentioned as being by Wm. Murdock for money loaned to him by Samuel.

Mr. Cannon then endeavored to explain how it come about that Mr. Marstill and others testified that Skiff said that he expected to make $10,000 out of this case and said that anybody is liable to make such remarks in a joking way.

Cam Ashurst came in for his share of the comments of the attorney. He said that the defense attempted to get thirty of the residents of Red Bluff and vicinity to say that Ashurst's reputation was bad but out of the thirty only secured about seven while plaintiff secured some of the best citizens of Tehama county to swear that his reputation was good.

Counsel then attempted to break down the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Henty but failed to point out any contradiction except on one or two minor points.

This afternoon attorney Cannon continued his remarks about the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Henty and said that this testimony agreed very well, when they were allowed to hear each other and "dove-tailed" together but when they were compelled to be separated and Mrs. Henty was put on the stand after her husband had been excluded she became a little "mixed" according to the opinion of the speaker. He said she showed intentional and willful diversion from the truth. Spoke of Mrs. Allen's statement that she was positive that Mrs. Murdock was in Allen Springs on September 5, 1877 and compared with this the testimony of Mrs. Glover and Mrs. Kirkpatrick who said she was at home on the 5th and 6th of Sept. 1877.

Deponent Young received a scorching at the hands of Cannon. Said Mr. Young's deposition was sadly and hopelessly tangled. That Young got names of the Murdock's mixed in several places and this all tended to show the unreliability of his testimony.

Mr. Cannon then said he would enter into the discussion of the uninteresting part of the testimony and that was the expert testimony. He dwelled quite a little on the point that the experts all received a large compensation for their services. He said it was true that Eisenschimel told him that the note was a forgery but did not give him this opinion until after he had consulted with an attorney for the defense.

During Mr. Cannon's remarks about the experts, Mr. Kytka was making some very beautiful as well as clever sketches of the speaker.

EXPERT KYTKA

Enterviewed Last Evening By A Promoter Reporter.

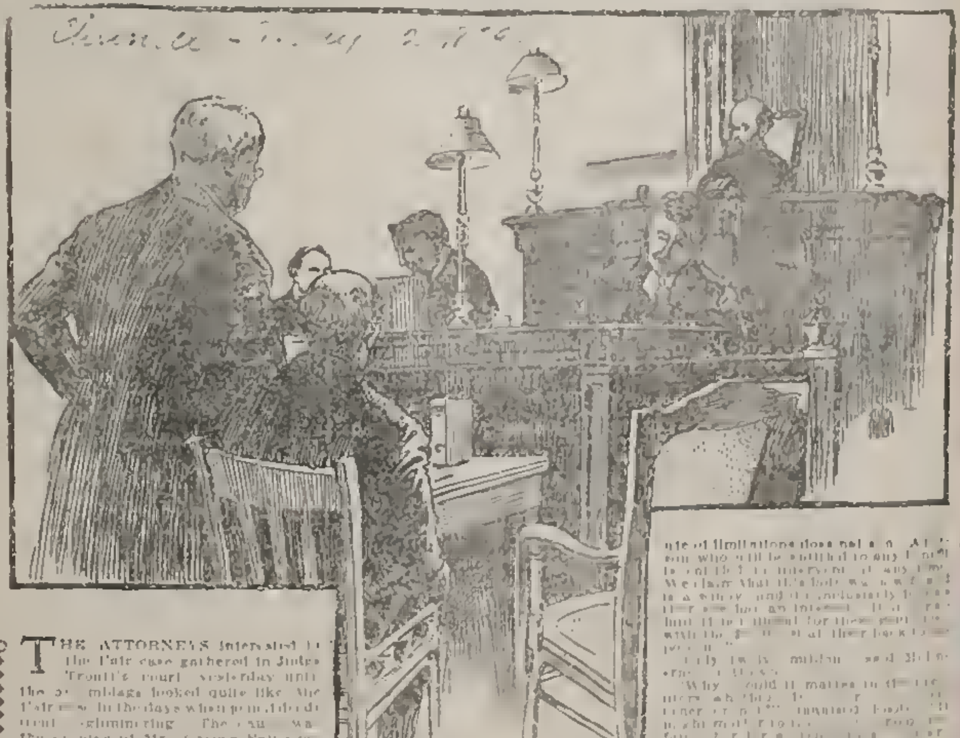
A Man Broad And Liberal In His Views And Of Wonderful Experience And Worth.

Theodore Kytka, the calligraphic expert in the great note case was interviewed last evening on the subjects of experts and handwriting by our reporter. Mr. Kytka is a gentleman worthy of respect of all and has made many friends during his short stay in Willows. He said in part, "I have much enjoyed myself while in Willows, and it has impressed upon my mind one of the most pleasant periods of my life. I feel that this will not be my last visit to your beautiful town, for I have contemplated a hunting trip. I have received a very cordial invitation from [illegible] brothers to visit them next [illegible]."

He was asked, what he thought of the testimony of Mr. Knock, and in his good-natured way, said, that his only regret was that he had been unable to hear and witness the fascinating testimony of Mr. Knock, and would gladly pay this gentleman if he would repeat the same. [illegible] the experts failed to [illegible] decided impression [illegible] and for [illegible] picturesque of [illegible] Had also heard that [illegible] Knock's friends [illegible] done him to declare [illegible] the photographic tracing and handwriting. [illegible] no doubt, Ames, [illegible] and Fair and his [illegible] who had been consulted [illegible] on such cases, would be [illegible] amazed when they read in the dailies" that a gentleman [illegible] in the great Murdock [illegible] expert whose youth and [illegible] manhood had been [illegible] of [illegible] in attending the [illegible] father, later mounted the [illegible] and rose [illegible] from there to a full fledged expert in handwriting.

He said he understood and [illegible] that his able contemporary, had [illegible] settled away and elated [illegible] and fame which he acquired on the stand, with the aid of a yard stick and tailor's tape, and would undoubtedly move his residence from the unpretentious little town of Willows to some great cosmopolitan metropolis, where prosperity and happiness come [illegible] who learns to labor and to wait.

MRS. CRAVEN SEEKS TO INTERVENE AS THE WIDOW OF THE LATE SENATOR JAMES G. FAIR.



THE ATTORNEYS interested in the Fair case gathered in Judge Troutt's court yesterday until the [illegible] looked quite like the Fair [illegible] in the days when [illegible] [illegible] glimmering. The cause was the [illegible] of Mrs. Craven-Fair's petition for leave to intervene in the contest filed by Charles L. Fair to the pencil will. This matter has gone over several times, but yesterday it came to a head and will be continued this morning. Mrs. Craven wishes to intervene in the probate proceedings of the court [illegible] that if the decision of Judge Slack, which invalidates the trust, is sustained by the Supreme Court [illegible] withdraw his [illegible] and [illegible] estate is settled amicably. To protect her interests [illegible] the alleged widow of the deceased Senator Mrs. Craven wishes to intervene. [illegible] Fair asked for [illegible] but this was [illegible] who was present [illegible] The arguments were [illegible] the room but [illegible] of Mrs. Craven [illegible] Fair [illegible] [illegible] that he was [illegible]

[illegible] not talking to a jury [illegible] to his client [illegible] claims [illegible] with which the trust will [illegible] [illegible] 24th [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] ute of limitations does not [illegible] son who will be entitled to any [illegible] [illegible] interment [illegible] We claim that this [illegible] is a widow, and [illegible] there she has an interest. [illegible] with the [illegible] their back [illegible] [illegible] Why [illegible] would it matter [illegible] [illegible] Mrs. [illegible]

KELLY'S STRAW BONDS.

DAILY PROMO[illegible]

[illegible]

WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, MAY 1[illegible], 1899.

POLICE COURT CLERK KELLY.

The Grand Jury's investigation into the issuance of straw bonds promises to result in the indictment of a number of Police Court attorneys and clerks.

J. N. E. Wilson, who a few years ago was one of the most promising lawyers before the local bar, and Clerk Thomas Kelly are the [illegible]

[illegible]

ATTORNEY F. C. LUSK

He Makes A Strong And Able Argument For The Defense And Will Be Followed By Gen. Barnes.

At [illegible] this morning attorney Lusk [illegible] in [illegible], proceeded to argue the case for the defense.

He said he was not a brilliant speaker and would not give the jury any flights of oratory or any beautiful figures of speech but would talk to them as man to man and as friend to friend. Said many insinuating remarks had been thrown out by the attorneys for the plaintiff in regard to his practice in the Justice Courts of [illegible] but said we would consider them to be true but in those little justice courts presided over by honest justices, no flowery speeches have to be made; no sophistry has to be used but only straightforward, wholesome [illegible]. The attorney [illegible] to the passing of the jurymen and called the attention of the jury to the kind of men that the plaintiff's counsel [illegible] from the jury-box and the kind of men the defense [illegible]. Said the plaintiff did not want such men as H. [illegible] or Mr. Morehouse of [illegible] but wanted put in the jury-box such men as Mr. [illegible]. Said the defense were perfectly satisfied with the present jury and were perfectly willing to trust the case to them. After this, which he termed his "introduction" to the jury, he began to [illegible] the history of the family of William and Sam Murdock from the time they both came to California in the early "fifties" with just a small amount of property belonging to William and none to Samuel, through all the intervening years from that time until the present, and traced the fortunes of both and then spoke of the conditions in which their [illegible] are at the present time.

Mr. Lusk discussed the [illegible] and whims of Mrs. Murdock. Spoke of her desire to leave her beautiful home and fine ranch on the banks of Stony creek near Orland to purchase a lodging house on Kearney street in San Francisco and trotting horses to put upon the track. Contrasted her traits with the plain unpretentious manner and habits of the good farmers' wives of the Compton's and the Murdock's of the defense. He said this note is one of the biggest frauds ever perpetrated inside the State of California outside the city of San Francisco. Public opinion denounces such work. The people of this State are not watching this case to see if expert testimony will continue but to see whether or not the rights are going to be protected. In referring to the note he said there was a strange story told about its origin and the purpose for which it was given. Said, they say this note was given to Mrs. Murdock by William Murdock for the benefit of her children in consideration of large sums of money alleged to have been borrowed from the father-in-law of the plaintiff by the old man who had thousands of dollars buried and not out on interest and then they said that their father-in-law, Samuel Murdock [illegible] from his [illegible] Gawn [illegible], Mrs. Lusk said, the attorney for the [illegible] [illegible] the father's property for herding and caring [illegible] Attorney Lusk [illegible] Mr. [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] which belonged to his father, simply [illegible] [illegible]?

A recess of fifteen minutes was taken after which Mr. Lusk continued his remarks in regard to the [illegible] of [illegible] this note. He said [illegible] would [illegible] show what W[illegible] did with this money that it is said he borrowed from Samuel Murdock [illegible] let the defense prove that he did [illegible] receive the money.

Said in passing about the character of Gawn Murdock, that he did not doubt but Gawn always paid his bills and paid his hired men good wages but one thing he did know, and that was that in all his transactions with his father he cheated the old fellow at every turn and endeavored to "pull the wool" over his eyes in every transaction. Said that cheating a parent is one of the greatest crimes that can be committed and the most ungrateful thing a man can do. Wanted to know if the reputation of Gawn Murdock was any better than the reputation of Henry Compton. Asked the jury if they had to believe this "cock-and-bull" story just [illegible] Gawn [illegible]. Counsel went right to the details of every transaction between Gawn and his father. Brought before the jury the testimony of Gawn Murdock to show that this was true. The settlement of Gawn and his father, drawn up by Justice [illegible] of Chico, shows that Gawn had finally to pay his father $21,000 in settlement for all indebtedness. In this settlement this $21,000 is said to have been paid in notes while the witnesses for the plaintiff testified that this was paid in twenty dollar gold pieces. Attorney made prominent the fact that if there were a contradiction here there may be and naturally would be, contradictions elsewhere.

Asherst was then discussed. Lusk said, "Gentlemen of the jury, [illegible] look into his face and see that [illegible] you wonder that the Indian women and the colored women could not escape his wiles in Red Bluff." His testimony was taken up and [illegible] criticised and points wherein he was mistaken, according to the speaker's opinion, were shown to the jury. Mr. Asherst testified that he had borrowed several thousand dollars from the Assessor of Tehama county but brought it to the minds of the jury the testimony of Charles Mayhew of Red Bluff [illegible] by the tax-collector's books of [illegible] time that only a few hundred dollars were in the hands of the assessor at the time Asherst stated he had borrowed the county's money from him. At this point the Court said it was noon and would adjourn.

This afternoon, everybody was arranged or rather disarranged so that Expert [illegible]

[illegible]

Mr. Lusk [illegible] Wm. Murdock [illegible]

[illegible] were the [illegible]

[illegible] on the 2[illegible] of September, for [illegible] stated that she [illegible] Mr. William Murdock was going to be there on [illegible] [illegible] her testimony on the stand that she [illegible] to [illegible] to this business [illegible] who would be [illegible] and who would be done. Several other contradictions were pointed out in the [illegible] [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] statements.

Mr. Lusk expressed himself as being somewhat [illegible] that all [illegible] William [illegible] would just [illegible] to $150,000, said it was [illegible] worth [illegible] the case. The No. [illegible] referred to by Lusk. He said [illegible] peculiar that that [illegible] should appear on the [illegible] plaintiff's [illegible] that it was simply [illegible] right.

Mr. Lusk commented [illegible] upon Mrs. Asherst and said the only thing he would say about her was that she filled every opening. Said she first went on the stand and testified that Mrs. Murdock went to [illegible] on the 5th of September and then after Mrs. Henry had [illegible] stated positively that Mrs. Murdock did not leave Allen Springs, Mrs. Asherst was [illegible] that [illegible] at Mrs. Henry [illegible] also contradicted her in regard to [illegible] at Allen Springs and [illegible] denied that Mrs. Murdock had in her wardrobe a "daily [illegible]" dress.

Mr. Lusk will continue his argument Monday.

They make a specialty of [illegible] at [illegible] barber shop because they know how to care for them.

Say—Why pay $[illegible] or $[illegible] for a bicycle when you can buy a Hartford equipped with [illegible] tube or American Dunlop Chamber tire for $35. Again we have the Vedette at $25, another good wheel. Drop in and examine them at Freeman's.

OTHER SIDE.

Attorney Lusk Argues All Day For the Defense.

Some Bitter Things Said by Defendants' Attorney About Some of Plaintiff's Witnesses

When we went to press yesterday afternoon, Mr. Cannon was arguing as to the expert testimony, drawing streak-of-lightning "k's" and sarcastically referring to the alleged "repatching and retouching" of the note signature. The jury inspected many checks, using the dividers in one instance to show that the note signature was no shorter than that on some of the checks, as some of the experts claimed.

The testimony of surveyor Knock was spoken of as showing that the measurements of different angles as shown in degrees and minutes in the signatures to note and to deed proved that there could have been no tracing as alleged.

In closing, Mr. Cannon said that these experts would swear away the life of any person—one's reputation being all there was in life. That this was a crucial time in the history of expert testimony and that this verdict would be the life or death of such testimony.

He said that this money was intended for the grandsons of Samuel, Edmund and Stanley Murdock, and that plaintiff asked for the full amount of principal and interest to date of verdict.

MR. LUSK'S ARGUMENT.

Attorney F. C. Lusk commenced his argument for the defense at nine o'clock this morning. He commenced by saying that the arguments were quite as important as the evidence; that he would attempt no flight of oratory but would content himself with talking common sense to the jury in an easy, conversational way.

He referred to the offer of plaintiff's attorneys, made at the opening of the case, to waive a jury, saying that he demanded a jury and desired twelve honest men to pass upon the merits of the case. He said that reports had reached his ears as to reports made about himself, one of which was that he had said that no man should be on a jury who was not worth $10,000. He denounced this as a lie, and said that he didn't want any prejudice felt against him on account of such false reports.

Mr. Lusk commenced his argument proper by taking up the history of the Murdocks. Said that they came from the north of Ireland and were a shrewd, money-making people, then mentioned the different relations of Wm. Murdock—the Murdocks of Lake County and Wm. Murdock's favorite sister Mrs. Mary Compton, whom he thought so much of, and her sons.

He then spoke of another branch of the Murdocks—Samuel Murdock and his children Alexander, Gawn and Mary Ann. Spoke of the son Gawn W. who married the sister of Cam Ashurst. Attorney then contrasted the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock, with the other women of the Murdock family, saying that she did not care to stay home, liked to dress well, travel, and had different aspirations than her quiet husband. Mr. Lusk took up the matter of the desire of plaintiff to purchase a "Kearney street lodging house" and trotting stock, saying that anyone acquainted in San Francisco knew that Kearney or Market street lodging houses were the scenes of nearly all the crimes committed in the metropolis. That a woman who had desires in such directions would be just the one to fall before the "wiles of adventurers and schemers.

Attorney then told the jury that they were not called upon to decide as to the reputations of any persons, but were to decide the case on the facts set before them, saying that he believed they were to "pass [illegible] the [illegible] from every [illegible] trated in California [illegible] San Francisco,' an that such a thing had never been attempted before outside of the metropolis. He said the question was not as to the merit of expert testimony, but as to whether the rights of people were to be maintained.

Attorney said that public opinion nearly hits things about right and that such men as Fred Preger and Sam Smith, who had done business with William Murdock for twenty years when they said no evidence would make them believe in a story, simply echoed this opinion. He said that fraud and perjury are creatures of secrecy and that the world was excluded from such doings and that the last twenty years had shown that the lust for money and greed for wealth had furnished just such cases and that one fraud furnished an example for another.

Mr. Lusk said that this was a "strange story," that it was bolstered up by "two fifth-rate lawyers, long played out in Sacramento, and one $10,000 Skiff."

The attorney referred at length to the alleged settlement of Gawn Murdock with his father, Samuel, claiming that Gawn's own testimony showed that he tried to swindle his father and that, only when his father threatened to sue him, did he give his father what was honestly due him.

The transactions between Gawn Murdock and his father were exhaustively gone into and extracts from the evidence given by Gawn Murdock were read to the jury in support of the attorney's assertions.

Attorney Lusk claimed that the affidavit made before "old Squire Halleck" of Chico, as to the settlement between Gawn Murdock and his father on September 5, 1877, was proof positive that no money had been given to Samuel Murdock at this settlement, but that the settlement was made in notes alone.

Mr. Lusk's principal scorching was reserved for witness Cam Ashurst—and it was a hot one. The attorney said that it had been demonstrated that Ashurst was a "cold-blooded, straight liar," and the jury were told of the "diabolical grin on the face of that scoundrel." Attorney said it must have raised a laugh in Red Bluff when people heard that Jim Matlock had been here to testify as to Ashurst's good character. He designated Ashurst as a "fraud from top to bottom," and delivered another roast in referring to Ashurst accusing Assessor Jackson Eby, now dead, of being guilty of a felony in loaning county funds. He said that the transcripts from the county records of Tehama county and the testimony of the once County Treasurer of that county proved that Eby had only a few hundred dollars in his hands and could not have loaned Ashurst any such sum as claimed in the year 1877.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

After Mr. Kytka had taken a photograph of the court room with the principal actors, at 1:30, Mr. Lusk resumed his argument, paying more attention to Mr. Ashurst and as to the conflict of testimony between Mrs. Eleanor Murdock and Ashurst, said that he believed the jury should listen to one who had never "pleaded the statute of limitation against an old widow 82 years of age."

Attorney then ridiculed the idea of a sane man giving his note for $100,000 at one per cent per month when he could have obtained the money at 5 or 6 per cent a year.

The events of September 5th, 1877 were referred to and Mr. Lusk said that no one was produced who saw Mrs. Murdock on the trip from Allen Springs to her home on that day. He said that Samuel Murdock trusted William implicitly and that there was no necessity to send for Mrs. Murdock to draw the note. Two stories were claimed to have been told as to where the $50,000 paid over to William on September 5th, 1877, come from: one that the money was from sale of stock, etc., and the other that it had been paid the day before.

The time of the note being put at twenty years from date was ridiculed by the attorney, saying that only a "driveling [illegible]" would execute such a paper, that to make it for twenty years or less would be different.

The "No. 95" in the lower left hand corner of the note was spoken of as going to prove that it was the work of a forger, the attorney saying that Wm. Murdock never gave but few notes in his life and that this number was inserted for the matter of giving the paper a genuine appearance.

Mr. Lusk's entire talk was a most careful presentation of his side of the case and was delivered in a very forceful manner. He was extremely earnest in his presentation of the facts appearing on the side of the defense, and his manner of delivery was such as to make a strong impression. He seemed to leave out no detail and was very careful to exhaust each branch of the case as it was taken up.

Mr. Lusk was still arguing when we went to press.

Dixon has a marriage boom.

PENSIVE IN THE OLD COURTROOM

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair Sadly Missed Her Daughter.

Argument Against Her Right to Intervene in the Fair Contest.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS INVOKED

Decisions Cited to Show That a Negligent Person Cannot Avail of Another's Industry.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair seemed pensive as she sat in Judge Troutt's courtroom yesterday, accompanied by her attorneys, W. W. Foote and S. C. Denson. After the adjournment of court she explained that she greatly missed her daughter as soon as she entered the room where the great will contest was had.

"Ah, the dear girl," she exclaimed. "We sat together all through that long trial, and I could not help wishing for her presence today. It is probable that she will visit San Francisco this summer."

Argument was resumed in regard to the right of Mrs. Craven-Fair to intervene in the contest to the will of James G. Fair, which was filed by Charles L. Fair, a son of the decedent. Attorney Garret McEnerney read from a decision by the Kansas Supreme Court in a similar case, in which a petition for permission to intervene was denied. Mr. McEnerney remarked that this was based on the reasonable ground that the would-be intervenor there, like Mrs. Craven-Fair here, had failed to assert her claims within the time required by law, and that this is sufficient to bar her from participation in the contest begun by Charles L. Fair. If for any reason the contest should be dismissed or if Mr. Fair should abandon it, Mrs. Craven-Fair's legal standing would be wiped out. It is the settled law of California that a person against whom the statute of limitations has run cannot revive any rights by seeking to intervene in an action that was begun in time by another party, for the plaintiff cannot in this manner be deprived of the benefits of the statute of limitations as against the applicant for intervention.

Attorney C. J. Heggerty, representing Charles L. Fair, added his objection to permitting Mrs. Craven-Fair to file her complaint in intervention. Speaking to Mr. Foote, he said he presumed that Messrs. Foote and Denson would do all that the law required in regard to issuing citations to all who are interested in the litigation.

"Yes," said Mr. Foote, "we shall serve all who have not been bought off and who are entitled to be cited."

Mr. Denson, speaking for Mrs. Craven-Fair, said that because no such action as this was ever done before, it was no reason why it should not be done now if the law allows. He argued that when the will was produced for probate his client was not cited as a party in interest; that she was not bound to appear at that time to declare her rights, and that because she did not appear the statute of limitations did not run against her, that now, as the validity of the will has been questioned, she has the legal right to come into court, lay down her papers and demand the share to which she is entitled in justice and equity.

The matter was taken under advisement, and the application of Mrs. Craven-Fair for a family allowance from the Fair estate was postponed for two weeks.

THE VERDICT A SURPRISE.

Peter W. McGlade Found Not Guilty of Forgery.

THE JURY WAS OUT FOR ABOUT FOUR HOURS.

PROSECUTION NOT AT AN END, AS ANOTHER INDICTMENT REMAINS.

Assistant District Attorney Black Astounded at the Result, as the Evidence Was Plain and Sufficient.

"The acquittal of McGlade is an outrage on the citizens of San Francisco," said Assistant District Attorney A. P. Black, yesterday. "How twelve men, who swore that they would be guided solely by the law and the evidence, could have arrived at the conclusion that McGlade was not guilty is more than an honest man can understand. This acquittal, however, does not end the prosecution of McGlade. Another indictment against him for forgery remains, and this will be set for trial without delay. The prosecution will endeavor to get a reliable jury for the next one. If we secure twelve jurors who have the interests of the city at heart I have no doubt that there will be a conviction, for the evidence is convincing. After the jury in the case just ended had been accepted I was given some information about members of the jury which probably would have caused them to be challenged by the prosecution had I received the information at the commencement of the trial. One of the jurors, I was told, was concerned in a Custom-house scandal when he was United States Appraiser."

The jury that caused general surprise by finding Peter W. McGlade not guilty of the first charge of forgery for which he was indicted was made up of the following men:

Robert Haley, who gave his address as 1108 Market street, and who is not mentioned in the directory as having any occupation.

Edward F. Knight, 1131 Howard street, no occupation.

J. E. Healey, 503 Larkin street, butler.

Charles M. Leavy, 2727 Pacific avenue, ex-United States Appraiser and now a manufacturer's agent.

W. S. Page, 330 Market street, capitalist.

L. H. Hallee, 810 Page street, of the grocery firm of Hartter, Hayes & Co.

A. Berg, 732 Golden Gate avenue, not mentioned in the directory.

A. W. Eaton, 830 McAllister street, keeps a small stationery store.

Warren F. Mills, 2007 Fillmore street, of the stevedore firm of Herelman & Mills.

Louis Leslasky, 1122 O'Farrell street, of the firm of Coblau & Co., merchants.

Abraham Frohberg, 1525 Steiner street, auctioneer.

F. N. Martinelli, 807 Mason street, butcher.

The jury went out at 12 o'clock yesterday and, after being taken to luncheon, began deliberating at about 2 o'clock. At 4:20 o'clock the verdict was reached.

The particular warrant whereon the indictment for forgery on which McGlade was tried was based, was drawn in favor of H. J. Swords for $92 for twenty-three days' work underground in the Street Department in August, 1895, at $4 a day. The name of Thomas F. Clark, who had charge of the Street Department's underground work, was signed to the certificate that Swords had worked that many days. The demand stated on its face that Swords had appeared before T. B. McGinnis, a deputy clerk in the office of the Board of Supervisors and had made an affidavit that the demand was correct. Swords' name as well as that of McGinnis was on this affidavit.

Clark, Swords and McGinnis testified that their names were forged. Swords did not work in the Street Department and never appeared before McGinnis.

This demand and others that were forged in the same way were prepared with such completeness and skill that they were put in the box of the Street Committee of the Board of Supervisors to be signed by the members of that committee, passed by the Board and approved by the Auditor. When they were returned by the Auditor to the office of the Superintendent McGlade, as the Street Superintendent's bookkeeper, took them as well as other Street Department demands. He receipted for them there. Later the forged demands were cashed at the city treasury, [illegible]

[illegible]

MRS. CRAVEN'S APPLICATION.

Her Attorneys and the Fair Estate's Lawyers Conclude Arguments.

The argument over Mrs. Nettie R. Craven's petition for leave to intervene in the contest instituted by Charles L. Fair against the trust will of the late James G. Fair was continued yesterday before Judge Troutt and the matter was submitted. The hearing on Mrs. Craven's petition for an allowance of [illegible] a month as the widow of James G. Fair was referred [illegible] weeks. Charles Fair's contest is also on Judge Troutt's calendar for a week from next Friday.

In opposition to Mrs. Craven's proposed intervention Attorney Garret McEnerney argued yesterday that she applied [illegible] late. Section [illegible] of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any contest of a will must be instituted within one year after it is admitted to probate. James G. Fair's will was admitted to probate [illegible] and Charles Fair's contest was filed on November [illegible]. McEnerney combated the idea that Charles Fair's contest preserved the rights of all other persons to contest after the year had expired, and that by intervening Mrs. Craven could become a contestant within the [illegible] allotted. He read a decision rendered by the Supreme Court of Illinois [illegible] November 9, [illegible] in which it was held [illegible] where persons intervene and become parties to a pending suit, as to them the suit is to be regarded as having been commenced at the time of their intervention."

Attorney Charles Heggerty made an argument on these lines. There is no [illegible] proceeding in California as intervention in a will contest, and if intervention were permissible Mrs. Craven is barred by the one-year limitation.

Attorney [illegible] Denson spoke for Mrs. Craven. He said that California and [illegible] were the only states whose Supreme Court decisions should be regarded as of weight in this matter. He slighted the decisions from other states cited by the opposing attorneys. Later he said that [illegible] was the only state in which such a question as that before the Court had been decided, and there the decision was in support of Mrs. Craven's contention.

EXPERT KYTKA CRITICISED.

McGlade's Attorney Assails His Testimony on Handwriting.

[illegible]

THE DAILY PROMO[illegible]

SPECIALLY ISSUED BY THE [illegible] ... KNOT- [illegible]

VOL. 3 WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, MONDAY, MAY 15, 1890

MASTERLY ARGUMENT.

Attorney F. C. Lusk Continues His Argument For The Defense Until 4:30 P. M.

About half an hour before court convened this morning the crowd began to come in. All pressed forward and took all the vacant seats inside and around the railing that were available.

The jury looked very much refreshed by their short vacation and seemed to wear a smile upon their faces that plainly showed that they were pleased that all this discussion would soon be over.

Attorney Lusk who had not completed his argument last Saturday continued his remarks this morning by first speaking of the rest the jury and counsel had had and assuring them that the end was surely near. The testimony of E. A. Robinson was discussed by Lusk. Spoke about Robinson holding the note two days and a half and about him saying he saw Wm. Murdock and spoke to him about the note, or said something about it in his presence, and yet said Murdock had not said one word or expressed any surprise whatever, that he, Robinson, an entire stranger to him, should have anything to do with it. Another thing that surprised the attorney was that Robinson had seen this man against whom, he testified, there was a $100,000 note, and yet had not remembered how he looked or anything about him. Lusk then, in a very sarcastic manner, said: "My friend, Mr. Johnson, has always asked witnesses what official position they ever held and seemed to think that this had great weight, but I see he did not ask Mr. Robinson what position he ever had. Why did he not ask Ichabod Robinson if he had not run for Police Judge in the city of Sacramento in 1874, on the Republican ticket, and if he had not been defeated by 500 votes. Why did he not ask him if he had not been run by Dan Burns for the Legislature in the Mission last election, and if he had not been defeated, though running on the Republican ticket, while Gage carried the district by several hundred votes. Why did he not ask Robinson if he were not a close relation of Dan Burns, so that we could see what a distinguished man he was? No! No! He did not want to do this for Ichabod is true to his name; his glory has departed.

D. E. Alexander was next brought under the fire of the relentless attorney. He called the attention of the jury to the testimony wherein he said he had held the note in his hands only a few minutes and simply made a casual observation of it, but still he noticed a fly speck upon the note when it was shown him on the stand, twelve years after he had examined it for two or three minutes. Lusk was not sparing in his uncomplimentary remarks about this gentleman.

The testimony of the defense in which they endeavored to prove that Wm. Murdock was not at the fair in Sacramento in 1887 was taken up by the speaker and thoroughly reviewed. He said the attorneys for the plaintiff had asked why the defense had not put Nelly Compton on the stand to disprove this since she should know whether or not Wm. Murdock was at the fair, for she stayed at the same house he did in that year, but Lusk said they told the gentlemen they would have brought her here if the memoranda of hers had not been ruled out by the Court.

H. A. Skiff was criticised and his testimony torn to pieces by Lusk. He called the attention of the jury to the witnesses who testified that Skiff said he would get $10,000 if he would testify in this case and the plaintiff won. He ridiculed Skiff, for saying that he overheard a conversation between Mrs. Murdock and William, in which she asked him for interest money and he had turned to her and said, in a dramatic way, that she held his note for $100,000, drawn up for 20 years, bearing interest at 12 per cent per annum, and that was enough.

Mr. Lusk returned to the events that happened in the year 1893 at Sacramento. He said that it was not reasonable that Murdock, when he had about $50,000 out on interest at this time, would have answered Mrs. Murdock, when she had told him in the presence of Megginson and her husband that she wanted to borrow some money from Megginson and wanted him, Murdock, to say that the note was good, that it was a good note and would be paid when due. He said under those circumstances, he thinks he would have told Mrs. Murdock to borrow money on the note, as he could make her a payment on it.

He said that no matter if Mrs. Murdock and her son Edwin, did testify that Murdock was in Sacramento in 1890, still he would rather believe Podere, Mr. Hammerson and Mr. Stoneburger, three good, honest men, who were disinterested parties, than he would these interested parties.

A recess of ten minutes was taken, after which Mr. Lusk resumed his argument.

Lusk spoke about the plaintiff and her husband, saying at many different times, that Wm. Murdock owed no one a cent, but had plenty of money. He said opposing counsel at many different times said that they would contradict the testimony of these witnesses who told about these statements of Mr. and Mrs. Murdock, but they had totally failed. He read parts of the testimony of Henry Compton, Wm. S. Murdock and others to substantiate these statements. Finally he showed wherein many other people had stated that William was rich and had plenty of money. He said of course this conversation alleged to have taken place in Sacramento, between Mrs. Murdock and Wm. Murdock, was a lie and merely a scheme concocted to aid this case, for all these witnesses had testified that Mrs. Murdock had said, herself, that he was rich and never owed a cent. The counsel could not see why the plaintiff did not put Megginson on the stand to prove this story unless they were afraid to do so.

After freely discussing this Mr. Lusk said he would now come to the most extraordinary part of the whole thing, if any part can be more extraordinary than another part, and that was that Samuel had never talked to any one about this large note. Was surprised that Samuel had not spoken to his son, or to his grandchildren about it, and have told them how to use it. Said it seemed very improbable that this man would not have spoken something about a note that was accumulating at the rate of $100 per month.

Attorney Lusk again referred to the attempts of Mrs. Murdock to borrow money on the note and said, if she wanted to borrow money on this, why did she not go to the Bank of Willows, the Bank of Colusa, or the Bank of Butte county, anyone of which would have been perfectly willing to have loaned her money, for Bill Murdock's note was good for almost any amount? Why did she go to Toledo, Ohio, to get money on it, if it was a legitimate note? Such things are unable to be answered.

The absurdity of Samuel and Gwen loaning, or being able to loan any money, to Wm Murdock received the attention of the speaker. He said they never had it to loan, for every cent they made they invested it in property. Said it was an utter impossibility for a person to start in 1847 with a band of three or four hundred sheep and from them make $80,000 by 1875.

From this Mr. Lusk went to the testimony of Chas. A. Young, against whom, he said, the only fault the attorney for the plaintiff could find was that he had written some of his documents on some one's else desk. Said this man stated that he and Megginson had taken this note to lawyers to see if it was good and that these attorneys had told them that it was bad. This testimony was thrown out by the Court.

The depositions of the three lawyers, who were consulted by Young, namely, A. C. Ellis of Salt Lake City, Senator Stewart of Nevada and Senator Cross of San Francisco, which were all ruled out, were referred to by Lusk and commented upon.

Said if Megginson could have gone on the stand without the gates of San Quentin staring him in the face, and have denied these statements he would have been put on, but he never dared to do it, said the attorney.

An adjournment was then taken until 1:30.

This afternoon the courtroom was crowded and the hallway was also filled, when Mr. Lusk again turned to wonderful batteries of logic, before which nothing seems able to stand, upon the jury. He again took up the note, and said he was unable to understand why Mary Helen Murdock did not take this note to "Uncle Bill" and get such an acknowledgement from him in writing before some persons as witnesses, so that she would not have to go through all this litigation, and so as to avoid a[illegible] [illegible] of Megginson [illegible] ask why [illegible] interest at [illegible] Lee to [illegible] drawing [illegible] to pay [illegible] expenses. After this, [illegible] to T. J. Kilpatrick [illegible] another "dig" about [illegible] which he said he purchased from the Murdocks [illegible] and "lying testimony" being entirely disproved by the defense.

He then [illegible] the fact [illegible] [illegible] was that it is a [illegible] written [illegible], should drive hurriedly from Allen Springs to her home and write such a note with ink in a tin-head. Counsel then put a signature of Mrs. Murdock by the side of the name of Mrs. Murdock to the note and called the attention of the jury how different they were. Said he wanted them to do a little "experting" themselves. Said, "If there is anything that bolts this note in the seal of infamy it is that fact."

Counsel switched from this to expert testimony and said it was upon this that the people of the day were relying to detect forgeries and false papers. Said they got the best, and no wonder they had to pay them a large sum of money for their services. Said no doubt Johnson would denounce expert testimony, but nevertheless it has been accepted by the courts as good testimony. Said honesty is the best policy, and if these experts were not honest they soon would have been crushed, but instead of this they have risen into prominence.

Mr. Lusk then showed the jury, that notwithstanding the testimony of Edwin Murdock, Mrs. Murdock had plenty of time to have this signature of this note traced from the signature of the deed of 1893, for it was proven that the note was given to Mrs. Murdock in 1890 to take to Arizona, as she said, but, said Lusk, that deed never went to Arizona, she took that deed then to some place and had this note made and the signature traced from the signature of the deed. The different signatures of Murdock, which were photographed, were displayed to the jury but their impression, [illegible] compared with signature of the note.

Lusk's argument will be continued to [illegible]morrow's issue.

BARNES SPEAKS

A Big Crowd Listens to the Noted Lawyer.

Much Eloquence, Interrupted Frequently by Applause—Johnson Speaks Tomorrow.

After the recess yesterday afternoon attorney Lusk continued his argument in regard to Mrs. Murdock taking the 1893 deed to Arizona, as follows:

"Did she went to trade her beautiful home and orchard for a 'cattle' farm in Arizona? No, gentlemen; she took it to the office L. S. Megginson in San Francisco. Why did she not come on the stand and tell us what she took that deed with her, and show that the purpose was as innocent as, instead of the damnable [illegible] which [illegible] attached to it. If the purpose was an honest one she could have told us, but no, when we cross-examined her we asked this question 'How long did you remain in Arizona?' Right there the astute Mr. [illegible] jumped to his feet and objected that it was not cross-examination, so we were not permitted to go any further. They [illegible] the [illegible] they would get [illegible]. Why [illegible] [illegible] the genuine signatures [illegible] the next [illegible] he claims [illegible] of the scroll, was [illegible] forger, after [illegible]. The attorney claimed that a [illegible] was easily detected of everything [illegible] that existed [illegible] forgery.

Mr. Lusk [illegible] he was not afraid of the merits of the case, but that he was afraid of the [illegible] eloquence of Grove L. Johnson. He said he had heard him, and that [illegible] wonderful powers of [illegible] He said he could [illegible] or laugh at will, and that he could have all the jury [illegible] crying with him.

He said, "Gentlemen, you will not laugh, when he comes before you, and you will not feel like laughing either." He said to them that he hoped they would enjoy Mr. Johnson, but that by the time they had examined the hundreds of exemplars, that their tears would be dried, and then he wanted them to not consider what Mr. Johnson had said, but to take the evidence and do their duties as they had sworn to do.

Thus ended the long but forceful argument which has added new laurels to the fame of attorney Lusk.

Long before the hour for calling court this morning at 9 o'clock, every available seat in our large court room, with [illegible] without the railing, was filled to hear General Barnes open his argument, in the case of all others, which is shaking society in this county to its very foundations. Society sits waiting to see whether there is or is not, right at their own doors away out here in what is ordinarily deemed to be an utterly innocent neighborhood, a forgery eclipsing in magnitude, anything ever undertaken in the large cities in the whole world.

The General was clean shaven, and wore a clean white tie, looked his very best, as he moved to a position in front of the jury. Another screen had been arranged, just in front of the jury, upon which were tongued three enlarged signatures of Wm. Murdock. One was [illegible] [illegible] "Amos" one, "[illegible]" and the other "Kyle's" [illegible] on it, [illegible] and green [illegible] [illegible] General [illegible].

The attorney began slowly, [illegible] increasing [illegible] He referred first to the [illegible] Devil's Island [illegible] committed by [illegible] two [illegible] by [illegible] case [illegible] [illegible] forged her husband's [illegible] to the amount of [illegible] pounds for [illegible] in stocks. [illegible] and other forgeries was made [illegible] by the [illegible].

He took up the case [illegible] who forged the name of [illegible] to Mrs. [illegible] Craven [illegible] for [illegible]

... is in San Fr... Neat ... the ... Crocker Bates ... with a fancy for ... and ... men." He next alluded to the wonderful ... of Becker and Creegan, ... forged ... of the ... banks of ... was ... a single ... "Cash is ... as well as they ... cannot detect the forgery ... detectives who ... only detect a ... little ... their ... did ... the discovery ... man sitting there, Kytka, by the aid of science."

He said there are ... people in the world and not two faces just alike. Out of all these no two write alike. That there is a ... quality in handwriting which cannot be disposed of, ... say.

"What matter if Mrs. Murdock did say ... to this wonderful piece of paper ... Here are ... to this ... and the note itself, which must convince any man, with sense enough to keep out of the asylum, that Wm. Murdock never signed that note."

General Barnes stopped short, and paid glowing tribute to the wisdom of Judge Parker's conduct of the case. He said that while the Court had found it necessary to differ with him several times, he never yet heard of a lawyer with whom an unbiased Judge would agree in all matters arising in the course of a long trial.

The noted lawyer said that out of over ... signatures of the "late lamented Murdock" that no two of them were alike, except the deed of 1890 and the note in question, which purported to have been made thirteen years apart.

He said if Wm. Murdock had written the two signatures, it would have been the "miracle of miracles"; that it was simply impossible for any person on the face of the earth, to have produced the two signatures just alike, without tracing one over the other.

In speaking of the work of experts, he paid the highest possible compliments to the gentlemen employed, for their ability and honesty. He had heard Mr. Kytka ... spoken of, but that he, himself, was proud of him; and that he is a resident of this State. He said he did not wonder that some people did not like him—people who wanted to live without work. Getting a little poetic, said:

"No rogue e'er felt the halter draw,
Who had a good opinion of the law."

As sure as that the sun will shine, that Mr. Kytka's fame had but just begun.

General Barnes asked the jury what this great audience meant? What it meant that the press of this State had a whole side given to the pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Murdock, in the muck of a stable digging a hole in which to bury this "monstrous" piece of paper.

He said that it was so that the million and a quarter of people in this State could watch and see if the jury would put their stamp of approval to "this wonderful piece of infamy, or whether they would say by their verdict that Glenn County is not a healthy place for these human hyenas, and if they were to be permitted to rob the grave and deprive the living of their property."

Frequent applause had to be stopped by the court, while the General proceeded.

When the hour for noon adjournment arrived the General had a pair of dividers demonstrating before the jury that there was not the one-hundredth part of an inch difference in the signatures to the note and the deed of 1890.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At convening of court this afternoon, it seemed as everybody in the county, and more, were in the courtroom.

(Continued on page 3)

General Barnes, with pointer in hand, went to the screen and explained to the jury that the red and green lines showed where patching and piecing took place, and where stops and halts were made by the imitator of the handwriting of William Murdock when he or she made the forged signature. Said William Murdock stood before the jury in the hundreds of checks and said to them that never in his life, before December, 1879, had he made a "k" with the terminal stroke turned upward as in the note. Examine all my signatures up to that date and you will find I never made such a "k."

The attorney claimed that if the burden of proof rested upon them instead of plaintiff, that they had abundantly made out such a case.

He said it was a miserable, cowardly and shambling imitation—a falsification, pure and simple. "If it is, what shall we say? What shall we say in condemnation in the exposure of the author of this thing? Ah, gentlemen! my heart goes out in kindly feeling towards this mother and father in this awful predicament into which they have fallen. Cum Ashurst and old Mrs. Kirkpatrick came to their relief as well as they could. This sister of the plaintiff, old Mrs. Kirkpatrick, says she went then on the 6th day of September, 1877, for the purpose of picking the geese, supposing that Mrs. Murdock was away at Allen Springs, but was surprised to find her at home. She had drawn this wonderful note for $100,000 only the day before, mind you gentlemen, and she never said one single word about it to her dear sister, Mrs. Kirkpatrick."

As we go to press General Barnes is still speaking. Grove L. Johnson will commence his talk to the jury tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

ARE THE JURY HONEST IN THEIR CONVICTIONS.

The celebrated case is laid by for the time. The jury was evenly divided and both sides think there were six men incapable of judging right from wrong.

As usual, a gang of partisans are howling corruption, bribery, etc., as has been done here several times before, but save upon one occasion has there been any grounds whatever for such charges.

The report that the defense paid $10,000 for five jurymen is the rankest rot and an injustice to the six men who voted their honest convictions on the side of the defense. Knowing these men personally is all the evidence necessary to refute such reports; and further that the parties who conceived the lie would not face a single man and make such statements to his face. Lying never advanced any cause, but on the contrary boomerangs back to the originators with serious results or dire disaster.

The case would probably be in better shape for the defense had the jury decided against them, for a second trial would have been unnecessary and the end reached much earlier than it will be as it now stands, consequently the purchase of five jurors would have been foolish from any standpoint.

Such talk is reprehensible and unworthy of any intelligent man.

THE DAILY PR

SPECIALLY ISSUED BY THE TRI-WEEKLY PROMOTER DURING ...

VOL. 3 WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, TUESDAY,

GEN. W. H. L. BARNE

Explains To The Jury The Tracings Of

The Great Value Of Experts

Continued from Monday.

After a short recess, attorney Lusk directed his attention to expert testimony and referred to the evidence of Expert Knock. Said in reference to him: He has not the machine, nor the ability nor the brains to find these great differences that he mentioned in his testimony from the original signature. Said of course there were a few differences in the length of some of the lines and after they had been enlarged sixty times a person might find little one thousandth of an inch difference in length. Said Mr. Knock's testimony only strengthened the defense. A few exhibits were put under the microscope for inspection by the jury and differences noted.

The argument of Mr. Lusk was a very complete resume of the entire case. No point was omitted and nothing left untouched. The testimony of each witness was considered and a complete clean up made of each point before proceeding to discuss another. In only one instance did he go over any part of the testimony of any witness but once, and that was in reference to T. J. Kirkpatrick's evidence. The testimony referred to by him, was taken from and as written by the shorthand reporter, so that no mistake could be made as to the correctness of the evidence argued from. The points made were clear, clean cut, and resting solely upon the evidence as produced at the trial. And while from an oratorical standpoint it did not abound in flights of fancy words, pictures or touching pathos, it was said by all to be a very masterly effort, powerful in its simplicity, perfect in its arrangement and presentation and telling in its effect.

The evidence was reviewed very carefully, the contradictions laid bare and while the comment was sometime emphatic it was a dispassionate appeal to the common sense side of the case. No impassioned appeal was made to the jury. No attempt at rhetorical display. And although opportunity for both seemed present to the jury the plain unmistakable facts as they appeared to him from the evidence, in a well worded but plain, clear and concise manner.

It was plain that the speaker had thrown himself as it were into the case and felt, became a part of, and believed fully in the truth of the position contended for by the defence, and so strong were the facts and so convincing was his argument that there seems to be but little, if any doubt as to the result and the general impression of every one is; that the plaintiff cannot get a verdict.

In concluding his argument, Mr. Lusk said Mr. Johnson was going to close the case for the plaintiff and that he expected he would pray and cry and beg them to render a verdict in favor of the plaintiff as he did in the Martin will case in San Francisco. Mr. Lusk here held up a picture taken from the Examiner, of Mr. Johnson kneeling before the jury imploring them not to give him an adverse decision. Everybody laughed and some showed their appreciation of the joke by clapping their hands. Mr. Lusk said it seems funny now but when he comes to do this, you will all cry and I will cry with you for no one can cry before I do. Said Mr. Johnson cried the the celebrated Morehouse bill through the legislature, though it did no good and did not think it would do any good here.

Thanking the jury for their attention Mr. Lusk closed. After the adjournment crowds of people gathered around Mr. Lusk congratulating him upon his fine speech.

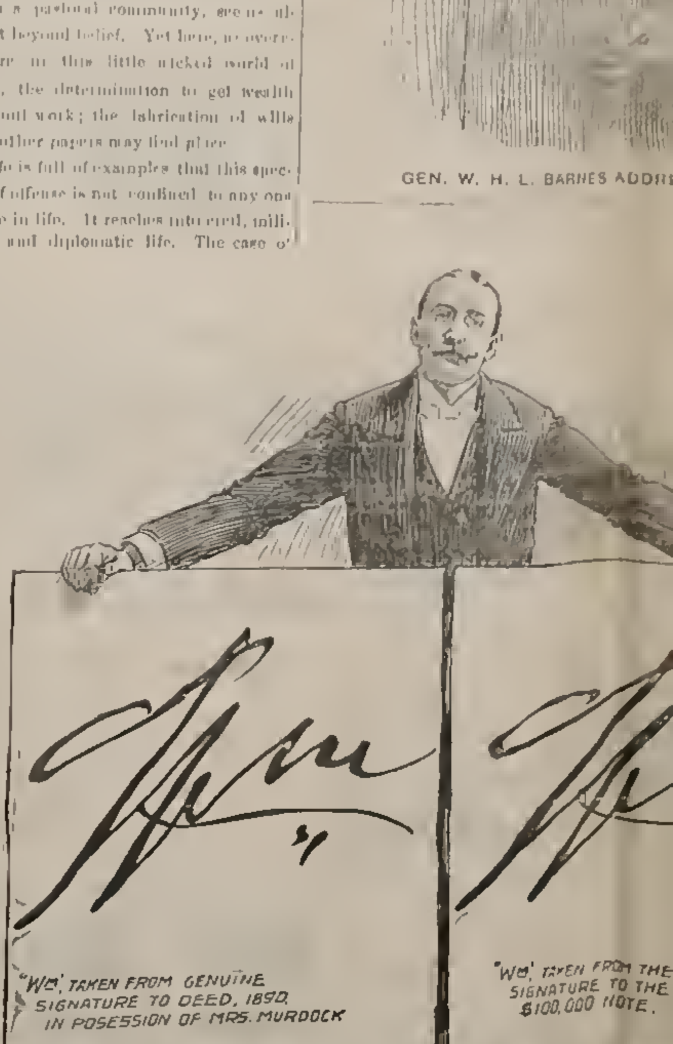
MORNING SESSION.

General W. H. L. Barnes opened his argument, by stating that his connection with this case, as associate counsel, commenced at a late date and that he had not had the opportunity to give the preliminary preparation necessary. He was called in almost as a 13th juror. The plaintiff and her husband, the principal witnesses and the attorneys, have been mere characters passing before him, as before the jury. He, as a juror, entered the case without prejudice. Whoever was to win or lose made no difference to the jury, nor to him. Without a word of abuse or an epithet, he would discuss the evidence.

That such an offense against the law of the land which was committed in such a pastoral community, seems almost beyond belief. Yet here, as everywhere in this little wicked world of ours, the determination to get wealth without work; the fabrication of wills and other papers may find place.

Life is full of examples that this species of offense is not confined to any one grade in life. It reaches into civil, military and diplomatic life. The case of

GEN. W. H. L. BARNES ADDR



EXPERT T. KYTKA, AND HIS TWO "WM S."

Expert Kytka Demonstrated By This Method That The W... Traced From The Wm. On The Deed March 12, 1890, Which D... Of Mrs. Murdock.

ROMOTER.

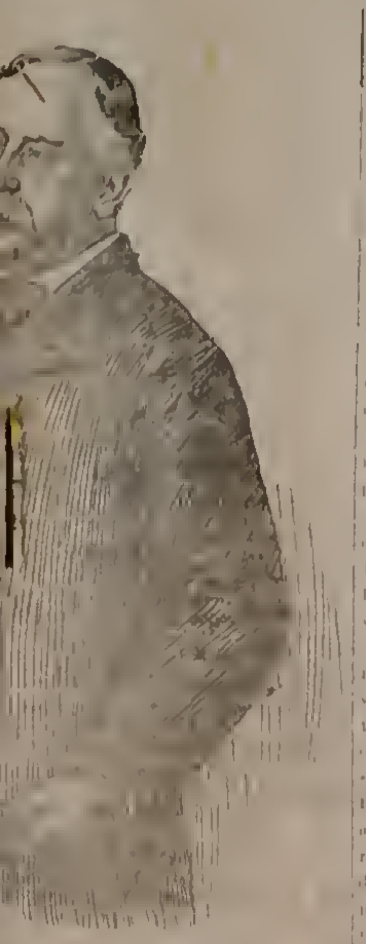
[illegible] OF THE [illegible]

AY, MAY 16, 1899. No. 63

IES SPEAKS.

Of The Two "Wm's." And

rts Testimony.



S ADDRESSING THE JURY.

WM S."

t The Wm. On The Note Was

Which Deed Was In Possession

Dreyfus, condemned to exile on [illegible] papers and later testimony, was ref[illegible] only the speaker. [illegible] Lady Sikes, who forged the name of [illegible] Sikes to checks for $70,000 [illegible] gambling on the [illegible] mentioned.

General Barnes then took [illegible] question of expert testimony and [illegible] of the application of the [illegible] and photography in detecting [illegible] These were used in the [illegible] case, in which over 200 [illegible] were attempted to be [illegible] and into effect, [illegible] matter from [illegible] These were all detected by the [illegible] testimony and use of the [illegible] photography. He showed that [illegible] [illegible] the principal [illegible] in the [illegible] him and the attorneys and [illegible] witnesses all went to [illegible].

The Craven [illegible] tion of the attorney. [illegible] whom [illegible] letter [illegible] tion of children, [illegible] others [illegible] suit was that this woman, [illegible] Craven, walked [illegible] as a forger. Mrs. [illegible] death of [illegible] part of [illegible] ciety of having [illegible] through expert testimony [illegible] class of criminals, [illegible] were mentioned, [illegible] $30,000. Who found them [illegible] the police? Was it the [illegible] could [illegible] No; [illegible] that man there, [illegible] microscope did it.

These fraudulent writings were [illegible] experts and judgment [illegible] Courts.

The counsel then spoke of the peculiarities of handwriting of individuals, and the changes that take place in characteristics from school days until it becomes established, and even then [illegible] individual's writing while having similar characteristics is not always exactly similar.

"There are twelve of you in the box," said the General, "and yet the character of the handwriting of each of you is entirely different." There are 14,0[illegible] of human beings, with nose, mouth, eyes, forehead, etc., no two exactly alike, and yet it would be very hard to ex[illegible] the exact difference. When Morgan & Co., bankers, write a draft in London it is examined and paid, if found by comparison to be correct. This is so the world over, and yet no two writings are exactly alike. A humorous description of how he learned to write at [illegible] The change in handwriting from that learned at school until a certain form of its character was mentioned. After a time each individual's writing becomes fixed. He mentioned as a fact, however, that no person could write just exactly alike every time, and exactly [illegible] twice.

There was no doubt in his mind as [illegible]

(Continued on page 3)

General Barnes' Speech.

Continued from page 1

[illegible] that [illegible] deed, and the signature to [illegible] are [illegible] than mere [illegible] of a crime. [illegible] in open Court, and in view of that [illegible] what difference did it make that Mrs. Murdock testified that she saw William Murdock sign this note, with [illegible] documents before the jury.

He wanted to use a word of Mr. Knock and with a single knock he would dispose of [illegible]. He then ridiculed the testimony of the witness being able to offset with his compass and protractor, the microscope lens. Mr Knock's evidence was as Mr. Luck said the best evidence for the defendant.

The speaker paid a compliment to the Court for his forbearance and uniform courtesy during the trial of this case.

Taking charts of the two Wms. in his hand he showed that they were just exactly alike, proclaiming that one was a tracing of the other. It is not necessary for any one to tell the jurors that the north wind was blowing over these plains, nor that the sun was shining, they knew it, and with the evidence in this case before it the jury will know this note is a forgery. The jury knows, and the experts could not tell it that there is not another signature, and there were 800 signatures before it, that there is not another like it among them. It is not a matter of opinion. There was only the identity between the signature to the deed made many years later and the alleged note. Why such identity exists has been revealed to the sight of the jurors. It had been revealed to them and in their sight by the experts. It had been detailed to the jury and detailed only to it because it must be to make the record complete.

He made an eloquent peroration as to what the microscope has been as a revealer of crime in writings, pointing to it as it stood on a table in front of the Judge.

Turning his attention again to the note and deed signatures, he claimed for the defence that no human being could produce such identical signatures as these was here without tracing. Here he called up William Murdock and made a mental picture of this honest hard-handed Scotch-Irish son of toil.

He has written for the benefit of this Jury over 800 signatures and not one of them are exactly alike, except these two so many years apart.

The speaker then drew a picture of William Murdock, in the twilight writing and signing this note for $100,000, that was very touching. He said what does that amount, the jury had before it 800 signatures. There were eccentricities in all these signatures, and yet all these were individual eccentricities. Like a man who has lost an arm. He is the same man. There are eccentricities in all these signatures, but the Jury know they are his signatures. They all have the same character.

When people come into Court they do not come into it for sympathy, but for the execution of the law. The jury knew that if a note signed in 1870 and another in 1890 and they had the same eccentricities, one would be a forgery.

Taking exhibit 877, a note dated at Colusa in October, 1878, General Barnes said Wm. Murdock took considerable pains to sign it. It was an important matter and Wm. Murdock recognized it. He showed another signature and said that is the way Wm. Murdock wrote when he meant business. Now, when he signed his name to small checks he did not take any special pains. Wrote some of them on his knees.

General Barnes then took a number of checks given to various banks and showed them to the jury, saying they were written with different kinds of pencils, with different kinds of pens and with different kinds of ink. He called the attention of the jury [illegible] they had [illegible] Murdock [illegible] two [illegible] were [illegible] to the signature to the deed [illegible] to the [illegible].

Mr. Barnes [illegible] a [illegible] checks written [illegible], he said, of Murdock's [illegible] of "his [illegible]," and [illegible] the jury. He said, "[illegible], they are no more alike than an elephant is like a [illegible] day." He [illegible] who could believe that they were, to a drivelling idiot in an insane asylum. Then he referred to the alleged incident of putting the note in a bottle, then in a powder can and burying it. Murdock never saw it again in 13 years, until it was resurrected and got into the Orland bank. He asked the jury that when they get to themselves to look at these papers as the twelve sensible men they were, to forget the talk of the lawyers, and to forget the people of the deceased. "Forget all these things," said he. He wanted them to take all these papers and examine them carefully. This signature of William Murdock was one which a skillful forger could successfully produce, or that if the grand old Scotch-Irishman would see it, he might look at it the second time, and call in his friend Jim Hord, and ask him where he, Murdock, wrote that.

Court then took a recess for 15 minutes.

On reconvening of the court General Barnes took the alleged note and said it is alleged that Wm. Murdock made the signature to this note. It was then buried for 13 years. There was not another signature made like it in all the checks he had made. But 10 years later he made the mortgage and then he wrote his name exactly like he did 10 years before.

Again, in referring to the expert testimony the General spoke of between 20 and 30 independent characteristics of these two signatures not found in the others.

It was unfortunate that Wm. Murdock did not write the entire note. It is much easier to forge a signature than it is a whole note.

Reference was made to the forged Garfield-Morey letters and its detection by the experts with the microscope.

"A man may not see anything, but no living man can dispute the facts as shown by this little instrument," he said laying his hand upon it. No one could deny the facts as shown, and he believed that no one could dispute the facts found by the experts in this case. In his mind there was no doubt that the alleged signature of William Murdock to the note was a tracing.

Counsel then spoke in high terms of Messrs. Ames, Eisenschimel and Kytka. Especially did he speak well of the photographic work of the latter. There are a class of criminals who do not like expert work like that of Mr. Kytka.

Reference was made to the efforts of the plaintiff's attorneys to break down the testimony of Eisenschimel, and the conferences between him and Mr. Meggine prior to his employment by the defense, and in that connection he said that modern experience is not so much a matter of opinion, [illegible] facts as shown by the microscope.

General Barnes asked why are so many people in this courtroom today? Why is it that the newspapers of this State from one end of it to the other have taken so much interest in this case. It is because 2,000,000 people in this State are watching to see if the jury of Glenn county are going to permit a forgery like this or are going to allow these people to go out of court with the wealth of William Murdock. An appeal was made to the jury to [illegible] man.

On the question of the paper used in the alleged note he said that until 1883 nearly all the paper used in writing was made [illegible]. The experts [illegible] the microscope [illegible] paper of the note [illegible] 1883. The [illegible] at [illegible] experts [illegible] The speaker said [illegible] was not used until 1878 [illegible] the paper [illegible] and it was claimed [illegible] 1873 [illegible] later.

The attorney [illegible] as shown on the [illegible] on the [illegible] and during this time the [illegible] was taken.

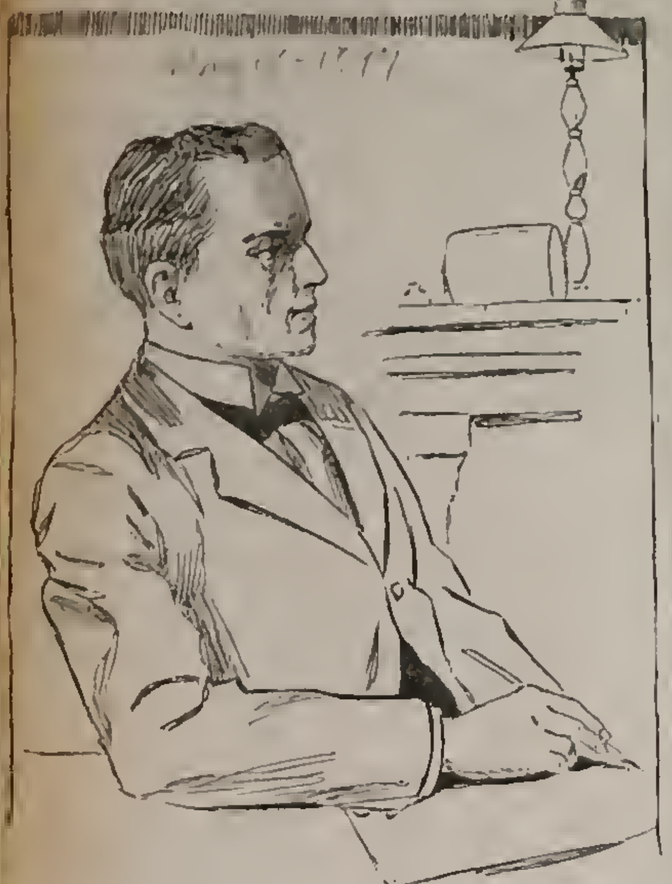
AFTERNOON SESSION.

On reconvening of the court at 1:30 p. m. General Barnes resumed his argument for the defense continuing his comparisons of the signatures to the alleged note and the deed where he left off at the noon recess. He called the attention of the jury to the difference in these two signatures, claiming that the signature to the note showed evidence of halting, painting and filling in as would be the case in a tracing. He claimed that the evidence of Mr. Ames on this matter must be correct, that the note signature was a tracing. He then called attention of the jury to the dash, or rubric, under the letter "m" in Wm. He said from 1871, until the making of the deed in 1890, none of the signatures of William Murdock bore the rubric in the manner found in deed and the alleged signature in the note, then pointed out reasons why the rubric on the note, in the opinion of the experts, was traced and made to appear like the signature of the deed.

Counsel asked the jury to try writing their own signature in the jury room, especially the abbreviations, and see if they could write them twice alike. They would find that they could not do it. In this connection he directed to mention Hetty Green and her alleged attempt to get her aunt's money, by forging codicils to the aunt's will, and tracing the aunt's signature to them, stating that notwithstanding her millions, the decision of the court was against her, and she did not get the estate of her aunt. He referred to her as the richest and meanest woman in the United States, living in a mean little room in Jersey City.

General Barnes' argument will be continued in tomorrow's issue.

HAND OF THE FORGER WROTE OUT THE BOND.



Clerk Thomas Kelly of Judge Graham's Court.

Grand Jury Subpoenas a Disreputable Crew of Men Interested in Crooked Bond Business.

WHO FILLED in the bogus bonds on which the negro, Harry Wilson, was released a fortnight ago?

Whoever did it committed forgery.

The Grand Jury, which has been considering the straw bond scandal for the last fortnight, believes that the person who wrote the body of the bonds forged the names of Thomas Cosgrove and E. Riley, the suppositilious signers whose identity has not been solved. Carl Eisenschimmel, the handwriting expert, appeared before the Grand Jury yesterday and testified that all the writing in the bonds was done by the same person.

Eisenschimmel was given the bonds to examine some days ago and was furnished also with specimens of the handwriting of ex-Deputy Sheriff Ed Reilly, whom Police Court Clerk Thomas Kelly accuses of signing the bonds. Eisenschimmel is convinced that only one person touched the bonds. His testimony was an eye-opener for the Grand Jury and it now remains to be proved who filled in the documents upon which the notorious negro was set free.

Clerk Kelly swore positively before the Grand Jury last week that Reilly put his name to the bonds in his presence and that he affirmed under oath his ownership of the property itemized in the bonds. Kelly was not called again yesterday, but Reilly had a new witness to certify to the impossibility of his having been at Grant avenue and Morton street at the time the bonds were signed. Reilly realizes that he is in a tight place, whether guilty or not, as Kelly had a dozen intimates before the Grand Jury yesterday to support his evidence.

Men who have been accused and convicted of many crimes and whose names are familiar as bondsmen in criminal cases were summoned yesterday. Among them were Billy Abbott, keeper of one of the worst dives in the city; Mike Flynn, who shot to death the brother of his partner, Billy Gallagher, and who, with Gallagher, runs the saloon at Grant avenue and Morton street, where Clerk Kelly loafs and where he tended bar until he was made Police Court clerk. Charles Lederer, a professional bondsman; T. D. Elliott, J. Edsell, E. L. Pelemond, John Breen, James Gattily, Agnes O'Reilly, J. T. Bailey, Clay Markle, Della Dunn, Rose Kenny, J. M. Evans, D. Becker, Abe Becket and others were also subpoenaed.

Lederer acknowledged that he had no real estate, though he has made a business of going on bonds. He was grilled by the members of the Grand Jury and when he retired told the gang waiting its turn to be called about his experience. Saloon-keeper Ostrander and Billy Abbott and Mike Flynn, who were Clerk Kelly's backers, would take care of the latter. Abbott, Sears, Gallagher and Flynn coached the dozen other witnesses and laughed at the idea of any of them being punished for their acts.

All the divekeepers conferred during the afternoon and agreed to stick together. Attorney J. N. E. Wilson, who is under fire for his part in a number of queer transactions on bonds, was about the Grand Jury chambers smiling and chatting familiarly with the gang from Grant avenue. Ex-Deputy Sheriff Reilly is the man who, in December, 1891, while conducting Burglar Riordan from jail to San Quentin was blinded by red pepper thrown by Convict Jack Hoey, now serving seven years in prison. Reilly shot Hoey before he could escape and held on to Riordan.

The Grand Jury, while determined to ferret out the guilt of the men who have prostituted justice in the release on worthless bonds of dozens of thieves, highwaymen, bawds, opium smokers and vagrants, finds it no easy task to procure the necessary evidence. The straw bondsmen are banded together to save themselves and perjury is their commonest defense. Thursday afternoon the matter will be taken up again and meanwhile detectives and experts will endeavor to probe deeper into it.

Kelley still continues as clerk in Judge Graham's court.

Mrs. Murdock and Her Witnesses Handled Mercilessly.

NOTE ASSAILED AS THE WORK OF CRIMINALS.

EVIDENCE ANALYZED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE JURY.

Grove L. Johnson Begins the Final Appeal for the Plaintiff To-Day—Case Goes to the Jury Saturday.

[illegible]

WILLOWS, May 16.—Long before 9 o'clock this morning every conceivable inch of space inside and out the railing in the courtroom was occupied by prominent people from all parts of the county to hear General Barnes' argument for the defense in the Murdock note suit. He made a telling speech, in which he paid a glowing tribute to Judge Pirkey for his management of the case. General Barnes said the Judge had not always agreed with him, but he never saw a lawyer with whom a Judge would agree in all matters in a long trial. Out of nearly a thousand signatures of William Murdock no two of them were alike except on the deed of 1890 and the note of 1877. Any man with sense enough to keep out of an insane asylum could see William Murdock never signed the note. If Murdock could make two signatures thirteen years apart and be exactly alike it would be a miracle of miracles, but this is what these two signatures show.

The daily papers are publishing this trial," said Barnes, "so the million and a quarter of people in California can see whether a Glenn county jury will put the stamp of approval to this infamous piece of paper, whether these human hyenas could rob the graves of the dead, and deprive the living of their property."

Plaintiff sat by her husband and smiled pleasantly while General Barnes described how they had thrown Samuel Murdock in the ground like a dog without a slab or even a rotten board to mark his last resting place, after he died. Megginson showed not the least sign of any effect on him when he was pointed as the man who was the principal in a "damnable forgery." General Barnes demonstrated with a pair of dividers on the enlargements that there is not the one-hundredth part of an inch difference in the sizes of the signatures in the note and the deed of 1890, going to show that the signature on the note was traced from the signature to the deed of 1890.

General Barnes toasted Cain Ashurst to a good brown. He said that Ashurst filled his part in the great plot by saying he had paid Samuel Murdock $10,000 the day before the big note was made, which he borrowed of County Treasurer Eby, when in fact they could not have had more than $300 or $400, as shown by the records of the Treasurer's office in Tehama county. He said Mrs. Murdock hired a man at Lessville to drive her home on September 4, 1887, and was with the man all day till 11 o'clock at night, yet did not know his name. "What a story," said Barnes. "There is just one bright spot in all this sea of perjury and villainy and that is that Mrs. Murdock did not ask her sons to swear they ever saw or heard of the note that was theirs and made them worth $260,000 apiece. They would not do it, gentlemen of the jury."

Barnes said that young Murdock, who was on the stand, was the only one on plaintiff's side who looked like he was telling the truth. Barnes said he was hunting some excuse for Robinson and Alexander, the lawyers from Sacramento, who swore they saw the note in 1887. He did not want to think that men in his profession would willfully perjure themselves, but thought they were mistaken.

Barnes wanted to know where Gawn Murdock was all the time when his wife was hawking the big note around trying to trade it for "second-grade Kearny-street lodging-houses," or "old fly-blown trotting horses at Sacramento." "Gentlemen of the jury," said Barnes, "people who have honest claims against solvent creditors do not act that way." He said that Megginson was willing to make money any way he could, but he was too smart a man to get on the stand and swear to a lie about that note. Megginson never loaned Mrs. Murdock a dollar on the note. Everything was put off on "poor old Gawn." He was made to swear to everything and could not help himself.

Barnes, continuing called attention to the appearance of Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock on the stand. He said he actually felt sorry down deep in his heart for the "poor woman," who had held up bravely all through, but almost wilted the last time she went on the stand. Her face was livid, her lips were ashen, her bosom heaved and panted, and her eyes were half closed. Barnes declared that in this condition she had given the lie to every witness who had gone on the stand for the other side, including Mr. and Mrs. Henry. He said Thomas Kirkpatrick did not begin to learn his part in the drama until after 1890, when Mrs. Murdock learned that the note, if for "love and affection," was not good, and that then this "devilish old man" had manufactured that piece of paper, denominated an affidavit, signed by Samuel as a statement of the financial condition between himself and William Murdock. Barnes said he had torn it out of an old book and watered the ink to give it the appearance of age.

Grove Johnson, for plaintiff, has two days in which to close and will begin to-morrow at 9 o'clock.

MORE CITY MONEY STOLEN

Forgers Rob the Treasury With Small Chance of Being Caught.

Registrar Biggy's office has furnished another illustration of the ease with which the city treasury may be robbed and the person doing the stealing [illegible]. Seven forged warrants have passed through the usual channels [illegible] and paid. For a week the city detectives have been at work [illegible] report that they are unable to discover any clew [illegible] person directly with the steal. [illegible] ments of Auditor Wells and Treasurer Truman, that [illegible] robbing the city treasury through forgeries and [illegible] the thief after the robbery has been committed. These [illegible] would have been discovered even in the Registrar's office [illegible] warrants been stolen from a desk during the absence of the clerk who had charge of them.

FORGERS have made another raid on the City Treasury. This time the amount secured from the public sack was small, but it proves how easy it is to slip past the watchmen of the public funds and filch from the piles of gold in the treasurer's vault.

Seven demands on the treasury with the forged signatures of as many men who had claims against the city were cashed by the Treasurer. The demands were drawn by the Registrar's office and it is believed the forger was an employe of that office. It is thought a clerk of the Registrar forged the signatures and from the description given by the clerks of the Treasurer's office of the man who presented the forged warrants for payment it is believed he had a confederate.

Each of the seven forged warrants called for $10. They were drawn in favor of Charles [illegible]; P. Murphy, clerk precinct [illegible] District; A. [illegible], judge, Thirty-second district; W. [illegible], clerk precinct [illegible] Thirty [illegible] [illegible] Fifty-third district [illegible] [illegible] This warrant [illegible] Mc[illegible], a deputy of the Registrar, had charge

IT IS NO FELONY TO COUNTERFEIT NICKELS.

Judge Sweeney of Shasta County Declares the Law Covers Only the Imitation of Gold and Silver Coins.

REDDING, May 16.—Superior Judge Sweeny rendered a decision today which declares an important California statute to be deficient and to afford a loophole for grossest criminality. Judge Sweeny held that under the law it is not a felony to counterfeit nickels. W. Woods, who is employed at the Keswick smelter, was arrested at that place yesterday for playing bogus nickels into a slot machine. Woods' attorneys applied for a writ of habeas corpus and it was granted today, Judge Sweeny dismissing the charge on the ground that the law regarding counterfeiting specifies gold and silver coins, but says nothing of nickel currency. The District Attorney concurred.

A large quantity of bogus nickels have been made of Babbitt metal at Keswick lately, and now there is nothing to prevent the counterfeiters from putting them into circulation. Woods had a large number of the slugs in his possession when arrested.

TRUSTED HER WITH THE COIN

"Mammy" Got $94,000 From Bell Estate.

Mrs. Theresa Bell testified yesterday, in Judge Troutt's department of the Superior Court, that since the death of her late husband, Thomas F. Bell, Mrs. M. E. Pleasant, the old colored woman commonly known as "Mammy" Pleasant, has received from the Bell estate $94,000, and that she has nothing to show for this sum, except a few horses and wagons and other personal property on her ranch.

"I turned over to Mrs. Pleasant $30,000 that I got from my husband's life insurance, $30,000 from the sale of property and $34,000 granted by the court as family allowance," said Mrs. Bell. "I did this because I had implicit confidence in Mrs. Pleasant, and my confidence in her was not shaken until about three months ago."

Answering a question by Attorney [illegible], Mrs. Bell said that since she began to distrust Mrs. Pleasant [illegible]

[illegible]

At the former hearing of the case Mrs. Bell testified that [illegible] ranch at the [illegible] Mrs. Pleasant [illegible] always [illegible]. This fact [illegible] Mrs. Bell reiterated yesterday, with the additional statement that [illegible] was in Mrs. Pleasant's [illegible] the years in which [illegible] Mrs. Bell had always considered the Sonoma ranch to be her property.

"MAMMY" PLEASANT ADJUDGED INSOLVENT.

Judge Troutt Says the Aged Colored Woman Cannot Pay Her Debts.

Mrs. Mary E. Pleasant, who is known as "Mammy" Pleasant, [illegible] adjudged insolvent [illegible] Troutt said it was clear that Mrs. [illegible] committed acts of insolvency and that [illegible] creditors were entitled to the [illegible] in their petition. He ruled that [illegible]

[illegible]

After Bell's death the testimony of Mrs. Bell [illegible]

THE DAILY PROMOTER.

SPECIALLY ISSUED BY THE TRI-WEEKLY PROMOTER DURING THE HEARING OF THE MURDOCK NOTE SUIT.

VOL. 3 — WILLOWS, CALIFORNIA, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1899. — No. 65

THE ARGUMENT CONCLUDED.

Judge Oval Pirkey In An Able Manner Gave His Instructions, And The Case Is Now In The Hands Of The Jury.

Continued from Wednesday

The testimony of H. A. Skiff was attacked. Mr. Johnson said because he said certain things on the outside differ ent from his testimony on the witness stand, but he said some people might say things on the street they would not swear to on the witness stand. He may have said the things on the outside as contended by the defense, but counsel said he did not believe it.

The testimony of Mrs. Kirkpatrick was next taken up and referred to at some length. Counsel said she was a sister of the plaintiff, it was true, but the jury could not believe that she would testify to any thing that was not true. He asked the jury to look at her and see if she looked like a woman who would not tell the truth.

The testimony of T. J. Kirkpatrick was declared to be true and honest by the counsel, and was analyzed. He declared that it was no evidence of dishonesty that a man went through insolvency when he could not pay his debts. He then read the alleged statement of Samuel Murdock, acknowledged before Kirkpatrick as Justice of the Peace. Great stress was put upon the testimony of Kirkpatrick and the paper by counsel, for if the testimony was true and the paper genuine they were as important as the note.

The testimony of the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock, while it is important is not necessary for a verdict. There is sufficient evidence without her testimony for this jury to give a verdict in favor of the payment of this money. He grew eloquent as he quoted from Lord Macaulay Roman history and made a parody working the names of the defendants into it. Counsel went over the entire evidence of the plaintiff at great length, answering the argument of opposing counsel against her testimony. In many places his criticism of Mr. Lusk argument were very sarcastic.

Mr. Johnson then referred to the testimony of Mrs. Lizzie Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Billy Carroll, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry, comparing and showing to the jury, according to his understanding, conflicting statements in the testimony. He wanted to know where the Kerr family Bible was, and where is the Rev. John Black. Mrs. Smith says she told where the Rev. John Black was, and why was no the deposition of the Rev. John Black taken and brought into Court?

At 4:50 p. m. Court adjourned until 9 a. m. today.

MORNING SESSION.

At 9 a. m. Court convened and Attorney Grove L. Johnson resumed his argument for the plaintiff.

The attorney gave a resume of his argument of yesterday, after which he took up the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Henry and called attention to what he called inconsistencies. Then Mr. and Mrs. Carroll's evidence was used to point out the alleged inconsistencies in the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Henry.

Counsel asked who are Mr. and Mrs. Henry. He mentioned an Allen Henry that he had heard and read about. He did not know whether it was the same Allen Henry that testified in this case. He then spoke in eulogistic terms of Mr. and Mrs. William Carroll, and of Mrs. Glover, contrasting them with the Henry's, according to his side of the case.

The evidence of the plaintiff, with reference to the coming home from Allen Springs and the making of the note in question, was taken up and discussed. The testimony of William S. Murdock for the defense was attacked by counsel, and he compared it with the evidence of Eddie Murdock, Mrs. Graves and the plaintiff. Counsel quoted the little skit about the beetle gnawed on the wall while his soul blew out of the window. Mr. Johnson again paid some attention to James Boyd and his use of the electric franchise in 1877, as well as to his evidence about the one-horse buggy. Then the evidence of Hamblin was taken into account and commented upon to the disadvantage of the witness.

On the matter of public opinion, Attorney Johnson said that counsel for defense were in error when they stated that public opinion was with the defense. He contended that it was just the other way, and if left to a vote of the people it would be found to be with the plaintiff.

At this point counsel made an attack on the press, and especially on the PROMOTER, declaring it in contempt of Court, a statement which he knew was not true, and made only to influence the jury.

Mr. Johnson made a plea for justice under the law for the plaintiff and grew very eloquent over it. During his argument just after this he referred to what they could prove on a second trial of this case. How much better case they would make out.

The testimony of Chas. S. Young was referred to at some length and during the argument it was stated that if the testimony of this witness was true it was in favor of the plaintiff, and this he went on to prove to the jury. He admitted that Mrs. Murdock did borrow money and gave the note as collateral to L. S. Megginson, and that Mr. Young may have seen the note in the hands of Mrs. Murdock and Mr. Megginson, in July or August, 1890.

In telling why the plaintiff and Mr. Megginson were not called to the witness stand to contradict witness Young, the attorney made a scathing attack on the real estate dealers of San Francisco. He made an eloquent appeal on behalf of the plaintiff as against this so-called nest of real estate dealers in San Francisco, who, he claimed, had prepared a large number of depositions which would have been used in opposition to the testimony of the plaintiff and Mr. Megginson, had he called them to testify in opposition to C. S. Young, and would have covered them over with mud.

An impassioned plea was made for a verdict for the plaintiff, that she and her husband and the twelve witnesses who had testified for them might not be branded as liars, perjurers and villains.

Just before the noon adjournment counsel stated that he had now reached the expert testimony and would take it up after the afternoon session. A recess was then taken until 1:30 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At 1:30 p. m., court re-convened and Attorney Johnson resumed his argument. He contended that expert testimony in such matters as these was only a matter of opinion. It had not yet become an exact science, as astronomy. In surveying it is an exact science. Civil engineering is an exact science. In all these expert testimony should be allowed. As to handwriting counsel contended that experts never agree, and quoted the Howland will case. He spoke at considerable length on the expert testimony in this case, to the difference of opinion between the experts. Then he went off on Prehistoric Columbus, Magellan, Guttenburg, Fulton, Morse, Edison; the running of street cars and lighting the city of Sacramento with electrical power from Folsom; Elias Howe and the sewing machine; the typewriter, and the type-setting machine. The discoveries of all these men, and the invention and operating of all these machines, now exist notwithstanding adverse opinion of experts.

The testimony of Mr. Eisenschimel, Mr. Hickok, Mr. Ames and Mr. Kytka was then gone over, critically, ending with an opinion that the case for the plaintiff would have been as well off without his having touched upon the expert testimony. If he had his way he would not have read anything about the expert testimony, but his colleagues thought he ought to say something on the subject and he agreed so to do.

Mr. Johnson claimed that the signature on the note was not a tracing and speaking of the photographic copies of the "Wm's" used to show that one was a tracing by super-imposing that of the note over that of the deed, he said that they were deceiving because they were both in black and could not be properly super-imposed. He produced the two "Wm's" on tracing cloth, that of the deed skeletonized in red ink, that of the note in full black. These he said would truly show the difference, and he said they could take these to the jury room with them along with the photographs. General Barnes objected to these tracings going to the jury as they had never been in evidence and the defense did not know whether they were correct.

The Court said he would determine at the proper time whether the tracings should go to the jury.

In connection with the testimony of the experts the counsel for the plaintiff contrasted the evidence of Thomas Kinsek and claimed that his testimony given was on scientific principles.

Then taking the note in his hand he claimed that the paper on which the note was printed and the writing on it were twenty-two years old. He demanded a verdict on the note for $360,433, that being the amount the plaintiff claimed to be due on principle and interest.

He asked a verdict that the reputation of twelve people may not be broken down. If the jury should give a verdict for the defense it meant that the reputation of these twelve men would be affected and destroyed. On the other hand he claimed that a verdict for the plaintiff would affect the reputation of no one. He made a special plea for the plaintiff as a mother. He closed his argument at 3:35 p. m.

The court immediately gave his instructions to the jury. The instructions requested by defendants were first read by the court.

JOHNSON NOW GRILLS LUSK.

MORE ARGUMENT IN THE MURDOCK SUIT.

SOME SHARP CRITICISM FOR THE METHODS OF THE CHICO ATTORNEY.

The San Francisco Lawyer Appeals to the Jurymen—The Case Now Drawing to Its Close.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

WILLOWS, May 11.—To-day is the fifth day of argument in the Murdock note case and the courtroom cannot accommodate the large crowd present. F. C. Lusk's argument for the defense was a record-breaker as a sample of bitter denunciation of witnesses, but Grove L. Johnson who is now talking, this morning delivered a roast on Lusk's method of conducting his end of the case which made that attorney's scathing words appear as pleasant compliments.

Johnson commenced with the usual congratulations to the jury that the case was drawing to a close and words of praise for the Judge's fairness. The jury was told that upon its verdict rested the reputation of twelve people, all well known in this community, that already these people had been excoriated and denounced as liars, forgers, perjurers and conspirators. "Mr Lusk loves you, however, gentlemen," said Johnson, "for hasn't he hired four detectives to look out for you and protect you from designing men and women? I notified Mr. Lusk to remain, as I disliked to speak of his conduct of the case while he was absent."

W. H. L. Barnes here interrupted with an explanation that urgent business matters took Mr. Lusk away, but he expected to return to-day. "I am not authorized to receive the drubbing," said Barnes.

"Let us dissect the case as conducted and argued by Mr. Lusk," continued Johnson. "This opening statement, made by Mr. Cannon, was plain and polite. Mr. Cannon's argument contained no reviling, no insinuations; Mr. Lusk's was one even unworthy of the Justice's Court of Chico. Mr. Lusk's wholesale abuse and billingsgate and his hiring of detectives to watch decent men has demonstrated that he has the attributes of a shyster and a pettifogger."

Attorney Johnson maintained that plaintiff had to prove three things—her ownership of the note, a consideration and the genuineness of the signature. These, he claimed, were all proven, unless the jury wished to say that each witness, some of whom had lived here for forty years, is a perjurer.

What Wm. Murdock Himself Said About the Note.

CHICO, Nov. 2, 1893.

MR. JAMES MOORE,

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 26, ultimo is to hand and contents noticed this note business is something of a new feature and very unexpected affair, as I never gave a note for that amount in all my transactions of life Ellen Murdock had a son boy the name of Gawn Murdock of Stony Creek, his wife name is M. H. Murdock But who to accuse of this elove is hard to do, Mr Lusk will be going to the Bay in a few days and will find out more in regard, the mans name is White 519 Jones Street when I was asfixiated by gase. Mr. Compton & family are all well and send the Best Regards, I am in hopes to hear from you soon on this matter My health is not improving any I continue taking the powders that the doctor ordered but they dont seem take the proper efect with my Best regards your Truly

WM. MURDOCK.

State of California } ss.
County of Butte.

Mary Compton being first duly sworn deposed and says: I reside near Chico in said Butte County; I am a sister of said William Murdock, deceased. He came to my house about December 16, 1893, and remained there until he died, January 8, 1894, except that he went to Chico once or twice after he first came, to see F. C. Lusk, an Attorney there. During the time he was at my house, he talked a great deal about the alleged note of $100,000 which was said to be outstanding against him. He had then been informed, that it was claimed that the note payable to the plaintiff. He told me that he had never given her or anyone else any such note and that he had never given her any note, and that he had no occasion or reason to ever give her a note for any sum, and that he always disliked her, that said William Murdock at many times previously during the year past, has expressed to me his dislike for the plaintiff Mary Helen Murdock.

His principal cause of his dislike against her seemed to be on account of her mistreatment of her father-in-law, Samuel Murdock, deceased, who was a cousin of William Murdock; and various other misdeeds of the plaintiff in that action, of which he had been told by said Samuel Murdock, and particularly at a time about 1876, when Samuel Murdock came to the residence of William Murdock and remained there several months. And William informed me that Samuel had told him that he left the house of his son and the plaintiff on account of the mistreatment he had received from the plaintiff, and of certain misdeeds of the plaintiff. William Murdock told me when he was at my house during his last sickness, at the time of the first conversations above stated, that he had always had money on hand ever since the time that the note was said to have been given, and during all that time had neither owed, or had any reason to owe the plaintiff, or anybody else.

MARY COMPTON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me the 11th day of February, A. D. 1895.

JO. D. SPROUL, Notary Public, Butte Co. California.

MURDOCK NOTE CASE NOW RESTS WITH THE JURY

Belief That the Twelve Men Will Be Long in Deliberation.

EXHIBITS WILL DELAY

Attorney for the Plaintiff Grills Witnesses in His Closing Argument.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

WILLOWS, May 18.—The Murdock note case rests with the jury, and the twelve men are now deliberating as to whether or not the note is genuine. The concluding argument was made by Attorney Grove L. Johnson this afternoon.

Judge Pirkey took forty minutes in delivering his charge, and then the jury retired. As there are over a thousand exhibits it is not believed that the jury will come to a ballot to-night, though hundreds of people were about town up to midnight awaiting a possible verdict, and there was all during the evening a stream of people going to and coming from the Courthouse.

Shortly after retiring for deliberation the jurymen asked for the date when Charles S. Young said in his deposition that he saw the big note. The date was given them and after this time it was evident that warm arguments were in order among the jury. They had the Sheriff busy bringing them ice-water and the members could be seen flushed of countenance in their shirt-sleeves and with every appearance of having a warm time of it. After a long period of loud talking the sound of which could be heard in the courtroom, a rap came from the jurymen's quarters at about 11 o'clock and there was intense excitement among the waiting people. The jurymen solemnly filed to their seats in the box and Foreman J. G. Carmichael arose and, addressing Judge Pirkey, said:

"Your Honor, I have to say that you might as well discharge us. We cannot agree and there is no use in trying further."

His Honor replied by reminding the 12 men of the great importance of the case, the immense amount of money expended in its trial as well as the great fortune involved, and told them that he would be obliged to send them back for further deliberation. The jurymen looked decidedly glum as they were marched back by the Sheriff. Beds were sent for and they will probably be kept locked up until Saturday unless they should come to an agreement. As it takes nine to reach a verdict, it is fair to presume from the foreman's words that the jury is about evenly split. It is generally conceded that this means no verdict in the big case.

Attorney Johnson, in his closing argument for plaintiff, severely grilled counsel [illegible] and also Attorney Lusk of the defense. He referred to Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock's visit to Allen's Springs and her [illegible] trip home on the day the $100,000 note is dated, September 5, 1877. The testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Carr [illegible] for plaintiff was contrasted with that of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Henry for the defense, the attorney claiming that the Carrs have good reasons for their knowledge of dates on account of their marriage date and subsequent events, while the Henrys were not at all clear.

Mrs. Glover, who was at Allen's Springs with Mrs. Murdock, was spoken of by the lawyer as an honest woman, who also said that Mr. Lusk was after her to testify on his side until he found she wanted to tell the truth. Johnson said that he tried to locate the stage-driver and stage way bills, but that twenty-two years was a long time ago and he could get no trace of them. W. H. Brenight, who swore that he never saw William Murdock at plaintiff's house, was accused of being bribed, and the jury were reminded of the testimony of several men as to his saying he was to receive money for his testimony. The attorney continued:

"The attorneys for the defense claim that public opinion is in their favor. How do they know that? We will admit that they have attempted to create public opinion here by purchasing a local newspaper, but I say that public opinion [illegible] [illegible] Mary Helen Murdock, who asks you for a verdict."

Johnson said that rumor had it that the whole fortune would be spent before the plaintiff ever received one cent, but he said that rich and poor stood alike "in this temple of justice."

The deposition of Charles S. Young of San Francisco, a witness for the defense, was taken up by Johnson, who went on to state that Young said he saw the note in August, 1890, and that the deed from which defense claim the signature to the note was forged, was in the Recorder's office at Colusa from July to October, 1890, and that Mrs. Murdock got it in November. The attorney claimed that this knocked the props from under the defense. He grilled Lusk "for abusing J. H. Megginson, who had not even testified." Megginson was an assignee on the note, said the attorney, and he asked Megginson to remain during the trial, in case "that pile of poisonous depositions, oozing and reeking with perjury" were allowed, so that he might then testify.

The experts came in for ridicule and sarcasm. The jury was told by Johnson that the expertising of handwriting was in no way an exact science and that all handwriting experts disagree if paid for it. The attorney claimed that many things go to make changes in a man's signature, such as nervousness, ill-health, pen, paper, and other things, and continued:

"If the signature to this note was traced from the [illegible] deed, why in God's name did not these people who [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] deed instead of handing it over to the defense? It was tendered and could easily have been declined."

The attorney claimed that Surveyor Knox's comparison of the two "Wm.'s" made on angles by correct instruments, showed that handwriting experts' theories amounted to nothing. The attorney waxed eloquent when he spoke of what a verdict against plaintiff meant, saying it would damn their reputations forever. He asked for a verdict for the amount of principal and interest, $361,833.

When Johnson had concluded Judge Pirkey immediately delivered his charge to the jury, which occupied nearly forty minutes, and the twelve men retired to deliberate shortly after 4 o'clock. There are over a thousand exhibits, and many think that there will be no balloting by the jury until to-morrow.

MORNING, MAY 18, 1[illegible]

LAWYERS BANDY HARSH EPITHETS

Grove Johnson Calls F. C. Lusk a Coward and Shyster.

Adds That He Is a Pettifogger and the Missing Link of Humanity.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

WILLOWS, May 17.—It was believed by the people in attendance on the Murdock trial that the height of bitter denunciation had been reached when Attorney Lusk finished with his two days' argument for the defense, in which he heaped all sorts of abuse on the opposing witnesses and lawyers, until Grove L. Johnson spoke to-day in behalf of the plaintiff. It was an eye for an eye and a roast for a roast with him.

Johnson let the witnesses alone to-day and delivered his broadsides—and they were hot ones—at Attorney Lusk. Replying to Lusk's phrase, "perjurers, liars, conspirators, hyenas and forgers," Johnson referred to Lusk to-day as a "shyster, pettifogger, coward and missing link of humanity."

The courtroom was packed and the jury had to have a way cleared in order to get out at recess time. Attorney Johnson began by saying that he had never heard such an excoriation of witnesses as that delivered by Mr. Lusk. "Yet, gentlemen, he loves you," for hasn't he employed four detectives to follow you around to protect you from designing men and women?" asked he.

The attorney contrasted the opening statements of the counsel for plaintiff and the defense, claiming that plaintiff told her case, concealing nothing, while the defense were secretive and then did not prove what they promised. He said that plaintiff was called upon to prove three things. First, the ownership of the note, second, a sufficient consideration for the same, and, third, that the signature was that of William Murdock. These three points were taken up in order, the attorney saying that each had been proven. The evidence of the experts came in for attention, the attorney taking each case cited by defense in argument, and saying that these cases all showed the unreliability of such testimony.

"Dreyfus was damned by expert testimony," said he. "I was an attorney in the Martin will case and two of the experts here testified as to the will being genuine. As to the Sarah Althea case, I am willing to believe that Judge Jeremiah Sullivan, an honest and upright judge, was right when he decided in her favor." He quoted several famous cases wherein experts had been mistaken, saying that they testified as to opinions from facts and not from facts themselves.

Johnson then expressed a regret that Attorney Lusk was not present, saying he had notified him to be on hand. General Barnes arose and said that Mr. Lusk had been called away, but added that he had "been authorized to receive the drubbing."

The abuse of plaintiff's witnesses was then taken up. The lawyer said:

"This is an unusual note. If this is a fraud, why didn't these people make it a smaller sum? Look at Mr. and Mrs. Gawn Murdock, look at old man Kirkpatrick, do they look like perjurers, liars or forgers? Mrs. Murdock, the plaintiff, was described as a farmer's daughter and a farmer's wife. As to the Kearny-street lodging-house, she said she desired to be near her young sons, who were attending school near the metropolis, and she thought this a good place.

"I can imagine the kind of Kearny-street lodging-house Mr. Lusk frequents," said the attorney, "from his description of them to the jury."

The desire of plaintiff to purchase trotting horses was spoken of as a most natural thing, and Mr. Lusk again came in for a scorching for not practicing what he preached, he being accused of being a horse fancier. Gawn Murdock, plaintiff's husband, and the alleged dishonest settlement the defense claims he made with his father, came in for a share of talk. The attorney contended that Gawn was a dutiful and an honest son, that, although he held a receipt of settlement with his father, he sent word to the old man, telling him to come home and he would arrange matters satisfactorily; that his father did come home and Gawn paid him $20,000 more. The testimony of T. J. Kirkpatrick, the old Justice of the Peace, and the affidavit he swore Samuel Murdock made before him, were spoken of at length. "This affidavit comes as a voice from the graves of both Samuel and William Murdock, saying to this jury that this note is a good one and testifies as to an honest debt between these two old men," said Johnson.

The lawyer said that this note was genuine and made by William Murdock unless some of the best-known people in Glenn county were perjurers and fit subjects for San Quentin. The two lawyers, E. I. Robinson and H. E. Alexander, who testified that they saw the note at Sacramento in 1881, were spoken of as honest, reputable men and one a friend of Murdock. The attorney said that, as the defense claimed this note was forged from a deed made in 1890, the testimony of these two lawyers knocked all props from under the defense.

"Would two such men perjure themselves?" asked he.

"We claim that Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock left Allen's Springs for her home in September, 1877, and that, on the 5th day of that month, William Murdock signed this note, which she had written at the request of Samuel Murdock; that 1,000 in twenty-dollar pieces and canceled notes were there handed over to William Murdock, and that, on the following morning, he took the coin away in a one-horse vehicle," was the statement of counsel.

The effort to impeach Cam Ashurst was denounced as a failure, and Mr. and Mrs. Allen Henry of Elkins were just coming in for some bitter sarcasm when court adjourned.

The case will go to the jury to-morrow night.

JURY COULD NOT AGREE.

The Murdock Note Trial at Willows Comes to an End.

TALESMEN EQUALLY DIVIDED IN OPINION.

ATTORNEYS FOR THE PLAINTIFF IMMEDIATELY ASK A RETRIAL.

Claim That the Defense Has Spent Fifty Thousand Dollars of the Estate Money in Fighting the Suit.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

WILLOWS, May 19.—After a trial lasting seven weeks the jury in the Murdock note case reported a disagreement at 5 o'clock this afternoon, and was discharged, ending one of the most remarkable trials in the legal history of California. Six of the jurors upheld the validity of the note and the other six were against it. The jurors evidently had fully made up their minds during the trial, for they announced their decisions when the jury left the courtroom at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the twenty-five hours of deliberation did not effect a change in their opinions. From beginning to end the jury stood six to six, as follows: For the note, Messrs. Herder, Drake, Vestner, Weight, Schorn and Noldeffer; for the defendants, Messrs. de Jarlais, Miller, Mayes, Emerald, Grinstead and Carmichael.

The disagreement means that six men of Glenn county believe that the great $100,000 note is a forgery and the other six put themselves on record as believing that William Murdock did sign and deliver the note to Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock for money loaned by Samuel Murdock, and that the amount, with interest at 1 per cent per month for twenty years, now amounting to $361,000, was to be for the benefit of the grandsons of Samuel Murdock, sons of the plaintiff.

The Judge had no sooner discharged the jury before Attorney Freeman arose and, on behalf of the plaintiff, asked that another trial be immediately set. The proposition surprised the attorneys for the defense. General Barnes said that as harvest time was approaching he thought that the case should go over for some time. Judge Pirkey announced that the calendar was crowded, and that he would decide as to resetting the case at a future time.

Rumor says that the defendants preferred that the plaintiff get a verdict here so that the defendants could have the matter appealed to the Supreme Court, rather than have a retrial here. It is charged by the plaintiff that the defendants have expended $50,000 fighting this case out of money belonging to the estate. Lusk, Johnson and Thompson left in the early part of the day, Freeman, Cannon and General Barnes remaining for the verdict of the jury.

SECRET SERVICE AGENT HAZEN COMING HERE.

The Terror of Southwestern Counterfeiters Transferred to the Head of the Office in this District.

SEATTLE (Wash.), May 20.—United States Secret Service Agent George W. Hazen, who for the past year has had charge of the district of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, with headquarters at Seattle, has been transferred to California and will be in full charge there. The news leaked out to-day through the arrival of his successor, Charles La Salle, from Washington city.

Agent Hazen has made a wonderful record here. A score of counterfeiters are serving terms in the United States penitentiary through his efforts. He has not lost a single case and in nearly every counterfeiting case secured convictions. John Williams and Charles H. Gray, two of the cleverest bad-money men that ever struck the coast, are doing eight years, with the prospect of another sentence on release. Hazen has had numerous convictions from other sections of his district. He will turn over the local office early in the week and go at once to San Francisco, which will be his headquarters.

HAVE NOT AGREED

Willows ... May 19. 1899

No Verdict Yet In the Note Case.

Many Wild Rumors As to How the Jury Stands—But Nobody Knows.

The jurymen in the Murdock note case are still deliberating as to whether or not the note is a forgery, and it is the opinion of every one that the jury is "hung."

People waited on the streets and in the courtroom up to twelve o'clock last night awaiting a possible verdict which never came.

It was evident the jurymen had a warm argument after retiring. They kept the Sheriff busy bringing in ice water and when the door was opened two of the jurymen could be seen in their shirt sleeves and there was evidence that a heated argument was in progress.

A loud rap came on the door of the jury room about 10:30 p.m., the first break in the monotony. This created intense excitement among the waiting people in the court room. The jury solemnly filed into the box and foreman J. G. Carmichael arose and said:

"Your Honor, I have to say that you might as well discharge us. We cannot agree and there is no use in trying further."

Judge Pirkey reminded the twelve men of the great importance of the case, of the great cost of the trial as well as the great fortune at stake, and sent them back for further deliberation. The jurymen looked as if they wished they could go home as they marched back into their room.

All day the principals in the case have remained in the court room, eagerly expectant that a verdict would be rendered.

The jurymen were taken to breakfast this morning and to dinner at 1 o'clock by the Sheriff.

There are many rumors afloat as to how the jury stand, but of course they cannot be verified.

Just as we go to press the jury filed into the box. The foreman announced again that they were unable to agree upon a verdict. The judge asked each juryman if he thought there was any chance of an agreement. Each answered "No!"

They will probably be discharged this evening if an agreement is not reached.

SIX JURORS BELIEVED THE NOTE FORGED

Disagreement in the Great Murdock Note Case.

INHERENTLY IMPROBABLE

On This Ground the Half-Dozen Talesmen Stood Out.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

WILLOWS, May 19.—The great Murdock note case, which in many respects is the most remarkable case in the history of California's courts, came to an end at 5 o'clock to-day in a most unsatisfactory way—that of a disagreement. The jury was evenly divided from the first to the last ballot, standing six to six. Those who put themselves on record as being in favor of the plaintiff and believing in the validity of the note were Messrs. Herder, Drake, Vestner, Weight, Schorn and Nodleffer, while Jurymen De Jarlais, Miller, Mayes, Emerald, Grinstead and Carmichael were against the note and stood for the defense.

It is generally regretted that a verdict was not reached in this remarkable case, wherein over a quarter of a million dollars were involved, but as announced in to-day's "Examiner," any chance for a verdict was given up last night when the jury made its first report to the judge.

The disagreement means that six men of the jury believe that Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock is the principal in one of the most gigantic conspiracies ever known in the history of California, while the other six jurors believe that old William Murdock did on the 5th of September, 1877, sign and deliver to Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock the note for $100,000 payable twenty years after date, at one per cent per month.

The case, rumor says, has cost the defense over $50,000, and this can readily be believed by any person who has attended the trial.

Judge Pirkey asked each juryman as to whether his mind was thoroughly made up, and received an affirmative answer and formally discharged the jury. This had no sooner been done than attorney Frank Freeman, for the plaintiff, arose and asked the Judge at once to set a date for another trial.

General Barnes in reply stated that as harvest time was approaching he believed a retrial should be put off for some time.

Judge Pirkey stated that he had a full calendar and that he would not announce his decision in the matter until one week from Monday next.

Your correspondent has been told by a juryman that the "improbability" of the transaction alleged is what swayed the six jurors against the plaintiff's claim.

ONE BLANTHER WIDOW DIES FROM POISON

Suicide of Etta Crawford, Who Was the Wife of the Murderer.

CONFESSION FORGED

Before Her Death the Woman Declared That Her Husband Did Not Kill Minnie Williams.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., May 20.—Ellis Crawford, an inmate of a disreputable house, committed suicide here to-day by swallowing carbolic acid. This woman was the wife of Blanther, who, it was claimed by Theodore Durrant's attorneys, wrote a confession of the murder of Minnie Williams in San Francisco several years ago. Blanther committed suicide while in jail at Meridian, Tex., and a strong effort was made to save Durrant on the strength of his alleged confession. His wife finally drifted to this city. Before her death she declared with emphasis that the alleged confession of her husband was a forgery.

Blanther, when the story of his life comes to be written, had two wives, and which one this is is not made clear.

Blanther's career was a remarkable one. Born in 1859 at Radkersburg, in Styria, Lower Austria, he grew up an honored man and a soldier of distinction. In turn he served as an officer under Archduke Ludwig Victor and in the Thirty-second Austrian Infantry. He was decorated for gallant services with the war medal, Knight of the Italian Crown, order of the third class and order of the Iron crown. He deserted from the Eighty-fifth Hungarian Infantry in 1885 and went to Siam. He came to the United States in the same year and entered the employ of Rand, McNally & Co. of Chicago. At that time he passed as a married man. In 18[illegible], after failing in business, he went to Canada, and later was heard from in Arkansas, where he had married, under the name of Arthur Forbes, Miss Agnes Cameron. Under that name he started in business in Atlanta, Ga., where he deserted his wife in 1896, coming to San Francisco.

Blanther's murder of Mrs. Philopena Langfeldt in this city on May 6, 1896, his flight and subsequent arrest and suicide in Texas are well known. Before he took his life he was reported to have made a confession of the murder of Minnie Williams, for which crime Theodore Durrant paid the penalty on the gallows.

TELLING THE CHARACTER FROM HANDWRITING

By Blanche W. Fisher

IN ANALYZING handwriting it is of great importance that the specimens submitted be not of the "copy-book" kind. A page of a letter hastily written to a close friend is best. It should always be borne in mind that no sign can be depended on alone. One characteristic is either intensified or nullified by another. There is logic in conflicting traits of character: one may be selfishly inclined, and yet through principle may control the tendency and become truly generous. The tendency toward selfishness will be shown in the writing, but it will be overbalanced by the signs of generosity and self-control. Whenever the writing runs directly across the sheet in a straight line (of course it must be understood that one is reading from unruled paper) it indicates that the writer will be constant, enduring and persevering.

1. the winter was a very pleasant one

(1) If the writing ascend (as illustrated in the above specimen) the writer will be courageous; even rash if the slant is exaggerated.

2. I cannot keep up courage any longer

(2) If the lines slant toward the bottom of the page the writer will be desponding, cowardly, easily discouraged.

3. Last year we spent in Nice

(3) If there are few words on a page the sign denotes extravagance both in thought and estate, but does not unite with this characteristic that of generosity.

4. you will have to be more careful in the future

(4) If there are so many words on a page as to give a cramped appearance to the sheet the sign betrays a miserly nature, reserve and suspicion.

5. There is much to be said both for and against

(5) If there are neither so many words as to crowd each other nor so few as to make the eye leap from one to another the indications are those of prudence and sagacity.

6. not quite sure—but—we hope—

(6) Short dashes between words denote caution; if there are many on a page the sign is of a suspicious nature, one who trusts nobody, and who fears that advantage will be taken of him.

7. will you—let—me

(7) Long final strokes at the ends of words indicate generosity.

8. what's mine's mine

(8) Short strokes or words stopping abruptly with no final strokes at all denote selfishness.

9. we have finally decided that

(9) If the letters and words are all united, as if the pen had not been raised, giving the effect, at a little distance, of a continuous chain of letters, although the writing may not be very legible, the writer will plan carefully and well, will make a good student, but will be obliged to study and reason out everything he undertakes; he will be slow in grasping an idea, but will comprehend perfectly when once he has thought it out.

10. there is too much

(10) If the words and even the letters are separated, so that almost every letter stands out by itself, the sign is that of power of intuition, a quick brain, but utter lack of logic.

11. the session is so quiet

(11) If the letters are, in the main, united, and the words clearly spaced, the sign is of clear logic, a mind combining both the intuitive and deductive reasoning.

12. E. C. K. H. Gray

(12) Flourishes below words and all unnecessary loops and strokes denote vanity, affectation and egotism.

13. E. H. Johnson

(13) A single stroke under the signature simply shows a strong desire for praise and affection, not so intense as to be called vanity.

14. let me know as soon

(14) If the formation of the letters is straight up and down, with no slant in either direction, the sign indicates reserve, self-control, and a heart completely ruled by the head.

15. Items as kind

(15) If the letters slant very much the sign is of an impressionable, sensitive, emotional nature, easy to make friends with, easy to offend, and affectionate to the extreme of sentimentality if the slant is exaggerated.

16. the cause is worthy

(16) If some letters slant and the rest are vertical the writer's heart will often be touched against his will.

17. perhaps the question

(17) If the writing is full of sharp angles at the bases of letters and where the letters unite the indication is of sternness, severity.

18. Go if you wish

(18) Many curves and rounded letters show an indulgent disposition, incapable of great restraint or discipline, and lacking self-control.

19. The matter is

(19) When words terminate with a little hook, made by a return movement of the pen when a stroke is made, the sign denotes tenacity and perseverance.

20. that is—one—at

(20) Heavy cross-strokes indicate a strong will, and are the indications of a strong character. The sign is a very important one, as it intensifies every quality. In the term "cross-strokes" are included not only the crossing of the t's but the dashes between words and sentences, and the strokes at the end of words.

21. there will be trouble

(21) If these strokes, especially the crossing of t's, slant downward, the sign betrays an opinionated character, one that is imperious, and that will not be thwarted nor listen to reason. Should one possess the signs of logic he will be unable to reason justly, because he will constantly bend his logic to fit his prejudices.

22. there is great cause for anger

(22) Heavy thorn-strokes and heavy shading signify sensuality, and unmistakably bespeak strong passions. One whose handwriting is like the specimen here presented is possessed of passions that are ungovernable, passions that it is impossible to control or keep in subjection by either reason or the exercise of will power, however strong.

23. a good joke

(23) When the letters which go to form a word are all of the same size, or when they grow larger in size at the ending of the words, the sign is that of sincerity. One writing in such a manner will be fully worthy of trust and confidence.

24. a good joke

(24) If the letters decrease in size at the end of a word the sign is of deceitfulness and dishonesty. The writer will be thoroughly dishonorable, even in his strongest friendships, using everybody simply for his own ends.

25. as for her

(25) If the a's, o's and g's are open at the top, making the a's and o's appear like u's and the g's like y's, the sign denotes a candid nature, one with a high sense of honor, but who finds it extremely hard to keep a secret. With this sign are often found vertically formed letters—the sign of reserve. The combination signifies one naturally candid, but compelled to be reserved.

26. both for and against

(26) If the tops of the three letters a, o and g are carefully closed the sign indicates a secretive nature. When this sign is combined with letters decreasing in size at the end of words the signs of a most treacherous nature are presented.

27. is that the thing?

(27) Letters crossed and dotted with exactness, and punctuation marks exactly on the line, show a love of detail. The writer will often lose the best conceptions by this absorbing, haggling interest in the petty details.

28. Can't you arrange

(28) Letters curving below the line of writing indicate a vivid imagination, intense enthusiasm and excitability.

29. Can't you arrange

(29) Letters never curving below the line, but always occupying their proper places, show that the imagination is held strictly within the bounds of reason.

30. we were studying

(30) High writing shows nobility of character when combined with thin, curved lines and with no heavy strokes the signs indicate spirituality.

31. I leave Baltimore

(31) Capitals very tall, with the small letters not enlarged in proportion, show excessive pride; when this sign is found together with heavy cross-strokes the indication is of a strong will, and with the little hooks at the ends of the cross-strokes the writer will crave power, and will be likely to crush any one who comes between him and his goal.

THIS ILLUSTRATION PRACTICALLY REPRESENTS IDEAL WRITING

32. Thank you very much for sending me the magazine, which I received Monday

Although not "ideal" according to any school of penmanship, this is a most unusual combination of characteristics. The writing ascending across the page denotes courage, the words and lines clearly spaced denote carefulness, the long final strokes show generosity, the letters united, but words and lines clearly spaced, show a combination of intuition and logical powers, the letters neither vertically formed nor yet with an exaggerated slant show tenderness, the hooks at the ends of cross-strokes show tenacity, and the cross-strokes themselves show energy and force, the letters increasing in size toward the ends of words, and the open a's, o's and g's, show sincerity and trustfulness, the letters curving below the line (considered as combined with the cross-strokes) show a vivid imagination and enthusiasm, the high writing denotes nobility of character, while the absence of all unnecessary flourishes shows simplicity and self-forgetfulness. It is, of course, a most unusual specimen, as it is rarely, if ever, that one meets with such a decided character who is absolutely lacking in faults; but in this instance the closer the analysis the more good qualities are brought out.

Morning Press.

SANTA BARBARA CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 3, 1899. VOL. XXXVIII, NO. 412.

TRIAL OF YDA ADDIS BEGINS

Fail to Complete a Jury the First Day's Session.

EXPERT WITNESSES PRESENT

Kytka, the Handwriting Expert, and Detective Pourade in Court---A First Item of Cost.

The oft delayed trial of Yda Addis Storke, divorced wife of C. A. Storke, has at last been called in the superior court; the trial that it has been more than hinted would develop sensations without end and revelations that will make society in the several castes wince or smile, as the members of each particular caste are affected. The first day of the trial was without incident. All day was occupied in the attempt to secure a jury of twelve men who are sufficiently ignorant of the case to be competent to determine upon the merits as presented by attorneys for the sides. But this was only partly successful, for when court adjourned a few minutes before 4 o'clock, there were but 10 men in the jury box and the venire of 25 was exhausted. A new venire of 10 was ordered, to be ready for examination at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

There were but few spectators in the court room during the day. Two or three women occupied benches near the door and less than half a hundred men listened to the stereotyped round of questions that the attorneys put to the jurors. Mrs. Storke occupied the "defendant's chair" at the end of the long table at which the attorneys sit. In spite of the almost general discussion of the case during the several times that it has been before the public, there was very little interest shown, at least in the proceedings of the first day.

Something of a surprise was sprung when Senator John J. Boyce appeared as attorney for the defense, in addition to P. A. Carrier and H. P. Starbuck, who were appointed by the court to defend Mrs. Storke. District Attorney Squier is assisted in the prosecution by John H. Squier. Judge Ostner of the superior court of San Bernardino county occupied the bench in place of Judge Day. Among the witnesses present were Theodore Kytka, the famous handwriting expert, and Detective E. F. Pourade of the government secret service, who secured the evidence that led to Mrs. Storke's indictment by the grand jury last December on a charge of sending libelous matter through the mails.

Of the venire of 25 jurors drawn for the trial, two were excused by the court and 13 were excused from service after examination. The jurors were questioned to the closest detail, it being evident that the attorneys were not going to take the least chance of a prejudiced jury. They were asked to tell what knowledge they had of the case, whether they had discussed it or heard it discussed; if they had ever read about it; if they had received any of the anonymous letters that were so numerous here a few months ago and that the defendant is accused of having written; whether they had ever received an anonymous letter; if they ever acted as jurors in a libel case or in a case tried on circumstantial evidence; if they knew of the parties to the case. The defense never failing to ask if the juror was acquainted with Dr. Winchester or Grant Jackson. As most of the jurors were from the rural districts, they passed with but small objection, until those from near Lompoc were asked if they knew Grant Jackson, which they did, and were accordingly excused.

Joseph Walsh enlivened the monotonous proceedings when called for examination as to his qualifications as a member of the jury. Mr. Walsh had not only heard the case discussed, but he had discussed it himself, and more, he had been the recipient of an anonymous letter of the kind in question. Attorney Boyce closely questioned Walsh as to this letter, but got only small satisfaction. The attorney asked what was the nature of the letter, when Mr. Walsh, with that peculiar drawl that has added much to his success as a minstrel, replied:

"Well, it wasn't a letter that I wanted to frame and hang up in my home."

Walsh was excused.

The jury as far as completed includes the following: R. Davidson, H. W. Marcall, John Hartnett, M. P. Baker, T. J. Tunnell, C. E. Smith, John F. Mankins, A. W. Hill, Phillip Eddington and H. Logan.

The thirteen jurors who were discharged receive one day's pay and mileage to and from their homes. This single expense of the trial aggregates $99.65, that amount having been drawn in warrants by the county auditor and paid to them.

Today being a legal holiday, court adjourned until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The following orders were made by the superior court yesterday:

Estate of Augustine Fuller. Order appointing administrator.

Estate of William F. Mills. Decree settling account and distribution.

Estate of Eliza Mallory. Decree of settlement.

In the matter of the naturalization of Alfred Lee. Full naturalization papers granted.

Romantic Life's Story of a Detective Told in Court

Concludes With the Hero Crawling Over the Transom to Yda Addis Storke's Room.

Tells How Evidence Was Collected in the Now Notorious Libel Case---More Anonymous Letters Presented---Editor Sands Has a Poor Memory.

Under cross-examination by Attorney J. J. Boyce for the defence in the Yda Addis Storke libel trial yesterday, Detective Pourade told a tale that reads not unlike a detective story in a yellow back novel. It is a story of the detective's life from the cradle to the time he crawled over the transom and into Mrs. Storke's room in the Erisman building, in search of evidence to present to a federal grand jury. It is an interesting story of the wanderings of an ambitious young man over two continents; he tells of his life in Paris and Rome, where he went to study art; of his return and his effort to learn sculpturing through the practical school of marble cutter. Then his life as a cowboy in Arizona; as a car and house decorator; his ludicrous attempt at engaging in business in San Diego and the disastrous result of another effort in Seattle. Then the detective relates how he came to drift into the business of running down criminals, and finally his assignment to handle the Storke case.

All this occupied a greater part of the court's time during the fourth day of the trial. The court room was again crowded with spectators from morning till evening, and all seemed satisfied that the day had been well spent. Though now four days have been occupied in the trial, it is still but fairly begun. The prosecution has a number of witnesses yet to be heard, the most important being, of course, Kytka, the handwriting expert, who it is thought, will not be reached until Monday or Tuesday of next week.

In addition to concluding the cross-questioning of Detective Pourade, Miss Nellie Maguire, Dr. G. W. Simpson, E. T. Tallant and Frank Sands were called to the stand. The first three were questioned only as to letters they had received that were of the same general character as those already presented to the jury, and were introduced merely to be identified, the letters not being read to the jury. Frank Sands was questioned closely as to his knowledge of the defendant's writing. The editor has a treacherous memory that gave the attorney for the defence no small annoyance. He was still undergoing cross-examination when court adjourned for the day.

MORNING OF THE FOURTH DAY.

Detective Pourade Tells the Story of His Life.

The Friday morning session opened with Detective Pourade again on the stand, under cross-examination by Attorney Boyce.

Mr. Boyce—How long have you had experience in gathering evidence as an officer?

Mr. Pourade—It may be six or seven years or more; I do not remember exactly.

"Do you remember when you did your first work as an officer?"

"I did some work in Arizona and California. I first had some experience as a deputy sheriff in San Bernardino; it was seven or eight years ago. I do not remember the time exactly."

When asked why he had come to California, Mr. Pourade explained that "the motives that move men to change their locations are different; with me it was the irrepressible desire to go west."

Asked as to the place and the year of his birth, he said he was born in Binghamton, N. Y., and added:

"I can not swear what year I was born in; I was young then."

"Do you mean to say you do not know when you were born?"

"I do not know the year."

"You have already said you were born in Binghamton, N. Y. Do you know that to be so?"

"No, sir; I do not know; my father and mother told me so. When I was young my father moved to Kansas City, with his family. Afterward we went to New Mexico."

"How did you happen to move to New Mexico?"

"My sister and myself were not well, and father had been told that in New Mexico people lived to be so old that it was necessary to put lead in their boots to keep them from flying away."

When asked if he had found it necessary to put lead in his boots to keep from flying away, he remarked that he had not, but expected to, if the California climate keeps getting dryer.

At this point the court cautioned the spectators against indulging in too much levity, and Attorney Boyce came back to the question of dates.

The detective explained that he could not remember dates, but some other things he could remember well, particularly some things that are strongly impressed upon his mind, and are recalled. He finally said that he went to Europe in 1876, the year of the Philadelphia exposition.

"Do you remember the month in which you were born?"

"Yes, sir. My sister kindly remembered the month for me. It was in February."

"Were you educated in Europe?"

"Partly. I attended lectures in Paris, afterward went to Rome, and returned to Paris. I was especially studying in art. I had a dream that I wanted to be a sculptor, but it did not turn out well. My father did not want to confine me to anything, but he thought the general knowledge I would acquire in traveling would help me in choosing a profession or trade. When I came back I wanted still to study modeling, and I went to a marble works in Kansas City. I was cutting marble, trying to do something with it; you have to have a practical knowledge before you can be a sculptor. I remained there a year or more, and then my father moved to Socorro, New Mexico. Shortly afterward I went out on a cow ranch in New Mexico."

"How did you come to leave New Mexico?"

"Well, I went over to Arizona on horseback."

"Did you have any special reason?"

"No. I went to St. John, Apache county. I again went on a cow ranch. I was what is generally called a cow boy or a cow servant."

"What age were you?"

"I do not know. I never kept track of my age."

"Can you tell the jury how long you remained in St. Johns, Arizona?"

"No, sir."

"Where did you go from there?"

"Well, it was some time before I got to San Bernardino, but I finally got there."

"Were you then a cowboy or a cow servant, or a sculptor?"

"After I left the cow ranch I did not consider that I was any longer a cowboy."

"What were you?"

"An individual; a citizen."

"You had no particular calling."

Continued to Second Page.

POLITICS AND MURDER MIXED

Political Phases of Fountain Case Begin to Show.

A NEW MEXICO SENSATION

Prominent Men in the Territory Implicated---Further Trouble May Arise from Trial.

By the Associated Press.

Hillsboro, N. M., June 2.—The political phases of the Fountain murder case developed with today's testimony. The court refused to entertain matters relating to political parties. The evidence introduced to-day has been fraught with political feeling against Lee and Gilliland rather than tending to show them guilty of the Fountain murder. Garrett was being cross-examined by Attorney Fall, when during an objection Mr. Fall said: "Garrett was ousted from the sheriff's office because he refused to murder Lee and Gilliland, and other murderers were put in. We will show that they refused Lee a hearing, waiting for the administration to change."

Garrett said: "The Masonic lodge was paying the expense of the investigation. You," addressing Attorney Fall, "and others have been shooting at each other a good deal. I believe it was called political feeling."

Here the witness startled the listeners by saying that Attorney Fall had gone with him to Santa Fe and they got two county commissioners removed so that he, Garrett, could be appointed sheriff. Garrett then recited how Kearney was killed and that Lee had the drop on the posse from his house, but agreed to desist on condition that Garrett should leave and tell the truth.

Anticipating an attempt of the defense to show that Colonel Fountain is still alive, the prosecution introduced Professor Francis Crosson, who was employed by Governor Thornton to examine the earth near the Fountain buckboard after the shooting. He testified that he found human blood in quantities to indicate a sudden wound. Professor Crosson on cross-examination said he did not know that the blood found was human—no man would tell that, but he thought it human blood. He could not determine whether it was from human or beast without a microscope, and he had used none. He broke down completely under the rapid fire of questions by Attorney Fall, who is posted in chemistry. When the killing of Kearney, a member of the sheriff's posse, was detailed today by witnesses, the court room was crowded and the talk of trouble was renewed among the Mexicans who congregated about the court house door.

BOTH BRUISERS ARE CONFIDENT.

Fitz Thinks He Has an Easy Mark in Jeffries.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 2.—Fitzsimmons is in fine fettle and humor. He evidently believes he has a snap and Jeffries will be an "easy mark." An expert who saw the big fighter declares that he is 10 per cent better than he ever was before.

Martin Julian says: "Fitzsimmons has taken the scalps of all these, and now he will hang Jeffries' on the line

JUDGE G. K. NASH NOMINATED

REPUBLICANS YESTERDAY.

YDA ADDIS TRIAL

Continued from First Page

"No, sir. I went to San Diego first there was a boom in California then, and I saw tramboats and trainloads going to California, and I wanted to go too. At San Diego I bought out a transfer business. One night I drove a wagon from the wharf to the hotel, it was dark, and muddy, and an electric light was shining right in my face; a street car was coming down the street, and a man got between me and the car and the wagon ran over him. It did not kill him. I went to see him next day. I got disgusted with the transfer business, and sold my interest to my partner. Then I went to San Bernardino."

"There was no damage suit threatened?"

"No, sir, nothing of the kind."

"You left your address at San Diego?"

"Yes, sir."

The witness referred to the health officer at San Diego, who was an old family friend and knew all about the accident.

"What did you do in San Bernardino?"

"Painting."

"Do you mean painting as an artist or as a house painter?"

"As a painter or decorator of the interior of houses."

"Had you any training or preparation for that business?"

"You omitted to ask me about the time after I left Apache county until I got to San Bernardino." The witness stated that for over a year he had been in charge of some men who were decorating the interior of cars.

Then followed a series of questions as to dates, the occupation and travels of the witness. Mr. Pourade continued:

"I went to Seattle; it was in the year of the great fire in Seattle; I think it was in 1888. I was there but a few days before the fire; I lost all I had in the fire. I had invested all I had in the street paving business."

"Did you know that business?"

"No, but I learned it then."

"Did you carry on the business after the fire?"

"How could I, when I lost everything? My wife was so careful that I should not get robbed that she had me put our money in a trunk, and then we went out to see the fire. A few days later we went to Tacoma. I became manager for the Tacoma Wall Paper company. We remained there a year or two; we were very happy. I was doing well, and I did not want to go away, but my wife prevailed upon me to return to San Bernardino where her mother lived. I do not remember the year."

"What business did you follow then?"

"I did some interior decorating."

"How long did you remain there?"

"I do not remember, when Dr. Booth of The Needles was elected sheriff, I became a deputy. I transported prisoners to the penitentiary. I then served under Sheriff Holcomb, who went out of office at the last election. Then I received the appointment as the forest reserve agent."

"Does that constitute all of your experience in investigating crimes?"

"No, sir, you have overlooked the fact that I was a deputy United States marshal at the same time I was a deputy sheriff. I had cases to work up then."

"Were you ever engaged in any other case depending upon circumstantial evidence?"

"I think there were none other than circumstantial evidence cases. Sometimes I acted under the direction of the chief of the office, sometimes under my own. I never acted as a 'private detective.'"

The report written by Mr. Pourade to the sheriff was introduced in evidence by Attorney Boyce, and he then proceeded to question the witness on the contents.

"Had Mr. Hicks employed you to assist in the prosecution of this defendant?"

"No, sir."

"At this time you submitted the results of your investigation to Mr. Flint, and he had declined to bring it before the federal grand jury?"

"Yes, sir."

"After you had described in your letter that no case could be tried in the federal court, you added: 'But as to the federal court, you added: 'But as to the case against Mrs. S., there can be no question but that she can be successfully prosecuted in the state court'?"

"Yes, sir; when I was talking the matter over with United States Assistant Attorney Finlayson, he said: 'It is a pity that the United States statutes do not cover that kind of a case, but they should prosecute that woman for criminal libel.' I wrote that letter in response to a letter from the sheriff's office of this county."

"Have you that letter?"

"Yes, sir."

The letter was produced.

"Did this letter ask of you anything further than a report of what you had done?"

Mr. Squier—We object.

The Court—The letter will show for itself.

Mr. Boyce—I will ask the witness to read the letter.

Mr. Squier—We object, on the grounds that it is incompetent.

The Court—Sustained.

Mr. Boyce then asked the witness why he had recommended that Mrs. Starke be prosecuted for libel, and he said:

"I thought it was my duty as an officer to do so."

"Had you received any compensation for bringing about the prosecution?"

"No, sir."

"You stated yesterday that Dr. Winchester paid you $25 when you began the investigation, $25 later, and was to pay you another $50. Was it paid to you with the understanding that the action was to be brought in the federal court?"

"I had no idea it would be brought in the state court."

"How did you come to shift your ground."

"I did not shift ground. I took a step. I was called by Mr. Flint to appear before the grand jury of this county."

"Did he have anything to do with the grand jury of this county?"

"No, sir. He sent me word to go to Santa Barbara to appear before the grand jury."

Mr. Pourade produced the letter from Mr. Flint, which stated that he was wanted to appear before the Santa Barbara grand jury, and that "the district attorney there will see that you are reimbursed for your expenses."

Mr. Boyce—With whom did you confer when you arrived?

"I went to the postmaster's office, and then the district attorney sent for me to appear before the grand jury."

"Who was the district attorney?"

"Mr. Starke."

"C. A. Starke?"

"Yes, sir."

"Would you have come to Santa Barbara had not Mr. Flint said that 'the district attorney there' would see that you were reimbursed?"

"No, sir. I could not afford it."

The detective's bill to the county bearing the indorsement of C. A. Starke as district attorney was admitted over the objection of District Attorney Squier. It was for $32.71, for expenses and service before the grand jury.

Mr. Boyce—Do you know C. A. Starke?

The witness—Yes, sir.

"He was then the district attorney?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you have any conference with Dr. Winchester at this time?"

"No, sir."

"Did you have any conference with any others?"

"I think with Mr. Hicks and Sturni."

"You did not confer with Mr. Stod..."

"Not very much. In fact, I ... plained that the district attorney..."

Continued to Third Page

Drugs

and Photographic

Chemicals

Crane

627 State S...

Telephone 311 Red

SUNDAY HOURS:

9 - 10:30 a.

4 - 6 p. m.

YDA ADDIS TRIAL

Continued from Second Page.

not in the jury room when I was giving my testimony. I thought the district attorney should be present when a witness was testifying."

The witness was asked to describe his visit to Mrs. Storke's room, at the time he found certain papers that had been introduced in evidence.

"Mr. Storni and I went together. We took the screen off the transom over the door. It was in the Ivison building, between the New Morris House and the Mascarel. Mr. Storni was underneath me, and I was on top of him; that's what I meant by saying 'we' lifted the screen. I opened the transome window, and went through, dropping down on to the floor inside."

"Was Mrs. Storke in there?"

"No, sir."

Questions as to the date and hour followed, but neither was exactly fixed, further than that it was "day time."

"How did you come to know that Mrs. Storke was not there?"

"She was out with Mr. Hicks."

"Was that at your instigation?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you first learn that it was necessary to commit a crime in order to ferret out another crime?"

"I do not think it was a crime. It is necessary that the intent should be there before it is a crime."

"What did you do when you got in the room?"

"The first thing I did was to open the door."

"You stated a few minutes ago that you walked in; have you described to the jury the manner in which you walked in?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you and Mr. Storni do when you went in?"

"We examined nearly everything in the room, trying to find writings and a piece of tracing paper."

"You opened trunks and drawers and boxes that were locked?"

"No, sir."

"What did you open?"

"We opened a trunk."

"Was it unlocked?"

"Yes, sir."

"What else did you open?"

"I think we opened a drawer."

"Was that unlocked?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you open a box?"

"I do not think so."

"Who else was present when you were there, besides Mr. Storni?"

"No one."

"Who else knew that you were going into the room?"

"Mr. Hicks, Mr. Ivison and the postmaster, Mr. Maulsby."

"Don't you know that Grant Jackson knew that you were to open that room?"

"I am positive that he did not."

"Had you no keys to open that room?"

"No, sir."

"What did you take when you went into the room?"

"I took a piece of brown paper."

This was shown to the witness, who said he recognized it.

"What else did you take?"

"A piece of tracing paper."

"Where is that piece of tracing paper?"

"I do not know."

"What did you do with it?"

"I gave it to Mr. Flint."

"You know that the tracing paper is now in the possession of the district attorney, do you not?"

"I do not."

Mr. Squier—I haven't the paper. It cannot be found.

Mr. Boyce—Where was the evidence when you appeared before the grand jury?

The witness—It was in the possession of the grand jury.

"Did you see that piece of tracing paper then?"

"I think I did."

"Where were Mrs. Storke and Sheriff Hicks when you were in her room?"

"They went out to interview a witness in the Richardson murder case."

"The Richardson murder case was the thing you were working her on?"

"I do not understand you."

"This was the decoy by which you got Mrs. Storke out of town, for the purpose of entering her room?"

"Yes, sir."

An adjournment was then taken for the noon recess.

MORE ANONYMOUS LETTERS.

Editor Sands on the Stand—A Picturesque Paragraph.

The cross-examination of Pourade was resumed at 2 o'clock. The witness was asked as to indorsements on certain papers found in Mrs. Storke's room. He other things that you took from the room?"

"Yes, I believe so."

"Did Mr. Storni leave your sight at any time?"

"I do not think so. I did not pay much attention to the movements of Mr. Storni."

"Did you notice a looking glass?"

"I don't remember it. I was not searching for looking glasses."

"Was it not your purpose to search in all places of that room?"

"Yes, sir."

"Who did the searching?"

"Both of us."

"Do you remember a crate under the looking glass, used as a receptacle for toilet articles?"

"No, sir."

"Do you remember the crate situated close to the trunk?"

"No; I do not."

"Do you remember looking into any boxes in that room?"

"No, sir."

"You are quite positive you did not look into a box such as typewriting paper comes in?"

"I did not."

"You didn't find 130 odd dollars in that box?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see anybody who did find it?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see any letters relative to an investigation in the postoffice department?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see anything connected with such an investigation?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see all that Mr. Storni took from those rooms?"

"I believe I did."

"Did you see him secrete anything about his person?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see any papers or letters he took from that room?"

"I don't think he took any."

"Did he take from that room any letters addressed to Mrs. Storke by Herbert P. Krall of the postoffice department?"

"Not that I know of."

"Just look at this box which I hold in my hand. I ask if you ever saw that or any similar box in the room of Mrs. Storke?"

"No, sir."

"Or a larger box, a tin cracker box?"

"No, sir."

"Then you didn't empty the papers in the larger box?"

"No, sir."

"And you did not open this box?"

"No, sir."

"That is all."

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Mr. Squier—Mr. Pourade, was the letter you received from Mr. Flint the only direction you received from Santa Barbara as to appearing before the grand jury?

Mr. Pourade—Yes, sir.

"State the conversation you had with the district attorney, C. A. Storke, in regard to compensation."

"He told me to make my bill, and I made it and he approved it."

"Did anyone suggest to you that the defendant was the guilty party when you arrived in Santa Barbara?"

"No, sir."

"You stated that you had a conference with Dr. Winchester regarding these letters. Was the defendant's name mentioned in that conference?"

"No, sir."

"What first directed your suspicions toward this defendant?"

Mr. Boyce—We object: this is not proper.

The Court—Objection sustained.

The witness was shown the envelope defendant's exhibit No. 7, and asked why he had written the word "paint" on it.

Mr. Pourade—The letter that was in this envelope appeared to me to have a stain of paint on one side.

Mr. Squier—Examine the letter and see if it's the same.

"It is."

"You stated that you made no notes on the articles you took from the room. Will you explain why these marks were made?"

"They were marks of identification, to keep the different papers from getting mixed."

Mr. Squier offered in evidence the letter written from the sheriff's office to Mr. Pourade. Mr. Boyce objected, and the objection was overruled. The letter was then read to the jury, and it inquired if anything had been done before the federal grand jury, and said that "Mrs. S." was bothering the life out of the sheriff's office and charging the sheriff with failure to protect a lone woman who was about to be murdered, and asked in evidence.

L. C. Tallant also identified a similar letter which was admitted. He stated in reply to a question from Mr. Boyce, that he did not recollect ever talking with Grant Jackson about the letter.

Frank Sands, editor of the Daily News, testified that he was acquainted with Yda Addis Storke.

Mr. Squier—Do you know what her occupation was or has been?

"For about two weeks I knew."

"What was it?"

"She was an employe of mine."

"Did you ever see her write?"

"Yes; at my desk."

"From having seen her write, and seeing writing purporting to be hers, have you acquired a knowledge of her handwriting?"

"Somewhat."

"I will show you plaintiff's exhibit A (showing witness the Dr. Case letter, on which the action rests.) "Can you state whose handwriting that is?"

"In my opinion, Yda Addis Storke wrote that letter."

He also said the anonymous letter addressed to the Independent was, in his opinion, Mrs. Storke's writing. She had worked on his paper and he thought her an excellent reporter and litterateur. The prosecuting attorney asked a number of questions relating to the manner in which "copy" is prepared for a newspaper, all of which the defense objected to and was sustained. Witness said that he had a very slight conversation with the defendant in regard to the anonymous letters. He could not state when this conversation had taken place. The defense entered an objection that was overruled, to the question as to what was said. Mr. Sands then answered that Mrs. Storke asked him if his sympathies were with the people who were abused and persecuted. He said that he had replied that he had not attacked the matter of the anonymous letters because he thought it would but give publicity to them.

Attorney Boyce objected again. He did not care to have it stated upon what pedestal a newspaper man roosts in these matters. The objection was again overruled. Witness said that he had stated to Mrs. Storke that a gait or handwriting could not be disguised. Mrs. Storke replied that he was mistaken, for she wrote three distinct hands. The conversation took place in his room, or on the threshold that leads to it.

Witness said that Mrs. Storke is an extraordinary woman in a newspaper office. He said that she furnished copy such as not one in 10,000 could do. "Why I judged that this letter is written by Mrs. Storke," he said, "was because of the excellent manner in which it was prepared. There was nothing to be added or changed in it, not a punctuation mark. It sounds like Mrs. Storke."

Exhibit B, he said, was written in the same general style and probably by the same person. He expressed the same opinion of others.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

After five minutes' recess Attorney Boyce began cross-examination of the witness.

"Mr. Sands, you have no feeling in this case, have you?"

"No, sir."

He testified that Mrs. Storke was one of the first employes of his paper. He was the sole proprietor and editor of the paper. Mrs. Storke worked for him two weeks. He had a payday, he said, whenever they succeeded in getting the money. Mrs. Storke sued him for her pay, he replied to a question, a year or more after she had left his employ. There was some bitterness on her part in the trial, he said, but only a "hurting" on his. He did not remember what amount she recovered from him, but she had not gotten a judgment. Witness was somewhat forgetful on the subject.

"Did it effect you in your feeling toward Mrs. Storke at the expiration of her suit against you?"

"Yes, sir, I felt hurt."

"How long did you feel hurt?"

"Until I had forgotten all about it."

"Do you remember a circumstance of being sued for criminal libel yourself?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you remember that this defendant was a witness for the state in that trial?"

"I do not remember."

"Now, what is the matter with your memory?"

"I don't know. It depends on how the matter impressed me at the time."

Witness said that he had talked to a great many people about the present case, but he had never written a line about it so far as he could recall. He did not remember that he had ever talked to C. A. Storke or Grant Jackson about the case, but he had talked with Dr. Winchester. He didn't think that he had told anyone that he could ... Mrs. Storke ing of Mrs. Storke. Now, you knew that you were called here to identify this handwriting?"

"No, I didn't."

Handing the exhibits for the defense, that are admitted to be in Mrs. Storke's writing, and the disputed manuscripts, Mr. Sands was asked to point out any similarity.

Prosecuting attorney objected and was sustained, the judge agreeing that witness was not called as an expert.

"You say that in your opinion the writer of these admitted letters and of those presented by the prosecution is the same person?"

Mr. Sands replied that he did, and that he arrived at the conclusion from his long practice of handling manuscripts; it was an intuitive process, that he could not explain.

Attorney Boyce endeavored to get from witness a statement that he recognized a similarity between the writings of the disputed and admitted letters. After a long argument by the attorneys over the admissability of this evidence, the witness was allowed to answer. He said that they were both written by Mrs. Storke. He found in reading a letter that was handed him that it was written in the style of Mrs. Storke.

"Is that exhibit 'A' written for the press?"

"Probably not. I would think not; but it was written by one who is in the habit of writing for the press. It contains characteristics of the newspaper habit. Now here, read this. That is what I call a picturesque paragraph," the witness pointing to the following, a paragraph in the Dr. Case letter, that is included in the indictment: "Rumors of your life in the north have reached parties here, also the statement that you are a perfect fra you have been a tailor had to come back to hi

on his shoulders."

"If this letter had | person with the inter

style of the defendant,

asked Mr. Boyce.

"I don't know."

Witness said he saw

tion once before, when the grand jury. He h could remember. Said swear that the letter

Mrs. Storke.

The remainder of th

cupied in a discussion

as to what constitute-brought about by the

of the attorney for the witness to compare the

been offered in eviden

what he bases his belief

ones are in the writi

Attorney Boyce made support of his position

ing Attorney Squier re court decided against the testimony by sust cution's objection. I that it seemed a great

being wasted in this l

torneys. For the pu disputed writing, the

are two kinds of testi

be called expert. One

tily because he has write. The other, one more strictly, expert,

parisons of writing and entific principles, and

and photographic comp

sis of the writing.

FRANK SANDS.

SUBSCRIPTION, 50 CENTS PER MONTH.

Entered at the Post Office at Santa Barbara, Cal., as Second-Class matter.

All communications relating to subscriptions and advertising should be addressed to the DAILY NEWS, Santa Barbara, California.

Publication Office, 26 West Ortega Street.

TELEPHONE - - MAIN 16.

Official Paper of the City of Santa Barbara, Cal.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., JUNE 4, 1899

We are giving a very large share of our space to the Storke libel case. This we do not because we regard it as pleasant reading—for it is not. We do it simply because interest in the case is widespread and the public demand the proceedings.

Each day the courtroom is filled and it is nothing uncommon to see the same people occupying exactly the same seats session after session.

We do not purpose to discuss the merits of the case at all during progress of the trial. The reports are actually plain, unvarnished honest pictures of what the testimony actually is.

When the work of the expert Kilka is exhibited, we may expect the crush of people, eager to gain admission, to be more than the accommodations of the courtroom will bear. It will be very interesting and educational to witness the exhibition and hear the testimony of such a well known man and such an acknowledged expert in handwriting.

No one can guess as to the length of time the trial of this case will require. The side of the people will take some days yet and no person can say how long it will take to present the defendant's side.

...the floor inside."

"Was Mrs. Storke in there?"

"No, sir."

Questions as to the date and hour followed, but neither was exactly fixed, other than that it was "day time."

"How did you come to know that Mrs. Storke was not there?"

"She was out with Mr. Hicks."

"Was that at your instigation?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you first learn that it was necessary to commit a crime in order to ferret out another crime?"

"I do not think it was a crime. It is necessary that the intent should be there before it is a crime."

"What did you do when you got in the room?"

"The first thing I did was to open the ...n."

"You stated a few minutes ago that you walked in; have you described to the jury the manner in which you walked in?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you and Mr. Storni do when you went in?"

"We examined nearly everything in the room, trying to find writings and a piece of tracing paper."

"You opened trunks and drawers and boxes that were locked?"

"No, sir."

"What did you open?"

"We opened a trunk."

"Was it unlocked?"

"Yes, sir."

"What else did you open?"

"I think we opened a drawer."

"Was that unlocked?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you open a box?"

"I do not think so."

"Who else was present when you were there, besides Mr. Storni?"

"No one."

"Who else knew that you were going into the room?"

"Mr. Hicks, Mr. Ivison and the postmaster, Mr. Moulsby."

"Don't you know that Grant Jackson knew that you were to open that room?"

"I am positive that he did not."

"Had you no key to open that room?"

"No, sir."

"What did you take when you went into the room?"

"I took a piece of brown paper."

This was shown to the witness, who said he recognized it.

"What else did you take?"

"A piece of tracing paper."

"Where is that piece of tracing paper?"

"I do not know."

"What did you do with it?"

"I gave it to Mr. Flint."

"You know that the tracing paper is now in the possession of the district attorney, do you not?"

"I do not."

Mr. Squier—I haven't the paper. It cannot be found.

Mr. Boyce—Where was the evidence when you appeared before the grand jury?

The witness—It was in the possession of the grand jury.

"Did you see that piece of tracing paper then?"

"I think I did."

"Where were Mrs. Storke and Sheriff Hicks when you were in her room?"

"They went out to interview a witness in the Richardson murder case."

"The Richardson murder case was the thing you were working her on?"

"I do not understand you."

"This was the decoy by which you got Mrs. Storke out of town, for the purpose of entering her room?"

"Yes, sir."

An adjournment was then taken for the noon recess.

MORE ANONYMOUS LETTERS.

Editor Sands on the Stand—A Picturesque Paragraph.

The cross-examination of Pourade was resumed at 2 o'clock. The witness was asked as to indorsements on certain papers found in Mrs. Storke's room. He did not remember when some of these indorsements were made. His attention was called to a card of "W. J. Hooley, candidate for justice of the peace," taken from an envelope. The card bore in pencil: "Out this morning— — Back in thirty minutes." He said that it had been found in the room.

Mr. Boyce—Then it was not true that all you took from the defendant's room were the piece of brown paper, the tissue paper and the tracing paper?

The Witness—It was true as far as I remembered.

"Is it true now that there are no ... close to the trunk?"

"No; I do not."

"Do you remember looking into any boxes in that room?"

"No, sir."

"You are quite positive you did not look into a box such as typewriting paper comes in?"

"I did not."

"You didn't find 130 odd dollars in that box?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see anybody who did find it?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see any letters relative to an investigation in the postoffice department?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see anything connected with such an investigation?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see all that Mr. Storni took from those rooms?"

"I believe I did."

"Did you see him secrete anything about his person?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see any papers or letters he took from that room?"

"I don't think he took any."

"Did he take from that room any letters addressed to Mrs. Storke by Herbert P. Krall of the postoffice department?"

"Not that I know of."

"Just look at this box which I hold in my hand. I ask if you ever saw that or any similar box in the room of Mrs. Storke?"

"No, sir."

"In a larger box, a tin cracker box?"

"No, sir."

"Then you didn't empty the papers in the larger box?"

"No, sir."

"And you did not open this box?"

"No, sir."

"That is all."

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Mr. Squier—Mr. Pourade, was the letter you received from Mr. Flint the only direction you received from Santa Barbara as to appearing before the grand jury?

Mr. Pourade—Yes, sir.

"State the conversation you had with the district attorney, C. A. Storke, in regard to compensation."

"He told me to make my bill, and I made it, and he approved it."

"Did anyone suggest to you that the defendant was the guilty party when you arrived in Santa Barbara?"

"No, sir."

"You stated that you had a conference with Dr. Winchester regarding these letters. Was the defendant's name mentioned in that conference?"

"No, sir."

"What first directed your suspicion toward the defendant?"

Mr. Boyce—We object; this is not proper.

The Court—Objection sustained.

The witness was shown the envelope, defendant's exhibit No. 7, and asked why he had written the word "paint" on it.

Mr. Pourade—The letter that was in this envelope appeared to me to have a stain of paint on one side.

Mr. Squier—Examine the letter and see if it is the same.

"It is."

"You stated that you made no notations on the articles you took from the room. Will you explain why these marks were made?"

"They were marks of identification, to keep the different papers from getting mixed."

Mr. Squier offered in evidence the letters written from the sheriff's office to Mr. Pourade. Mr. Boyce objected, and the objection was overruled. The letter was then read to the jury, and in it was inquired if anything had been done before the federal grand jury, and said that the "Mrs. S." was badgering the life out of the sheriff's office and charging the sheriff with failure to protect a lone woman who was about to be murdered, and acting as though she were insane.

Judge Fisher, upon hearing the contents of the letter, said he would sustain the defendant's objection, and rule the letter out; but Mr. Boyce withdrew the objection.

Miss Nellie Maguire was called to identify two letters she had received, but the defendant's counsel waived formal identification, and the witness was excused.

Dr. G. W. Simpson identified a letter he had received on March 28 or 29, 1898. He said the letter was delivered to his office door. The letter was placed ...

"I will show you plaintiff's exhibit 5 (showing witness the Dr. Case letter, on which the actual tests.) Can you state whose handwriting that is?"

"In my opinion, Ada Addis Storke wrote that letter."

He also said the anonymous letter addressed to the Independent was, in his opinion, Mrs. Storke's writing. She had worked on his paper and he thought her an excellent reporter and litterateur. The prosecuting attorney asked a number of questions relating to the manner in which "copy" is prepared for a newspaper, all of which the defense objected to and was sustained. Witness said that he had a very slight conversation with the defendant in regard to the anonymous letters. He could not state when this conversation had taken place. The defense entered an objection that was overruled, to the question as to what was said. Mr. Sands then answered that Mrs. Storke asked him if his sympathies were with the people who were abused and persecuted. He said that he had replied that he had not attacked the matter of the anonymous letters because he thought it would but give publicity to them.

Attorney Boyce objected again. He did not care to have it stated upon what pedestal a newspaper man counts in these matters. The objection was again overruled. Witness said that he had stated to Mrs. Storke that a good ... handwriting could not be disguised. Mrs. Storke replied that he was mistaken, for she wrote three distinct hands. The conversation took place in his room, or on the threshold that leads to it.

Witness said that Mrs. Storke is an extraordinary woman in a newspaper office. He said that she furnished copy such as not one in 10,000 could do.

"Why I judged that this letter is written by Mrs. Storke," he said, "was because of the excellent manner in which it was prepared. There was nothing to be added or changed in it, not a punctuation mark. It sounds like Mrs. Storke."

Exhibit B, he said, was written in the same general style and probably by the same person. He expressed the same opinion of others.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

After five minutes' recess Attorney Boyce began cross-examination of the witness.

"Mr. Sands, you have no feeling in this case, have you?"

"No, sir."

He testified that Mrs. Storke was one of the best employes of his paper. He was the sole proprietor and editor of the paper. Mrs. Storke worked for him two weeks. He had a payday, he said, whenever they succeeded in getting the money. Mrs. Storke sued him for her pay, he replied to a question, a year or more after she had left his employ. There was some bitterness on her part in the trial, he said, but only a "feeling" on his. He did not remember what amount she recovered from him, but she had not gotten a judgment. Witness was somewhat forgetful on the subject.

"Did it affect you in your feeling toward Mrs. Storke at the expiration of her suit against you?"

"Yes, sir, I felt hurt."

"How long did you feel hurt?"

"Until I had forgotten all about it."

"Do you remember a circumstance of being sued for criminal libel yourself?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you remember that this defendant was a witness for the state in that trial?"

"I do not remember."

"Now, what is the matter with your memory?"

"I don't know. It depends on how the matter impressed me at the time."

Witness said that he had talked to a great many people about the present case, but he had never written a line about it so far as he could recall. He did not remember that he had ever talked to C. A. Storke or Grant Jackson about the case, but he had talked with Dr. Winchester. He didn't think that he had told anyone that he would go into court and swear that Mrs. Storke wrote the letters in question.

Attorney Boyce—I will now show you exhibits Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 and also Nos. 3, 4 and 5, and ask you if you recognize the handwriting of these exhibits.

Witness glanced at the manuscripts and replied that they were in Mrs. Storke's writing.

"Now that reminds me of the speed in which you answered to exhibit C, the Independent letter. You answered immediately that it was in the handwriting ...

... that he could not explain.

Attorney Boyce endeavored to get from witness a statement that he recognized a similarity between the writings of the disputed and admitted letters. After a long argument by the attorneys over the admissibility of this evidence, the witness was allowed to answer. He said that they were both written by Mrs. Storke. He found in reading a letter that was handed him that it was written in the style of Mrs. Storke.

"Is that exhibit 'A' written by the press?"

"Probably not. I would think not; but it was written by one who is in the habit of writing for the press. It contains characteristics of the newspaper habit. Now here, read this. That is what I call a picturesque paragraph," the witness pointing to the following, a paragraph in the Dr. Case letter, that is included in the indictment: "Rumors of your life in the north have reached parties here, also the statement that you are a perfect bru… you have been a … had to come back to … on his shoulders."

"If this letter had … person with the inte… style of the defendant, …" asked Mr. Boyce.

"I don't know."

Witness said he saw … him once before, when … the grand jury. He … could remember, … swear that the letter … Mrs. Storke.

The remainder of the … consist in a discussion … as to what constitutes … brought about by the … of the attorney for the … witness to compare the … been offered in evidence … what he bases his belief … ones are in the writ… Attorney Boyce made … support of his position … ing Attorney Squier re… court decided against … the testimony by … ention's objection. … that it seemed a great … being wasted in this … torneys. For the … disputed writing, the … are two kinds of testi… be called expert. One … life because he has … writer. The other, one … more strictly expert, … parisons of writing … entire principles, and … and photographic comp… … of the writing.

DAILY NEWS

FRANK SANDS.

SUBSCRIPTION, 50 CENTS PER MONTH.

Entered at the Post Office at Santa Barbara, Cal., as Second-Class matter.

All communications relating to subscriptions and advertising should be addressed to the DAILY NEWS, Santa Barbara, California.

Publication Office, 26 West Ortega Street.

TELEPHONE - - MAIN 16.

Official Paper of the City of Santa Barbara, Cal.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., JUNE 4, 1899

We are giving a very large share of our space to the Storke libel case. This we do not because we regard it as pleasant reading—for it is not. We do it simply because interest in the case is widespread and the public demand the proceedings.

Each day the courtroom is filled and it is nothing uncommon to see the same people occupying exactly the same seats session after session.

We do not purpose to discuss the merits of the case at all during progress of the trial. The reports are actually plain, unvarnished honest pictures of what the testimony actually is.

When the work of the expert Kitka is exhibited, we may expect the crush of people, eager to gain admission, to be more than the accommodations of the courtroom will bear. It will be very interesting and educational to witness the exhibition and hear the testimony of such a well known man and such an acknowledged expert in handwriting.

No one can guess as to the length of time the trial of this case will require. The side of the people will take some days yet and no person can say how long it will take to present the defendant's side.

"SHE WROTE THAT LETTER"

A Positive Witness in the Yda Addis Case.

MORE ANONYMOUS LITERATURE

Frank Sands, Postmaster Maulsby and C. L. Lloyd Witnesses for the Fifth Day of the Trial.

Judge Oster in the superior court yesterday gave but one short session to the Yda Addis trial. There were three witnesses, Frank Sands, D. W. Maulsby and C. L. Lloyd. The testimony of Editor Sands as given on the previous day was not shaken, and he left the stand declaring that, in his opinion, Yda Addis Storke was the author of the defamatory letter received by Dr. Martha Case. Postmaster Maulsby was called to identify letters that had passed through the postoffice, and he was not submitted to cross-examination. Mr. Lloyd told of another conversation he had with the defendant, in which she displayed animosity for Dr. Winchester.

The trial is likely to occupy all of this week. Two important witnesses are still to be heard for the prosecution—Dr. Winchester and Expert Kytka. It is generally accepted that the defense will have considerable evidence to put in, as a number of witnesses have been subpoenaed. Sensational testimony is expected should the defendant herself go upon the stand.

MORNING SESSION.

Editor Frank Sands was the first witness of Saturday morning, and he continued his testimony, under cross-examination, as to the handwriting of the different letters in evidence, and as to conversations he had with the defendant. Telling of a conversation that occurred at about the time of the Sears trouble, he said she came to his room in the Frame building. She was outside the door, and sat down on the threshold.

Mr. Boyce—She was sitting on the floor?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

"Were you sitting on the floor also?"

"Part of the time. She was sitting on the threshold of the door, and I was sitting some distance from her. The threshold was about half an inch higher than the floor. She opened the conversation by asking if Grant Jackson was there. I don't remember just what she said. I told her he was not there."

"What was then done?"

"She still stood there."

"What did she say, what explanation did she give?"

"She gave no explanation; just kept talking. I did not ask her to come in. I did not see that I had any reason to. One thing she spoke of was the Richardson matter, about this time she sat down on the floor; the door was about one-third open. She told a very dramatic story about the Richardson case. I do not remember all of the subjects she discussed. She spoke of the Sears trouble, and wanted to know if my sympathies were not with the woman. I agreed with her, and I wrote an article that appeared a day or two later, protesting against the Sears matter. She also spoke of the case of these anonymous letters."

"How did that subject come up?"

"I cannot tell you exactly. She asked me if I knew anything about it. I told her I knew a little about it."

"She asked you why you did not get in and 'roast' that proposition?"

"Yes, sir. The reason I gave for not doing so, was that I did not think it advisable at that time, and also that it would intensify the feelings of those who had received the letters. She said further that I ought to get in first, as we understood The Press had prepared an article on the subject."

"You remember that she insisted that it was the duty of a newspaper to stop a thing of that kind?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you do anything to stop it?"

"Not at that time."

"Are you familiar with the editorials in the News?"

"Not particularly."

"Do you remember an editorial appearing in the News headed 'A Horil Incarnate'?"

"No, I do not. I might have written it and suppose I did if it appeared in that column."

"Can you give the words she said?"

"No, sir."

"At the time of the conversation on the doorstep did you give her a book?"

"I do not remember; I may have."

"When did you first see the letters exhibits A, B and C?"

"I think it was before the grand jury."

"Did you see any other letters then?"

"I saw a mass of letters; I cannot recall them all."

"You were a witness before the grand jury. You say you saw a mass of letters. Did you select any out?"

"I think several were placed before me, and I was asked if I could identify the writing. I can not recall any particular letter."

The witness then reiterated his direct testimony, when he said that Mrs. Storke told him she could write three different hands, and no one could distinguish.

"What did you understand her to mean when she said that?"

"I understood that she meant she could write three distinct styles of handwriting."

He examined the manuscripts of the articles written on school subjects, and concluded that the handwriting was about the same as her writing as seen in the News office. The Martha Case letter, he said, was in about the same style, but was little more studied.

The attorney then went into a slightly technical examination of the witness on certain parts of the disputed letters, and the style of composition employed.

In one of them the word "mattheres" was erased and correctly spelled "matters." He was asked if he considered that a woman of the defendant's ability would make the first mistake.

He thought that it might be done for effect.

"You know that that letter does not represent the habitual naturalness of the defendant?"

"I know that that letter in my opinion was written by Mrs. Storke."

"Is that letter in the ordinary method of the defendant's handwriting?"

"It is a more studied effort. I think the effort was made to have that writing appear to be the writing of someone other than Mrs. Storke."

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

In response to questions from Mr. Squier, the witness stated that the jury acquitted him of the charge of libel in the case referred to on the previous day, that he had no ill will nor malice toward the defendant.

He was asked to point out in The Press letter the features that he said marked it as being on the newspaper style. The defense objected, but the objection was overruled.

In the first place, he said that the paragraphing, capitalization, etc., indicated the style of one familiar with preparation of copy for the newspaper.

He characterized the Case letter as "the work of a devil," as the letter could not possibly do any good, and was certain to do much harm.

Mr. Boyce—And in your opinion it was the work of the defendant?

The Witness—It was the work of the defendant, all right.

Postmaster D. W. Maulsby was called. Mr. Squier showed the witness a letter addressed to Dr. Case and asked if he had ever seen it. Mr. Maulsby replied that he had, that it had been handed to him by one of his clerks, who had been instructed to be on the lookout for such letters. That it was mailed in the Santa Barbara postoffice. Also he did not open it at that time, but sent it to Inspector Flint. He had seen the letter afterward, when it was in the possession of Mr. Pomade.

Another letter addressed to "Honored Mrs." and signed "Pat O'Flanagan," with the envelope postmarked May 17, '98, was identified by the postmaster.

The witness was also shown exhibit A letter, the one addressed to Dr. Martha Case and stated that it was posted in the Santa Barbara office. Plaintiff's exhibits 1, 6, M, L, ..., defendant's exhibits ..., and plaintiff's exhibits 10, 11, 12 and 13, were shown witness and he stated that they were mailed in the Santa Barbara postoffice.

Letters addressed to L. G. Dreyfus and Dr. H. F. Winchester were recognized by witness as having been posted in the Santa Barbara postoffice.

Attorney Boyce agreed to admit the Dreyfus letter without calling for its identification by Mr. Dreyfus but would not allow the same privilege for the Winchester letter, as "we will not admit that Dr. Winchester will testify to anything."

C. L. Lloyd was recalled to the stand by Mr. Squier, and questioned as to a conversation he had with the defendant ... would follow him to the end. She said there was some truth in the stories about Dr. Winchester and Dr. Case, and I replied that I knew there was not, as I had known Dr. Case for ten years, and knew that she was an exemplary young woman."

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Boyce—When did you first have a conversation with the district attorney about the fact that you could testify as to the animus of the defendant?

"I did not tell him; I told others."

"You became very indignant when she referred to the relations of Dr. Winchester and Dr. Case?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you did not lay aside your prejudice when you came upon the witness stand?"

Questioned as to his second conversation with the defendant in detail the witness said that she complained that Dr. Winchester did not come as he had said he would, and she added that she "had it in for Dr. Winchester, and had for two or three years, and he knows it."

The witness explained that he had "no feeling in the matter against this defendant, unless she is guilty."

"Did you ever have any conversation with Grant Jackson about these letters?"

"No conversation. One day when I was walking down the street, Grant came along and said: 'I hear that you have received one of these letters?' I said 'Yes,' and that was all that was said."

The defense then undertook to establish a prejudice on the part of the witness against the defendant because of a rhyme that had appeared in the News on "The Passing of the 'Pendent.'" Mr. Lloyd declared that he had not known before who was the author of that effusion, and was glad to find out.

He added that there was no feeling on his part against the defendant, but that until a week or two before the letter scandal she had not spoken to him for four or five years; the ill feeling was all on her part.

The court adjourned at noon until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

CLOSING IN ON MRS. STORKE

June 6

Positive Statements That She Wrote the Incriminating Letters.

SANTA BARBARA WORKED UP

The Townspeople Take an Absorbing Interest in the Trial.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

SANTA BARBARA, June 5.—The evidence, as each day goes by, seems to go harder against Mrs. Storke. The whole town has taken up the matter, and standing room is at a premium in the courtroom.

The prosecution still continues to bring up witnesses who claim to be familiar with the defendant's handwriting, and who testify with one accord that the libelous letters are the work of the newspaper woman.

The first witness to-day was an old farmer named Francis H. Harene, who has known Mrs. Storke on friendly terms for nine years. He testified that he had seen Mrs. Storke write and that members of his family had received many letters from her. When he went to the postoffice and got a letter from Mrs. Storke, he knew at once from the writing of the superscription from whose hand it came. The witness was shown all of the admitted writings of the defendant before he was presented with the anonymous letter in which she is accused of libeling Dr. Winchester of this city. This, he said, was in the handwriting of the accused, and that he knew it was hers, as he knew the writing on the envelopes of his letters. He thought, however, that the writing in the libelous letter was a studied effort. It looked as if the writer had been very careful in writing it.

The old gentleman was nearly seventy years of age, yet he was at least good enough for the attorneys of the defense, who gave him a most rigid cross-examination.

Mrs. Anna H. West was a most reliable witness. She talked right past the objections of attorneys and the rulings of the court. She wanted to tell all she knew.

This woman was at one time the confidential friend of the defendant, and appeared before the Grand Jury when the indictment against Mrs. Storke was found. She then swore that she believed her friend innocent. But later, after seeing some of the anonymous letters, she changed her mind. She was shown a number of letters and notes which the defendant had sent to her and identified them, together with a Justice Court complaint sworn out by Mrs. Storke against the witness, as being in the defendant's handwriting.

This Justice Court case is an interesting one. About the time suspicion first pointed toward Mrs. Storke as the author of the anonymous letters, that lady, with Mrs. West's assistance, made a quick retreat to Mexico. She then stored certain chattels with Mrs. West, who also claims, refuses to give them up. A damage suit was therefore commenced but a few days ago.

Mrs. West testified before the Grand Jury that she had seen the disputed letters, but at that time she did not think that Mrs. Storke could be guilty. When she went home, however, she got out some of the old letters she had received, and at once the similarity of the two hands struck her.

When shown the letters to-day she swore absolutely that Mrs. Storke wrote them.

On cross-examination a number of mysterious questions were asked that in a way suggested the conspiracy that every one is waiting to have the defense show up. The general idea is that the defense will try to show that an interested party wrote the letters in order to throw the blame upon Mrs. Storke, with the idea of getting rid of her either to scare her out of town or to send her to prison, where she would be discredited if by ill luck she told any of the innumerable deadly secrets of which she claims to be in possession, and which, she says, will upset the social structure of this community.

Just before the hour of adjournment Handwriting Expert Theodore Kytka was put on the stand. When he entered the court-room the audience was in the frame of mind that makes people applaud when they are in a theatre. The testimony of the expert has been awaited as a settling matter in the case. His reputation includes services in the Durrant case and in the Fair will case, and he is the handwriting expert of the San Francisco Police Department. The jurymen leaned forward to hear his testimony.

Kytka was first shown the admitted writings, which he said he had carefully studied. Then came three of the disputed writings, and as the expert pronounced the words, "The same hand that wrote the exemplars wrote that letter," every man in the box settled back in his chair as if a weight had been lifted off his mind.

The adjournment of court stopped this interesting testimony, but it is understood that to-morrow the expert will fetch on his photographs and other evidence, and the interest is intense.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.

Prosecuting Witness Recalled in the Storke Case.

SANTA BARBARA, June 5.—[Regular Correspondence.] Dr. H. F. Winchester, prosecuting witness in the Yda Addis Storke libel suit, was recalled to the stand today, but was allowed only to identify a letter to Dr. Martha Case, relative to him. Mrs. Storke is bearing well the strain of the long trial. Attorneys Starbuck and Currier have dropped out of the case, leaving Senator Boyce to conduct the defense. The defendant is constantly at a table in court, arranging papers, and making notes for the guidance of her attorney. Theodore Kytka, handwriting expert, was called to the stand a few minutes before adjournment for the day. The State depends mainly on him to prove the authorship of the libelous letters. It is understood that Kytka is employed to go to Paris in the Dreyfus case, and will leave directly the Storke case is through.

INFALLIBLE KYTKA SWEARS AND SWEARS

The Penman Fastens the Guilt on Mrs. Storke.

INCRIMINATING LETTERS

The Expert Certain the Accused Woman Wrote Them.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—The Storke libel case reached its climax this morning, so far as the work of the prosecution is concerned, when Expert Kytka, following up yesterday's preliminary testimony explained why he considered the writing of the disputed letters in the case to have been done by the same hand that wrote certain other writings admittedly those of Mrs. Storke.

Before the witness came to the technical part of his testimony, it became necessary for the prosecution to introduce in evidence the great body of anonymous correspondence that flooded this city at the time Mrs. Storke's crime is alleged to have been committed. Whispers of the character of these letters had gone the rounds among a few of those who had been connected with the case, but the general public had never known what they were. They were simply execrable in their vulgar simplicity. They were of three kinds. Some of them urged young men to visit a certain house, the respectability of which has never been questioned. When the letters were written, it was occupied by three respectable women, one of whom, a lady physician, was professionally connected with Winchester. Other letters were to neighbors concerning the house, and the worst were in the form of invitations to decent young girls to go to the same house for ignoble purposes.

The reading of these letters aroused the wrath of all who heard them.

Through the means of these and other writings, Mr. Kytka made out his case. His chief exhibit was an immense photograph, several feet square, of the word "acknowledged," as found in certain admitted writings and in the letter upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted. The general appearance of the words, enlarged as they were 11 times, was almost identical, and the expert pointed out the many exact resemblances. The letters throughout were shown to have been made by the same strokes and the witness laid great stress upon the fact that in writing the word the pen had been taken up from the paper in six places, the places being the same in each example. This removal of the pen caused several letters to be separated, and these small points, Mr. Kytka said, were conclusive in his mind. They were points that no forger could, by any possibility, imitate. It was beyond the human power of imitation. Some of the strokes might have been made by a forger, but the perfect agreement of all was something conclusive.

Several capital letters, found in both the Winchester letter and in a copy of a Justice Court complaint written recently by the defendant, were illustrated by blackboard drawings. The capital H, found frequently in the specimens, was drawn rather than written, and the capitals D and R were peculiarly and distinctly made. The expert simply piled example upon example and the jury examined the original documents. Several jurymen found and called attention to letters made as the witness had indicated. During the whole of this testimony the defendant continually called the attention of her counsel to certain peculiarities in the exhibits. The defence will undoubtedly endeavor to show that the letters were written and the blame thrown upon Yda Addis by those who wish to see the last of her here.

One other link of evidence was brought out through Kytka's testimony. ... clippings were introduced, pasted upon tissue paper. A like piece of tissue found in Mrs. Storke's room was exhibited. These, the expert swore, were of the same quality, composition and texture. A paint stain on the back of one of the anonymous letters was also identified as a stain of yellow ochre paint, which, as Mrs. Storke has done considerable painting, was used by her.

The defence will probably get to the cross-examination of the witness some time tomorrow afternoon, although it is likely that there will be no cross-examination.

Kytka says he will go from here to Paris, leaving just as soon as the Storke case is over. He will be employed there by M. Zola, and will work as an expert upon the disputed writings of the Dreyfus case.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY

HANDWRITING EXPERT AT WORK IN STORKE CASE.

Big Oil Company Formed to Drill in the Ocean—Complaints About Ioleons—Will Contest Probably Over a Small Bequest.

SANTA BARBARA, June 7.—[Regular Correspondence.] In the Storke case, Expert Adolph Kitka spent the entire forenoon today in developing the details of his proof that Mrs. Storke wrote the letters upon which she is indicted. He made studies of a number of letters showing the agreement of details in the various writings. His study of the letter "w" as it is found in the beginning of words will serve to show how carefully his work has been done. There are three ways in which the letter is made. In the disputed writings there are six cases where there is a slight upstroke caused by a striking of the pen before the first downward stroke was made. Four of these letters are found in the admitted writings of Mrs. Storke. In them the up-stroke was to the right of the first stroke of the letter. The letter was found eleven times in admitted writings and twenty-two times in disputed, where there was this accidental stroke made to the left. The normal "w" was without this up-stroke, the first stroke going straight down. In admitted writings 117 of these were found and forty-six were found in the disputed letters. The shape of this letter, Kitka said, showed that the person who wrote it was a ready writer, one who wrote a good deal.

The jurymen took great interest in examining the specimens of writing showed them and found the expert several examples of the peculiarities he illustrated on the blackboard. Mrs. Storke showed a great deal of satisfaction at the testimony, nodding her head in assent to everything, and appearing to be overjoyed at what was said. She kept copies of the letters constantly before her to find the letters and words referred to by the expert.

DAMAGING TO YDA ADDIS.

Expert Kytka Testifies Against the Accused.

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—The most damaging testimony in the Yda Addis Storke criminal libel suit yet presented was given to-day by Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert. Illustrations were given to show that the writer of the anonymous letters copied them in an unnatural hand, but characteristics of the acknowledged writing of the defendant were shown by enlarged photographic copies of the words in the Martha Case letter. The expert will be on the stand three or four days.

SANTA BARBARA.

Damaging Testimony in the Storke Case—Anti-Gold Story.

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—[Regular Correspondence.] Messrs. H. E. Huntington and William Hood of the Southern Pacific are at Ellwood today, inspecting the work of construction going on there. Both say that the right-of-way matters are being satisfactorily settled, and the company is now actively exchanging its contracts for right-of-way deeds. The work of construction is to be pushed as rapidly as possible, but the road will not be finished by May 1900, as was expected.

Theodore Kitka, the handwriting expert and document photographer, is now on the stand in the Storke libel case, and this morning he displayed before the jury and a packed courtroom the photographs of words, etc., which have been so anxiously awaited. The first step with the expert was to have him identify a number of the letters in the case, both admitted and disputed. The disputed writings, Kitka said, were in the hand of the acknowledged ones. The letters were then read to the jury. This included all of the anonymous letters that have been collected in the case, and this reading of them gave the public the first real idea of their nature. After the reading, Kitka was told to explain the method by which he arrived at his conclusions. He showed a photograph of the word acknowledged as found in both the disputed and the admitted writings. These words were enlarged 110 times and their appearance was said by the expert to be exactly the same. The separation of letters in both specimens was identical, and many of the strokes were peculiarly alike. The disputed specimen, like all the disputed letters, was in what the expert called a clumsily disguised hand. After going very carefully over the fine points of the word acknowledged, which points he said no forger could imitate, the expert took the capital letter "R" from two of the writings for the purpose of showing their identity. A piece of tissue paper upon which some clippings were pasted was shown, with a piece taken by E. M. Pomade from from Mrs. Storke's rooms. Kitka swore that he had examined both and that they were the same in quality and texture. A paint stain on the back of one of the letters was also identified as being a stain of yellow ochre paint such as is used by artists.

famatory letter received by Dr. Martha Case. Postmaster Moulsby was called to identify letters that had passed through the postoffice, and he was not submitted to cross-examination. Mr. Lloyd told of another conversation he had with the defendant, in which she displayed animosity for Dr. Winchester.

The trial is likely to occupy all of this week. Two important witnesses are still to be heard for the prosecution—Dr. Winchester and Expert Kytka. It is generally accepted that the defense will have considerable evidence to put in, as a number of witnesses have been subpenaed. Sensational testimony is expected should the defendant herself go upon the stand.

MORNING SESSION.

Elisha Frank Sands was the first witness of Saturday morning, and he continued his testimony, under cross-examination as to the handwriting of the different letters in evidence, and as to conversations he had with the defendant. Telling of a conversation that occurred at about the time of the Sears trouble, he said she came to his room in the Crane building. She was outside the door, and sat down on the threshold.

Mr. Boyce—She was sitting on the floor?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

"Were you sitting on the floor also?"

"Part of the time. She was sitting on the threshold of the door, and I was sitting some distance from her. The threshold was about half an inch higher than the floor. She opened the conversation by asking if Grant Jackson was there. I don't remember just what she said. I told her he was not there."

"What was then done?"

"She still stood there."

"What did she say; what explanation did she give?"

"She gave no explanation; just kept talking. I did not ask her to come in. I did not see that I had any reason to. One thing she spoke of was the Richardson matter; about this time she sat down on the floor; the door was about one third open. She told a very dramatic story about the Richardson case. I do not remember all of the subjects she discussed. She spoke of the Sears trouble, and wanted to know if my sympathies were not with the woman. I agreed with her, and I wrote an article that appeared a day or two later, protesting against the Sears matter. She also spoke of the case of these anonymous letters."

"How did that subject come up?"

"I cannot tell you exactly. She asked me if I knew anything about it. I told her I knew a little about it."

"She asked you why you did not get in and 'roast' that proposition?"

"Yes, sir. The reason I gave for not doing so, was that I did not think it advisable at that time, and also that it would not satisfy the feelings of those who had received the letters. She said further that I ought to get in first, as she understood The Press had prepared an article on the subject."

"You remember that she insisted that it was the duty of a newspaper to stop a thing of that kind?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you do anything to stop it?"

"Not at that time."

"Are you familiar with the editorials in the News?"

"Not particularly."

"Do you remember an editorial appearing in the News headed 'A Devil Incarnate'?"

"No, I do not. I might have written it, and suppose I did if it appeared in that column."

"... this conversation all you had with the defendant regarding the anonymous letters?"

"No, sir."

"Can you tell of another?"

"Yes, sir. One evening I was walking up the street with Mr. Storke, and we stopped in front of the Crane building, to talk a few minutes. Mrs. Storke passed two or three times, and finally came up and said she wanted to speak to me. Mr. Storke then said he was through and walked away. Mrs. Storke stood there talking awhile. I think she mentioned the anonymous letters. A man passed, and she asked, 'Did you notice that gentleman passing?' I said 'no.' He passed again, and she said she thought he was a detective."

writing."

He examined the manuscripts of the articles written on school subjects, and concluded that the handwriting was about the same as her writing as seen in the News office. The Martha Case letter, he said, was in about the same style, but was little more studied.

The attorney then went into a slightly technical examination of the witness on certain parts of the disputed letters, and the style of composition employed.

In one of them the word "matteres" was erased and correctly spelled "matters." He was asked if he considered that a woman of the defendant's ability would make the first mistake.

He thought that it might be done for effect.

"You know that that letter does not represent the habitual naturalness of the defendant?"

"I know that that letter in my opinion was written by Mrs. Storke."

"Is that letter in the ordinary method of the defendant's handwriting?"

"It is a more studied effort. I think the effort was made to have that writing appear to be the writing of someone other than Mrs. Storke."

REDIRECT EXAMINATION.

In response to questions from Mr. Squier, the witness stated that the jury acquitted him of the charge of libel in the case referred to on the previous day, that he had no ill will nor malice toward the defendant.

He was asked to point out in The Press letter the features that he said marked it as being in the newspaper style. The defense objected, but the objection was overruled.

In the first place, he said that the paragraphing, capitalization, etc., indicated the style of one familiar with preparation of copy for the newspaper.

He characterized the Case letter as "the work of a devil," as the letter could not possibly do any good, and was certain to do much harm.

Mr. Boyce—And in your opinion it was the work of the defendant?

The witness—It was the work of the defendant, all right.

Postmaster D. W. Moulsby was called. Mr. Squier showed the witness a letter addressed to Dr. Case and asked if he had ever seen it. Mr. Moulsby replied that he had, that it had been handed to him by one of his clerks, who had been instructed to be on the lookout for such letters. That it was mailed in the Santa Barbara postoffice, that he did not open it at that time, but sent it to Inspector Flint. He had seen the letter afterward, when it was in the possession of Mr. Pomeroy.

Another letter addressed to "Honored Mrs." and signed "Pat O'Flanigan," with the envelope postmarked May 17, '98, was identified by the postmaster.

The witness was also shown exhibit A letter, the one addressed to Dr. Martha Case, and stated that it was posted in the Santa Barbara office. Plaintiff's exhibits 1, to 30, 1, 8, defendant's exhibits a, and plaintiff's exhibits G, H, P, and S, were shown witness and he stated that they were mailed in the Santa Barbara postoffice.

Letters addressed to J. G. Dreyfus and Dr. R. F. Winchester were recognized by witness as having been posted in the Santa Barbara postoffice.

Attorney Boyce agreed to admit the Dreyfus letter without calling for its identification by Mr. Dreyfus but would not allow the same privilege for the Winchester letter, as "we will not admit that Dr. Winchester will testify to anything."

F. L. Lloyd was recalled to the stand by Mr. Squier, and questioned as to a conversation he had with the defendant regarding these anonymous letters. He stated that he had had a great many conversations with the defendant on this subject.

"When was the next conversation?"

"The next evening after the first."

"State what was said."

"I cannot tell you everything, as she was in The Press office an hour or two, and talking constantly. She came into the office about 11 o'clock at night and said she was angry with Dr. Winchester, who had agreed to come and see her in answer to a telephone message. She said there was some truth in these things that were said in the letters, that she was angry with Dr. Winchester ...

"no feeling in the matter against the defendant, unless she is guilty."

"Did you ever have any conversation with Grant Jackson about these letters?"

"No conversation. One day when I was walking down the street, Grant came along and said: 'I hear that you have received one of these letters?' I said 'Yes,' and that was all that was said."

The defense then undertook to establish a prejudice on the part of the witness against the defendant because of a rhyme that had appeared in the News on "The Passing of the 'President.'" Mr. Lloyd declared that he had not known before who was the author of that effusion, and was glad to find out.

He added that there was no feeling on his part against the defendant, but that until a week or two before the letter scandal she had not spoken to him for four or five years, the ill feeling was all on her part.

The court adjourned at noon until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

CLOSING IN ON MRS. STORKE

June 6

Positive Statements That She Wrote the Incriminating Letters.

SANTA BARBARA WORKED UP

The Townspeople Take an Absorbing Interest in the Trial.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 5.—The evidence, as each day goes by, seems to go harder against Mrs. Storke. The whole town has taken up the matter, and standing room is at a premium in the courtroom.

The prosecution still continues to bring on witnesses who claim to be familiar with the defendant's handwriting, and who testify with one accord that the libelous letters are the work of the newspaper woman.

The first witness today was an old farmer named Francis D. Havens, who has known Mrs. Storke on friendly terms for nine years. He testified that he had seen Mrs. Storke write and that members of his family had received many letters from her. When he went to the postoffice and got a letter from Mrs. Storke, he knew at once from the writing of the superscription from whose hand it came. The witness was shown all of the admitted writings of the defendant before he was presented with the anonymous letter in which she is accused of libeling Dr. Winchester of this city. This, he said, was in the handwriting of the accused, and that he knew it was hers, as he knew the writing on the envelopes of his letters. He thought, however, that the writing in the libelous letter was a studied effort. It looked as if the writer had been very careful in writing it.

The old gentleman was nearly seventy years of age, yet he was at least good enough for the attorneys of the defense, who gave him a most rigid cross-examination.

Mrs. Anna H. West was a most valuable witness. She talked right past the objections of attorneys and the warnings of the court. She wanted to tell all she knew.

This woman was at one time the confidential friend of the defendant, and appeared before the Grand Jury when the indictment against Mrs. Storke was found. She then swore that she believed her friend innocent. But later, after seeing some of the anonymous letters, she changed her mind. She was shown a number of letters and notes which the defendant had sent to her and identified them, together with a Justice Court complaint sworn out by Mrs. Storke against the witness, as being in the defendant's handwriting.

This Justice Court case is an interesting one. About the time suspicion first pointed toward Mrs. Storke as the author of the anonymous letters, that lady, with Mrs. West's assistance, made a quick removal to Mexico. She then stored certain chattels with Mrs. West, who, she claims, refuses to give them up. A damage suit was therefore commenced but a few days ago.

Mrs. West testified before the Grand Jury that she had seen the disputed letters, and at that time she did not think that Mrs. Storke could be guilty. When she went home, however, she got out some of the old letters she had received, and at once the similarity of the two hands struck her.

... referred to him. Mrs. Storke is bearing well the strain of the long trial. Attorneys Starbuck and Cunley have dropped out of the case, leaving Senator Boyce to conduct the defense. The defendant is constantly at a table in court, arranging papers and making notes for the guidance of her attorney. Theodore Kytka, handwriting expert, was called to the stand a few minutes before adjournment for the day. The State depends mainly on him to prove the authorship of the libelous letters. It is understood that Kytka is employed to go to Paris in the Dreyfus case, and will leave directly the Storke case is through.

INFALLIBLE KYTKA SWEARS AND SWEARS

The Penman Fastens the Guilt on Mrs. Storke.

INCRIMINATING LETTERS

The Expert Certain the Accused Woman Wrote Them.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—The Storke libel case reached its climax this morning, so far as the work of the prosecution is concerned, when Expert Kytka, following up yesterday's preliminary testimony, explained why he considered the writing of the disputed letters in the case to have been done by the same hand that wrote certain other writings admittedly those of Mrs. Storke.

Before the witness came to the technical part of his testimony, it became necessary for the prosecution to introduce in evidence the great body of anonymous correspondence that flooded this city at the time Mrs. Storke's crime is alleged to have been committed. Whispers of the character of these letters had gone the rounds among a few of those who had been connected with the case, but the general public had never known what they were. They were simply execrable in their vulgar simplicity. They were of three kinds. One set urged young men to visit a certain house, the respectability of which has never been questioned. When the letters were written, it was occupied by three respectable women, one of whom, a lady physician, was professionally connected with Winchester. Other letters were to neighbors concerning the house, and the worst were in the form of invitations to decent young girls to go to the same house for ignoble purposes.

The reading of these letters stirred the wrath of all who heard them.

Through the means of these and other writings, Mr. Kytka made out his case. His chief exhibit was an immense photograph, several feet square, of the word "acknowledged," as found in certain admitted writings and in the letter upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted. The general appearance of the words, enlarged as they were 11 times, was almost identical, and the expert pointed out the many exact resemblances. The letters throughout were shown to have been made by the same strokes and the witness laid great stress upon the fact that in writing the word the pen had been taken up from the paper in all places, the places being the same in each example. This removal of the pen caused several letters to be separated, and these small points, Mr. Kytka said, were conclusive to his mind. They were points that no forger could by any possibility imitate. It was beyond the human power of imitation. Some of the strokes might have been made by a forger, but the perfect agreement of all was something conclusive.

Several capital letters, found in both the Winchester letter and in a copy of a Justice Court complaint written recently by the defendant, were illustrated by blackboard drawings. The capital G, found frequently in the specimens, was drawn rather than written, and the capitals D and H were peculiarly and similarly made. The expert simply piled example upon example and the jury examined the original documents. Several jurymen found and called attention to letters made as the witness had indicated. During the whole of this testimony the defendant continually called the attention of her counsel to certain peculiarities in the exhibits. The defense will undoubtedly endeavor to show that the letters were written and the blame thrown upon Yda Addis by those who wish to see the last of her here.

... the various writings. His study of the ... "w" as it is found in the beginning of ... will serve to show how carefully the ... has been done. There are three ways in which the letter is made. In the ... writings there are six cases where there ... slight upstroke caused by a ... the pen before the first downward stroke ... made. Four of these letters are found in ... admitted writings of Mrs. Storke. In these the up-stroke was to the right of the ... stroke of the letter. The letter was found eleven times in admitted writings and ... twenty-two times in disputed, where there ... this accidental stroke made in the ... animal "w" was without this upstroke ... final stroke going straight down. In ... writings 117 of these were found and ... six were found in the disputed letters. The shape of this letter, Kilka said, showed that the person who wrote it was a ready writer, one who wrote a good deal.

The jurymen took great interest in examining the specimens of writing shown them and found the expert several examples of the peculiarities he illustrated on the blackboard. Mrs. Storke showed a great deal of ... tion at the testimony, nodding her head in assent to everything, and appearing to be overjoyed at what was said. She kept copies of the letters constantly before her ... the letters and words referred to by the ... port.

DAMAGING TO YDA ADDIS.

Expert Kytka Testifies Against the Accused.

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—The most damaging testimony in the Yda Addis Storke criminal libel suit yet presented was given to-day by Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert. Illustrations were given to show that the writer of the anonymous letters copied them in an unnatural hand, but characteristics of the acknowledged writing of the defendant were shown by enlarged photographic copies of the words in the Martha Case letter. The expert will be on the stand three or four days.

SANTA BARBARA.

Damaging Testimony in the Storke Case—Anti-Gold Story.

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—(Regular Correspondence.) Messrs. H. E. Huntington and William Hood of the Southern Pacific are at Ellwood today, inspecting the work of construction going on there. Both say that the right-of-way matters are being satisfactorily settled, and the company is now actively exchanging its contracts for right-of-way deeds. The work of construction is to be pushed as rapidly as possible, but the road will not be finished by May, 1899, as was expected.

Theodore Kilka, the handwriting expert and document photographer, is now on the stand in the Storke libel case, and this morning he displayed before the jury and a packed court room the photographs of words, etc., which have been so anxiously awaited. The first step with the expert was to have him identify a number of the letters in the case, both admitted and disputed. The disputed writings, Kilka said, were in the hand of the acknowledged ones. The letters were then read to the jury. This included all of the anonymous letters that have been collected in the case, and this reading of them gave the public the first real idea of their nature. After the reading, Kilka was told to explain the method by which he arrived at his conclusions. He showed a photograph of the word acknowledged as found in both the disputed and the admitted writings. These words were enlarged 110 times and their appearance was said by the expert to be exactly the same. The separation of letters in both specimens was identical, and many of the strokes are peculiarly alike. The disputed specimens are all the disputed letters was in what the expert called a clumsily disguised hand. After going very carefully over the fine points of the word acknowledged, which points he said no forger could imitate, the expert took the capital letter "B" from two of the writings for the purpose of showing their identity. A piece of tissue paper upon which some clippings were pasted was shown, with a piece taken by E. M. Pouvade from Mrs. Storke's rooms. Kilka asked that they be compared both and that they were the same in quality and texture. A paint stain on the back of one of the letters was identified as being a stain of yellow ochre paint used as is used by artists.

Scientific Analysis of Yda Addis' Writing

Alter Volumes of Other Evidedce to Prove Her Authorship of Libelous Letters State Calls Expert Kytka.

Second Week of Trial Begins and Prosecution Still Presenting Evidence---Mrs. West Tells How She was Convinced Defendant Wrote the Letters.

Nearly a score of witnesses have been examined in the six days of the Yda Addis Storke trial, each to prove by his knowledge of the defendant or experience with her writing that she is the author of a batch of letters that a witness yesterday aptly described as dirty, and now Theodore Kytka, a documentary photographer and handwriting expert of world fame, is called to prove the writing by scientific analysis. Kytka's appearance has been impatiently awaited by the large crowd that daily attends the trial, and when shortly before adjournment last evening he was called to the stand there was manifested more interest than any incident of the trial has aroused.

Dr. Winchester, the prosecuting witness, and at whom was directed the malice contained in the anonymous letters that are the cause of the trial, was on the stand yesterday, but only to identify the letter that has come to be designated the Martha Case letter. He was not cross-examined. Another important witness of the state yesterday was Mrs. Anna E. West, whose volubility of speech almost distracted the defendant's attorney and more than once set the court and spectators laughing.

Judge Oster is proving himself one of the best natured of judges, and though the insists on order in the court and keeps the trial moving at as quick a pace as the wheels of justice will move, he enjoys a bit of diversion as well as anyone. He had a good laugh yesterday afternoon at Senator Boyce's expense, when the sheriff had to be called to help the attorney open a chatelaine bag for the defendant, who was outside and called for some article it contained. But between the attorney and sheriff they failed to get the bag open and had to send it out whole. All proceedings stopped during the performance.

SECOND WEEK OF TRIAL.

More Writing Placed in Evidence by Prosecution.

Dr. R. F. Winchester, the prosecuting witness, was called to the stand at 10 o'clock Monday morning. Following the usual questions as to occupation, residence, etc., the direct examination of the witness proceeded as follows.

Mr. Squier—During the past three years has there been any other person living in this city named R. F. Winchester, or Dr. R. F. Winchester?

The Witness—Not to my knowledge.

"Will you look at this letter (showing witness the Dr. Martha Case letter). Did you ever see that before?"

"Yes, sir; in May last year."

The witness also recognized a letter that had been addressed to him, and an envelope containing clippings from a newspaper, likewise received by him.

FRANCIS D. HAVENS.

Francis D. Havens, the next witness, testified that he lived about ten miles west of town, had lived in the county about thirty-two years, and was a farmer by occupation.

Mr. Squier—Are you acquainted with the defendant?

"Yes, sir; for over nine years."

"Are you familiar with her writing?"

"Yes."

"Have you ever received letters from the defendant?"

"Yes, sir."

"Have any members of your family received letters from her?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you acquainted with Mrs. Storke at that time?"

"Yes, sir."

"How many letters written by the defendant have you seen?"

Mr. Boyce—We object.

The Court—Objection sustained. Have you ever seen Mrs. Storke write?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

The Court—How many times?

"I could not swear to more than two or three."

Mr. Squier—From seeing the defendant write, did you acquire a knowledge of her handwriting?"

"Yes, I can tell her handwriting now, or could; when I took letters from the postoffice I could tell from the superscription if they were from her."

"Will you look at this letter (handing witness the Dr. Case letter) and tell who in your opinion wrote that letter?"

"I think that is in the handwriting of Mrs. Storke."

"Will you look at this letter, and the accompanying note, addressed to "Editor Press," (exhibit B) and say whose writing that is?"

"It is the same writing."

Exhibit C was shown witness, and was also declared to be in the same writing.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Boyce—Mr. Havens, do you claim to be an expert in handwriting?

The Witness—No, sir.

"Did you ever have any experience as a witness in a court room in identifying handwriting?"

"No, sir."

"How did you come to be a witness in this case?"

"The sheriff summoned me."

"Is that all you can tell about it?"

"No, sir."

"I thought not."

"I met the district attorney on the street about a week ago and he asked me if I knew Mrs. Storke. I said that I did; he asked me if I had ever received letters from her; I told him that I had."

"Have you any of this writing?"

"No, sir."

"What has become of the letters?"

"I destroyed them."

"Explain why you destroyed them."

"About the time Mrs. Storke was seeking separation from her husband, C. A. Storke wanted these letters, and I objected; I didn't want to get mixed up with the suit; he threatened to get an officer and bring me and my family into court; I was friendly to Mrs. Storke and am yet; I did not like the idea of having my family dragged into court, particularly in a suit of that kind, and I went home and had my family go through the house and get every scrap of writing received from Mrs. Storke and I burned them up."

"You have seen her write since the divorce proceedings?"

"I have not."

"Have you ever been to her rooms since that time?"

"Yes, I think I have."

"When?"

"Some time prior to her going to Los Angeles."

"You remember the time that the Richardson murder took place, don't you?"

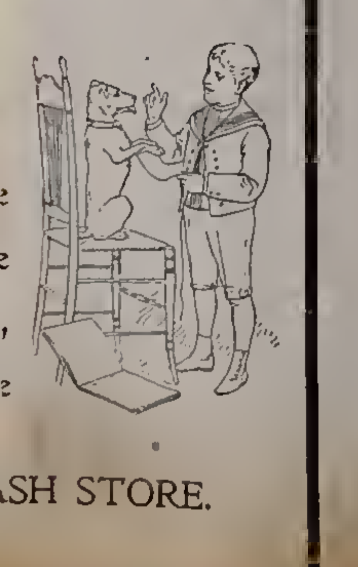
"Yes, I know about the time."

"Do you remember the last time you were at Mrs. Storke's room."

"No, I don't think I can fix the date."

"If you can't place the date can you remember the circumstances?"

"I went there. I don't think I had any



ASH STORE.

YDA ADDIS TRIAL

Continued from First Page

business, only just to call on her."

"Was any one with you?"

"I think not."

"You never went there with your daughter?"

"I may have been with my daughter, but I think not."

"Do you remember that Mrs. Storke took exception to the vulgar language that you used and forbade you coming again?"

"Such a thing never occurred."

"You are sure?"

"Positive."

"You have always been on friendly terms with the defendant?"

"Up to the present moment. Since her return from Los Angeles I have not spoken to her."

"Do you remember in the fall of 1898 meeting the defendant, when the defendant declined to speak to you?"

"No, sir."

"She never declined to recognize you?"

"Never until this indictment was brought."

"Did you ever meet her in the presence of any other person during the past two and one-half years?"

"No, sir. Not that I remember."

The witness was questioned as to whom he had talked regarding his testimony in this case, and he said he had talked with no one but the district attorney; that he came here at the request of the district attorney, and had gone on the stand much against his will.

He was shown some of the school article manuscripts, and said that he had seen some of them before, in the law library, just before court convened, that the district attorney had shown him some of the writings that had been introduced in evidence.

"In your opinion, exhibit A you recognize from the similarity to No. 5?"

"From the similarity of those two; I don't know their numbers."

"And you also recognize this, exhibit B, through the same reason?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you a free writer with the pen?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you accustomed to use the pen?"

"I have been accustomed to use the pen all my life."

"You don't farm with the pen?"

"Some times; yes, sir."

MRS. ANNA E. WEST.

Mrs. Anna E. West testified that she had lived in Santa Barbara about eleven years.

Mr. Squier—Are you acquainted with Yda Addis Storke?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

"How long?"

"Since she was first married to Mr. Storke. I first saw her at that time. I next saw her in October, 1890."

"Have you ever seen Mrs. Storke write?"

"Yes, sir."

"When?"

"Last July, I think."

"How many times?"

"Once I know, twice I think."

"Have you ever received letters from her?"

"Yes."

"Have you thus acquired a knowledge of her handwriting?"

"Yes."

"Will you look at this letter, the Dr. Martha Case letter. Will you state whose handwriting that is, in your opinion?"

"In my opinion it is in the handwriting of Mrs. Yda Addis Storke."

When shown The Press letter she said "That is Mrs. Storke's also."

Other of the letters were examined by the witness with the same result.

Two notes not previously introduced were shown witness, and she said:

"She wrote these to me; they were left at the woman's parliament, in Los Angeles, and were handed to me from the desk."

They were introduced as evidence.

The witness identified a long letter addressed to J. W. Taggart, dated October 11, 1898, and signed Yda Addis Storke. Mrs. West said:

"She put that letter in my satchel in Los Angeles, at the time I was visiting the woman's parliament, and she called me out of the parliament; she put this in my satchel at the Arcade depot. She told me to give it to Mr. Taggart, and to read the contents."

"Did you read it?"

"I did."

A letter addressed "My dear friend," and signed "Y. H. A. S.," and dated "Oct. 13, 1898," was shown. The witness said it was handed to her by Mrs. Scutti.

Mr. Squier—We offer this letter in evidence as containing an admission from

... The letter was examined by Mr. ... who said:

"We have no objections, but we like to know what admission is cl...

Mr. Squier—The first page is w... would like to introduce.

Mr. Boyce—We object to the ... duction of part of the letter, we object to the introduction of the ...

Mr. Squier—Very well.

A copy of the complaint in an ... in the justice court, township 2, e... "Yda Addis Storke vs. Anna E. ..." was identified as the writing of ... Storke, and was admitted as a ... of her handwriting.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The witness was questioned b... Boyce as to her acquaintance with ... Storke, and she stated that sh... called upon him in the office ... district attorney to consult wi... as to proper steps to take in con... with some depredations on her pr...

Mr. Boyce—What are your fe... toward the defendant?

"They are friendly."

"And always have been friendly..."

"Yes, sir, and always have ... friendly."

"You have always endeavored to ... your friendliness?"

"I have never done anything to ... her."

The attorney then read the com... in the action brought by Mrs. S... against Mrs. West in the justice ... for the recovery of certain goods, ... at $150, and for $150 damages for ... retention. Her attention was di... to some pencil markings on the m... of the document.

Mr. Boyce—Were these pencil ... randa made by you?

The Witness—When that case ... up in the other court the truth w... told.

The original question was rep... and Mrs. West declared that it w... matter that had no connection wi... case on trial; that she was ready ... anxious to have the suit in the j... court tried that the truth migh... known.

In the midst of the discussion ar... on this point the court announce... adjournment until 2 o'clock.

A TALKATIVE WITNESS.

Mrs. West Answers In Her Own W... The Expert.

Mrs. West, the one-time friend ... protector of Yda Addis Storke, re... the stand at 2 o'clock, and Att... Boyce continued his questions as t... pencil marks on the copy of the j... court complaint. Mrs. West in... that she did not claim that the p... writing was the work of the defen... "I say that that ink writing is ... Storke's handwriting."

"There is a figure '25' in penci... the body of the page; is that ... Storke's writing?"

"No, sir."

"What did you mean by saying: ... are not putting that as part of the ... dence.' Of whom were you spea... when you said 'we'?"

"I was speaking of myself. I do ... give that pencil writing as a spec... of Mrs. Storke's writing."

In regard to her case in the lowe... court she said:

"I am quite ready to have it tried ... wanted it tried at once."

She stated that "There is no le... in my mind concerning the case; I ... tried to help Mrs. Storke."

"Did you think that by giving ... specimens of the writing you woul... helping her?"

"I thought that if she did not ... these anonymous letters the specim... I had would clear her. At that ti... thought she was innocent. I told ev... body at the time that I thought she ... innocent. I was called before the gr... jury not knowing what case it was ... did all I could to prove her innoc... asked several people to help prove ... innocent. I did so because I beli... her innocent, and because she had c... into my store and asked me to help, ... saying that she was suspected, but ... innocent. But I did not know the ... was before the grand jury. I beli... her innocent until I had seen the ano... mous letters."

"I will call your attention to exhi... 1 and 2 of plaintiff and to exhibits ... and 25, and ask you what are the ... tive dates when you first saw these w... ings."

"These (exhibits 1 and 2) were h... ed to me sometime in October, at ... woman's parliament, the letter to ... Taggart (exhibit 21) was put in ... satchel at Los Angeles; the other ... hibit 25) was delivered to Mrs. Sc... in October."

"How did this ... to Mrs. Scutti?"

"Because Mrs. Storke had said she could not trust her letters to me to the mail."

Mr. Boyce then introduced the two notes, exhibits 1 and 2, and was about to read them, when the district attorney objected, as they had been introduced simply as specimens of the defendant's handwriting, and on the further ground that it was not proper cross-examination, being a part of the defendant's direct case. The court examined the notes, and sustained the objection.

"What were your relations with Mrs. Storke?"

"Friendly. I wished to clear her of the imputation that she had written those letters."

"At the time of her arrest the first time, did you act as bondsman for this defendant?"

"No, sir."

"Did you offer to do so?"

"I would have done so, but my husband objected very strongly."

"Did she apply to you to go on her bond?"

"Judge Crane asked me if I would go on the bond. I was told that she might have to go to jail that night, and I said that I would do what I could to save her from that. My husband objected to my going on the bond, and made it so warm for me at home that I could not do so."

"You had conversations with Mr. Storke at this time?"

"What conversations?"

"You went as the representative of this defendant to C. A. Storke at this time?"

Objections to this line of questioning were sustained, although Mr. Boyce explained that he wanted to show that the witness had carried to the defendant from C. A. Storke threats of a suit of criminal nature; that Mrs. Storke had been driven out of town, and that the witness had been hostile to the defendant from that time on.

"You stated that Mrs. Storke told you something of charges made against her; that she was accused of being the author of these letters?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did she say so?"

"She came to my store and said that she was greatly frightened. I believed her innocent. It was some time in August shortly before she left for Mexico."

Witness had never talked with C. A. Storke about the case, but with Grant Jackson she had talked about it, and they had agreed that they would like to clear her. Witness helped pack Mrs. Storke's effects after Mrs. Storke had left. Questions as to giving Mrs. Storke financial aid and a great many others of the cross-examination were objected to and the objections sustained.

Witness stated that she had carried on a correspondence with defendant during her absence. A part of this correspondence was introduced as evidence.

Attorney Boyce read one of the letters, in which Mrs. Storke directed the witness to collect evidence to be used for Mrs. Storke. Mrs. West retired during reading of the letter.

"You remember, in that letter to you, she conferred with you in regard to employing Mr. Taggart?"

"Yes, but he wouldn't take the case." Witness made efforts to secure the evidence that Mrs. Storke wanted.

"When did you change your mind as to Mrs. Storke's innocence?"

"After returning from the grand jury, where I was shown the letters."

Witness identified letters that were shown her before the grand jury.

"I saw none other," said the witness. "I wanted to believe her innocent, but when I returned home I saw a card that she had written, and the writing was so much alike I could not help believing. I wanted to prove her innocent."

The card referred to was not in court.

"You remember that in the letter defendant refers to an agreement that they tried to compel her to sign. Didn't you try to persuade her to sign it?"

Prosecuting attorney objected. Overruled.

Witness denied that she had ever tried to get the defendant to sign the agreement. Witness was profuse in her protestations that she had not attempted to force signing of the agreement, until Judge Oster called her to order, gently reminding the witness that there were so many men in court who wanted to talk that she must give them a chance.

"You remember asking her if ... write an anonymous letter to ... home?"

"No, sir. I did not ask her. It was she who told me about the letter. She persisted in talking about the anonymous letters. I wanted nothing to do with it. I tried to keep out of the matter. I heard the letters were dirty. I have that."

Witness said again that she did not believe the defendant guilty until after she had seen the letters before the grand jury and upon returning home was struck with the similarity of the writing when compared with other specimens. In reply to each question Mrs. West persisted in telling the whole story and all leading up to it. Her earnest manner and volubility excited more amusement than any incident of the trial has done. She would answer the questions in her own way, and tell all or nothing.

Witness said that she has seen a great many specimens of writing of Mrs. Storke, in different kinds of writing. Her explanations of the kinds was rather long, and when she had concluded the court ordered a recess.

After recess Mrs. West was asked by Attorney Boyce:

"Can you tell now what you saw before the grand jury; any one single letter?"

Witness pointed to the Case letter, [of] that she was positive. She had no specimens of defendant's writing other than those she had presented to the deputy sheriff. She did not remember whether she had given the deputy more specimens of Mrs. Storke's writing than those in court. She did not give the specimens with any thought of prosecuting the defendant, but to clear S[...]. The deputy promised to defend her, said the witness. Later she said that a great many specimens of writing that she had seen determined her belief that defendant was the author of the anonymous letters, but she had none of those specimens in her possession and could not procure them.

When asked to identify a manuscript as the agreement which defendant had been asked to sign, she said that it was the paper that Attorney Boyce had been asking questions about, and that he would learn all about in good time. "All of these things will out," she said. "Right always prevails and the truth will be known of this matter." She would answer nothing more as to the agreement.

Mrs. West was excused and Postmaster Maulsby recalled to identify a letter that had been mailed at the postoffice June 9, 1898.

Mrs. E. J. Thompson was recalled to identify other specimens of Yda Addis' writing.

To a question from the attorney for the defense, Mrs. Thompson answered that one of the letters presented was that to the Woman's Relief corps that she had referred to when on the stand before. The signature of Yda Addis Storke in the roll book of the Relief corps and an application for membership in the corps were presented in evidence by the defense.

"You were asked to make comparisons of the phraseology of these letters that are indications to convince you that defendant is the author of exhibits A, B and C. Have you done so?"

"Only as a whole. The manner in which the letters are worded convinces me."

There was a movement throughout the court room as the next witness entered, and from mouth to mouth word was whispered that it was Kytka, the expert. The spectators' interest in the defendant has already palled, and the witnesses for the prosecution have told the same story over until it no longer is new, but in the expert there was a promise of something out of the usual.

To the usual preliminary questions in direct examination by Prosecuting Attorney Squier, witness answered that his name was Theodore Kytka; his residence is San Francisco, where he has lived six or seven years; he is a documentary photographer and expert in handwriting, in which calling he has been engaged since the trial of the Chicago anarchists. He has been engaged as expert in a number of criminal trials of national importance, naming, after the defense had objected and been overruled, the Cordelia Botkin case, in which he was called to identify the writing of the defendant to John P. Dunning; the Fair will case, the Quackenbush will case, the Becker and Creegan case, for the United States secret service in connection with anonymous letters sent to President Cleveland, also in forged bank note case for the secret service, and a many others for the police of San Francisco.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier:—Mr. Kytka, have you had any experience in examining writing as to the character of ink used?

"Yes, sir."

"You stated you were a documentary photographer?

"Yes, sir."

"Have you had experience in making large photographic copies?"

"Yes, sir."

"And have you done that in connection with your work as a handwriting expert?"

"Yes, sir."

Plaintiff's exhibits 1 to 20 were handed witness by the prosecuting attorney. He replied that he had seen them before. Also several other exhibits were handed him. "Have you examined those writings?"

"I have."

"From the examinations you have made have you familiarized yourself with the writing?"

"I have."

"From the examination, who in your opinion wrote these exhibits?"

"In this writing there is some writing that was not done by the same hand."

"After a careful examination of these 'exemplars,' I find that the person who wrote them wrote the Martha Case letter."

The Judge—What do you mean by the "exemplars?"

"It is the term meaning the specimens."

He identified specimens handed him, saying they were written by the same person. Other specimens, including many of the letters that have already been submitted, were presented. The witness had examined them, he said, and identified them as the writing of the author of the Martha Case letter.

A letter addressed to Louis G. Dreyfus was presented and declared in the same handwriting. It was then offered in evidence, the defense objecting.

Court adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning, when Attorney Boyce will state the objections of the defense to evidence of the expert on lines begun at the afternoon session.

YDA ADDIS STORKE.

Daily — Indp't

The District Attorney Reads Several Letters

June 6 -

Very Interesting to Those Who Like Amative Literature.

In the Absence of a Boyce's Loud-Voiced, If Not Boisterous Cross-examination, the Afternoon Proceedings were Painfully Decorous.

Expert Kytka is an Austrian American, and has made calligraphy his study in a professional sense. Let us concede that any pursuit requiring artificial instruments to demonstrate, prove or convince with, the pursuit is a scientific one. Herr Kytka being a scientist, understands the instruments needed in his research, and as in the Storke case, absolutely something is necessary to establish the identity of the handwriting, he does not trust to his natural eyes, but makes use of optics correct past peradventure.

The camera lucida, an instrument which by means of a prism or an arrangement of mirrors, causes an apparent image of an external object to appear as if projected upon a plane surface, as paper or canvas, so that the outlines may be conveniently traced. It is generally used with the microscope.

The camera obscura is an apparatus in which the external objects formed by a convex lens or convex mirror, are thrown on a paper or other white surface placed in the focus of the lens or mirror within a darkened chamber, so that the outlines may be traced. The instruments that the expert Kytka has are no doubt modern, or of the latest improvement, and since he is an fait in their manipulation, and the theory is accepted, viz: "There are no two things alike," and "the instrument can not lie," the evidence that the scientist will be able to demonstrate is the fact. Such is the aspect of the Storke case just now, and can not one deem it a pity that time—which is money—has been wasted in this trial to establish the identity of Yda Addis Storke's handwriting with innumerable witnesses more or less confusing, when the expert very briefly could have saved all the pro and con in the case?

THIS MORNING'S PROCEEDINGS.

Plaintiff exhibits from 1 and 2 shown to the expert are examined. Other exhibits likewise examined. Defendant's exhibits shown and declared examined. Two letters were declared to be an attempt of disguise; pressure on the lower portion of each letter confirms the disguise.

L. Dreyfus, Wm. LaVies, Miss H. S. Knibloe, E. C. Tallant, Mrs Martha Case, Mrs. Case Winchester, Miss M. Gilbiven, Clio Lloyd, Dr. R. F. Winchester (the pied piper of Hamlin pipes alluring pipes in a newspaper clipping. "Alas, Berlioz." The underlining tells the tale.)

Nelly Maguire, Dr. Nelly Maguire, R. F. Winchester and Dr. Simpson were honored (?) with amative letters. The Press remarkable exhibit regretting badness based on report of an anonymous writer, is produced.

Herr Kytka having made so analysis of the letter, places the above to the same hand. An enlarged writing is placed on view producing the word "acknowledged" (There can not be distortion) Stricken out. Witness says the pen was taken up six times in writing "acknowledged," explaining the pressure of the pen. The pencil word differs materially from the word in ink. Expression of opinion by the expert sustained. Witness illustrates upon the blackboard correct curves and curves distorted; angles and connections are illustrated. "The word "acknowledged", as illustrated, shows six connections. The word "knowledge" is in connections dissimilar from "acknowledged."

In speaking of exemplar specimens, Herr Kytka uses the German word "exemplar."

Letter B illustrated with fine points and loops.

The expert illustrates an "eccentricity" an eccentric M.

The jury examines the originals to compare with the illustrated M on the blackboard.

Letter G next appears on the blackboard, deemed an artist's drawing; witness mentions an artist in San Francisco by the name of Eaves be consulted; has consulted in this case.

Jury examines original.

H connected to the first stroke u in Hundred and i in Hiram appears on the board; attention is drawn to the shading in the cross stroke.

Jury examines the original.

"lie" from public next appears on the board; l and e touch the base and i appears in suspense.

THE STORKE TRIAL.

The Expert Illustrates, Enlightens the Jury.

Daily — Ind'p't

The Court Room is not Attractive To-day on Account of the Scientific Demonstration—A Criticism on Reporters.

June 7 -

Alas to our cost we know him well. The meek eyed Press reporter sits too far away from the place of action to hear or see with any accuracy. The goody goody boy knows of no immorality outside of prostitution and the liquor traffic. To violate a sacred trust is with him a virtue, to injure a man who has befriended him is the little thing's prayer. To omit purposely main features of the Storke trial is to him obedience. He purposely mentions but two out of the many that received the amative letters, und horror inhult, "if those letters were published." "Take away the vile things" that the innocent may not be contaminated and depraved forever. A moral District Attorney finds it his painful duty to read aloud all those poisonous epistles, and strange to say the women in attendance all survive the ordeal. "Too vile to be published" is sufficient to make a demand for the wording of the letters, and if the puny scribe did hear, he will take the trouble to satisfy all questioners.

That same virtuous writer did, upon receipt of an anonymous letter, publish a warning and suggestive article, denouncing a bad house on De la Vina street, threw thereby a stigma on the neighborhood, recommended that the bad women should be moved lower down, and be attached to the trafficking women in a quarter evidently set apart for the traffic. How did the innocent boy know that there were any bad women in any part of the city?

The writer in the INDEPENDENT took the scribe to task, speaking from the card because, passing the house at least twice a day, and being gifted by nature with more observative powers than the notorious Pourade, knew that said house and inmates had been grossly slandered; not by a letter but by the scribe of the Press. The writer has been on the witness stand and stated that he received a letter for publication, and one of a business kind, but never publishing the anonymous, and, having no taste for the business, merely looked over, but did not read the letters, could not even positively identify them.

Another reporter says, "When the cross-examination commences there will be fun for everybody." Indeed, then the court-room is to be degraded into a boisterous burnt cork institution, with middleman and the bones and tambourine represented by the contending lawyers. Upon that principle there would be fun for a congregation if the pastor would turn hand-springs in the pulpit.

A woman is indicted for a grave offense against the laws of society, bringing in its train a costly trial. Where is the fun for the tax-payers coming in?

Mrs. Storke at one time in her tribulation (the Storkes have had abundance of litigation), had many women friends, and Mr. Storke had none, and but few of the sterner sex. The writer is well posted on the past and must say, if any body was persecuted in those trials it was not Yda Addis Storke. The women flocked to her support, stuck to her. She was a shining light in all measures pertaining to reform, where, as a rule, virtue is admired in others.

The Yda's name is enrolled on the Woman's Relief Corps, may be on the Women's Home. She has been very active in the Woman's Reform, participated at least on the Woman's Parliament reform, and during all that time she had women friends. She had friends when she was arrested in the Tommy Storke affair, that wanted to keep her from prison; and now, all at once the friends have deserted her. Is Yda Addis any worse now than she has been for many years, and why then?

She is accused of having written and passed through the mails vile literature, and still the postal department leaves her in the hands of the civil courts.

There was a time that the very best Man was accused of law-breaking. He had many, many friends, and all deserted Him in the hour of need but a bald-headed Peter who then and there defended his Master by cutting off one Malchus' ear. The writer is not profane, hence draws no comparison, but upon the general supposition that no one is so utterly lost but has at least one friend, who, of all the women reformers whereof she was even a leader, is the friend now.

The woman gets a fair trial, and a jury will pass upon the case. Herr Kytka the scientist seeks to instruct the jury by illustration. Will it understand the confusing illustrations and be able to judge intelligently in the premises?

THE STORKE CASE.

June 7 -

Expert Kitka Testifies On The Letters.

Says They Were All Written By The Same Hand.

Those who have never had any experience in listening to the testimony of experts in handwriting had their eyes pretty widely opened yesterday when Mr. Kitka began his testimony in the libel case. The expert was most explicit in his explanations and his testimony seemed to be of great weight.

At first he was shown a large number of the letters in the case and these he said he had examined carefully. The Martha Case letter and others were introduced and all were said by the expert to have been written by the same hand as the one that wrote the acknowledged writings. At least twenty of the anonymous letters were examined and each of them Mr. Kitka said, the same hand that wrote the exemplars wrote that letter. There is a clumsy attempt to disguise the hand. I see from an examination of the exhibits that the pressure in the disputed writings is on the lower part of the letters. That is due to a peculiar way of holding the pen which I will illustrate later on.

The whole body of the anonymous letters was then read. Each one was worse than the one read before and as the district attorney went from one to another the awful significance of the crime that has been committed here dawned upon the crowded courtroom. The faces of the women present showed the horror they felt at hearing such things and the men seemed hardly to believe their own ears.

Mrs. West said she had heard bad things from Mrs. Storke about the character of the letters. There was much she probably didn't hear. These letters are too vulgar to have been written in the lowest brothel or any other place indeed outside of Hell itself. The person who wrote them was a "devil" indeed and if that person is the woman now accused of having written them how terrible must have been her feelings as she heard them thus publicly read in her presence and in the presence of the people of Santa Barbara.

All of the letters Kitka looked over and as each one was read he said: "That was written by the same hand that wrote the exemplars, (admitted writings.) There is a clumsy effort to disguise the hand." The Martha Case letter with those to the Press and Independent when shown brought out the same answers as the others.

The witness was shown some newspaper clippings and a piece of tissue paper attached. The piece of paper taken from the defendant's room by Pourade was also shown and the witness asked if he had compared the two.

Mr. Kitka answered: The papers are of the same quality. They are of the same composition, I might say they are of the same texture. The newspaper clipping was from the Press and deplored the fact that a house of ill-fame had been started in a hitherto respectable quarter and that under the laws it was impossible to continue such houses in a particular part of the city.

The letter on the back of which appears a strain of yellow paint was exhibited.

Q. What is that?

A. That is a stain of yellow ochre used by artists. It is also mixed with a fatty or oily substance.

The witness was then asked to explain to the jury his reasons for thinking the exemplars and the disputed writings to be in the same hand.

A. I have made photographic reproductions of the ten letters.

Q. Are those reproductions true reproductions of the words represented?

A. Yes sir.

Mr. Kitka then showed a large card fully four feet wide by three long upon which appeared photographic reproductions of the word "acknowledged" taken in one case from one of the admitted writings and in the other from the Martha Case letter. The photograph showed an enlargement of 110 times and both words were photographed at the same time. The excitement to get a glimpse of this novel piece of evidence was intense. Everyone stood up and as the witness placed the picture before the jury, the defendant, her attorneys and almost everyone else in the room walked over to see what it looked like. Some faces showed satisfaction upon seeing the resemblance between the two; some showed doubt. The defendant after a careful look nodded her head in a way that seemed to say "Just what we wanted." This is a way of hers and as the expert spoke of certain letters being in a crudely disguised hand the nod of the head was incessant.

Kitka said: I find in the pencil word that the writing is free and quite rapid, and that the pen was taken up six times before the word was completed. The letters a and c are disconnected. The same is true of the same letters in the Martha Case letters. The c in the pencil letter begins with a pressure downward in the pencil letters and the c begins with a pressure downward in the disputed word. The letters c and k of the pencil letters are connected and the same is true in the ink exhibit (Case letter.)

The pencil k connects its second stroke with the n. and o. This is also true of the ink exhibit.

The microscope will show very distinctly where the pen was lifted up. The o and the w, the l and the r are in both instances connected. E and d in both writings are disconnected. The g and d are disconnected in the pencil exhibit and also in the ink exhibit. The g and e are connected in bot' d the final letter d is disconnected.

I consider the stops in the movement in this word to be the strongest point in my studies of these writings. That word alone would be enough to satisfy me in making a judgment.

As Mr. Kitka spoke he drew in chalk on the blackboard an imitation of the word he was analyzing, marking the places where the pen had been lifted, the disconnections with red chalk. The excitement in the audience was intense and the jury kept a close eye upon all that was done.

The expert continued

The letter a begins in the same way in both cases. There is a compound curve. It is not clear cut. By a compound curve I mean a curve made of two movements a curve made of two curves. You will find this curve in both letters. It is those little tiny points that a forger cannot imitate. It is beyond the human power.

Witness drew on the blackboard a curve of one single clear cut line and another made of two curves of about the same radius but making a slight angle with each other. These he said showed what was meant by a compound curve.

The letter c in both words begins with a downward stroke. There are, as you see, six disconnections in the word acknoledged. I found the word knowledge in the justice court complaint and this showed the same separations. I also found the word acknowledged in another of the writings but this I did not use.

Mr. Boyce asked why and asked which exhibit contained the word. It could not be found then but was produced later.

The jury meanwhile examined with magnifying glass the originals from which the photographs were made.

The capital b found in the case line in the word Barbara, upon the Case envelope, same word, and in the word But in one of the admitted writings was next examined. They were constructed as shown on the blackboard in the same way. Both began with broad straight down strokes which turned and looped at the bottom, the up stroke being light and fine. The curve at the top was even at the center there was another loop and the final down stroke was heavy and turned up at the bottom. In both cases the capital was separated from the following letters.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

In the afternoon the court room was more crowded than in the morning and some twenty-five ladies, were present. But there were no letters read.

Kitka produced the word acknowledged that had been missing in the morning, and showed that the separations were the same as formerly shown.

To show what in the language of an expert was termed an eccentricity, A capital was drawn showing a peculiar curved stroke, a sort of curl put upon the front stroke after the letter was practically complete. These letters were found in a "McC," in the Woman's Parliament letter and in the word madam in the Case letter.

When the witness explained how this stroke was put on after the letter was finished and showed the example on the board, the defendant with her satisfied nod poked at Mr. Boyce's ribs with her finger.

The capital G was found in several acknowledged writings and in the name I. G. Waterman in the Martha Case letter.

These were constructed in the same manner and Mr. Kitka said the writer must have had something of the artistic temperament. The writing, he said, was in a measure drawn. The cross stroke of the g was a straight bold stroke.

Here are many examples said Mr. Kitka. Here is one and here another (a jury man hands) and here another.

Mr. Boyce. How many have you there? You say another.

A. Here is another sir. The juryman found that one. The capital H in the word "hundred" in the justice court complaint admittedly written by the defendant was compared with that in the word "Hiram" in the Case letter.

Both were formed by two straight down strokes with a strong cross stroke. The letter was drawn, not written. Where the horizontal line crossed the two perpendiculars the ink had in both cases slightly run. The line did not therefore cross at these points making an angle but the blot made the corner curve.

The general construction of the letters "lic" in such words as frantic (in an admitted writing,) and public found in Case and other letters. The i is very high from a base line. That is it is higher than the other letters. This is shown in many places. The dot in all cases was directly in line above the letter i.

Juror Baker who carefully examined all letters presented to him called attention to the fact that the letter i in the word publicly in one of the writings was not the same. The witness explained that the position was different in longer words than when short ones were being written.

The capital R was next shown from different letters. It began just in the same way the capital B began. Relative to this letter Mr. Kitka said:

I will admit that some strokes may be made alike by other persons but never all. Some strokes may be similar but the strokes will not all be alike.

The letter f shown in the word "fun" in the complaint and in the word "wife" in the Case letter seemed similar. Juror Baker however pointed out an f of a different character. This the expert explained by saying that it was also a characteristic to be found in all of the writings. There were so many of these letters that the expert had not taken the time nor trouble to count them. They were too numerous he said.

The word "of," found in several writings showed similar connections between the o and f. The witness probably inadvertently used the words "she" and "her" in speaking of the writer of the various letters.

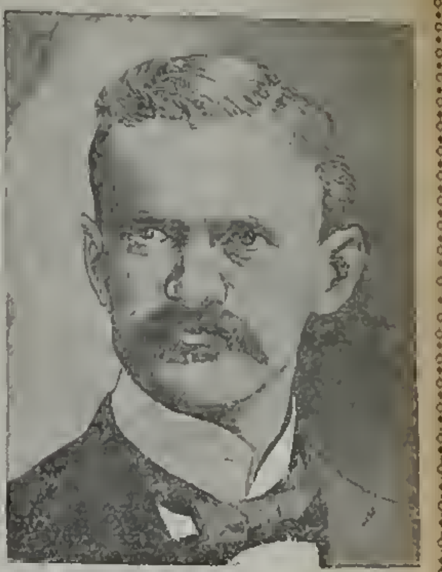
Those pretty letter a's were the subject of much discussion. There were two ways of making the capital A. Some were of the round kind and others, the pretty ones, were made of two slanting lines with a cross line. At the top these lines met in an acute angle and this characteristic pleased the expert greatly. Juror Baker found one of these letters which Kitka said was a fine example.

The court adjourned with Kitka's direct examination not yet ended. It will be taken up this morning and it may be a day or so before the cross examination takes place. The work of the expert is indeed clever and his quickly drawn blackboard examples of the specimens he wished to show were really interesting as showing to what point the science of the handwriting expert has been carried. Today's work will be equally interesting and when the cross examination commences there will be fun for everybody.

Expert Kytka, when his presence at the Storke trial is no longer required, will go to Santa Maria to spend a few days on the ranch of his uncle, [illegible]. He will leave soon after for Paris, France, having been engaged by Emile Zola to expert writings in connection with the Dreyfus case.

EXPERT KYTKA EXPLAINS THE REASONS THAT CONVINCE HIM BEYOND DOUBT OF THE GUILT OF MRS. YDA ADDIS STORKE

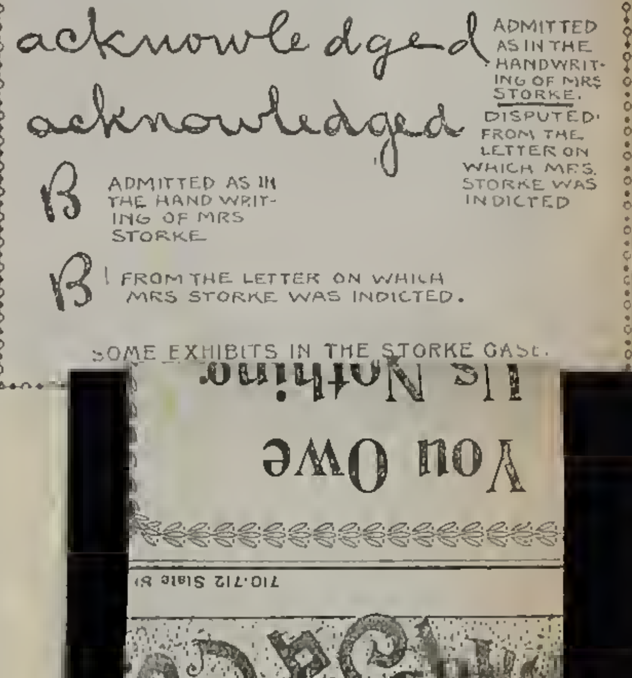
SANTA BARBARA, June 7.—Mrs. Storke, the defendant in the notorious Santa Barbara libel suit, does not seem to be worrying over the testimony of Expert Kytka in showing the similarity between her acknowledged writing and the many anonymous letters she is alleged to have written. Indeed, it seemed to appeal particularly to her good nature.



DISTRICT ATTORNEY EUGENE W. SQUIER.

Kytka's testimony to-day was a continuation of his testimony of yesterday, but his examination of the written documents was much more exact than before, and consequently it was stronger. At first he showed general similarity between the writings, but to-day he spent both the morning and afternoon looking into particular letters and endeavoring to show how things seen in the admitted writings were evident in the disputed ones. He began by taking the beginnings and endings of words. The suffix "tion" in one corresponded with the "tion" in the other, and the characteristics of the formation of many small letters and combinations of small letters were shown to be the same. At least two hours were devoted to the small letter "w" as it was used at the beginnings of words. Kytka paid particular attention to this letter. In the admitted writings there were 117 instances where the "w" was made with the first stroke a direct down stroke. In the disputed writings forty-six examples were found. Another peculiarity of the formation of this letter was that in many cases there was an accidental up stroke, made by the striking of the pen before the down stroke was made.

All of these things were very convincing to the mind of the expert that Mrs. Storke was the writer of the anonymous letters. But as each point was made the defendant, referring to certain writings held in her hand, would find things that made her smile. It is thought that this must have been the writing of some one upon whom she purposes to throw the charge of writing the letters.



SOME EXHIBITS IN THE STORKE CASE.

You Owe Us Nothing
710-712 State St
...ARDS & Co
...oney's Worth Every Time"
...heaper sorts but do not recommend the

in a particular part of the city.

The letter on the back of which appears a strain of yellow paint was exhibited.

Q. What is that?

A. That is a stain of yellow ochre used by artists. It is also mixed with a fatty or oily substance.

The witness was then asked to explain to the jury his reasons for thinking the exemplars and the disputed writings to be in the same hand.

A. I have made photographic reproductions of the ten letters.

Q. Are these reproductions true reproductions of the words represented?

A. Yes sir.

Mr. Kitka then showed a large card fully four feet wide by three long upon which appeared photographic reproductions of the word "acknowledged" taken in one case from one of the admitted writings and in the other from the Martha Case letter. The photograph showed an enlargement of 110 times and both words were photographed at the same time. The excitement to get a glimpse of this novel piece of evidence was intense. Everyone stood up and as the witness placed the picture before the jury, the defendant, her attorneys and almost everyone else in the room walked over to see what it looked like. Some faces showed satisfaction upon seeing the resemblance between the two; some showed doubt. The defendant after a careful look nodded her head in a way that seemed to say "Just what we wanted." This is a way of hers and as the expert spoke of certain letters being in a crudely disguised hand the nod of the head was incessant.

Kitka said: I find in the pencil word that the writing is free and quite rapid, and that the pen was taken up six times before the word was completed. The letters a and c are disconnected. The same is true of the same letters in the Martha Case letters. The r in the pencil letter begins with a pressure downward in the pencil letters and the c begins with a pressure downward in the disputed word. The letters c and k of the pencil letters are connected and the same is true in the ink exhibit (Case letter.)

The pencil k connects its second stroke with the n, and o. This is also true of the ink exhibit.

The microscope will show very distinctly where the pen was lifted up. The o and the w, the l and the e are in both instances connected. E and d in both writings are disconnected. The g and d are disconnected in the pencil exhibit and also in the ink exhibit. The g and e are connected in bot' d the final letter is disconnected.

I consider the stops in the movement in this word to be the strongest point in my studies of these writings. That word alone would be enough to satisfy me in making a judgment.

As Mr. Kitka spoke he drew in chalk on the blackboard an imitation of the word he was analyzing, marking the places where the pen had been lifted, the disconnections with red chalk. The excitement in the audience was intense and the jury kept a close eye upon all that was done.

The expert continued

The letter a begins in the same way in both cases. There is a compound curve. It is not clear cut. By a compound curve I mean a curve made of two movements a curve made of two curves. You will find this curve in both letters. It is these little tiny points that a forger cannot imitate. It is beyond the human power.

Witness drew on the blackboard a curve of one single clear cut line and another made of two curves of about the same radius but making a slight angle with each other. These he said showed what was meant by a compound curve.

The letter c in both words begins with a downward stroke. There are, as you see, six disconnections in the word acknowledged. I found the word knowledge in the justice court complaint and this showed the same separations. I also found the word acknowledged in another of the writings but this I did not use.

Mr. Boyce asked why and asked which exhibit contained the word. It could not be found then but was produced later.

The jury meanwhile examined with magnifying glass the originals from which the photographs were made.

The capital b found in the case line in the word Barbara, upon the Case envelope, same word, and in the word But in one of the admitted writings was next examined. They were constructed as shown on the blackboard in the same way. Both began with broad straight down strokes which turned and looped at the bottom, the up stroke being light and fine. The curve at the top was even at the center there was another loop and the final down stroke was heavy and turned up at the bottom. In both cases the capital was separated from the following letters.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

In the afternoon the court room was more crowded than in the morning and some twenty-five ladies were present. But there were no letters read.

Kitka produced the word acknowledged that had been missing in the morning, and showed that the separations were the same as formerly shown.

To show what in the language of an expert was termed an eccentricity, A capital was drawn showing a peculiar curved stroke, a sort of curl put upon the front stroke after the letter was practically complete. These letters were found in a "McC," in the Woman's Parliament letter and in the word madam in the Case letter.

When the witness explained how this stroke was put on after the letter was finished and showed the example on the board, the defendant with her satisfied nod poked at Mr. Boyce's ribs with her finger.

The capital G was found in several acknowledged writings and in the name I. G. Waterman in the Martha Case letter.

These were constructed in the same manner and Mr. Kitka said the writer must have had something of the artistic temperament. The writing, he said, was in a measure drawn. The cross stroke of the g was a straight bold stroke.

Here are many examples said Mr. Kitka. Here is one and here another (a jury man hands) and here another.

Mr. Boyce. How many have you there? You say another.

A. Here is another sir. The juryman found that one. The capital H in the word "hundred" in the justice court complaint admittedly written by the defendant was compared with that ...connections between the o and f. The witness probably inadvertently used the words "she" and "her" in speaking of the writer of the various letters.

These pretty letter a's were the subject of much discussion. There were two ways of making the capital A. Some were of the round kind and others, the pretty ones, were made of two slanting lines with a cross line. At the top these lines met in an acute angle and this characteristic pleased the expert greatly. Juror Baker found one of these letters which Kitka said was a fine example.

The court adjourned with Kitka's direct examination not yet ended. It will be taken up this morning and it may be a day or so before the cross examination takes place. The work of the expert is indeed clever and his quickly drawn blackboard examples of the specimens he wished to show were really interesting as showing to what point the science of the handwriting expert has been carried. Today's work will be equally interesting and when the cross examination commences there will be fun for everybody.

Expert Kytka, when his presence at the Stoke trial is no longer required, will go to Santa Maria to spend a few days on the ranch of his uncle, H. Duland. He will leave soon after for Paris, France, having been engaged by Emile Zola to expert writings in connection with the Dreyfus case.

All communications relating to subscriptions and advertising should be addressed to the DAILY NEWS, Santa Barbara, California.

Publication Office, 26 West Ortega Street.

TELEPHONE - - MAIN 18.

Official Paper of the City of Santa Barbara, Cal.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., JUNE 9, 1899

We are informed that a dozen or more members of our High School absented themselves from their classroom last Tuesday without permission and went to the court room and listened to Mr. Kitka's testimony relative to certain manuscripts. The school authorities suspended the wrongdoers during the balance of the week presumably as a punishment.

Now we have no word to offer against some penance being imposed on the youngsters for their acts, but we question the justice of the act of suspension. We are somewhat acquainted with average boys and are of the opinion that this penalty was hardly a punishment. Then we doubt if sending the boys from school was not a deep injustice to them and their future.

We all know this; a day gone is gone forever. It is never to be replaced. Boys are sent to school for a definite purpose—to be educated, and not to be sent out on a prolonged vacation. Then, too, we are at the close of the school year when the loose ends of the work are being gathered up; when everybody is preparing for the examinations and, in a sense, clinching the nails of knowledge already driven.

We honestly doubt the wisdom of suspending these pupils from their work as we doubt whether the "punishment" was a reality or a pleasure.

Now in all things we believe in law and order; in penalties for offenses; in reparation being made for all infractions of the strict line of duty. The question, then, would be what punishment should be dealt out to boys who care so little for their future, so little for their duty as to turn from their work and allotted tasks? Something, certainly. But what?

In general, we do not believe in the efficacy of the rod. Boys may be handled ordinarily in other ways. Extra work, deprivation of privileges, loss of rank, isolation and various other methods of meting out penalties may be resorted to. Some boys must be whipped—no other punishment will avail one iota.

It is not punishment to turn a boy towards the exact occupation he desires. "Playing hookey" shows that the boy had no compunction in being out of school—and in school was exactly where he ought to be. In school with additional tasks would have been, to our mind, a better punishment than suspension from school.

CHARACTERISTICS OF CHIROGRAPH

Expert Kytka Endeavors to Explain Them to Jury.

END OF TRIAL NOT NEAR

Will Require Three or Four Days More to Illustrate Exhibits in Yda Addis Case.

The greater part of the second week of the Yda Addis Storke trial is liable to be occupied by Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert. Mr. Kytka was on the witness stand all day yesterday and had hardly made a fair beginning in the presentation of his testimony in the way of "exemplars," or illustrated specimens of the writing in the anonymous letters, and those that are acknowledged to be in the hand of the defendant. It will probably occupy three or four days more to complete his testimony. That is the estimate of the expert. Yesterday he got through with but nine exhibits, while there are nearly a hundred to be amplified in chalk upon the blackboard that is set up beside the judge's bench for the purpose.

The purpose of the expert is to illustrate in magnified form the writing of the libelous letters and that of the defendant, to show a characteristic similarity. The most damaging part of his testimony yesterday was the effort to show that the writing of the disputed letters was rather a drawing than writing; that it was an affected hand, and showed characteristics of the acknowledged writing of Mrs. Storke.

The process by which the expert works is interesting as a study, but is not sufficiently spectacular to please a merely-loving crowd. The spectators that crowded the superior court room in the morning began to fall away during the afternoon session, until before adjournment there was a smaller crowd than has attended since the trial began.

MORNING SESSION.

The known fact that Expert Kytka would be on the stand Tuesday morning attracted an unusually large crowd, and the court room seats were all filled several minutes before the time appointed for the opening. As on previous days, there were a number of ladies present. At 10 o'clock the direct examination of Kytka was resumed.

The witness was shown plaintiff's exhibits 1 to 21, 24, 26 and 27, and asked if these were exhibits that had been examined by him.

The Witness—Yes, sir.

Mr. Squier—I will also show you plaintiff's exhibit 25. Have you examined it?

"Yes, sir."

"I will also show you defendant's exhibits 1, 2, 3 and 4. Have you examined them?"

"Yes, sir. The envelope exhibit 3, is in a different handwriting. The others are in the handwriting of the person who wrote the standards."

"Will you state whether B 1, B 2, and B 3, are in the natural handwriting of the person who wrote the standards?"

"It is only an attempt to disguise. The pressure is on the lower portion of each letter; it is done by a peculiar way of holding the pen."

"Will you look at plaintiff's exhibit 1, 2, 3 and 4. You stated yesterday that these are in the handwriting of the same person who wrote the 'exemplars' or standards. Is that also in a disguised hand?"

"It is only an attempt to disguise."

Mr. Squier offered in evidence plaintiff's exhibits D, the Dreyfus letter, and E, a letter to William LaVries, purporting to come from the occupants of the El dred cottage, the contents of these and some fifteen other letters that were also declared to be the handwriting of the person who wrote the standards, were read to the jury. They are of such a vile nature that they cannot be published. The reading and identification of them occupied over an hour.

In an envelope, addressed to Dr. R. F. Winchester, was a clipping from a newspaper relating to the assassination of the president of a Central American republic; on a piece of tissue paper, accompanying the clipping was written "ditto," and on another piece of paper was written the word "beware." The tissue paper was identified by Kytka as being of the exhibit 16, line 23, and the other from the Dr. Martha Case letter."

The photograph, on a large cardboard, three feet or more wide, was exhibited.

Mr. Squier—Is that a correct reproduction of the disputed writing as shown in the exemplar?

"Yes, sir. The upper is an enlargement about 110 times the size of the word 'acknowledged' as in plaintiff's exhibit 16; the lower one is an enlargement, on the same scale, of the word 'acknowledged' as found in the Dr. Martha Case letter. These two were made at the same time by the same lens. I find that in the pencil word 'acknowledged,' the pencil was taken up six times; in the ink exhibit the pen was lifted six times. The letters 'a' and 'c' are disconnected in the pencil letter; the same is true of the word in the Dr. Martha Case letter. The 'c' begins with a pressure downward in the ink exemplar. The letters 'c' and 'k' in the pencil exhibit are connected; the same is true in the pen exhibit. Then I find that letter 'k' begins with the up stroke, and connects with the letter 'n.' The letters 'n' and 'o' are not connected in the pen exhibit; they are also disconnected in the pencil exhibit. 'o,' 'w,' 'l' and 'e' are connected in the pencil exhibit; and in the ink exhibit also. The 'd' is disconnected in the pencil exhibit, as well as in the ink exhibit; 'g' and 'd' are disconnected in both; 'g' and 'e' connected in the pencil and in the ink exhibit; the letter 'd' is disconnected in both. I consider this point, the stops and movements in this word, one of the strongest. There is also a compound curve, a strong characteristic of the writer; these are points that a forger cannot imitate and a person cannot disguise."

Mr. Boyce—I move to strike out the last statement of the witness.

The Court—The motion is denied.

Kytka then proceeded to make an even more detailed explanation of the similarity of the writing of the word in the two letters, using the blackboard and colored chalk freely to illustrate his meaning of the different terms as applied to curves, down strokes, etc.

The witness stated that he had not been able to find the word 'acknowledged' in any of the other exemplars, but he had been able to find the word "knowledge" in the justice court complaint, which had been written by the defendant in ink, and he had found the word "acknowledge" in an ink exemplar, but it was disconnected and he could not use it.

Mr. Boyce demanded that the witness produce the word, and Kytka began the search of the mass of writing before him, finally suggesting that he could save time by looking it up during the noon hour. This was agreed upon, and the expert then referred to the word "acknowledge," appearing in the copy of the justice court complaint. He said: "I find the letters of the word disconnected as in the two other instances." The document was passed to the jury, and the individual members examined the word in question, aided by the glass, comparing it with the large photographic exhibit displayed before them.

The witness then noted the comparison between the capital "H" in "Harbor" on the the envelope of the Dr. Case letter, and the capital "H" in the word "But," in the copy of the justice court complaint. "The letters are made in the identical manner," he stated. "There is a bold, heavy, decided down stroke, then the two loops," pointing to the letters as drawn by him on the blackboard, "with a light up stroke, comes down, loops again, a heavy down stroke and turns upward."

An adjournment was here taken until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

"Mr. Boyce, I found the word 'acknowledge,'" explained Expert Kytka upon taking the stand again at 2 o'clock, "in plaintiff's exhibit 13, line 1 and 2. The word is separated, as I said; 'ac' being on one line and 'knowledge' on another, thus changing the movement of the hand. This is the reason I could not use it."

He said that the word was divided between the letters as in the case of the words as photographed. This sheet was also handed to the jury for individual examination through the magnifying glass.

"I will show you now what we term an 'eccentricity' in a stroke." This he did by writing the capital letter "M" on the blackboard, making a short stroke at the top of and connecting with the first down stroke of the letter. This short stroke he said had been "patched on," and was a rare 'eccentricity,' as he had found it but twice in the entire

Another letter "G" was pointed out in another exhibit, and then a juryman called the attention of the witness to another.

"Yes, here is another one," said Kytka.

"Is that the one you just referred to?" asked Mr. Boyce.

"No, sir; a juryman found this one."

Witness next made a sketch of the capital letter "H" and the letter "i" in Hiram, in the Martha Case letter. He explained the peculiar strokes that formed the connections in the letters, saying it was due to the writer's manner of holding the pen. He could form the letters like those of the example, but the eccentricity of the curves at the connections he could not execute in rapid writing. The next sketch was of the letters "lic" in the word public in the Martha Case letter, and of "frantic" in plaintiff's exhibit 3, and "public" in plaintiff's exhibit B. He explained the relative position of the letter "i," above the line, while "t" and "c" are on a line. In longer words, he explained to a juror's question, the position of the pen is changed, while in all words of about the same length the characteristic he had shown was true. He pointed also to the relative size of the letters, the "c" being larger in comparison with the "i" in each case, and the lower stroke was heavy shaded.

Another sketch was of the capital letter "B," occurring in several of the exhibits, calling attention to the construction of the letter. Witness said that the letters are never made twice exactly alike, but the general construction of letters by any person is always the same. He said that he would admit that some person in the world might make the letters the same, but no person living would make all of the strokes in the same manner in the same place. He may do some of them in the same manner, but could not possibly do all.

What he explained as a characteristic of the writing was the letter "I," an example of which was shown on the board. It was a sharp down stroke to begin, then a direct angle and up to the center of the down stroke, when a heavy loop is made.

Defendant's exhibit 4 contained another character of "I," to which the expert's attention was called by juror Baker. The difference was that the writer began with an up stroke, forming a loop, and the lower up stroke not meeting at the center the staff of the letter, but instead standing away. The witness pointed out others of the same general character in exhibits of both the state and the defense.

Several more examples were illustrated on the board, Kytka remarking in one instance that he must hurry as he reached only exhibit 9 and there are 100 to be shown. The jurors examined through the microscope or with a magnifying glass the originals in the letters as they were illustrated.

Court adjourned at 5 o'clock until 10 this morning, when Expert Kytka will again take the stand.

YDA ADDIS STORKE CASE.

A sensation was sprung by the prosecution in the Yda Addis Storke case. Mrs. Martha Hoes, an old friend of the defendant, testified that Mrs. Storke asked her to copy anonymous letters, saying that she could not disguise her hand but an expert could detect it, also that the defendant declared to the witness that she intended giving several people a bad scare, and hoped to live long enough to accomplish the ruin of Dr. Winchester and drive him from town. The evidence was not shaken by the cross-examination. Expert Kytka is pointing out many characteristics in common in the disputed and admitted writing. He will finish his direct testimony tomorrow. June 7

PROMOTER.
JUNE 8, 1899. No. 73

EXPERT KYTKA.

Creates a Sensation in the Santa Barbara Case.

Showed that Mrs. Storke Wrote the Winchester Letter—Will Go to Paris in the Dreyfus Case.

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—The Storke libel case reached its climax this morning, so far as the work of the prosecution is concerned, when Expert Kytka, following up yesterday's preliminary testimony, explained why he considered the writing of the disputed letters in the case to have been done by the same hand that wrote certain other writings admittedly those of Mrs. Storke.

Before the witness came to the technical part of his testimony, it became necessary for the prosecution to introduce in evidence the great body of anonymous correspondence that flooded this city at the time Mrs. Storke's crime is alleged to have been committed. Whispers of the character of these letters had gone the rounds among a few of those who had been connected with the case, but the general public had never known what they were. They were simply execrable in their vulgar simplicity. They were of three kinds. One set urged young men to visit a certain house, the respectability of which has never been questioned. When the letters were written, it was occupied by three respectable women, one of whom, a lady physician, was professionally connected with Winchester. Other letters were to neighbors concerning the house, and the worst were in the form of invitations to decent young girls to go to the same house for ignoble purposes. The reading of these letters stirred the wrath of all who heard them.

Through the means of these and other writings, Mr. Kytka made out his case. His chief exhibit was an immense photograph, several feet square of the word "acknowledged," as found in certain admitted writings and in the letter upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted. The general appearance of the words, enlarged as they were 110 times, were almost identical, and the expert pointed out out the many exact resemblances. The letters throughout were showed to have been made by the same strokes and the witness laid great stress upon the fact that in writing the word the pen had been taken up from the paper in six places, the places being the same in each example. This removal of the pen caused several letters to be separated, and these small points, Mr. Kytka said, were conclusive to his mind. They were points that no forger could, by any possibility, imitate. It was beyond the human power of imitation. Some of the strokes might have been made by a forger, but the perfect agreement of all was something conclusive.

Several capital letters, found in both the Winchester letter and in a copy of a Justice Court complaint written recently by the defendant, were illustrated by blackboard drawings. The capital G, found frequently in the specimens, was drawn rather than written, and the capitals B and K were peculiarly and similarly made. The expert simply piled example upon example and the jury examined the original documents. Several jurymen found and called attention to letters made as the witness had indicated. During the whole of this testimony the defendant continually called the attention of her counsel to certain peculiarities in the exhibits. The defense will undoubtedly endeavor to show that the letters were written and the blame thrown upon Yda Addis by those who wish to see the last of her here.

One other link of evidence was brought out through Kytka's testimony. Certain clippings were introduced, pasted upon tissue paper. A like piece of tissue found in Mrs. Storke's room was exhibited, and these, the expert swore, were of the same quality, composition and texture. A paint-stain on the back of one of the anonymous letters was also identified as a stain of yellow ochre paint, which, as Mrs. Storke has done considerable painting, was against her.

The defense will probably get to the cross-examination of the witness sometime tomorrow afternoon, although it is possible that there will be no cross-examination.

Kytka says he will go from here to Paris, leaving just as soon as the Storke case is over. He will be employed there by M. Zola and will work as an expert upon the disputed writings of the Dreyfus case.—Special to S. F. Examiner.

THE STORKE CASE.

Expert Kilka Still Expounding.

Very Searching Examination of the Writings Made.

Mrs. Storke, if one may judge of feelings by outward signs, was one of the most exultant women in Santa Barbara yesterday morning while expert Kitka continued his testimony. Almost anyone else in her place would have felt the seriousness and weight of what he said. He explained the characteristics of some of her smaller letters; the peculiar shape of her small letter w and the angles and similarities of a number of letters. But the defendant showed every outward sign of exultation.

At every new demonstration on the blackboard she would seize some piece of writing paper from in front of her and searching it for a moment break into a satisfied exultant smile accompanied by repeated nods of the head, indicating the most complete satisfaction.

All of the gaiety of her first two days in court seemed to have returned. As the expert explained how in both the admitted and disputed writings he found the tops of the letters p and t to be on a line, that is, they were of the same height, she seemed greatly pleased.

It is thought that this happiness comes from an intention of the defense to try to prove that another person wrote the anonymous letters and the possibility that the defendant may look upon Kitka's testimony as merely tending to show that this person, whose identity the defense will probably reveal, was a most clever and conscientious forger of the writing of the accused.

Mr. Kitka testified that he had made a very careful study of the letter w. He found 117 instances in which this letter was made in a similar way and there were four instances where there was a slight upstroke where the pen had struck the paper before the first real stroke of the letter.

of the Yda Addis Storke trial is liable to be occupied by Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert. Mr. Kytka was on the witness stand all day yesterday and had hardly made a fair beginning in the presentation of his testimony in the way of "exemplars," or illustrated specimens of the writing in the anonymous letters, and those that are acknowledged to be in the hand of the defendant. It will probably occupy three or four days more to complete his testimony. That is the estimate of the expert. Yesterday he got through with but nine exhibits, while there are nearly a hundred to be amplified in chalk upon the blackboard that is set up beside the judge's bench for the purpose.

The purpose of the expert is to illustrate in magnified form the writing of the libelous letters and that of the defendant, to show a characteristic similarity. The most damaging part of his testimony yesterday was the effort to show that the writing of the disputed letters was rather a drawing than writing; that it was an affected hand, and showed characteristics of the acknowledged writing of Mrs. Storke.

The process by which the expert works is interesting as a study, but is not sufficiently spectacular to please a novelty-loving crowd. The spectators that crowded the superior court room in the morning began to fall away during the afternoon session, until before adjournment there was a smaller crowd than has attended since the trial began.

MORNING SESSION.

The known fact that Expert Kytka would be on the stand Tuesday morning attracted an unusually large crowd, and the court room seats were all filled several minutes before the time appointed for the opening. As on previous days, there were a number of ladies present. At 10 o'clock the direct examination of Kytka was resumed.

The witness was shown plaintiff's exhibits 1 to 21, 24, 26 and 27, and asked if these were exhibits that had been examined by him.

The Witness—Yes, sir.

Mr. Squier—I will also show you plaintiff's exhibit 25. Have you examined it?

"Yes, sir."

"I will also show you defendant's exhibits 1, 2, 3 and 4. Have you examined them?"

"Yes, sir. The envelope exhibit 3, is in a different handwriting. The others are in the handwriting of the person who wrote the standards."

"Will you state whether B 1, B 2, and B 3 are in the natural handwriting of the person who wrote the standards?"

"It is only an attempt to disguise. The pressure is on the lower portion of each letter, it is done by a peculiar way of holding the pen."

"Will you look at plaintiff's exhibit 1, 2, 3 and 4. You stated yesterday that these are in the handwriting of the same person who wrote the 'exemplars' or standards. Is that also in a disguised hand?"

"It is only an attempt to disguise."

Mr. Squier offered in evidence plaintiff's exhibits D, the Dexter letter, and E, a letter to William LaVie, purporting to come from the occupants of the Eldred cottage; the contents of these and some fifteen other letters that were also declared to be the handwriting of the person who wrote the standards, were read to the jury. They are of such a vile nature that they cannot be published. The reading and identification of them occupied over an hour.

In an envelope, addressed to Dr. E. F. Winchester, was a clipping from a newspaper relating to the assassination of the president of a Central American republic; on a piece of tissue paper, accompanying the clipping was written "ditto," and on another piece of paper was written the word "beware." The tissue paper was identified by Kytka as being of the same quality, composition and texture as a larger piece of tissue paper picked up in the room of Yda Addis Storke by Detective Ponsonby; from this larger piece a slip corresponding in size to the "ditto" slip, had been cut.

The paper was offered in evidence.

Kytka also declared the stain on another of the letters to be caused by yellow ochre used by artists.

He was then asked to explain in detail the examinations he had made of these writings, and his reasons for declaring that they were written by one person.

"I made a photographic enlargement of the word 'acknowledged,' as found in two letters—one in pencil, plaintiff's exhibit [illegible] the Dr. Martha Case letter. The 'a' begins with a pressure dominant in the ink exemplar. The letters 'a' and 'k' in the pencil exhibit are connected; the same is true in the pen exhibit. Then I find that letter 'k' begins with the up stroke, and connects with the letter 'n.' The letters 'n' and 'o' are not connected in the pen exhibit; they are also disconnected in the pencil exhibit. 'H,' 'n,' 'l' and 'e' are connected in the pencil exhibit, and in the ink exhibit also. The 'd' is disconnected in the pencil exhibit, as well as in the ink exhibit; 'g' and 'd' are disconnected in both; 'g' and 'e' connected in the pencil and in the ink exhibit; the letter 'd' is disconnected in both. I consider this point, the stops and movements in this word, one of the strongest. There is also a compound curve, a strong characteristic of the writer; these are points that a forger cannot imitate and a person cannot disguise."

Mr. Boyce—I move to strike out the last statement of the witness.

The Court—The motion is denied.

Kytka then proceeded to make an even more detailed explanation of the similarity of the writing of the word in the two letters, using the blackboard and colored chalk freely to illustrate his meaning of the different terms as applied to curves, down strokes, etc.

The witness stated that he had not been able to find the word 'acknowledged' in any of the other exemplars, but he had been able to find the word "knowledge" in the justice court complaint, which had been written by the defendant in ink, and he had found the word "acknowledge" in an ink exemplar, but it was disconnected and he could not use it.

Mr. Boyce demanded that the witness produce the word, and Kytka began the search of the mass of writing before him, finally suggesting that he could save time by looking it up during the noon hour. This was agreed upon, and the expert then referred to the word "acknowledge," appearing in the copy of the justice court complaint. He said: "I find the letters of the word disconnected as in the two other instances." The document was passed to the jury, and the individual members examined the word in question, aided by the glass, comparing it with the large photographic exhibit displayed before them.

The witness then noted the comparison between the capital "B" in "Barbara" on the the envelope of the Dr. Case letter, and the capital "B" in the word "But," in the copy of the justice court complaint. "The letters are made in the identical manner," he stated. "There is a bold, heavy, decided down stroke, then the turn loops," pointing to the letters as drawn by him on the blackboard, "with a light up stroke, comes down, loops again, a heavy down stroke and turns upward."

An adjournment was here taken until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

"Mr. Boyce, I found the word 'acknowledge,'" exclaimed Expert Kytka upon taking the stand again at 2 o'clock, "in plaintiff's exhibit 13, line 1 and 2. The word is separated, as I said; 'ac' being on one line and 'knowledge' on another, thus changing the movement of the hand. This is the reason I could not use it."

He said that the word was divided between the letters as in the case of the words as photographed. This sheet was also handed to the jury for individual examination through the magnifying glass.

"I will show you now what we term an 'eccentricity' in a stroke." This he did by writing the capital letter "M" on the blackboard, making a short stroke at the top of and connecting with the first down stroke of the letter. This short stroke he said had been "patched on," and was a true 'eccentricity,' as he had found it but twice in the entire writings. One was in the word "Mr." in exhibit 1, admitted to be the plaintiff's handwriting, and in the Dr. Martha Case letter, in the word "Madam." These two samples were passed through the jury box for examination and comparison.

The capital letter "H," as appearing in plaintiff's exhibit 3, and the same letter in the Dr. Case letter, were declared to be constructed in the identical manner. The witness stated that, as he had reported to Mr. Kells, the attorney in San Francisco, the writer of the letters, both admitted and disputed, must have been of an artistic temperament, as some of the letters are drawn and not written.

[illegible] the Martha Case letter, and in "[illegible]le" in plaintiff's exhibit 3, and "public" in plaintiff's exhibit 9, the expert explained the relative position of the letter "i," above the line, while "l" and "c" are on a line. In longer words, he explained to a juror's question, the position of the pen is changed, while in all words of about the same length the characteristic he had shown was true. He pointed also to the relative size of the letters, the "c" being large in comparison with the "i" in each case, and the lower stroke was heavy shaded.

Another sketch was of the capital letter "R," occurring in several of the exhibits, calling attention to the construction of the letter. Witness said that the letters are never made twice exactly alike, but the general construction of letters by any person is always the same. He said that he would admit that some person in the world might make the letters the same, but no person living would make all of the strokes in the same manner in the same place. He may do some of them in the same manner, but could not possibly do all.

What he explained as a characteristic of the writing was the letter "f," an example of which was shown on the board. It was a sharp down stroke to begin, then a direct angle and up to the center of the down stroke, when a heavy loop is made.

Defendant's exhibit 4 contained another character of "f," to which the expert's attention was called by juror [illegible]ker. The difference was that the writer began with an up stroke, forming a hook, and the lower up stroke not meeting at the center the staff of the letter, but instead standing away. The witness pointed out others of the same general character in exhibits of both the state and the defense.

Several more examples were illustrated on the board, Kytka remarking in one instance that he must hurry as he reached only exhibit 9 and there are 100 to be shown. The jurors examined through the microscope or with a magnifying glass the originals in the letters as they were illustrated.

Court adjourned at 5 o'clock until 10 this morning, when Expert Kytka will again take the witness stand.

YDA ADDIS STORKE CASE.

A sensation was sprung by the prosecution in the Yda Addie Storke case. Mrs. Mollie Ross, an old friend of the defendant, testified that Mrs. Storke asked her to copy anonymous letters, saying that she could not disguise her hand but an expert could detect it, also that the defendant declared to the witness that she intended giving several people a bad scare, and hoped to live long enough to accomplish the ruin of Dr. Winchester and drive him from town. The evidence was not shaken by the cross-examination. Expert Kytka is pointing out many characteristics in common in the disputed and admitted writing. He will finish his direct testimony tomorrow.

[illegible], June 6.—The Storke libel case reached its climax this morning, so far as the work of the prosecution is concerned, when Expert Kytka, following up yesterday's preliminary testimony, explained why he considered the writing of the disputed letters in the case to have been done by the same hand that wrote certain other writings admittedly those of Mrs. Storke.

Before the witness came to the technical part of his testimony, it became necessary for the prosecution to introduce in evidence the great body of anonymous correspondence that flooded this city at the time Mrs. Storke's crime is alleged to have been committed. Whispers of the character of these letters had gone the rounds among a few of those who had been connected with the case, but the general public had never known what they were. They were simply execrable in their vulgar simplicity. They were of three kinds. One set urged young men to visit a certain house, the respectability of which has never been questioned. When the letters were written, it was occupied by three respectable women, one of whom, a lady physician, was professionally connected with Winchester. Other letters were to neighbors concerning the house, and the worst were in the form of invitations to decent young girls to go to the same house for ignoble purposes. The reading of these letters stirred the wrath of all who heard them.

Through the means of these and other writings, Mr. Kytka made out his case. His chief exhibit was an immense photograph, several feet square of the word "acknowledged," as found in certain admitted writings and in the letter upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted. The general appearance of the words, enlarged as they were 110 times, were almost identical, and the expert pointed out the many exact resemblances. The letters throughout, were showed to have been made by the same strokes and the witness laid great stress upon the fact that in writing the word the pen had been taken up from the paper in six places, the pauses being the same in each example. This removal of the pen caused several letters to be separated, and these small points, Mr. Kytka said, were conclusive to his mind. They were points that no forger could, by any possibility, imitate. It was beyond the human power of imitation. Some of the strokes might have been made by a forger, but the perfect agreement of all was something conclusive.

Several capital letters, found in both the Winchester letter and in a copy of a Justice Court complaint written recently by the defendant, were illustrated by blackboard drawings. The capital [illegible], found frequently in the specimens, was drawn rather than written, and the capitals B and R were peculiarly and similarly made. The expert simply piled example upon example and the jury examined the original documents. Several jurymen found and called attention to letters made as the witness had indicated. During the whole of this testimony the defendant continually called the attention of her counsel to certain peculiarities in the exhibits. The defense will undoubtedly endeavor to [illegible], but these, the expert swore, were of the same [illegible] position and texture. A [illegible] the back of one of the anonymous [illegible] was also identified as a stain of [illegible] ochre paint, which, as Mrs. Storke [illegible] done considerable painting, was [illegible] her.

The defense will probably [illegible] cross-examination of the witness [illegible] time tomorrow afternoon, although [illegible] possible that there will be no [illegible] amination.

Kytka says he will go from here to Paris, leaving just as soon as the Storke case is over. He will be employed there by M. Zola and will work as an expert upon the disputed writings of the Dreyfus case.—Special to S. F. Examiner.

THE STORKE CASE.

Expert Kitka Still Expounding.

Very Searching Examination of the Writings Made.

Mrs. Storke, if one may judge of feelings by outward signs, was one of the most exultant women in Santa Barbara yesterday morning while expert Kitka continued his testimony. Almost anyone else in her place would have felt the seriousness and weight of what he said. He explained the characteristics of some of her smaller letters; the peculiar shape of her small letter w and the angles and similarities of a number of letters. But the defendant showed every outward sign of exultation.

At every new demonstration on the blackboard she would seize some piece of writing paper from in front of her and search ing it for a moment break into a satisfied exultant smile accompanied by repeated nods of the head, indicating the most complete satisfaction.

All of the gaiety of her first two days in court seemed to have returned. As the expert explained how in both the admitted and disputed writings he found the tops of the letters [illegible] and t to be on a line, that is they were of the same height, she seemed greatly pleased.

It is thought that this happiness comes from an intention of the defense to try to prove that another person wrote the anonymous letters and the possibility that the defendant may look upon Kitka's testimony as merely tending to show that this person, whose identity the defense will probably reveal, was a most clever and conscientious forger of the writing of the accused.

Mr. Kitka testified that he had made a very careful study of the letter w. He found 117 instances in which this letter was made in a similar way and there were four instances where there was a slight upstroke where the pen had struck the paper before the first real stroke of the letter.

a downward one has made. This in the expert's opinion was another of those tiny marks of similarity between the writings that was significant.

Three distinct ways of making the letter w were found in 22 pages of disputed writing and in 18 pages of admitted writing, four of these were found in the admitted writing to have the tiny up-stroke beginning on the right side of the down stroke, Six of these were found in disputed writings.

Eleven small w's were found in the admitted and 22 in the disputed writings where there was this tiny upstroke on the opposite side of the first down stroke.

There were in the admitted exemplars 117 specimens of the small w used at the beginning of a word where there was no upstroke but the initial stroke went straight downward. There were 46 of these in the lesser volume of the disputed writings.

Of these letters the expert pointed out a great many examples to the jury saying that the predominating w showed in its make-up that the writer wrote very rapidly and made the letter as it was made to save time. The style of writing was a very rapid one.

A strong point to the expert's mind was to be found in the frequency of a gracefully curved connecting stroke between the letters g and h throughout the specimens.

The small r found at the beginning of words, as in the words "refuse" in the Case letter and refuses in the justice court complaint. The beginning stroke, an up-stroke, began in a great majority of cases below the line upon which the word was written. This Kitka said was an eccentricity.

Kitka followed this line during the afternoon using various examples of small letters and the suffixes of words to show the identify of the handwriting in the two exhibits. The evidence was cumulative but it was not new.

The cross examination will probably begin today.

√ continued from √

Ventura defendant told her that she was trying to disguise her handwriting.

"She hoped the day long enough to accomplish Winchester's downfall."

Defendant dispared of changing her handwriting to escape detection by an expert. She wanted to scare about a dozen people by letter writing. She did not state reasons only that they had all injured her. Witness went to see her again after returning from Ventura, giving her fond—is not sure though. The last time she went to her room, in November, 1897, Mrs. Law and John Heitgeland were there.

They talked a great deal but did no work in cutting out a waist as the material misteriously disappeared, but does not say that Mrs. Storke stole it, but believes she did.

The witness smiles not because she recalls the trousers, at one time on the tapis. A discussion on inexpressibles, their uses, intents and purposes, a bathing suit on the side.

Witness sought pure atmosphere in the sunshine and felt happy again.

KYTKA HAS ALL HIS OWN WAY

Expert Spends Another Day Illustrating Penmanship.

FINDS MANY CHARACTERISTICS

But If They Are Characteristics of Yda Addis' Writing Remains for Jury to Determine.

Expert Kytka has practically been both attorney and witness in the trial of Yda Addis Storke the past two days, or since he was called by the state to the witness stand. He exercises rather a free hand, only for the occasional interruptions by Attorney Boyer for the defense. After being sworn Monday evening the expert was asked a few questions by the prosecuting attorney, after which he has been allowed to proceed in his own way. His "exemplars" were prepared before hand and he is making the best progress that he can with the big lot of work before him, that after two days seems as formidable as ever. Several important points were made by the expert yesterday that go to show that either the writing of the libelous letters was done by Yda Addis Storke or it was done in imitation of her handwriting. Tuesday the expert's efforts were directed to show that the writing of the anonymous letters was not in a natural hand, but was rather a drawing or deliberate copy; yesterday he gave examples to prove that the drawing showed strong characteristics of the writing of the defendant.

The crowd of spectators was smaller yesterday than it has been during the trial, but those of the audience that have come to be looked upon as regular attendants sat through the proceedings and were no doubt much enlightened by the explanations by the expert of the peculiarities of handwriting and how he goes about to discover the marks of identification that he is pointing out. But a part of the proceeding is dull. The jurymen spend a great deal of time in the examination of the exhibits from which the expert's exemplars are taken, to discover the differences or similarities of the writing of the several papers after they have been pointed out, and then the audience has nothing to do but wait until another example is reached and placed on the board. During these times the spectators amuse themselves in various ways; some bring books into the court room and improve the shining minutes at reading.

Mrs. Storke is always busy. She follows the expert even more closely than does her attorney, and with a duplicate copy of the letter contained in the indictment before her, she marks every point that Kytka makes. She seems not to allow the trial to worry her greatly, but is as buoyant as when a week and a half ago began the proceedings that may lead her to the penitentiary, or to freedom from suspicion of having written the libelous letters.

MORNING SESSION.

Wednesday morning's audience at the Yda Addis Storke trial could be best termed "small but appreciative," to borrow a stereotyped phrase from opera house parlance. But few ladies were in attendance at the time of opening. From a technical standpoint and to one interested in chirography the exhibition of comparative handwriting alleged to be the defendant's, was not devoid of profit.

Expert Kytka continued his testimony in the same line as on the previous day, pointing out to the jury the similarity of different words in the various writings, admitted and disputed.

He first called attention to the "ell" in the word "well" in the Dr. Martha Case letter, and the same letters in that word or in "sell," "selling," "miscellaneous," etc., some of them appearing in exhibits acknowledged by the defense to be in the handwriting of Yda Addis. The characteristic was the gradual lengthening of the letters as the writing of the word progresses. As shown on the blackboard, each succeeding letter had an upward trend, so that a line touching the top of each was drawn at an angle of about 45 degrees. This was pronounced by Kytka to be a strong characteristic.

The monotony of the proceedings was broken by an occasional pass between the witness and Attorney Boyer. At one time the attorney asked to be shown the exhibit that was about to be handed to

"kept" on the board and noted in the writing of it in some instances throughout the disguised exhibits the writer had dropped into the old individuality, and then returned the letter "p" to cover up the characteristics. In indicating places where the word could be found in the different writings, he said:

"You can find them by the dozen through the disputed and admitted writings."

Mr. Boyer objected to the witness classing the disputed and admitted writings as one class, and Kytka replied: "I spoke of it as a fact, not as a class."

A juror then asked the witness to demonstrate on the board how the letter "p" should be written by the Spencerian system, and this brought on a discussion of this and the California vertical system, and their relative merits. After Kytka had compared the two on the board, Mr. Boyer requested him to write specimens on a slip of paper, in ink. This was done and the sample introduced as evidence in connection with the testimony of the witness. As a side remark, Kytka gave it as his opinion that the vertical system as taught in California would never be a very great success as it is too slow.

The letter "n" was then taken up for comparison. Witness sketched on the board the letter as he had found it in the admitted and in the disputed exemplars, commencing with an upstroke. There were three different characteristic "n's." In the admitted standards, the letter with the upstroke appeared four times, in the disputed exemplars, the letter appears six times. He noted eleven small "n's" in the admitted standards where the upstroke begins on the left side. It appears twenty-two times in the disputed exemplars, always when beginning a word, when the pen takes a fresh movement.

"I find 117 small "n's" with a straight initial down stroke in the admitted standards, and 46 in the disputed. This is a characteristic of a person who is a rapid writer."

The Dr Martha Case letter, The Press letter and others of the disputed writing were passed to the jury for comparison of the "n's".

"Now we come to a strong point, which is very characteristic; there is one exception. I am going to make the letter 'g' and the connecting stroke of the letter 'h,'" said Kytka. He proceeded to point out the similarity of the stroke in such words as "night," "neighborhood," "eight," "ought," and "high." One exception was found where the word "right" had been written on the bottom line of the sheet, and the pen on the upstroke had caught on the edge of the paper.

The letter "r" in the word "refuse," in the Dr. Martha Case letter, was compared with the letter "r" in the word "refuses" in the justice court complaint, and with other words beginning with the same letter in both admitted and disputed writings. He called attention to an "eccentricity" in the first stroke of the letter, which extended below the line. This he said, was the fact in the great majority of cases where words beginning with "r" appeared. The jurors were inspecting different sheets of the exhibits when the court announced the noon recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The letter "i" and the dot above it engaged the attention of the expert and the jury at the opening of the afternoon session. The letter as appearing in the word "in" in the Dr. Martha Case letter, and in the word "possession" in the justice court complaint, were the first ones offered for comparison. The witness noted that the dot was on the same slant as the letter, which consisted of one heavy down stroke. The style of "i" predominated throughout the standards and was found perfectly in the disputed writings.

The word "that" was illustrated, the eccentricity pointed out being that in both disputed and admitted writings the final "t" is higher than the first one. Mr. Kytka considers this a peculiar mark in the writing, as it is the natural thing to make the last letter lower.

With this as other exemplars the jury devoted a great deal of time in examination of manuscripts to find other illustrations of the same character, and asked questions of the witness regarding them.

In the Independent letter and a letter addressed to Mr. Taggart, that is admitted in Mrs. Storke's writing, witness called attention to the peculiarity of forming the letter "p." It is written in three styles, he said, the main stem slanting to the right, vertical and to the left. In the Taggart letter the ex... [illegible] witness placed on the board the word "being" from the Martha Case letter, calling attention to the formation of the letters, that diminish as the writing progresses, tapering toward the end. This the expert explained is a characteristic of fluent and rapid writing.

The letter "r" was shown to illustrate both an eccentricity and a characteristic. There were two forms of the letter, and several instances were shown where one form was written over the other.

An unconscious pressure, the expert called a tiny stroke in the letter "s" that was discernable only under the microscope. He said that no person forging the writing would make this peculiar movement; even himself, as good a forger as he is, would be unable to make the character as shown in the writing.

Placing on the board "1203 De la Vina St.," copied and enlarged from plaintiff's exhibit No. 2, and comparing this with the same sentence in an admitted writing, there was a similarity in the first exemplars, the witness said, but in other manuscripts, in which the same sentence occurred there was a striking difference.

The expert continued in this line, being still on the stand when court adjourned at 5 o'clock. He will resume this morning.

THE STORKE TRIAL.

The Intelligent Burgermaster Approves.

A Witness in the Afternoon, upon Cross-examination, Among Other Interesting Matters, Brings Trousers upon the Tapis.

The jury in the Storke case is neither more nor less brilliant than the average.

In America under our liberal laws any male citizen who is on the assessment roll, thus proving that he is a substantial patriot, even if he pays no less than one cent towards the maintenance of our government, has all the requisites of an arbiter in trials.

If there is any doubt of the man's capacity instead of the political parlance, "are you capable, are you honest," it is ascertained can the man hear and speak, and does he know nothing about the impending trial? In this trial a phase has developed which requires in addition to hearing and articulating, a good eyesight, and to make sure that the juryman (his intelligence is taken for granted) is a good judge in the premises, it would not be amiss to know are his eyes reliable. There are eyes called color-blind, there are oblique eyes, purblind, dim, watery, telescopic and microscopic eyes, and yet it is taken for granted that the twelve men, of a necessity called gentlemen, are acute as to hearing and seeing.

Herr Kytka illustrates and instructs, and a science which it has taken perhaps no less than ten years to master is to be imparted to the twelve in a few days, on the principle of acquiring the knowledge of music in one lesson taught by self. (Was der Bauer nicht kennt, frisst Er nicht) Herr Kitka will understand above and conclude that he has a herculean task on hand to instill knowledge from A—Z when A is a terra incognito. It may be possible that nature has been very prolific with some of the jurymen, and thus comprehend with one bound all that Herr Kytka knows himself. We will illustrate as follows:

In a remote village in Germany the good people insisted upon holding to the habits of their fathers', thus keeping at arm's length all inovations. Among other old fashions the forefathers' church singing was kept up. The same was the primitive choral music, dating back from Martin Luther's day. The notes were squat spots, resembling buckwheat seeds.

One Sunday the cantor—an old man wearing spectacles—was in his glory again, singing a "Credo in Unum." The old man conscientiously following the written document before him did not notice that a fly had lit upon the bars, and losing track of the notes, followed the fly upon its upward course. The fly reaching high G—the note of Plunket in Martha that bursted Karl Forms tympanum—the cantor got black in the face. The fly moving to A and the conscientious singer making a desperate effort to do his Christian duty to respond, also, the good man there and then bursted a blood vessel and dropped stone dead. It was a sad calamity and in order to avoid a repetition of such a catastrophe the wise men of the congregation concluded to adopt a mode of church singing regulated with machinery (an organ). The musical apparatus was ordered, the pipe organ erected and, in order to give satisfaction as per contract, the wise men attended the rehearsal of the organ. The artist let the thing pipe an inspiring Christian tune and at al fin demanded an opinion as to the merits or excellency of the instrument. The judges—whether twelve or less is quite immaterial—looked grave and centered their eyes upon the Burgermaster, naturally the most comprehensive among them. Said dignitary looked very wise and upon the repeated request of the artist, finally delivered himself thus:

"I think that the box full of whissel is just a trifle too high."

The artist taking in the situation, and desirous to give satisfaction in order to get the instrument accepted, looked with the greatest defference at the Burgermaster remarking: "Not one man in a thousand would have discovered the defect your honor has mentioned. 'Tis true, the organ is just one-hundredth of a note too high, but I am prepared to make the correction." He did, by looking at a register button and lightly touching it. Now playing again, the Burgermaster nodded his head in approbation and pronounced the organ quite in tune.

There were but few spectators in the court-room this morning.

The jury is further enlightened. An eccentric "B" is illustrated and the jury is handed a document wherein several of the kind occur. Another B appears reminding in perspective, excepting the base, of a ground squirrel standing upon the apex of its vertebra. Still another, B, more in conformity with usual penmanship. "told" comes next. A juryman makes a discovery and another told adorns the la'e.

The LaVies letter comes on the tapis with an ys (wish now we had read the epistolation attentively. "r" and "s" start below the line.

AFTERNOON.

Mrs. Goss on the stand. Knew Mrs. Storke; had heard her express herself bitterly against Dr Winchester, and say she hoped to live long enough to see his downfall. Had heard her say there were several men she wanted to annoy, but Winchester was the main one.

Cross examination—Witness has not been at home for the last sixty days. Defendant called at her house three years ago on business, and witness called at defendant's studio to look at pictures. Wishes she had not called.

Witness' feelings for Mrs Storke are no longer friendly—she had hissed at witness like a cat.

Witness was requested by defendant to write anonymous letter. She had told this to Mr. Squier, her husband and Mrs. Fisher.

Did not mention it to Winchester, Storke or Grant Jackson. Defendant introduced witness to Grant Jackson in 1896. She first told her mother what she could swear to. Did not tell Acquistepace that she had written more than one of these anonymous letters. She took her something to eat and found her on the warpath against several people in a trap. She looked like an angry woman. Witness does not recollect the time, only before she went to was this [illegible] opposite side of the first down stroke.

There were in the admitted exemplars 117 specimens of the small w used at the beginning of a word where there was no upstroke but the initial stroke went straight downward. There were 46 of these in the lesser volume of the disputed writings.

Of these letters the expert pointed out a great many examples to the jury saying that the predominating w showed in its make-up that the writer wrote very rapidly and made the letter as it was made to save time. The style of writing was a very rapid one.

A strong point to the expert's mind was to be found in the frequency of a gracefully curved connecting stroke between the letters g and h throughout the specimens.

The small r found at the beginning of words, as in the words "refuse" in the Case letter and refuses in the justice court complaint. The beginning stroke, an up-stroke, began in a great majority of cases below the line upon which the word was written. This Kitka said was an eccentricity.

Kitka followed this line during the afternoon using various examples of small letters and the suffixes of words to show the identify of the handwriting in the two exhibits. The evidence was cumulative but it was not new.

The cross examination will probably begin today.

√ continued from ✓

Expert Kytka has practically been both attorney and witness in the trial of Yda Addis Storke the past two days, or since he was called by the state to the witness stand. He exercises rather a free hand, only for the occasional interruptions by Attorney Boyce for the defense. After being sworn Monday evening the expert was asked a few questions by the prosecuting attorney, after which he has been allowed to proceed in his own way. His "exemplars" were prepared before hand and he is making the best progress that he can with the big lot of work before him, that after two days seems as formidable as ever. Several important points were made by the expert yesterday that go to show that either the writing of the libelous letters was done by Yda Addis Storke or it was done in imitation of her handwriting. Tuesday the expert's efforts were directed to show that the writing of the anonymous letters was not in a natural hand, but was rather a drawing or deliberate copy; yesterday he gave examples to prove that the drawing showed strong characteristics of the writing of the defendant.

The crowd of spectators was smaller yesterday than it has been during the trial, but those of the audience that have come to be looked upon as regular attendants sat through the proceedings and were no doubt much enlightened by the explanations by the expert of the peculiarities of handwriting and how he goes about to discover the marks of identification that he is pointing out. But a part of the proceeding is dull. The jurymen spend a great deal of time in the examination of the exhibits from which the expert's exemplars are taken, to discover the differences or similarities of the writing of the several papers after they have been pointed out, and then the audience has nothing to do but wait until another example is reached and placed on the board. During these times the spectators amuse themselves in various ways, some bring books into the court room and improve the shining minutes at reading.

Mrs. Storke is always busy. She follows the expert even more closely than does her attorney, and with a duplicate copy of the letter contained in the indictment before her, she marks every point that Kytka makes. She seems not to allow the trial to worry her greatly, but is as buoyant as when a week and a half ago began the proceedings that may lead her to the penitentiary, or to freedom from suspicion of having written the libelous letters.

MORNING SESSION.

Wednesday morning's audience at the Yda Addis Storke trial could be best termed "small but appreciative," to borrow a stereotyped phrase from opera house parlance. But few ladies were in attendance at the time of opening. From a technical standpoint and to one interested in chirography the exhibition of comparative handwriting alleged to be the defendant's, was not devoid of profit.

Expert Kytka continued his testimony in the same line as on the previous day, pointing out to the jury the similarity of different words in the various writings, admitted and disputed.

He first called attention to the "ell" in the word "well" in the Dr. Martha Case letter, and the same letters in that word as in "sell," "selling," "miscellaneous," etc., some of these appearing in exhibits acknowledged by the defense to be in the handwriting of Yda Addis. The characteristic was the gradual lengthening of the letters as the writing of the word progresses. As shown on the blackboard, each succeeding letter had an upward trend, so that a line touching the top of each was drawn at an angle of about 15 degrees. This was pronounced by Kytka to be a strong characteristic.

The monotony of the proceedings was broken by an occasional pass between the witness and Attorney Boyce. At one time the attorney asked to be shown the exhibit that was about to be handed to the jury. As the witness and counsel were looking over the sheet together, Kytka's eye caught another word on the page.

"And here is another; this is a curker," exclaimed Kytka.

Mr. Boyce glanced around at the witness with a look denoting amusement and surprise. "It is just like an artist would make it," continued Kytka.

"That is another aesthetic remark," commented Mr. Boyce with some sarcasm.

"Not aesthetic; just artistic. The letters coming symmetrically up," went on Kytka.

The expert then traced the word session of this and the California vertical system, and their relative merits. After Kytka had compared the two on the board, Mr. Boyce requested him to write specimens on a slip of paper, in ink; this was done and the sample introduced as evidence in connection with the testimony of the witness. As a side remark, Kytka gave it as his opinion that the vertical system as taught in California would never be a very great success as it is too slow.

The letter "w" was then taken up for comparison. Witness sketched on the board the letter as he had found it in the admitted and in the disputed exemplars, commencing with an upstroke. There were three different characteristic "w's." In the admitted standards, the letter with the upstroke appeared four times; in the disputed exemplars, the letter appears six times. He noted eleven small "w's" in the admitted standards where the upstroke begins on the left side. It appears twenty-two times in the disputed exemplars, always when beginning a word, when the pen takes a fresh movement.

"I find 117 small "w's" with a straight initial down stroke in the admitted standards, and 46 in the disputed. This is a characteristic of a person who is a rapid writer."

The Dr. Martha Case letter, The Pyres letter and others of the disputed writing were passed to the jury for comparison of the "w's".

"Now we come to a strong point, which is very characteristic; there is one exception. I am going to make the letter 'g' and the connecting stroke of the letter 'h,'" said Kytka. He proceeded to point out the similarity of the stroke in such words as "night," "neighborhood," "eight," "ought," and "high" the exception was found where the word "right" had been written on the bottom line of the sheet, and the pen on the upstroke had caught on the edge of the paper.

The letter "r" in the word "refuse," in the Dr. Martha Case letter, was compared with the letter "r" in the word "returns" in the justice court complaint, and with other words beginning with the same letter in both admitted and disputed writings. He called attention to an "eccentricity" in the first stroke of the letter, which extended below the line. This, he said, was the fact in the great majority of cases where words beginning with "r" appeared. The jurors were inspecting different sheets of the exhibits when the court announced the noon recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The letter "i" and the dot above it engrossed the attention of the expert and the jury at the opening of the afternoon session. The letter as appearing in the word "in" in the Dr. Martha Case letter, and in the word "possession" in the justice court complaint, were the first ones offered for comparison. The witness noted that the dot was on the same slant as the letter, which consisted of one heavy down stroke. The style of "i" predominated throughout the standards and was found perfectly in the disputed writings.

The word "that" was illustrated, the eccentricity pointed out being that in both disputed and admitted writings the final "t" is higher than the first one. Mr. Kytka considers this a peculiar mark in the writing, as it is the natural thing to make the last letter lower.

With this as other exemplars the jury devoted a great deal of time in examination of manuscripts to find other illustrations of the same character, and asked questions of the witness regarding them.

In the Independent letter and a letter addressed to Mr. Taggart, that is admitted in Mrs. Storke's writing, witness called attention to the peculiarity of forming the letter "p." It is written in three styles, he said, the main stem slanting to the right, vertical and to the left. In the Taggart letter the expert finds the writing was done with two pens and in two different inks.

Attorney Boyce's insistance in asking repetitions of the expert's statements caused a great deal of delay in the proceedings, and has since Kytka has been on the stand led Judge Oster on several occasions to call the attorney's attention to the manner in which he was adding volumes to the court records. The court insists that the attorney should ask the reporter to read the question and answer when it has been misunderstood, as the records are being duplicated three and four times over.

Reaching the formation of words, the [illegible] [illegible] to make the character as shown in the writing.

Placing on the board "1203 [illegible] Vine St." copied and enlarged from plaintiff's exhibit No. 2, and comparing this with the same sentence in an admitted writing, there was a similarity in the first exemplars, the witness said, but in other manuscripts, in which the same sentence occurred there was a striking difference.

The expert continued in this line, being still on the stand when court adjourned at 5 o'clock. He will resume this morning.

THE STORKE TRIAL.

The Intelligent Burgermaster Approves.

A Witness in the Afternoon, upon Cross-examination, Among Other Interesting Matters, Brings Trousers upon the Tapis.

The jury in the Storke case is neither more nor less brilliant than the average.

In America under our liberal laws any male citizen who is on the assessment roll, thus proving that his is a substantial patriot, even if he pays no less than one cent towards the maintenance of our government, has all the requisites of an arbiter in trials.

If there is any doubt of the man's capacity instead of the political parlance, "are you capable, are you honest," it is ascertained can the man hear and speak, and does he know nothing about the impending trial? In this trial a phase has developed which requires in addition to hearing and articulating, a good eyesight, and to make sure that the juryman (his intelligence is taken for granted) is a good judge in the premises, it would not be amiss to know are his eyes reliable. These are eyes called color-blind, there are oblique eyes, purblind, dim, watery, telescopic and microscopic eyes, and yet it is taken for granted that the twelve men, of a necessity called gentlemen, are acute as to hearing and seeing.

Herr Kytka illustrates and instructs, and a science which it has taken perhaps no less than ten years to master is to be imparted to the twelve in a few days, on the principle of acquiring the knowledge of music in one lesson taught by self. (Was der Bauer nicht kennt, frisst Er nicht) Herr Kitka will understand above and conclude that he has a herculean task on hand to instill knowledge from A—Z when A is a terra incognito. It may be possible that nature has been very prolific with some of the jurymen, and thus comprehend with one bound all that Herr Kytka knows himself. We will illustrate as follows:

In a remote village in Germany the good people insisted upon holding to the habits of their fathers', thus keeping at arm's length all innovations. Among other old fashions the forefathers' church singing was kept up. The same was the primitive choral music, dating back from Martin Luther's day. The notes were squat spots, resembling buckwheat seeds.

One Sunday the cantor—an old man wearing spectacles—was in his glory again, singing a "Credo in Unum." The old man conscientiously following the written document with machinery (no organ). The musical apparatus was ordered, the pipe organ erected and, in order to give satisfaction as per contract, the wise men attended the rehearsal of the organ. The artist let the thing pipe an inspiring Christian tune and at ultimo demanded an opinion as to the merits or excellency of the instrument. The judges—whether twelve or less is quite immaterial—looked grave and centered their eyes upon the Burgermaster, naturally the most comprehensive among them. Said dignitary looked very wise and upon the repeated request of the artist, finally delivered himself thus:

"I think that the box full of whissel is just a trifle too high,"

The artist taking in the situation, and desirous to give satisfaction in order to get the instrument accepted, looked with the greatest deference at the Burgermaster remarking: "Not one man in a thousand would have discovered the defect your honor has mentioned. 'Tis true, the organ is just one-hundredth of a note too high, but I am prepared to make the correction." He did, by looking at a register button and lightly touching it. Now playing again, the Burgermaster nodded his head in approbation and pronounced the organ quite in tune.

There were but few spectators in the court-room this morning.

The jury is further enlightened. An eccentric "B" is illustrated and the jury is handed a document wherein several of the kind occur. Another B appears reminding in perspective, excepting the base, of a ground squirrel standing upon the apex of its vertebra. Still another B, more in conformity with usual penmanship. "told" comes next. A juryman makes a discovery and another told adornes the ta'e.

The LaVies letter comes on the taple with an ye (wish now we had read the epistolation attentively. "r" and "s" start below the line.

AFTERNOON.

Mrs. Goss on the stand. Knew Mrs. Storke; had heard her express herself bitterly against Dr Winchester, and say she hoped to live long enough to see his downfall. Had heard her say there were several men she wanted to annoy, but Winchester was the main one.

Cross examination — Witness has not been at home for the last sixty days. Defendant called at her house three years ago on business, and witness called at defendant's studio to look at pictures. Wishes she had not called.

Witness' feelings for Mrs Storke are no longer friendly—she had biased at witness like a cat.

Witness was requested by defendant to write anonymous letter. She had told this to Mr. Squier, her husband and Mrs. Fisher.

Did not mention it to Winchester, Storke or Grant Jackson. Defendant introduced witness to Grant Jackson in 1896. She first told her mother what she could swear to. Did not tell Acquistepace that she had written more than one of these anonymous letters. She took her something to eat and found her on the warpath against several people in a trap. She looked like an angry woman. Witness does not recollect the time, only (before she went to [illegible]

Ventura defendant told her that she was trying to disguise her handwriting.

"She hoped the day long enough to accomplish Winchester's downfall."

Defendant dispared of changing her handwriting to escape detection by an expert. She wanted to scare about a dozen people by letter writing. She did not state reasons only that they had all injured her. Witness went to see her again after returning from Ventura, giving her food—is not sure though. The last time she went to her room, in November, 1897, Mrs. Law and John Hedgeland were there.

They talked a great deal but did no work in cutting out a waist as the material misteriously disappeared, but does not say that Mrs. Storke stole it, but believes she did.

The witness smiles not because she recalls the trousers, at one time on the tapis. A discussion on inexpressibles, their uses, intents and purposes, a bathing suit on the side.

Witness sought pure atmosphere in the sunshine and felt happy again.

Morning

SANTA BARBARA CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 9, 1899.

SHE COULDN'T DECEIVE EXPERT

Why Yda Addis Asked Mrs. Goss to Copy Letters.

WANTED TO SCARE HER ENEMIES

Witness Gives Sensational Evidence at Trial Yesterday—Expert Kytka Will Finish Today.

Yesterday morning's session of the Yda Addis Storke trial was devoted to the presentation of evidence by Expert Theodore Kytka, who followed the line of evidence he has pursued the past three days, by demonstrations on the blackboard of the characteristic writing of the letters presented as the writing of Mrs. Storke, both the admitted and disputed manuscripts. He made several startling disclosures, that like others presented the preceding days, show a striking similarity in penmanship of the exhibits of both sides. His aim is to show that the anonymous letters are written in a disguised hand, but that the person who did the writing was unable to conceal the little tricks of writing that give character to the author. Some points presented by the expert are seemingly the most trifling, but these are what he mainly relies upon, for as he has several times explained, it is in the small, unconscious strokes that he detects the natural hand. The expert's evidence grows in interest as it is better understood, a fact made clear by the absorbing attention given him by all in the court room.

But the sensation of yesterday's proceedings was the testimony of Mrs. Etta M. Goss, once the close friend of Mrs. Storke. Mrs. Goss testified to having heard the defendant say that she hoped to live long enough to accomplish the downfall of Dr. Winchester, toward whom she expressed animosity. Also that she asked witness to copy anonymous letters. A severe cross-examination failed to shake Mrs. Goss' evidence.

During the examination of Mrs. Goss the defendant was visibly effected. Indeed, a sensation that no other testimony has produced was visible in the whole court room.

Expert Kytka expects to complete his direct testimony this morning.

MRS. ETTA M. GOSS.

Mrs. Etta M. Goss was called to the witness stand at reconvening of court after the noon recess. Her evidence on direct examination was short, but of a more damaging character to the defendant than any yet presented. The cross-examination failed to shake the witness' testimony, but Mrs. Goss will be called as a witness for the defense when its evidence is presented.

Mrs. Goss testified that she had a conversation with the defendant in May or June of 1897. While in Mrs. Storke's room one day Mrs. Storke seemed to be in a very bad spirit and the principal one that she seemed to be against was Dr. Winchester, said the witness. "I heard her express herself in very bitter terms against Dr. Winchester, and I heard her say at one time that she hoped that she would live long enough to accomplish Dr. Winchester's downfall. I was in the room once again and saw her copying handwriting, and she said: 'I have often tried to change my handwriting, but can't do it so that an expert would not detect it.' She said there were about a dozen people in this town to whom she wanted to give a good scare. She spoke of wanting to write some anonymous letters to them. And before she got through I found that she wanted me to write these letters for her."

"Did she mention anyone in particular?"

"She spoke of Dr. Winchester. I don't remember that she mentioned anyone else in particular; but Dr. Winchester was the one to whom she wanted to give the biggest scare."

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Attorney Boyce—How did you come to know the defendant?

Mrs. Goss—She called at my house to see my husband about a sewing machine.

"How long ago was that?"

"About five years."

"Did you call upon her after that?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you call upon her?"

"Well, she wanted me to call to see her oil paintings. There is nothing that I care more for than paintings; so I called as she requested."

"How often did you call?"

"Oftener than I now wish I had."

"Why oftener than you now wish you had?"

"Because I think she is not the woman I then believed her to be. I then thought she was a very innocent woman, not strong, poor and misunderstood."

"How did you find out your mistake?"

"By her tongue running incessantly and by her wanting me to write anonymous letters for her."

"Were your feelings friendly towards her?"

"Very friendly. I used often to take her food, and I sometimes carried so much to her that I thought my arms would break before I got there."

"Are your feelings now friendly towards her?"

"Not very friendly; no, sir."

"How did you come to cease your relations with the defendant?"

"I dropped her. That made her so angry at me that she hissed at me, when she met me on the street, like an angry cat."

"She hissed at you? When was the first time that she did this?"

"About three months ago, I think."

"Was that after she had been indicted by the grand jury?"

"Yes, sir—I don't remember."

"You were not a witness before the grand jury in this case?"

"No, sir."

"When did you first tell about the defendant's wanting to write anonymous letters?"

"Some time after."

"Why did you not mention it before?"

"I was ashamed."

"Oh, you were ashamed, were you?"

"Yes, sir. I was ashamed that I had ever been such a goose as to visit her."

"Did you ever make any statements to anyone about what you could swear to in this case?"

"Yes, sir."

"To whom did you make these statements?"

"To Mr. Squier, to my husband and to some others."

"To some others; to what others?"

"I don't remember. I think I mentioned it to my sister."

"What is your sister's name?"

"Josephine Fisher."

"Did you mention this on more than one occasion?"

"Yes, sir; several times."

"Did you mention it to anyone else outside the family besides Mr. Squier?"

"It is possible. I don't remember."

"Did you ever mention it to Dr. Winchester?"

"Never. I am not acquainted with Dr. Winchester."

"Did you ever mention it to Mr. C. A. Storke?"

"No, sir; never. I am not acquainted with Mr. Storke."

"Did you ever mention it to Grant Jackson?"

"Never. I am not acquainted—that is, I am not particularly acquainted with him."

"You are acquainted with him?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did you become acquainted with him?"

"Through Mrs. Storke. I met him at her rooms. I went there to see her...

YDA ADDIS TRIAL

Continued from First Page.

am mistaken in the winter of '96."

"Where was it?"

"At Mrs. Storke's rooms in the Ivison building. That was the first time I ever saw or heard of Mr. Jackson."

"Then that was the time you met Mrs. Storke at her rooms?"

"That was the second time I met her."

"The first time, she came to your room, and the second time you met her at her room?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, I will ask you whom you first told that you could appear as a witness in this case?"

"I first told my mother, as I remember it."

"Oh, your mother. Did you mention her before? I asked you once before how many people you mentioned it to."

"I think I mentioned her.

"Is that all that you ever spoke to on the subject?"

"I think perhaps I may have talked to some friends about it. I don't remember now. The case is being talked about freely."

"Did you talk to your friends about her asking you to write anonymous letters?"

"I think I remember answering a few questions of friends on the subject."

"Did you not tell them that you had yourself written one of these letters, at the request of the defendant, and mailed it yourself?"

"I did not. No, sir."

"Did you not tell Mr. James Aquistapace a week or ten days ago, that you had written one of these letters and mailed it at her request?"

"I never did."

"You are positive."

"Yes, sir."

"Now I will ask you how you came to be in Mrs. Storke's room on that day when she mentioned these letters?"

"I don't remember. I think likely I went over to her room to take her supper, as I was accustomed to do."

"How did she come to mention the letters?"

"I don't know. She seemed to be on the warpath generally and down on about half the people in the town; and she said she was going to get even with them, said she was going to bring them into the courts."

"Oh, she said she would take them into the courts, did she?"

"That she would settle with them in that way."

"Now what was her appearance at that time?"

"Why, like an angry woman."

"Did she speak pretty loudly?"

"Yes, sir; quite loudly."

"Did she tell you to announce that on the streets?"

"No, sir."

"When was that?"

"In the spring of '97."

"What month was it?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Can you tell the day of the week?"

"No, sir."

"Can you tell when this occurred by any circumstance?"

"No, sir."

"Then why do you say that it was in the spring of '97?"

"Because I think so. I don't know in what month."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because I remember shortly after that I went away from home. I was very busy after that, so that I did not call at her room so often."

"You went to Ventura shortly after that did you?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you go?"

"July 13, '97."

"Now, how long before that was it that you were at Mrs. Storke's room?"

"I don't know. It was in the latter part of the spring sometime."

"March, April or May?"

"I don't know."

"The latter part of May, was it not?"

"I don't know. It may have been in May, but it may have been a little earlier."

"Do you remember the school election of that year?"

"I don't know whether I do or not."

"Don't you remember going at that time with the defendant to the school election?"

"No, I never did."

"Don't you remember that the defendant was interested in the school election?"

"Yes, sir. She was at my house to see my husband about it."

"Was it before or after she was over to see your husband that the conversation took place?"

"I don't know."

get out into the sunshine and the clear air."

"Oh, you wanted to get out into the air, did you? But you stayed long enough to get her to make all the admissions necessary for this case?"

Witness gave no direct answer.

"Can you tell the jury any of the words that she used?"

"Yes, I can. She said that she hoped to live long enough to accomplish Dr. Winchester's downfall."

"What did you say to that?"

"I asked her what he had done to her."

"What did she say?"

"I don't remember exactly. She ran on the way she has; said a great many things. I don't remember just what. I got out about as soon as I could."

"Did you not remain as much as half an hour in the house after this was said?"

"I presume as long as that."

"Was anyone keeping you there?"

"No, sir."

"The door wasn't locked, was it?"

"No, sir."

"How soon did you make up your mind that you wanted to get out into the air?"

"About as soon as I got in."

"Was there any particular action on her part that caused you to feel in this way?"

"It was not so much what she said as what she did."

"Was it Dr. Winchester that she mentioned when you first went in?"

"I don't remember."

"Did she use the word downfall—say she wished to accomplish his downfall?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you understand that she meant by that?"

"That she meant to ruin him in the eyes of the people."

"Did she tell you how she intended to do it?"

"No, sir."

"Don't you remember what she said?"

"She said she wished to write letters, and I suppose—"

"Don't tell me what you suppose."

"I don't remember what she said, excepting she said she had been trying to change her hand, but couldn't do so but an expert could detect her writing."

"How did the subject of an expert come up?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't give her any advice?"

"I advised her as a friend to let that business alone. She said she wrote a very set hand."

"Did she tell you after that that she was going to write anonymous letters to half the people of this town?"

"No, sir."

"What did she tell you?"

"She said there were about a dozen or more people in this town whom she wanted to give a good scare to."

"Did she name them?"

"No, sir."

"How long after you returned from Ventura did you go to Mrs. Storke's room?"

"Four or five weeks."

"Do you remember that when you went you took something to Mrs. Storke?"

"No, sir. I don't remember."

"What did you take to her?"

"I don't remember how long after I came back I continued to take her food. I think the last time was in November, '97."

"How can you fix November, 1897, as the date of this last visit?"

"She was helping me make a dress. She helped me cut it out."

"What dress?"

"A black dress that I had dyed and was making over."

"How did you come to go to her house?"

"She met me on the street and asked me why I did not come to see her. I told her that I was busy sewing. I told her I had a waist to cut out. She said, 'bring over the waist and do your sewing in my room for company.'"

"How long did you remain at that time?"

"I went in the morning, expecting to cut the waist, but we got to talking and I did not get a chance to cut it. So she said to come around again in the morning, which I did. I went back in the morning. The goods seemed to shrunk a good deal before we got through. When I took the goods there, Mrs. Storke said, 'you will have goods enough for a waist and a wrap of any size you wish,' but next morning there was not enought for either a wrap or waist. Mrs. Storke said then, 'I am afraid you won't have enough for your waist.' 'Why,' I said, 'I thought we had decided there was enough for two or three?'"

"What was your idea about the goods?"

"I thought that Mrs Storke had stolen it."

Objection. Sustained.

"Why do you smile?"

"Because I feel kind of light hearted, I suppose. I haven't done anything, and it is my nature to feel light hearted."

"It wasn't at the recollection of the trousers, was it?"

"No, sir."

"Nor nothing connected with them?"

"No, sir."

"And there was not enough in a pair of pants and a bathing suit to make a waist?"

"No, sir. In fact there were two pairs of trousers."

"Do you now state that the defendant stole the goods?"

"That is what I always thought, and I remember that at the time she was making a wrap or a long cloak of about the same sort of goods and complained that she had not enough goods for bell sleeves and storm collar, but I took notice afterwards that she had her bell sleeves and storm collar."

"Was her cloak or wrap of the same material as yours?"

"Well, a tailor might not have thought them precisely the same, but they looked just alike."

"What was the effect of that sunshine after you got out of Mrs. Storke's room?"

"Oh, it felt good. It was pleasant, reviving."

"You felt the necessity for free air, and that I suppose was the reason that made you go back to her house so frequently."

"But I didn't get very much there. Her room was an inside one."

"That is all, Mrs. Goss."

"Thank you."

KYTKA RECALLED.

Expert Kytka was recalled. His first example was of the word "Francisco." He called attention to the construction of the words, particularly to the bold "c" that appeared more like a capital letter in both exemplars. Another "Francisco" was found by Juror Baker in a defendant's exhibit, that witness thought a particularly good one. He found the characteristics of writing similar to the others.

The word "walk" was given to call attention to the separation of the letters "w" and "a," the "l" not resting on a line with the "k," which letter was large and the last stroke showing the unconscious pressure that the expert has mentioned in other exemplars.

He described the next example as, in the language of an expert, a "freak." It was the letter "b" in defendant's exhibit No 9, in "bit," and plaintiff's No. 1, in "by." The first exhibit was incorrectly marked, and was plaintiff's No 2 admitted writing. The letter was made with a big loop at the top, the lower loop formed in an angle.

A small point in the capital letter "M" Kytka said was one not seen or copied by persons forging another's hand. It was a point so small that a magnifying glass was needed to see it. The letter begins with a slight up stroke. The La Vies letter was put under the microscope for the jury to examine the point. It was shown in an enlargement of 115 times.

The final "e" in "strange" in the Dr Martha Case letter and "same" in an admitted writing was shown as an eccentricity. Its peculiarity was the heavy shading of the down stroke and a sharp curve at the end. In the letters "qu" found in admitted and disputed writing the expert found several points in common, and in one instance he called attention to the characteristic retracing having been blotted as if to conceal the similarity. There was a large number of examples given during the afternoon, better progress being made than since the expert's testimony began. The punctuation marks were illustrated. Particular stress was placed on the comma, that Kytka pronounced characteristic and was found the same bold, heavy characteristic exhibits for both sides. He said they were found all through the writings.

At adjournment Mr. Kytka answered to a question from Attorney Boyce that he would probably complete the presentation of exemplars in an hour this morning.

Witness Gives Sensational Evidence at Trial Yesterday—Expert Kytka Will Finish Today.

Yesterday morning's session of the Yda Addis Storke trial was devoted to the presentation of evidence by Expert Theodore Kytka, who followed the line of evidence he has pursued the past three days, by demonstrations on the blackboard of the characteristic writing of the letters presented as the writing of Mrs. Storke, both the admitted and disputed manuscripts. He made several startling disclosures, that like others presented the preceding days, show a striking similarity in penmanship of the exhibits of both sides. His aim is to show that the anonymous letters are written in a disguised hand, but that the person who did the writing was unable to conceal the little tricks of writing that give character to the author. Some points presented by the expert are seemingly the most trifling, but these are what he mainly relies upon, for as he has several times explained, it is in the small, unconscious strokes that he detects the natural hand. The expert's evidence grows in interest as it is better understood, a fact made clear by the absorbing attention given him by all in the court room.

But the sensation of yesterday's proceedings was the testimony of Mrs. Etta M. Goss, once the close friend of Mrs. Storke. Mrs. Goss testified to having heard the defendant say that she hoped to live long enough to accomplish the downfall of Dr. Winchester, toward whom she expressed animosity. Also that she asked witness to copy anonymous letters. A severe cross-examination failed to shake Mrs. Goss' evidence.

During the examination of Mrs. Goss the defendant was visibly affected. Indeed, a sensation that no other testimony has produced was visible in the whole court room.

Expert Kytka expects to complete his direct testimony this morning.

MRS. ETTA M. GOSS.

Mrs. Etta M. Goss was called to the witness stand at reconvening of court after the noon recess. Her evidence on direct examination was short, but of a more damaging character to the defendant than any yet presented. The cross-examination failed to shake the witness' testimony, but Mrs. Goss will be called as a witness for the defense when its evidence is presented.

Mrs. Goss testified that she had a conversation with the defendant in May or June of 1897. While in Mrs. Storke's room one day Mrs. Storke seemed to be in a very bad spirit and the principal one that she seemed to be against was Dr. Winchester, said the witness. "I heard her express herself in very bitter terms against Dr. Winchester, and I heard her say at one time that she hoped that she would live long enough to accomplish Dr. Winchester's downfall. I was in the room once again and saw her copying handwriting, and she said: 'I have often tried to change my handwriting, but can't do it so that an expert would not detect it.' She said there Attorney Hayo—How did you come to know the defendant?

Mrs. Goss—She called at my house to see my husband about a sewing machine.

"How long ago was that?"

"About five years."

"Did you call upon her after that?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you call upon her?"

"Well, she wanted me to call to see her oil paintings. There is nothing that I care more for than paintings; so I called as she requested."

"How often did you call?"

"Oftener than I now wish I had."

"Why oftener than you now wish you had?"

"Because I think she is not the woman I then believed her to be. I then thought she was a very innocent woman, not strong, poor and misunderstood."

"How did you find out your mistake?"

"By her tongue running incessantly and by her wanting me to write anonymous letters for her."

"Were your feelings friendly towards her?"

"Very friendly. I used often to take her food, and I sometimes carried so much to her that I thought my arms would break before I got there."

"Are your feelings now friendly towards her?"

"Not very friendly; no, sir."

"How did you come to cease your relations with the defendant?"

"I dropped her. That made her so angry at me that she hissed at me, when she met me on the street, like an angry cat."

"She hissed at you? When was the first time that she did this?"

"About three months ago, I think."

"Was that after she had been indicted by the grand jury?"

"Yes, sir—I don't remember."

"You were not a witness before the grand jury in this case?"

"No, sir."

"When did you first tell about the defendant's wanting to write anonymous letters?"

"Some time after."

"Why did you not mention it before?"

"I was ashamed."

"Oh, you were ashamed, were you?"

"Yes, sir. I was ashamed that I had ever been such a goose as to visit her."

"Did you ever make any statements to anyone about what you could swear to in this case?"

"Yes, sir."

"To whom did you make these statements?"

"To Mr. Squier, to my husband and to some others."

"To some others; to what others?"

"I don't remember. I think I mentioned it to my sister."

"What is your sister's name?"

"Josephine Fisher."

"Did you mention this on more than one occasion?"

"Yes, sir; several times."

"Did you mention it to anyone else outside the family besides Mr. Squier?"

"It is possible. I don't remember."

"Did you ever mention it to Dr. Winchester?"

"Never. I am not acquainted with Dr. Winchester."

"Did you ever mention it to Mr. C. A. Storke?"

"No, sir; never. I am not acquainted with Mr. Storke."

"Did you ever mention it to Grant Jackson?"

"Never. I am not acquainted—that is, I am not particularly acquainted with him."

"You are acquainted with him?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did you become acquainted with him?"

"Through Mrs. Storke. I met him at her rooms. I went there to see her, and he was there, and she kindly introduced me to him."

"When was that?"

"I don't know. I think in the spring of '95—no, the spring preceding."

"I ask you now the circumstances under which she introduced him to you?"

"I went to see her. She was sick and lying on the lounge. Mr. Jackson was there, sitting by her, and she introduced him to me."

"When was this?"

"I think in the spring of '96; no, I

"I think I mentioned her."

"Is that all that you ever spoke to on the subject?"

"I think perhaps I may have talked to some friends about it. I don't remember now. The case is being talked about freely."

"Did you talk to your friends about her asking you to write anonymous letters?"

"I think I remember answering a few questions of friends on the subject."

"Did you not tell them that you had yourself written one of these letters, at the request of the defendant, and mailed it yourself?"

"I did not. No, sir."

"Did you not tell Mr. James Aquistapace a week or ten days ago, that you had written one of these letters and mailed it at her request?"

"I never did."

"You are positive?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now I will ask you how you came to be in Mrs. Storke's room on that day when she mentioned these letters?"

"I don't remember. I think likely I went over to her room to take her supper, as I was accustomed to do."

"How did she come to mention the letters?"

"I don't know. She seemed to be on the warpath generally and down on about half the people in the town; and she said she was going to get even with them; and she was going to bring them into the courts."

"Oh, she said she would take them into the courts, did she?"

"That she would settle with them in that way."

"Now what was her appearance at that time?"

"Why, like an angry woman."

"Did she speak pretty loudly?"

"Yes, sir; quite loudly."

"Did she tell you to announce that on the streets?"

"No, sir."

"When was that?"

"In the spring of '97."

"What month was it?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Can you tell the day of the week?"

"No, sir."

"Can you tell when this occurred by any circumstance?"

"No, sir."

"Then why do you say that it was in the spring of '97?"

"Because I think so. I don't know in what month."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because I remember shortly after that I went away from home. I was very busy after that, so that I did not call at her room so often."

"You went to Ventura shortly after that did you?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you go?"

"July 13, '97."

"Now, how long before that was it that you were at Mrs. Storke's room?"

"I don't know. It was in the latter part of the spring sometime."

"March, April or May?"

"I don't know."

"The latter part of May, was it not?"

"I don't know. It may have been in May, but it may have been a little earlier."

"Do you remember the school election of that year?"

"I don't know whether I do or not."

"Don't you remember going at that time with the defendant to the school election?"

"No, I never did."

"Don't you remember that the defendant was interested in the school election?"

"Yes, sir. She was at my house to see my husband about it."

"Was it before or after she was over to see your husband that the conversation took place?"

"I don't know."

"Have you told all that took place that afternoon of the conversation?"

"Oh, no, sir."

"What else was there?"

"I don't remember exactly what. She said that she was anxious to change her hand so that she might write anonymous letters?"

"Was that after or before she said she would like to get even with the people in this town? Was it after?"

"Yes; I think so."

"What else did she say?"

"I don't remember. I got out of the house as soon as I could. I wanted to

"The door wasn't locked, was it?"

"No, sir."

"How soon did you make up your mind that you wanted to get out into the air?"

"About as soon as I got in."

"Was there any particular action on her part that caused you to feel in this way?"

"It was not so much what she said as what she did."

"Was it Dr. Winchester that she mentioned when you first went in?"

"I don't remember."

"Did she use the word downfall—say she wished to accomplish his downfall?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you understand that she meant by that?"

"That she meant to ruin him in the eyes of the people."

"Did she tell you how she intended to do it?"

"No, sir."

"Don't you remember what she said?"

"She said she wished to write letters, and I suppose—"

"Don't tell me what you suppose."

"I don't remember what she said, excepting she said she had been trying to change her hand, but couldn't do so but an expert could detect her writing."

"How did the subject of an expert come up?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't give her any advice?"

"I advised her as a friend to let that business alone. She said she wrote a very set hand."

"Did she tell you after that that she was going to write anonymous letters to hurt the people of this town?"

"No, sir."

"What did she tell you?"

"She said there were about a dozen or more people in this town whom she wanted to give a good scare to."

"Did she name them?"

"No, sir."

"How long after you returned from Ventura did you go to Mrs. Storke's room?"

"Four or five weeks."

"Do you remember that when you went you took something to Mrs. Storke?"

"No, sir. I don't remember."

"What did you take to her?"

"I don't remember how long after I came back I continued to take her food. I think the last time was in November, '97."

"How can you fix November, 1897, as the date of this last visit?"

"She was helping me make a dress. She helped me cut it out."

"What dress?"

"A black dress that I had dyed and was making over."

"How did you come to go to her house?"

"She met me on the street and asked me why I did not come to see her. I told her that I was busy sewing. I told her I had a waist to cut out. She said, 'Bring over the waist and do your sewing in my room for company.'"

"How long did you remain at that time?"

"I went in the morning, expecting to cut the waist, but we got to talking and I did not get a chance to cut it. So she said to come around again in the morning, which I did. I went back in the morning. The goods seemed to shrink a good deal before we got through. When I took the goods there, Mrs. Storke said, 'You will have goods enough for a waist and a wrap of any size you wish,' but next morning there was not enough for either a wrap or waist. Mrs. Storke said then, 'I am afraid you won't have enough for your waist.' 'Why,' I said, 'I thought we had decided there was enough for two of them?'"

"What was your idea about the goods?"

"I thought that Mrs. Storke had stolen it."

"You now accuse her of stealing it?"

"I couldn't think otherwise when I saw that the goods was gone."

"When did you buy the goods?"

"I didn't buy it. I had it in the house and I dyed it."

"Had the goods been made up before?"

"Yes, sir."

"What was it?"

"A pair of men's trousers and a clothing suit."

"And not enough then to make a waist?"

"I stated so, sir."

"To whom did the trousers belong?"

THE STORKE CASE.

First Sensational Evideuce Given.

"Will Follow Dr. Winchester to His Downfall."

The crowd at the court room was very small yesterday at both the morning and afternoon sessions. It was thought that the testimony of Expert Kitka would continue in the same was as it did on Wednesday and that the old story of the seemingly innumerable small letters and words would furnish the day's excitement.

But the prosecution sprung a surprise and Mr. Kitka being temporily excused Mrs. W. F. M. Goss was put upon the stand. She was at one time intimately acquainted with the defendant and throughthat friendship she was enabled yesterday to throw what seemed a very strong light upon the business of the anonymous letters. She was put on the stand at this time because of the illness of her baby. The district attorney wished to let her get away from the trial as soon as possible.

She testified that she had lived in Santa Barbara for six or seven years, residing at 522 Bath street. Three years ago she had made the acquaintance of Mrs. Storke and for a time they had been very friendly. In May or June, 1897, the two women had a conversation which had a remarkable bearing upon this trial. Mrs. Storke said to the witness that she wished she could disguise her handwriting. She had tried to disguise it but knew that she could not change it to such an extent that an expert would not recognize it immediately.

There were some people here, she told Mrs. Goss, some dozen or more people whom she wanted to scare by writing anonymous letters to them. Dr. Winchester was the only one whose name she mentioned but of him she spoke in the bitterest terms.

"I hope I will live long enough to accomplish his downfall" the witness quoted her as saying. At this time also Mrs. Storke said she was trying to disguise her hand.

This in effect was the direct testimony. The cross examination was in a way ludicrous but the witness stuck to her story and some new and not very encouraging points were brought out by Mr. Boyce's questions.

These questions covered everything in the wide wide world. But the chief points were as to the relations that existed between the two women.

Mrs. Goss had taken an interest in the accused and went to her rooms a number of times; how many she could not remember. She took an interest in the woman because she seemed to be hard-up, lonesome and sick. The witness was in the habit of carrying food to Mrs. Storke but could not remember how many times she had done so.

Of the conversation brought out by the prosecution Mrs. Goss could not remember all that was said. The defendant she said talked so much that no one could remember all she said. But several things Mrs. Goss did keep in mind. These things the lady repeated exactly as she had said them before.

Shortly after this conversation Mrs. Goss went down to Ventura for a short visit. Upon her return she met Mrs. Storke frequently on the street and was asked to visit her.

CLOTH DISAPPEARED.

Once on the street the defendant asked the witness what she was doing. That lady was then engaged in the making of a waist and so Mrs. Storke asked her to come to her place bringing her goods. They were to cut the waist out of some goods Mrs. Goss had dyed and were to make it at Mrs. Storke's room.

Consequently Mrs. Goss went one afternoon to this room taking with her two pairs of dyed pants and a dyed bath robe out of which the waist was to be cut.

But Mrs. Storke talked so much during the afternoon that very little was accomplished. So it was agreed that the job would be finished the following morning. The defendant suggested that the cloth be left at her place.

But the next day Mrs. Goss went to do the work but could not do it because there was not enough cloth to cut the waist. Mrs. Storke said when she first saw the cloth that there was enough of it for three waists but now she searched her closet but could not find the goods.

Q. What do you think became of the cloth?

A. I believe she stole it.

Q. What did she do with the cloth?

A. Mrs. Storke had been making herself a suit and she told me had enough cloth to make the sleeves and the storm collar. Later I saw her on the street with the sleeves and storm collar.

Q. Was this suit exactly like the cloth you took there to make the waist out of?

A. A tailor might have discovered the difference but it resembled her cloth in color and texture and might have been taken for the same thing.

Q. Do you charge my client with stealing your cloths do you?

A. I don't know any other conclusion to come to. The cloth was left in her possession but it disappeared.

At the end of the examination Mrs. Goss sat on the stand and smiled.

Q. What are you smiling for?

A. Because I feel like it. I am always on the broad grin. Everybody knows I am good humored.

Q. You were not smiling then about the trousers?

A. No sir. I am not ashamed of the trousers nor of anything I have said here today.

This closed this remarkable testimony and Mr. Kitka continued with his small letters. He will probably finish his direct examination early this morning.

BOYCE FAILS TO SHAKE KYTKA

Expert Strenuously Maintains Mrs. Yda Addis Storke's Guilt.

WINCHESTER IS DEFENDANT

The Wife of the Doctor Seeks a Legal Separation From Him.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 9.—The crowd at the Storke libel case to-day was the largest that has yet turned out. The cause was the exciting testimony of yesterday and the prospect of a wordy war when the defense got around to the cross-examination of handwriting Expert Kytka.

The prosecution examined the expert carefully, to get his opinion as to whether it was possible that the writings imputed to Mrs. Storke could have been written by any other person, the object being to forestall the defense in claiming that some forger wrote the letters in order to throw the crime upon the defendant. Kytka declared that no one could ever forge the minute details of similarity that it has taken four days to elucidate. A forger who could see and execute such nice points could forge the most valuable documents in the world.

The subject of ink was next discussed. In one of the admitted writings the expert found that two different inks and two different pens had been used. In the indictment letter one of these inks had been used. The same kind of ink was used in a number of anonymous letters.

The long-expected cross-examination opened at last. Kytka had testified that a large photograph of the word "acknowledged," reproduced in "The Examiner," was an enlargement of 110 times. Senator John J. Boyce, the defendant's attorney, confused the microscopist's terms, times and diameter, and as the original word was 3 3-16 inches long, argued that the photograph should be twenty-six feet long if Kytka's statement was correct.

Kytka explained that an enlargement of ten diameters meant an enlargement of 100 times.

Boyce asked in his turn whether or not some forger could not have produced letters so that they would look like the defendant's writing, but the expert shook his head in despair and said it could not be done.

Kytka, in answer to questions, said that he always based his opinions purely upon specimens of writing furnished him, and that he never paid any attention to other phases of a case. In some instances he went directly against what people asked him to prove, as when he proved to Charles Fair that the famous penciled will was not what it was claimed to be. Following this line he showed one or two minor eccentricities in the writing of the indictment letter which he found to be irregular. But these were all in letters, the rest being normal.

The strong testimony given during the last four days was not in any way shaken.

A sensation was sprung here to-day which may throw a wide light upon the Storke case. It was the filing of a suit for divorce by Mrs. Carrie S. Winchester against her husband, Dr. R. F. Winchester. Winchester is the man supposed to have been libeled by Yda Addis Storke, and in a letter upon which she is indicted, he is called the most renowned roue in Santa Barbara, with two possible exceptions. It has been understood for some time that Mr. and Mrs. Winchester were not on the best of terms. She went away about five months ago and returned about four weeks since. About two weeks ago she went to live at the residence of her father, Professor T. N. Snow. Mrs. Winchester is one of Santa Barbara's society favorites. The doctor has practiced medicine here for many years and has a reputation as a good physician. The coming of the suit at this time seems very odd. But the complaint is guarded with great care, and the parties concerned have nothing to say. One person in a position to know said that the action did not in any way involve Winchester's moral character.

RNING, JUNE 9, 1899

SHE WANTED TO LIVE LONG FOR REVENGE

Yda A. Storke Reported to Have Said This to Mrs. Goss.

DISGUISED HANDWRITING

The Defendant Said Experts Could Recognize Her Chirography.

SANTA BARBARA, June 8.—The first big surprise of the Yda Addis Storke libel suit came to-day when Mrs. W. F. M. Goss gave testimony that brought big beads of perspiration to the defendant's temples.

Expert Kytka had the witness stand all morning, but was suddenly excused to make room for Mrs. Storke's testimony. She said she had been on very friendly terms with Mrs. Storke at one time and that the accused had come to her once telling her that there were a number of people in Santa Barbara, some dozen or more, whom

---

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.

Expert in the Storke Case Cross-examined—Divorce Suit.

SANTA BARBARA, June 9.—[Regular Correspondence.] Expert Kitka has finished his cross-examination in the Storke case and is now being cross-examined. He testified this morning that several kinds of ink had been used in the various letters exhibited on both sides. But there was much of the ink used in the letter of the indictment that could be shown in undisputed writings. Following this testimony he was asked whether, in his opinion, a person seeking to imitate Mrs. Storke's hand could have written the disputed letters. He said that such a thing was utterly impossible. The broader likeness could have been imitated, but never the fine points shown during the last four days.

The wife of Dr. Winchester, the prosecuting witness in the Storke case, at whom the libelous letters were directed, filed suit for divorce in the Superior Court today.

VIVACIOUS YDA ADDIS

Rather Scintillate Below than Glimmer Above.

Senator Boyce Is not Loud Voice. He Coos It like a Suckling Dove. The Expert in Confidence Proceeds to Show that the Apparatus Cannot Lie.

The Yda Addis today is accoutred in sombre in conformity with the weather, the same being chill and lowering. But, to judge from her actions, she is physically and mentally as vivace as though she were dressed in all the colors of the rainbow. Being the cynosure of all eyes must be very gratifying to her, and one can understand that the soaring mind would sooner brill in hades than be a nonentity in heaven. Good women predominate over the bad good in Santa Barbara, and upon the theory that every woman is good until she is proven bad, the Yda Addis is still as good as the rest, or nearly so.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

The expert further illustrates, but evidently old ground is walked over again. Having made a positive statement to the effect that all letters placed in evidence were written by the same hand, the defense endeavors to prove the contrary. No doubt there are witnesses that will swear to an identity or at least a similarity to some of the letters in evidence, of handwriting in vogue in Santa Barbara long before Yda Addis Storke was known in this city, and upon the principle that no two things are exactly alike, the expert will need considerable fortitude to prove that handwriting is the exception. The case is a tedious and harrassing affair to all but the jury that philosophically lets time and perhaps a little physical and mental strain glide along, consoled with the reflection that $2 a day is a fair equivalent for their time, wear and tear included. The INDEPENDENT published that in Herr Kytka's direct examination he stated that not all the letters were written by the same hand. Whether said report was an error or that said exceptions were not in evidence very likely will appear when reference is made to the record of the evidence.

The witness stood the brunt of an incisive cross examination fairly well, and if not entirely well, it is because he has said a very great deal.

---

introduction of the writing. The defense, in support of its right to introduce the papers, made the startling statement that they were introduced under the old principle of law which says that a prisoner at the bar should never have his mouth stopped when desiring to speak out the name of the true criminal.

The exhibits were accepted by the Court and identified.

Gutierrez, upon whom all eyes are now turned, is a Spaniard, and a descendant of an old and highly respected family. He is a man now something over fifty years of age. For fifteen years he was a deputy in the County Clerk's office. He makes his living now as a teacher of Spanish and by doing all sorts of fancy lettering on documents of various kinds. He is a person who would hardly be expected to possess the ability to write the letters in question, and, therefore, it is to be argued that the defense will accuse some other party of hiring Gutierrez to write the letters. The attorney for the defense in fact said this evening that such would be the line of defense he would follow.

"You see the drift of the testimony," he said, "from the introduction of the writings of Gutierrez; but he is not more guilty than the pen with which he wrote."

"You propose, then, to charge some other person or persons with getting Mr. Gutierrez to write the anonymous letters?"

"That is exactly our ground."

The writing of Gutierrez, as looked at casually, bears a resemblance to the disputed letters. Both are written in a curious back hand; but a closer examination shows many differences, especially in the light of the testimony Kytka has given during the week just passed.

Gutierrez said this evening that he knew nothing of the case or of the writing, save that he had been subpenaed by the defense. He was very willing to give such specimens of his penmanship as were asked.

Expert Kytka when shown specimens of Gutierrez' writing said that they were, to his notion, wholly unlike the penmanship of Mrs. Storke. He went over a number of letters, comparing them with the anonymous letters, but found that there were few points of similarity to be weighed against the many dissimilarities.

The accusation of Gutierrez is the first step of Mrs. Storke in proving that she is the victim of conspirators, of whom Gutierrez has been the tool, and now everybody is breathlessly awaiting the next step in the case, and all are listening eagerly for the names of those who will be accused of prompting Gutierrez to write the letters. The story compels attention, and it is safe to say that there are some two dozen or more men here, some of them very well-known citizens, who are very anxiously waiting to see what Mrs. Storke will swear to when she goes upon the witness stand.

THE STORKE CASE.

First Sensational Evideuce Given.

"Will Follow Dr. Winchester to His Downfall."

June - 9 -

The crowd at the court room was very small yesterday at both the morning and afternoon sessions. It was thought that the testimony of Expert Kitka would continue in the same was as it did on Wednesday and that the old story of the seemingly innumerable small letters and words would furnish the day's excitement.

But the prosecution sprung a surprise and Mr. Kitka being temporily excused Mrs. W. F. M. Goss was put upon the stand. She was at one time intimately acquainted with the defendant and throughout that friendship she was enabled yesterday to throw what seemed a very strong light upon the business of the anonymous letters. She was put on the stand at this time because of the illness of her baby. The district attorney wished to let her get away from the trial as soon as possible.

She testified that she had lived in Santa Barbara for six or seven years, residing at 522 Bath street. Three years ago she had made the acquaintance of Mrs. Storke and for a time they had been very friendly. In May or June, 1897, the two women had a conversation which had a remarkable bearing upon this trial. Mrs. Storke said to the witness that she wished she could disguise her handwriting. She had tried to disguise it but knew that she could not change it to such an extent that an expert would not recognize it immediately.

There were some people here, she told Mrs. Goss, some dozen or more people whom she wanted to scare by writing anonymous letters to them. Dr. Winchester was the only one whose name she mentioned but of him she spoke in the bitterest terms.

"I hope I will live long enough to accomplish his downfall" the witness quoted her as saying. At this time also Mrs. Storke said she was trying to disguise her hand.

This in effect was the direct testimony. The cross examination was in a way ludicrous but the witness stuck to her story and some new and not very encouraging points were brought out by Mr. Boyce's questions.

These questions covered everything in the wide wide world. But the chief points were as to the relations that existed between the two women.

Mrs. Goss had taken an interest in the accused and went to her rooms a number of times; how many she could not remember. She took an interest in the woman because she seemed to be hard-up, lonesome and sick. The witness was in the habit of carrying food to Mrs. Storke but could not remember how many times she had done so.

Of the conversation brought out by the prosecution Mrs. Goss could not remember all that was said. The defendant she said talked so much that no one could remember all she said. But several things Mrs. Goss did keep in mind. These things the lady repeated exactly as she had said them before.

Shortly after this conversation Mrs. Goss went down to Ventura for a short visit. Upon her return she met Mrs. Storke frequently on the street and was asked to visit her.

CLOTH DISAPPEARED.

Once on the street the defendant asked the witness what she was doing. That lady was then engaged in the making of a waist and so Mrs. Storke asked her to come to her place bringing her goods. They were to cut the waist out of some goods Mrs. Goss had dyed and were to make it at Mrs. Storke's room.

Consequently Mrs. Goss went one afternoon to this room taking with her two pairs of dyed pants and a dyed bath robe out of which the waist was to be cut.

But Mrs. Storke talked so much during the afternoon that very little was accomplished. So it was agreed that the job would be finished the following morning. The defendant suggested that the cloth be left at her place.

But the next day Mrs. Goss went to do the work but could not do it because there was not enough cloth to cut the waist. Mrs. Storke said when she first saw the cloth that there was enough of it for three waists but now she searched her closet but could not find the goods.

Q. What do you think became of the cloth?

A. I believe she stole it.

Q. What did she do with the cloth?

A. Mrs. Storke had been making herself a suit and she told me had enough cloth to make the sleeves and the storm collar. Later I saw her on the street with the sleeves and storm collar.

Q. Was this suit exactly like the cloth you took there to make the waist out of?

A. A tailor might have discovered the difference but it resembled her cloth in color and texture and might have been taken for the same thing.

Q. Do you charge my client with stealing your cloths do you?

A. I don't know any other conclusion to come to. The cloth was left in her possession but it disappeared.

At the end of the examination Mrs. Goss sat on the stand and smiled.

Q. What are you smiling for?

A. Because I feel like it. I am always on the broad grin. Everybody knows I am good humored.

Q. You were not smiling then about the trousers?

A. No sir. I am not ashamed of the trousers nor of anything I have said here today.

This closed this remarkable testimony and Mr. Kitka continued with his small letters. He will probably finish his direct examination early this morning.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.

Expert in the Storke Case Cross-examined—Divorce Suit.

SANTA BARBARA, June 9.—[Regular Correspondence.] Expert Kitka has finished his cross-examination in the Storke case and is now being cross-examined. He testified this morning that several kinds of ink had been used in the various letters exhibited on both sides. But there was much of the ink used in the letter of the indictment that could be shown in undisputed writings. Following this testimony he was asked whether, in his opinion, a person seeking to imitate Mrs. Storke's hand could have written the disputed letters. He said that such a thing was utterly impossible. The broader likeness could have been imitated, but never the fine points shown during the last four days.

The wife of Dr. Winchester, the prosecuting witness in the Storke case, at whom the libelous letters were directed, filed suit for divorce in the Superior Court today.

BOYCE FAILS TO SHAKE KYTKA

Expert Strenuously Maintains Mrs. Yda Addis Storke's Guilt.

WINCHESTER IS DEFENDANT

The Wife of the Doctor Seeks a Legal Separation From Him.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 9.—The crowd at the Storke libel case to-day was the largest that has yet turned out. The cause was the exciting testimony of yesterday and the prospect of a wordy war when the defense got around to the cross-examination of handwriting Expert Kytka.

The prosecution examined the expert carefully, to get his opinion as to whether it was possible that the writings imputed to Mrs. Storke could have been written by any other person, the object being to forestall the defense in claiming that some forger wrote the letters in order to throw the crime upon the defendant. Kytka declared that no one could ever forge the minute details of similarity that it has taken four days to elucidate. A forger who could see and execute such nice points could forge the most valuable documents in the world.

The subject of ink was next discussed. In one of the admitted writings the expert found that two different inks and two different pens had been used. In the indictment letter one of those inks had been used. The same kind of ink was used in a number of anonymous letters.

The long-expected cross-examination opened at last. Kytka had testified that a large photograph of the word "acknowledged," reproduced in "The Examiner," was an enlargement of 110 times. Senator John J. Boyce, the defendant's attorney, confused the microscopist's terms, times and diameter, and as the original word was 3 3-16 inches long, argued that the photograph should be twenty-six feet long if Kytka's statement was correct.

Kytka explained that an enlargement of ten diameters meant an enlargement of 100 times.

Boyce asked in his turn whether or not some forger could not have produced letters so that they would look like the defendant's writing, but the expert shook his head in despair and said it could not be done.

Kytka, in answer to questions, said that he always based his opinions purely upon specimens of writing furnished him, and that he never paid any attention to other phases of a case. In some instances he went directly against what people asked him to prove, as when he proved to Charles Fair that the famous penciled will was not what it was claimed to be. Following this line he showed one or two minor eccentricities in the writing of the indictment letter which he found to be irregular. But these were all in letters, the rest being normal.

The strong testimony given during the last four days was not in any way shaken.

A sensation was sprung here to-day which may throw a wide light upon the Storke case. It was the filing of a suit for divorce by Mrs. Carrie S. Winchester against her husband, Dr. R. F. Winchester. Winchester is the man supposed to have been libeled by Yda Addis Storke, and in a letter upon which she is indicted, he is called the most renowned roue in Santa Barbara, with two possible exceptions. It has been understood for some time that Mr. and Mrs. Winchester were not on the best of terms. She went away about five months ago and returned about four weeks since. About two weeks ago she went to live at the residence of her father, Professor T. N. Snow. Mrs. Winchester is one of Santa Barbara's society favorites. The doctor has practiced medicine here for many years and has a reputation as a good physician. The coming of the suit at this time seems very odd. But the complaint is guarded with great care, and the parties concerned have nothing to say. One person in a position to know said that the action did not in any way involve Winchester's moral character.

RNING, JUNE 9, 189

SHE WANTED TO LIVE LONG FOR REVENGE

Yda A. Storke Reported to Have Said This to Mrs. Goss.

DISGUISED HANDWRITING

The Defendant Said Experts Could Recognize Her Chirography.

SANTA BARBARA, June 8.—The first big surprise of the Yda Addis Storke libel suit came to-day when Mrs. W. F. M. Goss gave testimony that brought big beads of perspiration to the defendant's temples.

Expert Kytka had the witness stand all morning, but was suddenly excused to make room for Mrs Storke's testimony. She said she had been on very friendly terms with Mrs Storke at one time and that the accused had come to her once telling her that there were a number of people in Santa Barbara, some dozen or more, whom

---

... wanted to frighten by ... anonymous letters. She said she could not, however, disguise her hand so that an expert could not recognize it instantly. At that time Mrs. Storke spoke very bitterly of Winchester, the man she is now accused of libeling and said she hoped to live long enough to accomplish his downfall. She was at that time practicing in the disguise of her handwriting.

Cross-examination brought out a queer story of how the two women did dressmaking together. Mrs. Goss desired to make a waist or sack, so she dyed two pairs of trousers and an old bath robe and went to Mrs. Storke's room to make the garment. But the next morning, when work was resumed, most of the cloth was missing and the witness had to make the front and sleeves of her waist of other material. She accuses Yda Addis Storke of having taken the goods as it was of the same color and quality of a suit Mrs. Storke was making and for which she lacked sleeves and a storm collar. These sleeves and the collar appeared on the streets later, said Mrs. Goss, and the counsel for the defense was very sorry he had asked so many questions.

Kytka followed Mrs. Goss and consumed the afternoon in a comparison of admitted and disputed writings.

COPIED AN ANONYMOUS LETTER.

Woman Gives Evidence Against Yda Addis Storke.

SANTA BARBARA, June 8.—A sensation was sprung by the prosecution in the Yda Addis Storke case today. Mrs. Mattie Goss, an old friend of the defendant, testified that Mrs. Storke asked her to copy an anonymous letter, saying that she could not disguise her handwriting. The defendant also declared to the witness that she intended giving several people a bad scare and hoped to live long enough to accomplish the ruin of Dr. Winchester and drive him from town. The evidence was not shaken by cross-examination.

THE STORKE CASE.

Wife of the Prosecuting Witness Seeks Divorce.

SANTA BARBARA, June 9.—The cross-examination of Expert Kytka began today in the Yda Addis Storke libel trial. His testimony was not affected by the defense's rigid questions.

The wife of Dr. Winchester, the prosecuting witness in the case, at whom the libelous letters were directed, has filed a suit for divorce in the Superior Court.

Cross-Examination of Kytka.

SANTA BARBARA, June 9.—The cross-examination of Expert Kytka began today in the Yda Addis Storke libel trial. His testimony was not affected by the rigid questions of counsel for the defense. The wife of Dr. Winchester, the prosecuting witness in the case, at whom the libelous letters were directed, has filed suit for divorce in the Superior Court.

SORE ANKLE

SHIFTS THE GUILT TO OTHER SHOULDERS

Mrs. Storke Accuses an Old Man of Forging the Letters.

TOOL OF HER ENEMIES

The Names of the Real Miscreants the Lady Yet Conceals.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 10. The testimony in the Storke libel case to-day was the most interesting that has thus far been offered, for in cross-examining Theodore Kytka the defense showed its hand and disclosed the identity of the person who will be charged with having written the letters for the writing of which Mrs Storke is now standing trial.

The defendant's attorneys in questioning Kytka laid great stress upon ascertaining whether the letter upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted was written in a free-hand, or whether it was a possible forgery of her handwriting, or perhaps merely an attempted disguise. Kytka swore that no person in the world could ever forge so successfully. He declared that the letters were in a clumsily disguised hand.

He was then asked as to whether the writer of the letters had sufficient control of the pen to do fancy block lettering. Kytka said that there was a continual suggestion that the writer was an artist, but no signs of block letters, as block lettering was a printing process and block letters were not writing.

The defense then offered for identification several documents, written years ago by Frank N. Gutierrez, who was at one time a prominent county official. One of these documents was dated in 1873.

District Attorney Squires objected to the introduction of the writing. The defense, in support of its right to introduce the papers, made the startling statement that they were introduced under the old principle of law which says that a prisoner at the

DREYFUS: A CONTEST THAT THREATENS A FRENCH REVOLUTION

CAPT. DREYFUS.

"qui vous intéresse et le tenir à ma disposition après, j'en prendrai. A moins que vous ne vouliez que je le fasse copier in extenso et ne vous en adresse la copie Je vais partir en manoeuvres."

EXTRACT FROM THE FAMOUS DOCUMENT.

MAJOR ESTERHAZY.

DREYFUS TESTIFYING.

THE first act of this most mystifying and tragical drama began on November 2, 1894. The opening scene was in the office of General Boisdeffre, chief of the general staff of the French army—by whose order Captain Alfred Dreyfus of the artillery, attached to the staff, was placed under arrest.

"What for? What is the charge against me?" demanded the astonished officer.

"You know very well," was the answer, and all the answer vouchsafed for seventeen days, during which time he was closely confined and not allowed to communicate with counsel, family or friends.

For some time previous to this event the French authorities had been aware of the fact of a mysterious and alarming leakage of military secrets from France into other countries, and were on the "qui vive" to discover the traitor.

In September an Alsatian porter in the employe of Colonel Schwartzkoppen, the military attache of the German Embassy at Paris, brought to the French War Office a memorandum addressed to his master, which, under the title of the "bordereau," has gained world-wide notoriety.

This "bordereau" was placed by General Boisdeffre in the hands of Commandant Du Paty de Clam, who was considered in the War Office as an expert on handwriting, for the purpose of comparison with specimens of writing on file.

For the first time in its history, it is said, there had been for some time [illegible] was then connected with the general staff an officer of Hebrew birth—Captain Alfred Dreyfus, the son of a wealthy Alsatian family, who, with his brothers, from motives of love and loyalty, left parents and Alsace, their birthplace and home, when Germany took possession in 1871, and found a new home in France.

Dreyfus was taken to a cell in the Cherche-Midi Prison adjoining the War Office, and kept in close confinement for nearly three weeks. The fact of his arrest was made known by General Mercier, Minister of War, to his colleagues in the Dupuy Cabinet, but withheld from his family and the public.

In due time a Parisian journal published found a new home in France.

Dreyfus was taken to a cell in the Cherche-Midi Prison adjoining the War Office and kept in close confinement for nearly three weeks. The fact of his arrest was made known by General Mercier, Minister of War, to his colleagues in the Dupuy Cabinet, but withheld from his family and the public.

In due time a Parisian journal published the statement that an officer of the Ministry of War was at the Cherche-Midi under charge of high treason. This news created the greatest excitement in Paris. The next day it was announced that the officer was on the general staff and belonged to the artillery. Then that he was an Israelite, and finally that his name was Alfred Dreyfus, that he was rich, well married and of good social position. This all made his crime more odious in the eyes of the people, and not a voice was raised in his behalf.

Dreyfus was arraigned before a court-martial; the regular council of war then sitting, those officers of inferior rank to the accused, were replaced by others named by General Boisdeffre, chief of the general staff. The trial began on December 19. Dreyfus appeared clothed in his uniform as captain of artillery, and with his hair formerly black turned completely white during the seven weeks he had been in prison.

The most rigorous secrecy was observed on the trial, on the ground that the examination would involve military secrets of the highest importance.

The court was divided on the question of guilt until General Mercier communicated to it a secret paper, the canaille de D—— letter, later shown to have been forged by Colonel Henry, which neither the prisoner nor his counsel was allowed to see, when a verdict of guilty as charged was returned.

The clerk read the sentence to the prisoner out of the presence of the court, as usual. It was military degradation and perpetual imprisonment in an isolated fortress.

Two weeks later the first part of the sentence was carried out in the presence of 5000 troops, drawn from the various bodies about Paris.

As Adjutant Boxin tore the epaulets and galons from his coat Dreyfus cried out: "I am innocent; I swear it. Vive la France!"

His cap was taken, his sword broken and thrown at his feet and he was then marched bareheaded around the square before the troops, repeating frequently his protestations of innocence, which were as often drowned in the roll of the drums.

As he passed the press stand he called out to the reporters: "Tell all France I am innocent." Officers standing near cried out, "Silence, Judas! Down with the traitor!"

He was sent to l'Ile de Re, on the coast of France, pending preparations for his reception at l'Ile du Diable, on the coast of French Guiana, which had formerly been a leper colony, to which latter place he was sent on February 21, 1895.

Of his life there during the four years that have followed little has been known, as never was prisoner kept in more complete isolation. It is known, however, that his spirits have kept up and his confidence in his final vindication has not wavered, as gathered from circumstances that have leaked out.

During 1895 and the early part of 1896 some efforts were made in behalf of the exile, but they came to nothing, as his friends had no grounds on which to base an appeal.

In the fall of 1896 Lieutenant Colonel Picquart, not before known in the case, was placed in charge of the secret service department, a most important and fortunate event for Dreyfus. Picquart esteemed truth and justice before the reputation of the army. After Dreyfus himself he stands as the most important figure in the whole case.

The leakage of secrets did not come with Dreyfus' exile. Picquart's investigations led him to suspect Major Count Walsin Esterhazy. Then to examine the secret "dossier" of papers in the Dreyfus case. He became convinced that the "bordereau" was Esterhazy's work, and that Dreyfus was the victim of a conspiracy.

He made this known to M. Scheurer-Kestner, vice president of the Senate, like Dreyfus, an Alsatian, a man of wealth and influence, who was already interested in his behalf. In proper time the information was laid before General Billot, then Minister of War, with a request to reopen the case, which was refused.

About this time, November, 1896, General Mercier, to silence growing doubts as to Dreyfus' guilt, caused a fac simile of the "bordereau" to be published. On the trial three experts had sworn that Dreyfus was its author, while two others swore that the writing in no way resembled his. Dreyfus' friends submitted it to the leading experts of Europe and America, who decided unanimously that it was not written by him.

Esterhazy's guilt was at this time known to no one, and only suspected by Colonel Picquart, who was quietly investigating, but a year later the "brochure" containing the fac simile and the expert testimony met the eye of a broker, De Castro, who had had long dealings with the Count and possessed many specimens of his handwriting, comparison with which convinced him that Esterhazy forged the "bordereau."

The broker communicated his suspicions to Mathieu Dreyfus, who denounced Esterhazy to the Minister of War as the author of the paper on which his brother had been convicted, and demanded a retrial. Esterhazy had already fled into Belgium, but returned to Paris under written assurance from the War Office of its protection.

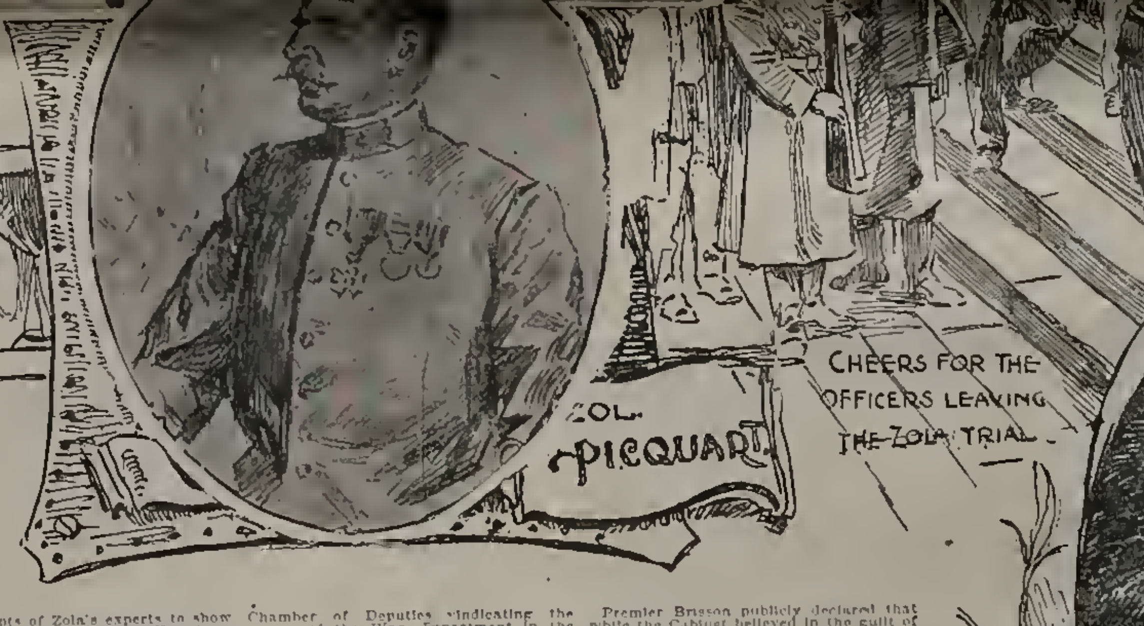
A court-martial was selected to try him by General Pellieux, chief of the general staff.

Esterhazy was acquitted on the ground of "no tangible proof of his guilt," and was congratulated on the result by all the members of the court.

Two days later Emile Zola took public part in the fight by publishing in the Aurore his now famous letter beginning "I accuse."

He challenged the Government to prosecute him. The challenge was taken up, and his trial, with that of M. Perreux, editor of the Aurore, who was to be prosecuted at the same time and on the same charge, began on February 7 before the Court of Assizes, Paris.

DREYFUS TESTIFYING.



The attempts of Zola's experts to show from the "fac simile" that Esterhazy wrote the bordereau were ridiculed in the court and by the press. Generals Pellieux, Boisdeffre, Gonse and Mercier all swore that the bordereau could not have been written by Esterhazy.

Colonel Picquart alone of all the officers called stood stoutly to his fight, and in defiance of the presence and testimony of his superiors declared that the author of the "bordereau" was Esterhazy and not Dreyfus.

Zola and Perreux were found guilty and sentenced to a year's imprisonment and 3000 francs fine.

Zola and his friends had to leave the court under heavy police protection, but the officers of the army were accorded a grand ovation as they left the Palais de Justice.

The Zola case was appealed and new trial had on July 18.

On being refused leave to introduce evidence reopening the Dreyfus case, or suspension of trial pending appeal, they let the case go by default. The same sentence as before was given. Zola fled at once to Switzerland to avoid the imprisonment, and friends paid his fine and costs.

On July 7 M. Cavaignac, in an endeavor to allay the excitement of the public mind, made a strong speech before the Chamber of Deputies vindicating the course of the War Department in the whole case. In the course of his speech he read three papers, one of which was said to have been written by Colonel Schwartzkoppen to the Italian attache. It was as follows:

"I have heard that a Deputy is going to interpellate on the Dreyfus affair. If on my return to Berlin the Kaiser shall question me I shall say that I have never had any relations with this Jew. If they ask you, say the same thing, for no one must ever know that we had anything to do with him."

Though he ordered Picquart under arrest in answer to his statement that the above was a forgery, M. Cavaignac began to have his doubts, and calling Colonel Henry before him questioned him on the matter. Henry lied point blank until appealed to on his honor as a soldier, when he confessed the forgery. He followed his arrest the next day by killing himself with a razor that he had been permitted to retain.

M. Cavaignac resigned his portfolio at once.

The demand for revision of the Dreyfus case became quite general, though there was widespread opposition of the most virulent kind. Newspapers that had been hostile to Dreyfus now insisted on his having a new trial.

Premier Brisson publicly declared that while the Cabinet believed in the guilt of Dreyfus he himself was determined to search the evidence and get at the truth.

On September 17 the Cabinet voted to submit the Dreyfus papers to a commission of experts, and on the 26th, after receiving their report, ordered Madame Dreyfus' petition for revision to be laid before the Criminal Chamber of the Court of Cassation.

M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire, president of another branch of the court, resigned his place and impeached the integrity and impartiality of certain members of the criminal branch. This forced the Government to refer the whole matter to the full Court of Cassation, consisting of forty members. By thus referring it to the highest and most august as well as the most numerous tribunal in France the Government hoped to secure the confidence of the people and their acquiescence in whatever decision might be rendered.

On June 3 the court published its finding ordering revision and a new trial, which has been ordered to be held at the city of Rennes, near Nantes, and some distance from Paris influence. The personnel of the court will be selected by General Lucan, commander of the department and himself a Jew.

Zola has returned to Paris, confident of the verification of his words before the Court of Assizes: "If Dreyfus be not innocent, let my name perish. If he be not innocent, let my works perish. By all that I have done for the literature of my country, by all that I am and hope for, I swear that he is innocent."

Picquart is still in prison, whither he went, declaring: "This is perhaps the last time I shall speak in public. I shall sleep to-night perhaps in Cherche-Midi prison. Therefore I wish to declare that if there is found there the strangling cord of Picard or the razor of Colonel Henry it will be murder, for I have no intention of committing suicide."

THE "BORDEREAU," OR MEMORANDUM OF ARMY SECRETS, UPON WHICH DREYFUS WAS CONVICTED.

SIR, though I have no news indicating that you desire to see me, nevertheless I am sending to you some interesting bits of information.

1. A note on the hydraulic break of the 120, and on the way in which this piece behaved.
2. A note on the covering troops (some modifications will be entailed by the new plan).
3. A note on a modification in artillery formations.
4. A note relative to Madagascar.
6. The project of a firing manual for field artillery, March 14, 1894.

The last document is extremely difficult to procure, and I can only have it at my disposal during a very few days. The Minister of War has sent a limited number of copies to the several corps, and these corps are responsible for its return, each officer in possession of one to return it after the maneuvers. If then you would like to take out of it whatever interests you and hold it afterward at my disposal, I will take it. Unless, indeed, you would like me to have it copied in extenso and then address to you the copy.

I am just off to the maneuvers.

ZOLA'S BURNING ACCUSATIONS OF CONSPIRACY WHICH MADE HIM AN EXILE.

I ACCUSE Lieutenant Colonel du Paty de Clam of having been the diabolical worker of a judicial error, unconscionably I am ready to believe, and of then having defended his nefarious doings for the past three years by the most absurd and culpable machinations.

I accuse General Mercier of being the accomplice, at least, through weak intelligence, in the greatest iniquity of the century.

I accuse General Billot of having in his hands the certain proofs of the innocence of Dreyfus, and of having suppressed them, thus rendering himself guilty of treason against humanity and justice, for a political reason and in order to save the compromised staff.

I accuse General de Boisdeffre and General Gonse of being the accomplices in the same crime, the one through religious animosity, doubtless, the other, perhaps, through the "esprit de corps" which makes the War Office that sacred and unassailable ark.

I accuse General de Pellieux and Commandant Ravary of having made a flagitious investigation, whereby I mean an inquiry of the most monstrous partiality, whereof we have, in the report of the last mentioned, an imperishable monument of candid audacity.

I accuse the three experts in handwriting, the men Belhomme, Varinard and Couard, of having drawn up false and fraudulent reports, unless a medical examination shall prove them to be victims of a disease of sight or of judgment.

I accuse the officers of the War Ministry of having organized a press campaign in order to lead public opinion astray.

Finally, I accuse the first court-martial of having condemned a man on a document kept secret, and I accuse the second court-martial of having covered this illegality by order, and of committing in its turn the judicial crime of knowingly acquitting a guilty person.

THE LETTER FORGED BY THE SUICIDE, COLONEL HENRY, WHICH MADE DREYFUS APPEAR GUILTY.

I HAVE read that a Deputy is going to interpellate concerning Dreyfus. If there come a few words which no one has been able to decipher I should say that I never had any intercourse with that Jew. That is understood. If you are asked, say the same thing, for no one must ever know what occurred with him. This scoundrel of a D—— is becoming too urgent.—Letter forged by Colonel Henry, who killed himself after his arrest, in the Dreyfus case and which was shown the members of the court-martial secretly when they were wavering as to the accused man's guilt. This letter was the "secret information" possessed by the Government, upon which the Ministers pledged their honor that Dreyfus was guilty. This letter was in very bad French, although supposed to have been written by a highly educated diplomatist. Colonel Henry was an illiterate man, and the imitation of Captain Dreyfus' writing was very mechanical. The whole case turned on this document.

TWO WEEKS OF LIBEL TRIAL

State Has Not Yet Concluded Testimony.

KYTKA STILL ON THE STAND

Expert Has Been Before Jury One Week---Important Ruling by Judge Oster Yesterday.

The trial of Ydo Addis Storke, charged with criminal libel, has now occupied the superior court two weeks and the end is not in sight. Saturday evening when court adjourned, Handwriting Expert Kytka was still on the witness stand, where he was called Monday afternoon. Evidence for the state has not yet been completed.

The feature of yesterday's session of court was a ruling by Judge Oster allowing the defense during cross-examination of Kytka to present writings that are neither of the admitted nor disputed authorship of Mrs. Storke, for the purpose of proving, if possible, that some other person other than the defendant wrote the libelous letters upon which the prosecution is based. The ruling was made after a long argument by the attorneys, Prosecuting Attorney Squier objecting to the presentation of the manuscripts and being overruled.

MORNING SESSION.

Saturday morning found Expert Kytka still on the stand undergoing cross-examination by Attorney Boyce. He was asked to explain dissimilarities in the Dr. Martha Case letter, as compared with the standards. He pointed out on the board what he said was one dissimilarity in the letter "f" as found in a certain line of the exhibit. The shading of the down stroke was the dissimilarity he referred to; "but," he added, "where there is one point of dissimilarity in this letter 'f,' there are four points of similarity."

Asked for another point, he selected the letter "I" but was not given an opportunity to display it on the board. Mr. Boyce asked him to point out the more striking dissimilarities.

"That would be very difficult," said Kytka. "There are no striking dissimilarities."

The expert, at the attorney's request, then made a pen and ink copy of the blackboard drawings showing six points of dissimilarity as found in the Martha Case letter. This was filed as an exhibit.

The name "Santa Barbara" was copied on the blackboard from the same letter, and a pen and ink copy was likewise made and introduced.

He explained his reasons for believing that the words "Santa Barbara" are in the same handwriting, calling attention to different exhibits, both admitted and disputed, in which "Santa Barbara" was found. He noted that the words were written in the natural style, with rapid movement. In one exemplar the "S" was written in a different manner, in the vertical style. He then pointed out the different connections and disconnections, looping, etc., which he stated were similar in all of the exhibits in hand.

He was asked if in the drawing on the board the letter "B" was in the right proportion of size. He said it was not exact but near enough for the purpose. "It is impossible to make an exact copy of a man's handwriting," he stated. "There are the little characteristics that cannot be imitated. Like in this, I cannot cover up the Dutch characteristics."

Mr. Boyce—I will ask you, Mr. Kytka, to examine the main stroke of the letter "S" in exhibit A (the Martha Case letter) and to tell if the letter "S" on the blackboard is a correct or a fair copy of the original.

"No, sir."

"On the blackboard you have represented the pictorial effect?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is the pictorial effect a safe method of detecting the identity of a writer?"

"It sometimes does not count for much."

"Then how do you determine?"

"By presence of the pen."

"Is that the prominent point?"

"Not a bit of it. It is not a prominent point."

"What is the prominent point?"

A somewhat lengthy explanation as to the general examination and comparison of the exemplars and the analysis of handwriting followed. The witness explained that the person who has the

The witness and attorney then seemed to become entangled with the term "free movement."

"I was speaking of free movements of the brain," finally explained Mr. Boyce.

"Oh, hang the brain," answered Kytka.

"But these are the products of a human brain, are they not?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is the name 'Santa Barbara,' as written in exhibit A, written in the natural or disguised handwriting?"

"In the natural handwriting, with a slight disguise. It is so slight that I do not wonder that people who have seen the defendant write recognized it."

"From the study you have given to the writings in this case, would you be able to determine from seeing the natural handwriting of the person writing exhibit A, who wrote that exhibit?"

"Yes, sir."

Mr. Boyce here handed the witness a document, which he was asked to examine. This document was then offered for purposes of identification.

Mr. Squier objected to the introduction of the paper, on the ground that it is not permissible to bring into the case the handwriting of others, and that it was not proper to introduce new exhibits under cross-examination.

Mr. Boyce explained that it was done in response to the statement of the witness that he would be able to determine the handwriting of the person it having the natural handwriting of the person. Then, it is the purpose to examine the witness on matters to which he has already testified, as to the characteristics of the writing, and statements upon which he bases the opinion that the defendant wrote these letters. He wanted it admitted simply for identification, and the district attorney stated that he would not object to its identification. The court admitted it for such purposes.

A drawing or plat was also introduced under the same ruling, after examination by the expert.

Mr. Boyce then came back to the date line in exhibit A, and a moment later the court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

There was no Saturday half-holiday for the court and jurors yesterday, but instead a full afternoon's session was held. When court reconvened after recess the introduction for identification of further writings not claimed to be the defendant's was made by Attorney Boyce. Prosecuting Attorney Squier objected and a long debate between the lawyers followed, in which Mr. Squier quoted the reports in support of his contention that defense should not be allowed to present handwriting of other people to prove that the defendant did not write the anonymous letters. If this is done, the attorney said, the case might go on indefinitely without reaching a decision.

Attorney Boyce took the position that if he could show by the writing of other persons that his client is not the author of the letters she is alleged to have written he should be permitted to do so.

Judge Oster overruled the objection of the prosecution. In making the ruling the court said that the reports were not clear on the point. Admissible evidence seemed to be restricted to the handwriting of the defendant and writing alleged to be by the defendant, but if the defense could show by writing known not to be in her hand that she did not write the letters it should be allowed.

Witness was then handed a manuscript that after examining he pronounced a better job than the others.

"You state that the party who made that document could make a better job than the party who wrote the Dr. Martha Case letter?" asked Mr. Boyce.

"It is not writing—it is painting and can't be compared."

Mr. Kytka, did you ever see this letter before?" A letter to O'Connor, Moffitt & Co. of San Francisco was presented.

"Yes, sir."

"Where did you see it?"

"In the district attorney's office."

"You made an examination, did you not?"

"A partial examination. The district attorney told me he had sufficient evidence and did not care to put the county to the expense of bringing the party who received it from San Francisco as a witness, so I made no detailed examination."

"So it was to save the county the expense that it was not introduced?"

"Yes."

"Did it not strike you as unnecessary to bring witnesses from San Francisco when you could expert the writing and tell who wrote it?"

"I am not an attorney, but I am reading Blackstone now."

"Now, Mr. Kytka, does this letter change your opinion as to the authorship of the anonymous letters?"

"No, sir."

The expert then took the letter and by means of the blackboard proceeded to point out the similarity between it and the handwriting of the defendant.

"Now, Mr. Kytka, I called your attention this morning to a paper which you examined for age. I want to ask you, does the characteristics in handwriting follow the individual through life; does the age of the document make any difference in determining the identity of writer?"

"Yes, sir. I would not want to pass an opinion on a document thirty years old."

Then followed a long series of questions to ascertain the witness' ability to judge aged manuscripts with writings of recent date.

The witness was next cross-examined on his testimony in reference to the two words "acknowledged," taken from the Dr. Martha Case letter and the admitted writing of the defendant, which were exhibited enlarged 110 times. Mr. Kytka went through a minute analysis of the construction of the two words and said the writing in the Case letter was slightly disguised.

Then followed a long tedious questioning as to the points of resemblance in the two. At times the questions and answers were quite pointed and caused more or less amusement.

The witness was then shown an abstract containing a map of several city blocks, said to have been made by C. A. Thompson, Esq., and asked if he could not find the same characteristics in the writing that he found in the Dr. Case letter which led him to believe the defendant wrote it. Mr. Kytka replied that he could not, that they were in no sense alike.

Kytka was still on the stand when court adjourned until Monday morning.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.

Interest in Storke Case Centers About F. N. Gutierrez.

SANTA BARBARA, June 12.—[Regular Correspondence.] The interest in the Storke case is now centered about F. N. Gutierrez, the Spanish teacher whose name has been connected with that of Mrs. Storke in the big libel suit. Gutierrez is hourly getting angrier over the affair and swears that he knows nothing of the case, that he never wrote such letters, and that the parties who have connected his name with the case know that he is innocent. Writings of Gutierrez were introduced in court today, but Expert Kytka says that they bear no resemblance to the writing in the anonymous letters. He is to make a careful study of Gutierrez's writing to compare it to the writing already introduced in court.

A number of campers are spending the summer in the vicinity of the Painted Cave, a well-known spot in the mountains near here. Several people from here joined the party this morning.

Complaints are heard from several quarters of the city of disturbances caused by tramps. There are a great many men constantly passing through the city, and it is thought that many of the objectionable parties are railroad men.

The action of Carlyle C. Davis vs. D. F. Hunt was to have come up for trial this morning, but as the court was occupied with the Storke case, the jury was dismissed and the case continued. This action is the case that grew out of the troubles of the Santa Barbaran, a newspaper issued here some time ago. Davis was the editor of that paper and Hunt his foreman.

President Thomas D. Wood of the Santa Barbara Chamber of Commerce left this afternoon with his family for Castle Crags, where the party will spend a part of the summer.

E. P. McNeal of Ontario and J. C. Mc-

THE STORKE CASE.

Kitka and Boyce Still At It.

The Expert's Cross Examination at White Heat.

The evidence in the Storke case has come to a very interesting point. The conspiracy theory has begun to unravel itself in the practical charging of F. N. Gutierrez, for many years a deputy in the county clerk's office, with having written the anonymous letters. This appeared in the afternoon session but when court opened in the morning, nothing of the kind was expected.

The cross examination of the handwriting expert, Kitka began once more at 10 o'clock yesterday morning.

Referring to the date line of the Martha Case letter, Kitka, gave the opinion that it was written by the same person who wrote the body of the letters.

Q. Point out the dissimilarities that you find in the body of the letter.

Of these dissimilar points some three or four were found. But they were usually single points in letters where there were other points similar in the defendant's writing. The letters in which the dissimilar points occurred were copied on paper by the expert and they will be used later by the defense. In making these copies or sketches on paper Kitka said that he could not imitate the hand so far as the shading was concerned without making several strokes where only one was used in the original. The microscope would show how many strokes were made. But he made letters that bore a very fair resemblance to their originals.

Returning to the date line, Santa Barbara, May, 22nd, of the Case letter, Mr. Kitka said that he found three duplicates of the words Santa and Barbara in admitted writings. In all four cases the name was written with a rapid movement and the first capital was in all cases separated. Other connections and separations were also alike in the exemplars. In the sketch of the line on the blackboard the shut of the letters was not exactly right. This Kitka said he could not keep. It was in this way that a forger was caught. The small points could never be imitated. In his blackboard imitation some of the Dutch touches of the expert's individuality showed through. These things could not be covered up.

Q. Is the pictorial effect a criterion by which to determine the identity of a writing.

A. No. To an expert who has never seen the writing before the pictorial effect is not a criterion.

Q. Then what is the true way of determining?

A. I must study the slant, the detail of all the first. The pictorial effect does not weigh much with an expert.

Q. How do you determine the pen pressure when you have a specimen of writing?

A. The pen pressure is not a very prominent point.

Q. What is important then.

A. The first important step is to see whether the writing is an attempt to simulate the writing of another person or whether it is an attempt to disguise the hand. Then you must make your studies of the writings.

Q. You say that you have made a detailed study of the word Santa Barbara in order to determine the hand writing. Is that true?

A. Yes sir.

Q. You said that sometimes you found a letter full of cramped movements and sometimes you find a clear free curve. What does that indicate?

A. That indicates that the person was of an artistic temperament. He has the ability to control the pen. He has the ability to write the free movement.

Q. When you find this free movement what does that indicate as to the mental nature of the person who wrote?

A. That indicates nothing to me. It indicates that a person cannot disguise his handwriting.

Q. You understand what I mean by conscious effort on the part of the writer to disguise his handwriting?

A. I do.

Q. When you are dissecting the writing of a person and discover that there has been a conscious effort to disguise the handwriting and discover an unconscious overlooking of the attempt to disguise. Do you understand?

A. I do.

Q. As an expert in dissecting handwriting you feel yourself competent to judge whether an attempt has been made to disguise the hand. I am speaking of the work of the human brain?

A. Oh hang the human brain. I am not referring to the brain.

Q. Isn't that the work of the brain?

A. And such a brain.

Q. Do you mean to tell the jury that you tell a hand by the disguise in it?

A. I have to break through the disguise.

Q. You have to tear the disguise away to see the face beyond?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Does the disguise appear in the date line of the Martha Case letter?

A. A very slight disguise.

Q. Could you from your study of that date line identify the handwriting of the person who wrote it under any circumstances where the writing of that person was natural and not disguised?

A. I wouldn't attempt it.

Q. You stated yesterday that your desire was to state your honest opinion from these writings? A. Yes.

Q. From the study that you have given the writings in this case would you be able to determine whether or not the person who wrote it wrote another piece of writing, a piece written in a person's natural hand.

Witness shown a paper upon which appeared a bit of the handwriting of Frank Gutierrez.

Mr. Squiers contended that there should be no cross examination upon writings not presented in the direct examination and that it was not admissible to ask the expert to identify writing not admitted to be that of the defendant.

Mr. Boyce. The witness stated that he could identify the handwriting of the person who wrote the exemplars. We wish to examine the witness upon points he has brought out and upon which he was directly examined.

Witness shown tracing of a block map and asked to look at court adjourned, Handwriting Expert Kytka was still on the witness stand, where he was called Monday afternoon. Evidence for the state has not yet been completed.

The feature of yesterday's session of court was a ruling by Judge Oster allowing the defense during cross-examination of Kytka to present writings that are neither of the admitted nor disputed authorship of Mrs. Storke, for the purpose of proving, if possible, that some other person other than the defendant wrote the libelous letters upon which the prosecution is based. The ruling was made after a long argument by the attorneys, Prosecuting Attorney Squier objecting to the presentation of the manuscripts and being overruled.

MORNING SESSION.

Saturday morning found Expert Kytka still on the stand undergoing cross-examination by Attorney Boyce. He was asked to explain dissimilarities in the Dr. Martha Case letter, as compared with the standards. He pointed out on the board what he said was one dissimilarity in the letter "f" as found in a certain line of the exhibit. The shading of the down stroke was the dissimilarity he referred to, "but," he added, "where there is one point of dissimilarity in this letter 'f,' there are four points of similarity."

Asked for another point, he selected the letter "l" but was not given an opportunity to display it on the board. Mr. Boyce asked him to point out the more striking dissimilarities.

"That would be very difficult," said Kytka. "There are no striking dissimilarities."

The expert, at the attorney's request, then made a pen and ink copy of the blackboard drawings showing six points of dissimilarity as found in the Martha Case letter. This was filed as an exhibit.

The name "Santa Barbara" was copied on the blackboard from the same letter, and a pen and ink copy was likewise made and introduced.

He explained his reasons for believing that the words "Santa Barbara" are in the same handwriting, calling attention to different exhibits, both admitted and disputed, in which "Santa Barbara" was found. He noted that the words were written in the natural style, with rapid movement. In one exemplar the "S" was written in a different manner, in the vertical style. He then pointed out the different connections and disconnections, looping, etc., which he stated were similar in all of the exhibits in hand.

He was asked if in the drawing on the board the letter "B" was in the right proportion of size. He said it was not exact but near enough for the purpose. "It is impossible to make an exact copy of a man's handwriting," he stated. "There are the little characteristics that cannot be imitated. Like in this, I can not cover up the Dutch characteristics."

Mr. Boyce—I will ask you, Mr. Kytka, to examine the main stroke of the letter "S" in exhibit A (the Martha Case letter) and to tell if the letter "S" on the blackboard is a correct or a fair copy of the original.

"No, sir."

"On the blackboard you have represented the pictorial effect?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is the pictorial effect a safe method of detecting the identity of a writer?"

"It sometimes does not count for much."

"Then how do you determine?"

"By pressure of the pen."

"Is that the prominent point?"

"Not a bit of it. It is not a prominent point."

"What is the prominent point?"

A somewhat lengthy explanation as to the general examination and comparison of the exemplars and the analysis of handwriting followed. The witness explained that the person who has the ability to write the free movement, has the ability to write the finger movement. But a person who always writes the finger movement, has not the ability to write the free movement. That is one point.

"You have stated that in the finger movement there was an attempt to disguise, and that then the writing broke forth into a free movement?"

"Yes, sir."

"As an expert in analyzing writing, you are capable of telling whether there are any movements of an attempt to disguise?"

"Yes, sir."

"Yes, sir."

Mr. Boyce here handed the witness a document, which he was asked to examine. This document was then offered for purposes of identification.

Mr. Squier objected to the introduction of the paper, on the ground that it is not permissible to bring into the case the handwriting of others, and that it was not proper to introduce new exhibits under cross-examination.

Mr. Boyce explained that it was done in response to the statement of the witness that he would be able to determine the handwriting of the person if having the natural handwriting of the person. Then, it is the purpose to examine the witness on matters to which he has already testified, as to the characteristics of the writing, and statements upon which he bases the opinion that the defendant wrote these letters. He wanted it admitted simply for identification, and the district attorney stated that he would not object to its identification. The court admitted it for such purposes.

A drawing or plat was also introduced under the same ruling, after examination by the expert.

Mr. Boyce then came back to the date line in exhibit A, and a moment later the court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

There was no Saturday half-holiday for the court and jurors yesterday, but instead a full afternoon's session was held. When court reconvened after recess the introduction for identification of further writings not claimed to be the defendant's was made by Attorney Boyce. Prosecuting Attorney Squier objected and a long debate between the lawyers followed, in which Mr. Squier quoted the reports in support of his contention that defense should not be allowed to present handwriting of other people to prove that the defendant did not write the anonymous letters. If this is done, the attorney said, the case might go on indefinitely without reaching a decision.

Attorney Boyce took the position that if he could show by the writing of other persons that his client is not the author of the letters she is alleged to have written he should be permitted to do so.

Judge Oster overruled the objection of the prosecution. In making the ruling the court said that the reports were not clear on the point. Admissible evidence seemed to be restricted to the handwriting of the defendant and writing alleged to be by the defendant, but if the defense could show by writing known not to be in her hand that she did not write the letters it should be allowed.

Witness was then handed a manuscript that after examining he pronounced a better job than the others.

"You state that the party who wrote that document could make a better job than the party who wrote the Dr. Martha Case letter?" asked Mr. Boyce.

"It is not writing—it is painting and can't be compared."

"Mr. Kytka, did you ever see this letter before?" A letter to O'Connor, Moffitt & Co. of San Francisco was presented.

"Yes, sir."

"Where did you see it?"

"In the district attorney's office."

"You made an examination, did you not?"

"A partial examination. The district attorney told me he had sufficient evidence and did not care to put the country [illegible] this morning in a paper which you examined the age. I want to ask you, does the characteristics in handwriting follow the individual through life; does the age of the document make any difference in determining the identity of matter?"

"Yes, sir. I would not want to pass an opinion on a document thirty years old."

Then followed a long series of questions to ascertain the witness' ability to judge aged manuscripts with writings of recent date.

The witness was next cross-examined on his testimony in reference to the two words "acknowledged," taken from the Dr. Martha Case letter and the admitted writing of the defendant, which were exhibited enlarged 100 times. Mr. Kytka went through a minute analysis of the construction of the two words and said the writing in the Case letter was slightly disguised.

Then followed a long tedious questioning as to the points of resemblance in the two. At times the questions and answers were quite pointed and caused more or less amusement.

The witness was then shown an abstract containing a map of several city blocks, said to have been made by C. A. Thompson, Esq., and asked if he could not find the same characteristics in the writing that he found in the Dr. Case letter which led him to believe the defendant wrote it. Mr. Kytka replied that he could not, that they were in no sense alike.

Kytka was still on the stand when court adjourned until Monday morning.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.

Interest in Storke Case Centers About F. N. Gutierrez.

SANTA BARBARA, June 12.—[Regular Correspondence.] The interest in the Storke case is now centered about F. N. Gutierrez, the Spanish teacher whose name has been connected with that of Mrs. Storke in the big libel suit. Gutierrez is hourly getting angrier over the affair and swears that he knows nothing of the case, that he never wrote such letters, and that the parties who have connected his name with the case know that he is innocent. Writings of Gutierrez were introduced in court today, but Expert Kytka says that they bear no resemblance to the writing in the anonymous letters. He is to make a careful study of Gutierrez's writing to compare it to the writing already introduced in court.

A number of campers are spending the summer in the vicinity of the Painted Cave, a well-known spot in the mountains near here. Several people from here joined the party this morning.

Complaints are heard from several quarters of the city of disturbances caused by tramps. There are a great many men constantly passing through the city, and it is thought that many of the objectionable parties are ex-railroad men.

The action of Carlyle C. Davis vs. D. F. Hunt was to have come up for trial this morning, but as the court was occupied with the Storke case, the jury was dismissed and the case continued. This action is the case that grew out of the troubles of the Santa Barbara, a newspaper issued here some time ago. Davis was the editor of that paper and Hunt its founder.

President Thomas D. Wood of the Santa Barbara Chamber of Commerce left this afternoon with his family for Castle Crags, where the party will spend a part of the summer.

E. C. McNeal of Oolnito and J. C. Mc-morning, nothing of the kind was expected.

The cross examination of the handwriting expert, Kitka began once more at 10 o'clock yesterday morning.

Referring to the date line of the Martha Case letter, Kitka gave the opinion that it was written by the same person who wrote the body of the letters.

Q. Point out the dissimilarities that you find in the body of the letter.

Of these dissimilar points some three or four were found. But they were usually single points in letters where there were other points similar to the defendant's writing. The letters in which the dissimilar points occurred were copied on paper by the expert and they will be used later by the defense. In making these copies or sketches on paper Kitka said that he could not imitate the hand so far as the shading was concerned without making several strokes where only one was used in the original. The microscope would show how many strokes were made. But he made letters that bore a very fair resemblance to their originals.

Returning to the date line, Santa Barbara, May, 22nd, of the Case letter, Mr. Kitka said that he found three duplicates of the words Santa and Barbara in admitted writings. In all four cases the name was written with a rapid movement and the first capital was in all cases separated. Other connections and separations were also alike in the exemplars. In the sketch of the line on the blackboard the slant of the letters was not exactly right. This Kitka said he could not keep. It was in this way that a forger was caught. The small points could never be imitated. In his blackboard imitation some of the Dutch touches of the expert's individuality showed through. These things could not be covered up.

Q. Is the pictorial effect a criterion by which to determine the identity of a writing.

A. No. To an expert who has never seen the writing before the pictorial effect is not a criterion.

Q. Then what is the true way of determining?

A. I must study the slant, the detail of all the first. The pictorial effect does not weigh much with an expert.

Q. How do you determine the pen pressure when you have a specimen of writing?

A. The pen pressure is not a very prominent point.

Q. What is important then.

A. The first important step is to see whether the writing is an attempt to simulate the writing of another person or whether it is an attempt to disguise the an endorsement by Frank Gutierrez. This was made in 1873, thereon. Kitka examined the document under his glass, explaining that when papers were thus introduced in cross examination it was best to look at them under the microscope to see the ink and to determine whether they were modern or ancient specimens of a person's writing.

THE STORKE CASE.

Continued from Page Three.

Q. In your opinion as an expert do you state that any portion of the date line (Case letter) is in an attempted disguise?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Then you say that is not in a natural hand?

A. That's right.

Q. Are there any portions of the date line which disclose the natural characteristics of the writer?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What parts do disclose the natural hand of the author?

A. The entire date line; with a slight disguise so clumsy that it is only a slight pressure of the hand like the tiny pressures on the first letter s and the first a.

Q. You mean a general thickening of the ink?

A. Yes sir.

Q. And this is then the disguise?

A. Yes sir.

Can you as an expert tell from the inspection of a writing whether the writer has followed a copy in making that writing?

A. Some writings can be tracked, some can't.

Q. Is there any particular clew that can be so tracked?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Under what circumstances can it be done?

A. By confining yourself entirely to finger movement, by printing like on the newspaper clipping.

Witness shown newspaper clipping with writing.

Q. Is that writing of the kind you mention?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Is there anything to indicate that that writing was copied?

A. No sir.

Q. Does the capital B in the word "Beware" show a capacity on the part of the writer to do lettering with a pen?

A. Block lettering?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything in the first three letters that indicate the capacity of the writer to do blocklettering?

A. There are letters there that would indicate that the writer had the artistic touch.

On the board Mr. Kitka sketched the words "Beware also." They wereprinted with a pen; the letters resembling, in Mr. Kitka's opinion, type often seen in the newspapers.

Q. Did I understand you to say that paper was wood pulp paper?

A. Yes.

Q. Then it is not adapted to writing with ink and a pen.

A. No sir. It can be done if you don't use so much ink.

Q. Finding that work made by some one with a pen on that paper what does that indicate to you of the capacity of the writer to make block letters?

A. Symmetry of letters.

Q. Do I understand you to say that the writer was capable of making block letters?

A. Any boy who was familiar with newspaper type could make those letters.

Q. What is the matter with the newspaper office?

A. These letters represent newspaper letters.

Witness given a writing, partly by F. N. Gutierrez.

A. The writer of that paper could do a better job than this.

Mr. Squier objected to the introduction.

Mr. Boyce. We propose to show by this witness a capacity to make, create and construct; a facility to write every letter in this case, and to tie this writing into this case and to lay the foundation by witness for showing an identity between this evidence introduced by us and these writings upon which this charge is drawn.

Mr. Squier. In other words the defendant here would try some other person.

Mr. Boyce. No sir. She is merely defending herself.

The district attorney quoted a New York decision and from Jones on evidence to show that it was contrary to rule to thrust into a case any writings of any one but the person on trial. No other writing could be introduced for purposes of comparison save that of the defendant. Rice on evidence said that a witness on handwriting cannot on cross examination be confronted with any writings that did not purport to be the writing of the person alleged to have been written by the person charged.

Mr. Squire objected that the defense might continue the case indefinitely by bringing in the writings of Tom, Dick and Harry.

Mr. Boyce stated that the subject was gone over some two years ago in the Santa Barbara courtroom. But this was in a civil action of a forged signature to a promissory note. He said it was under the principal of law that the criminal at the bar should never have his mouth closed if he could point to the true criminal. The writing was not introduced purely for purposes of comparison of handwriting.

If we could bring a witness on the stand to swear that he saw the pen of the person who wrote the Martha Case letter the court would hardly refuse that testimony. We expect to bring before this jury the writing of two persons and to bring them into this case as connected with the writing of this Martha Case letter. It is said that the defendant here wrote three classes of writing, and there was also introduced into the case by the State a fourth class of writing. The witness was brought into this case as a man of learning to give to this jury the faithful, honest benefit of his experience and to explain to them who he bases his opinions as he does. When a witness is one who testifies as to an opinion rather than to a fact, anything may be introduced that will throw light upon the witness' direct testimony.

The court felt that a certain amount of latitude should be given in the matter of evidence in such a case. The objection was overruled. But the court said the question was one upon which he was not fully satisfied.

Mr. Kitka. The writer of this paper shown me is a very clever one with the pen. This person has a fixed habit with the pen. These letters are drawn, they are not writing at all.

Q. There is some writing there is there not?

A. No sir.

Q. You give it as your opinion then that the person who made that writing could do a job superior to that of the printing on the clipping?

A. Yes sir.

Witness shown the O'Connor, Moffit & Co. letter.

Q. Have you ever seen that letter before?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Now you have had charge of the expert end of this case?

A. No sir. I told him to keep the exemplars straight so I wouldn't get confused in my studies.

Q. Did the existence of that paper in any way qualify your opinion as to the authorship of the disputed letter?

A. I am of the opinion that the same person who wrote the standards also wrote the note.

Q. Is this in the hand of any of the three groups you have mentioned?

A. No that is in the old English affected style.

Q. Does that in any way weaken your opinion?

A. No sir. If you ask me my opinions this letter in the same hand strengthens my opinion.

The expert explained that Mr. Squire had told him that this letter would not be introduced into the case because of the expense it would bring upon the county and in bringing witnesses from San Francisco in its connection.

Q. Didn't that strike you as a queer proposition?

A. No sir. I am not a lawyer. But I am reading Blackstone now. All right, let us christen this exhibit in some way.

Q. Let the clerk brand it with some designation or other.

The various letters were then gone over carefully and a number of points illustrated.

Q. I called your attention this morning to a paper which you examined for age. (This was the paper written in 1873.) Does the characteristics of the handwriting persist throughout the lifetime of a writer.

A. No sir. There is no exception.

Q. I'm speaking of the individual after the formation of the hand. Is it recognizable? Does it make any difference that a handwriting is of a certain age in determining the writing?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Suppose one of those sets of writing had been written 20 years ago, would you be able to compare it with a writing made only a very short time ago?

A. I wouldn't like to although I have made the studies of such cases.

Q. Isn't a rule recognized by experts that in the signing of a signature the individuality of the writer puts the signature into a separate class from other writing?

A. Sometimes.

Q. You testified a short time ago that if two signatures were absolutely alike, that was a sure sign to your mind that one was a forgery?

A. Yes I did.

Q. But you testified he that the word acknowledged w alike in these two words "ac nowledged?"

A. I said one was written l the person who wrote the othe

A. I'll ask you to point o to the jury once more what tl similarities are between the tw words that make you say tl words were written by the san person.

Q. The characteristics?

A. Yes.

Point them out to the jury.

Kitka began a careful explan tion but was stopped by M Boyce because the process of e planation promised to last int next week.

Q. Is there anything in tl disputed handwriting to indica an effort on the part of the wi ter to disguise it?

A. No sir.

Q. Is it an undisguised an natural hand?

A. It is in a natural han with only a slight attempt to dis guise the shading.

The words acknowledged wer then gone over by Mr. Boye letter by letter. Mr. Boye questioned and Kitka answere and the wordy hatchet was du up, shaken and buried a doze times.

Witness shown an old docu ment partly written by F. N Gutierrez and was asked several letters, the capitals (and H were not of the sam character as the same capitals i the Martha Case letters.

A. They are made in a differ ent character indeed. They ar made in parts. They are noth ing near the same. I can find i other people's writing letters that are much nearer.

Q. Is there any relation i the G class between them?

A. Not any.

Witness shown an old docu ment written in part by F. N Gutierrez and his attention calle to a letter G.

That isn't a G. What hav you got here? Some antiquate document? This is written i Spanish?

Q. I thought that so accom plished an expert as yoursel would recognize an English G.

A. When written by a Span iard. F. N. That next wor is a c not a g.

The court then adjourned un til 10:30 on Monday.

SANTA BARBARA.

Serious Charge Against An Attor ney—Corner-stone Laying.

SANTA BARBARA, June 13.—[Regular Correspondence.] Some days ago the defense in the Storke case made the assertion that it would name two men as the guilty parties who wrote not only the Martha Case letter, upon which Mrs. Storke is indicted, but the other anonymous letters that made so much trouble here a year ago. Saturday F. N. Gutierrez was named as one of the men, and this morning specimens of the handwriting of Attorney Grant Jackson of this city were brought into court, and in answer to a direct question by the Judge the attorney of the defense answered that the intention was to show that Jackson with Gutierrez wrote the letters.

Jackson is a man of perhaps 33 years of age, and has practiced law here for several years. He was born in Lompoc and has a political reputation through the county. He is a well-known man. For many years he was a close friend of Mrs. Storke and did a great deal of legal business for her. In her divorce suit with C. A. Storke, Jackson defended her. Jackson denies the charge, and says he has expected this move ever since the long trial began. Jackson is known as a good practitioner, and his many friends scout the idea of his having had anything to do with the letters.

The cornerstone of the Franciscan College of St. Anthony was laid here this afternoon with elaborate and appropriate ceremonies. A very large crowd of people went to the college building, and a number of visiting clergymen were present. The local band furnished music throughout the afternoon, and Mayor Edmund M. Burke addressed the people first in English and then in Spanish.

The blessing and laying of the stone was an impressive ceremony. Bishop George Montgomery of Monterey and Los Angeles performed the ceremonies and spoke eloquently of the future of the college.

WEARY YDA TRIAL

S. B.

June 12

The Expert has no Tyranny of It.

Boyce is Hard Hard to Fray Land the Filerist From the Bad Bench is More or Less Irritated.

The Yda Addis trial is getting very tedious. Expert Kitka is on the stand and the cross examination is making slow progress. It must be a harrowing affair to the expert to keep going over the same ground from day to day, and worse still, if the defense finally will get through with him, a rebuttal may consume many days more. The defense has no cause to complain of partiality to the prosecution, the Court ruling promptly upon all questions without regard to prosecution or defense. The theory that no one is guilty until proven so is carried out in this trial and the Yda Addis is having as fair a trial as ever judge granted. The jurymen, and particularly those from up county, are getting weary, but once in the trial they must stay until the end. The per diem sufficient for city jurors is hardly enough to pay the daily expenses of the men from the upper county, and since they all are wasting valuable time, particularly at this time of the year, they needs must exert the patience of a Job to bear the burden with equanimity.

What a novel proposition it would be if the jury were becoming tired of their condition and adopt the present mode of remedy by going on a strike for higher pay.

Now comes city ordinance book wherein the writing of F. M. Gutierrez, then City Clerk, is recorded. The records date back to 1882 and 1871.

The defense wanted to introduce the ordinance record for the purpose of identifying writing by Gutierrez, continuing up to 1890. The Court overruled the objection of the District Attorney, and the expert was given the record for examination. The book of the Common Council with the signature of F. N. Gutierrez, City Clerk, likewise was handed to the expert for examination.

Mr. Boyce draws the attention of the expert to letters in the books, who declares they are entirely different from the writing in evidence.

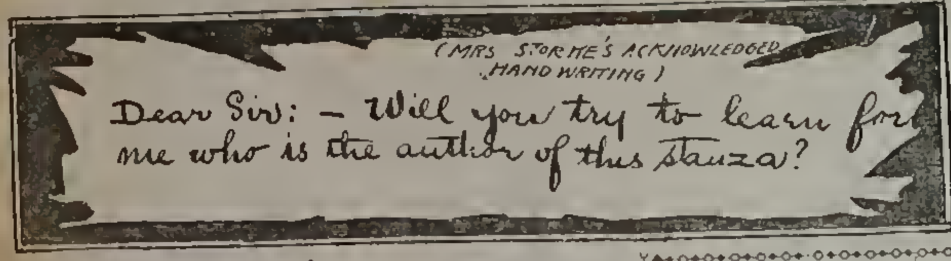
The word Frank the expert says is absolutely nothing like it.

The jury is given the book to compare with the writing in evidence. In the mean time the repartee between Boyce and the expert continues until the District Attorney remarks that the books are not in evidence; admitted by Boyce who takes the book from the jury. Subsequent pointing out of writing of Guiterrez the expert readily pronounces the characteristics nothing like the letters upon the blackboard.

Twenty-five minutes recess.

KYTKA DECLARES GUTIERREZ NEVER WROTE THE LETTERS

ACCUSED OF FORGING THE HAND OF MRS. STORKE



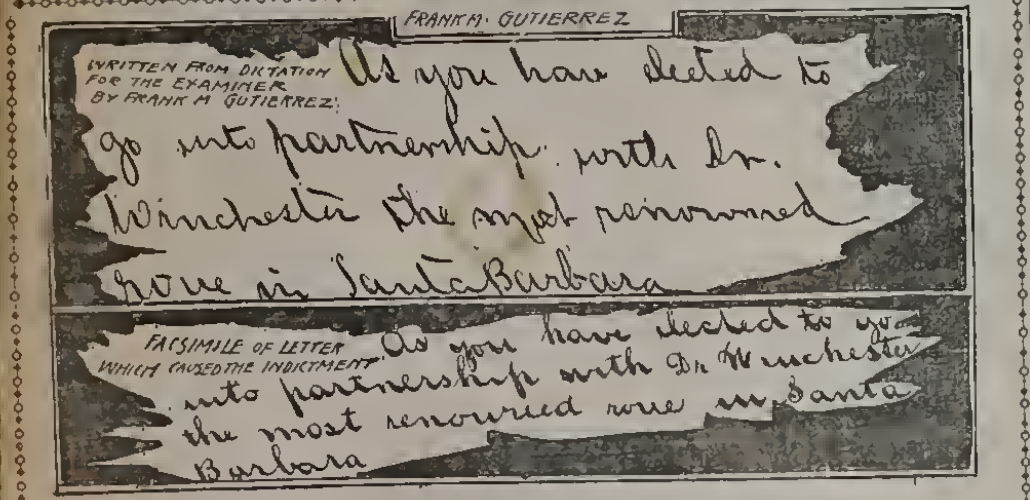
SANTA BARBARA, June 12.—Frank N. Gutierrez, whose name has been connected with the authorship of the anonymous letters which Mrs. Storke is accused of writing, is very much worked up over the matter. More specimens of his handwriting were introduced to-day by the defense, and the more Gutierrez hears of the matter the less printable become his comments.

This afternoon he prepared a species of public manifesto, declaring his innocence and disclaiming any knowledge whatever of the "Martha" case or any other anonymous letters whatever. But when he was upon the point of publishing his document, some one told him he would be fined for contempt if he did so. The document was suppressed.

Expert Kytka was on the stand all day, and derided all attempts to show a similarity between the indictment letter and the specimens shown him of Gutierrez' writing. He says there is no possibility of Gutierrez having written the anonymous letters and that the attempt of the defense to besmirch the Spanish professor's character seems to him wholly unwarranted.

The expert will probably remain on the stand for two or three days more if Attorney Boyce follows out his present way of cross-examining.

Juror Walter Richardson spent half an hour of his time this afternoon reading a newspaper in the box and Juror Murrell in the meantime had to be punched several times to keep him awake. The crowd on the benches was as large as ever, and, while eagerly awaiting sensations, amused itself in several corners by matching nickels.



EXHIBITS IN THE STORKE LIBEL CASE.

NEW CHARGES OF WRITING ANONYMOUS LETTERS ARE MADE BY MRS. YDA STORKE

SANTA BARBARA, June 13.—The defense in the Storke libel case is still carrying on the tedious cross-examination of Expert Kytka and seems to be going a long way around to get nowhere in particular. This morning things went so far that Judge Oster said he wished he could throw the Kytka blackboard out of the window.

Attorney Grant Jackson, Accused by Mrs. Storke.

This morning a sensation was sprung. A number of old record books from various offices in which Frank N. Gutierrez had been employed and along with them a small piece of paper, upon which appeared a few lines of writing, in another hand, were introduced in evidence.

The District Attorney at once objected, but the defense stated that the paper was the work of one of the two men who would be accused by Mrs. Storke of having written the anonymous letter.

"Whose writing is this?" asked District Attorney Squiers.

"It is that of Grant Jackson," was the answer.

If a bombshell had exploded in the courtroom could not have been more surprised. Every one gasped, for Jackson is one of the best known attorneys in Santa Barbara county and has always borne an excellent reputation.

"You don't mean to say," said Judge Oster, "that Grant Jackson wrote the anonymous letters—the Martha Case letter?"

The attorney for the defense replied: "That is what we think, and we mean to produce testimony to prove what we say."

Expert Kytka was shown the paper and said he would give his reasons later for believing that the persons who wrote it was not the one who wrote the letters upon which Mrs. Storke is indicted. Expert Kytka, during the afternoon, made a thorough study of the handwriting of Attorney Jackson and visited Mr. Jackson's office, where the alleged conspirator wrote for the expert several specimens of his penmanship. Kytka watched his manner of writing very closely and had him write with both pen and pencil. The experiments seemed to satisfy Kytka that his first theory was the correct one.

Jackson takes the matter complacently. He says he knows no charge can be established against him; but on account of his family he dislikes very much having been connected with so disagreeable a case.

Grant Jackson was born in Petaluma, where Major Jackson, his father, was at one time a well-known politician. He has practiced law here for eight years and has been one of the youngest leaders in his party. He was once a prominent candidate for the office of District Attorney. In January, 1894, he met Mrs. Storke for the first time, and became, with S. E. Crow, her counsel in the divorce case of C. A. Storke vs Yda Addis Storke. This was the hardest fought divorce case ever tried before the Superior Court of this county. As an outgrowth of their association during the trial Jackson and Mrs. Storke became friends and continued so until about a year ago, when Mrs. Storke suddenly, and with no apparent cause, cut off the friendship. At this time the fury of the city over the writing of the anonymous letters was at its height, and the name of Mrs. Storke was mentioned as their author.

Jackson, together with a number of others of Mrs. Storke's friends, persuaded her to leave for Mexico. She departed, at their solicitation, but upon returning displayed great bitterness against those very persons who had induced her to leave town for her own protection, and had even gone so far in three instances as to put up $50 apiece to pay the expenses of the trip. She now claims that in getting her to leave Jackson and others betrayed her friendship and were playing in with those who were afraid of having her in Santa Barbara, getting her to leave in order to place her in a bad light before the public.

It is understood that the defense has a number of other sensations to be sprung later in the case.

YDA ADDIS STORKE.

The Expert has the Floor to State the Case.

June 13 — 1899

The Court Tires of the Picturesque and Wishes the Blackboard Somewhere Else. As the Artist Cannot Work Without an Easel, How can He do His Sworn Duty?

— S. B.

It is said that F. N. Gutierrez is very indignant that he is suspected of having written those letters. Indeed how could anybody do such foolish things in the absence of a motive? But the defense does not claim that F. N. Gutierrez concocted those letters, but does claim that he copied them, and should such prove the fact, Frank Gutierrez has nothing to fear, because he might have copied thousands of the worst kind of letters in the capacity of a machine; not mailing the letters keeps him out of harm's way. Gutierrez claims that he has not written that kind of hand for many years, and the defense claims that he has even up to 1899.

It is held that the American people like fair play, hence give the defense the role that fair play demands.

In the Yda Addis trial we find the state with its power on one side and a woman with no power at all on the other side. Her attorneys are leaning to the belief that she is not guilty as charged, and since the woman has no money and evidently no friends, her defenders at the least deserve respect.

The trial commenced this morning with the expert on the stand, and evidence was elicited as to natural writing with a slight effort at disguise. Writing is shown the witness to define certain lines as those written by the person who had written the word "profession" in another part of the sheet.

The document signed by C. A. Thompson, not introduced as evidence, brings on a discussion and the defense makes the remark that Grant Jackson and Gutierrez may likely be brought upon the tapis as the writers of the anonymous letters. Witness holds that the same characteristics in writing for a period of twenty-five years change, but admits that some may not change. Is confronted with the records of the county. It will be remembered that F. N. Gutierrez was for a term of years deputy county clerk. Expert states that the Bs are similar, but not alike, though written by the same hand, but does not know whether they were written by the same pen; a B previously picked out by one of the attentive jurors, the expert can not state whether copied or not.

Force of habit and eccentricity are discussed somewhat boisterously. "Accidents will happen" even with the best writer with finished technique. The expert wants to answer the question upon the blackboard, and Boyce insists upon oral demonstration, which forthwith vocalizes. The expert again wants the blackboard. The Court is really getting tired of the blackboard and would like to see it thrown out of the window, but in that emergency the witness says he might as well be thrown out too.

Mr. Boyce remarks to witness' interruption that he, Boyce, is conducting the cross examination and demands answers to questions. The expert is contracted for unmeasured time.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Expert Kytka was again on the stand this afternoon and was being cross-examined by Mr. Boyce. The most of the afternoon was spent in trying to ascertain whether there were different kinds of ink used on any one exhibit. Mr. Kytka, after a thorough examination of the documents, was positive that only one ink had been used. After he had looked one of the exhibits quite thoroughly he handed it to the attorney saying that he could have that to make use of, to which Mr. Boyce thanked the expert for helping him along with the case.

The balance of the afternoon was taken up with a description of how retracing had been done, and that the base line was always shaded, showing how the writing had been disguised.

At 3 o'clock court adjourned so that some of the officials who had received invitations to attend the ceremonies of the laying of the corner stone at St. Anthony's College, could be present. The time lost this afternoon will be made up tomorrow as the trial will begin at 9 o'clock in the morning and at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

BARBARENOS ON THE QUI VIVE

Are Eagerly Awaiting Mrs. Storke's Defense.

All the Town Looking for Sensations in the Remarkable Case.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

SANTA BARBARA, June 11.—The prosecution in the Storke case was allowed to rest this afternoon when the defense got through with its cross-examination of Expert Kytka. The day was spent in going over things that have been repeated at least thirty times during the last week, and it was the opinion of many that the case would last for a month, but Senator Boyce broke off his questions at [illegible] o'clock and let Kytka go.

Chief Lees will now have his expert back in San Francisco. He has been telephoning him to return for the last week, as there are several cases upon which the expert's opinions are needed.

The prosecution at once rested its case, which has been running since May 29th. Four witnesses have testified that the handwriting of the anonymous letters is that of Mrs. Storke, and, to show animus, the District Attorney produced two witnesses who testified that Mrs. Storke had spoken bitterly of Winchester, saying that she hoped to live to accomplish his downfall. Kytka has endeavored to prove by a minute analysis of the writing and inks of the various letters that the accused wrote the whole series of anonymous writings.

The defense now stands to prove that Frank N. Gutierrez and Attorney Grant Jackson were the ones who wrote the letters, and Gutierrez will go upon the witness stand to-morrow morning.

The people here will continue absorbed in the case, and now that the defense has opened its batteries standing room will be at a premium in the courtroom.

Ex. May 4. 1900

ERROR PERMITS NEW TRIAL.

Supreme Court Gives Yda Addis Storke Another Chance.

The Supreme Court has granted a new trial to Yda Addis Storke, who was found guilty of libel in Santa Barbara and sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

Anonymous letters were sent to several parties in Santa Barbara, and circumstantial evidence alone convicted her. At the trial the defendant claimed that F. N. Gutierrez was the author of the libelous letters, and his handwriting was expertized. At the close of this evidence the District Attorney moved to strike it from the files, and the Court made the order. The Supreme Court holds that this is reversible error, saying that the testimony and evidence should have gone to the jury, to be judged by them.

HANDWRITING WITHOUT END

Volumes of It Brought Into Yda Addis Trial.

RECORDS FROM THE CITY HALL

Clerk Crane Called and Brings Books of F. N. Gutierrez's Writing---A Tired Court Room.

The third week of the Yda Addis Storke trial began with the court, the attorneys and the jury much brightened by the Sunday's rest. Nevertheless the long, weary grind of the trial is telling on everyone connected with it; even Expert Kytka, usually as cheerful as a lark, begins to show that he is tired. He has now been on the witness stand since last Monday, with the short interruption Thursday when Mrs. Goss was called to testify. Mrs. Storke looks careworn and the attorneys are even more ready than usual to engage in forensic dueling, that is sharpened more by sarcasm than wit. Members of the jury wear an air of resignation. Though some of them would like much to return to raking their meadows sweet with hay, or to whatever duties call them, they accept the fate which they cannot escape with the best grace possible. Judge Oster alone seems not to have been affected by the tiresome proceedings; but then, he's used to it. He enjoys the tilts between Senator Boyce and Expert Kytka or the attorneys as much as ever and not infrequently does he add a bon mot that puts the laugh on the warring attorneys.

It is the accepted belief now that the trial will last through the present week, at least.

MORNING SESSION.

At the opening of Monday morning's session, Expert Kytka again took the stand for the continuation of the cross-examination. Attorney Boyce called the attention of the witness to the disputed handwriting and asked if he had discovered any peculiar characteristics of the writer in the class of writing shaded on the base line. The witness noted that the small letter "a" never began with a straight upstroke, while the letters "r," "t" and "i" begin with a straight upstroke.

He was then asked to take the Dr. Martha Case letter and point out these different characteristics. This the expert proceeded to do, though he stated that he could explain much better by illustration on the blackboard. After he had reached the word "kept" in the sixth line, he was asked to illustrate on the board how the letter "p" had been retraced to destroy the individuality of the writer, as he asserted.

He was then asked if the hook of the "k" in the word "acknowledged" was similar to the hook of the letter "p" as shown in greatly enlarged form. He replied that there was no similarity.

Attorney Boyce then requested the expert to draw the letter "f" as peculiarly formed in one word of the Case exhibit; Kytka did so, and stated that the letter as so formed was found but twice in that letter; that it resembled the letter as printed in the Italian language, and also the italic letter "f" in English. It was a style of "f" that might be used by a person wishing to disguise his handwriting by printing, it might be that the person became familiar with the style from being around newspaper offices.

"Then you infer that the person who wrote that was familiar with newspaper offices?"

"No, sir. I said he might have become familiar with that style from being around the offices.

He was handed another document, and asked to examine a letter "f" appearing therein, and point out if there was any similarity with Case letter "f."

"I discover nothing; when you begin to analyze it there is no resemblance in the details."

The small letter "b" was next taken up for comparison. One with a broken back was especially noted by the attorney, and he asked Kytka to trace it on the board.

"There is a much better point in your favor here," said Kytka as he went to work with his chalk.

"I am much obliged to you," returned Mr. Boyce graciously. "I may get something out of you at last."

When the expert had finished, Mr. when persons write a great deal, they are liable to let slip the natural characteristics, toward the end?"

"That's where we catch them."

"That is what I thought."

The letter "f" was taken up as a subject for consideration, just as the court announced adjournment.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

When Expert Kytka had completed the tracing of the letter "f" on the board, showing a break in the up stroke, Mr. Boyce asked to be shown the original letter under the microscope. He then asked to what cause the witness laid the break in this letter and in the preceding letter "p," the word being "completely."

"The inference would be," said Kytka, "that the writer had changed the position of the pen. The pen went into the paper, and its progress was stopped by striking the fiber of the paper too deeply."

"I will ask you to look at the same exhibit and observe the interlineation 'at all hours,' and ask you what you infer as to the manner in which it was done?"

"I would infer that it was written after the line below was written."

"The whole letter gives signs of having been laboriously written?"

"No, sir; only in the down strokes, which are heavily shaded. Some letters are slowly formed and others are more rapidly written." Kytka then pointed out certain letters in which there was no tremor, indicated that they were written in the more natural hand of the author.

The expert, when his attention was called to the letter "w" in the word "with," stated that the visible extra stroke might have been written with the intention of forming the letters "a" or "w."

"All these things," asked Mr. Boyce, "are to a degree speculative? These inferences are drawn from probabilities? The track is left unconsciously—"

"That track is an elephant's track," interrupted Kytka.

"That is it. It is on the color of the elephant that we differ."

"Please look at the last ten lines," continued Mr. Boyce, "and taking into consideration the manner in which it is written, the insertion 'at all hours,' and the manner in which the words 'now read with' are constructed, the occurrence of the strokes in the word 'completely,' and the whole aspect of those ten lines, is it not indicative that the writer made this writing from a copy?"

"I can not swear."

"I ask you if it is not indicative of such?"

"I can not say; that is speculative. I do not speculate on anything."

The attorney was compelled to repeat time and again the question as to the last ten lines. He wanted the expert to tell whether, if the writer had in mind the ideas of the lines, would the errors that have been pointed out been made.

Witness failed to understand, asking to have the question simplified. He thought it could be made clearer.

"Maybe it could, but unfortunately I am not possessed of your intellect, and you must take me as nature made me."

Attorney Squier—We object to this sarcasm.

"There is no sarcasm intended," replied Mr. Boyce.

The Court—Maybe he means it; the objection is overruled.

City Clerk Crane was called to identify writings of F. N. Gutierrez in city records. Attorney Boyce asking to have Mr. Crane sworn while Expert Kytka was on the stand, for the purpose of comparing writing of Mr. Gutierrez with that of the letters.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier again objected to the introduction of this writing on the grounds that it was the direct evidence of the defense sought to be injected into the cross-examination.

Judge Oster asked if the writing of the records was the work of one person, saying that it was the meaning of his ruling Saturday that only one person's writing, not that of every Tom, Dick and Harry, might be presented by the defense to prove that the alleged writing of defendant was done by another person.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier objected to the writing being used on the grounds that it was done between the years 1872 and 1882.

Attorney Boyce replied that it was the purpose to introduce also writing by Mr. Gutierrez in 1899, the purpose of the other writing being to make a continuous exhibition.

The objection was overruled.

Kytka wanted to know if he would have to go through all of the records, there were 200 or 300 pages. The court assured the expert that he would not be expected to pass upon it all during the afternoon.

The blackboard was again called into use, Attorney Boyce calling attention to a figure representing a characteristic hook in letters found in the exhibits and asked if the same characteristic was not found in the writing of Mr. Gutierrez in the city records. The witness pronounced the writing absolutely dissimilar.

There was a great deal of amusement evoked by the witty and sarcastic sparring between witness and attorney, the court now and then putting in a side remark that sent a ripple of smiles over the audience.

After a short recess Expert Kytka replied that he had examined all of the "block" letters of the writing placed before them. He found no similraity in the writings. Other writing of Mr. Gutierrez contained in the city records was presented. The particular letter was "f," which again witness pronounced unlike that in the exhibits. He found nothing alike but that they were both "f's."

Another page of "f's" in an abstract written by Mr. Gutierrez were found dissimilar to that on the board, not being within "a thousand inches of the same," said witness.

The capital letter "B" in block writing was next referred to, with the same opinion being passed by the witness.

There arose over this letter a discussion of former testimony by the expert as to the same letter in the standards and disputed writings. Similar discussion over other letters continued until court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

THE STORKE CASE.

A Resume of the Evidence Now In.

June 13-1899

Expert Kitka Still Undergoing Examination.

The Storke libel case is now launched fully upon the third week of its lifetime and is still a most lively infant. During the two weeks that have just past so much testimony has been introduced that it may not be amiss now to run briefly over what has been done in order to refresh the memories of our readers as to the present state of the case.

The case against Mrs. Storke was brought on an indictment by the grand jury of this county. She is accused of having libelled Dr. R. F. Winchester in an anonymous letter written to Dr. Martha L. Case at one time an assistant of Winchester's. At the time this Case letter was written a number of other letters were sent anonymously about the town and it is a conclusion that the person who wrote the Case letter wrote the others also.

Dr. Martha Case was the first witness for the prosecution. She identified the letter of the indictment and testified as to her association with Winchester. Her relations with him had been very slight. Mrs. Storke came to her residence at one time to ask about those letters; representing herself as a reporter. At this time she had asked if the names of Hiram Pierce and I. G. Waterman did not appear in the Case letter. Dr. Case had not mentioned those names.

Mrs. George Thompson was the second witness. She swore that she had known Mrs. Storke in a friendly way for a long time and that at one time the two ladies had been very much interested in ousting C. Y. Ro[...] from our public schools. T[o] accomplish this they had agree[d] to write certain article for th[e] newspapers. But Frank Sand[s], editor of the News, had refus[ed] to take Mrs. Storke's copy as [he] knew her handwriting, so arti[-]cles were written by Mrs. Stork[e] and copied by Mrs. Thompso[n] in order that they might receiv[e] publication. These document[s] were accidentally preserved b[y] the witness. On the stand sh[e] swore to having seen part o[f] them written by the defendan[t] and that she knew Mrs. Storke's writing well enough to recog[-]nize it. She was shown the letters upon which Mrs. Stork[e] was indicted together with othe[r] anonymous letters and these sh[e] said were in the handwriting of the accused.

Several witnesses testified t[o] having received anonymous let[-]ters and they were identified i[n] court. Postmaster Maulsby also identified the postmarks on the letters as those of the Santa Barbara postoffice showing that they had all been posted here.

Clio E. Lloyd, of the Press, testified that Mrs. Storke had come to his office desiring him to publish certain stories about the anonymous letters at the time they were being sent about the city. She said that she had it in for Winchester and that she would follow him all the days of his life.

Frank Sands, editor of the News, testified that the defendant had at one time been in his employ. From the fact that she produced very remarkable copy this witness who had also seen her write knew her writing. He also gave testimony that the Case and other letters were written by Mrs. Storke. He also testified that at one time Mrs. Storke had told him that she could write three distinct styles of writing.

Mrs. Anna E. West had also been a friend of the accused. She had made every effort to prove the defendant innocent of the accusation of having written anonymous letters but when on one occasion she saw these letters and noted the hand in which they were written sh[e] came reluctantly to the conclu[-]sion that they were written b[y] Mrs. Storke. Through her [a] number of letters of Mrs. Stork[e] were introduced in evidence.

E. M. Pouraile gave testimon[y] of another kind. He had work[-]ed up the evidence for the Pe[o]ple and it was through his wor[k] that Mrs. Storke was indicte[d] by the Grand Jury. He als[o] testified to having found in h[er] room bits of tracing paper an[d] tissue paper which were simila[r] to pieces of paper upon whic[h] certain newspaper clippings se[nt] to Dr. Winchester had bee[n] pasted.

Frances D. Havens who live[s] on the outskirts of town sai[d] that he had known Mrs. Stork[e] several years and that he ha[d] seen her write and that member[s] of his family had receive[d] numerous letters from her. H[e] therefore knew her hand an[d] swore with Mrs. West, Mr[s.] Thompson and Mr. Sands th[at] the writing of the anonymou[s] letters was in the hand he ha[d] recognized when taking Mr[s.] Storke's letters from the pos[t] office.

Mrs. W. F. Goss, also an ol[d] friend of the accused, testifie[d] that at one time Mrs. Stork[e] had come to her and said th[at] she was trying to disguise her writing. She wished she [could] disguise it to such an extent that an expert could not recognize it instantly. She said there were some dozen people in Santa Barbara whom she wished to frighten with anonymous letters and at this time in 1897, she said she hoped to live long enough to accomplish Dr. Winchester's downfall and spoke very bitterly against him.

Handwriting expert Kitka has had the stand for a whole week. He took the admitted writings of Mrs. Storke and from a careful study of the details of construction of all of the smaller letters gave it as his opinion that the hand that wrote the admitted writings wrote the anonymous letters. In his cross examination he was confronted with certain writings of F. N. Gutierrez upon which action is still pending.

YESTERDAY'S SESSIONS.

Yesterday's work with the cross-examination of Kitka still going on was about as dull a proceeding as could well be imagined. The only thing of real interest during the day was the introduction of a number of old city records in which appeared writings made by Frank N. Gutierrez while in the city clerk's office here.

The whole questioning of the day seemed to be at random. First one subject was taken up and then another and the work dragged on with a weariness that made Mr. Kitka's head ache and set the county clerk to reading a magazine article. One of the jurors spent half a day reading a newspaper and some of the audience in one corner amused themselves by matching nickles.

The crowd was however a fair one. Every one is afraid to leave the court room for fear the sensation of the trial will occur while he is away. There seems to be some fascination about the place.

Mr. Gutierrez in the meantime is not at all pleased at being dragged into the nasty affair. As he hears more of it and wastes more time waiting about to go upon the witness stand his expressions of opinion in the matter become more forcible.

The unfortunate man is in a only Mr. Boyce had come to me and told me about the letters I could quickly have told him that I did not write them and would not write such things. He could have had my handwriting. I would write for him and the town is full of my handwriting. I do not know why they want to mix me up in this.

Mr. Gutierrez has prepared an affidavit saying that the Martha Case letter is not the work of his pen. But he was afraid yesterday to publish this as in his ignorance he said he was afraid of being fined for contempt should he say anything about the letter.

But Mr. Kitka is a tower of strength on poor Gutierrez' side. He has made a special study of the Spanish Professor's handwriting and says that there is no likeness of detail between it and the writing of Mrs. Storke or the disputed letters.

Mr. Boyce spent a considerable time in examining the witness upon the various writings of Gutierrez but the answers were all alike; Gutierrez had not written the Martha Case letter.

The trial goes on today as usual.

by the Sunday's rest. Nevertheless the long, weary grind of the trial is telling on everyone connected with it, even Expert Kytka, usually as cheerful as a lark, begins to show that he is tired. He has now been on the witness stand since last Monday, with the short interruption Thursday when Mrs. Goss was called to testify. Mrs. Storke looks careworn and the attorneys are even more ready than usual to engage in forensic dueling, that is sharpened more by sarcasm than wit. Members of the jury wear an air of resignation. Though some of them would like much to return to raking their meadows sweet with hay, or to whatever duties call them, they accept the fate which they cannot escape with the best grace possible. Judge Oster alone seems not to have been affected by the tiresome proceedings; but then, he's used to it. He enjoys the tilts between Senator Boyce and Expert Kytka or the attorneys as much as ever and not infrequently does he add a bon mot that puts the laugh on the warring attorneys.

It is the accepted belief now that the trial will last through the present week, at least.

MORNING SESSION.

At the opening of Monday morning's session, Expert Kytka again took the stand for the continuation of the cross-examination. Attorney Boyce called the attention of the witness to the disputed handwriting and asked if he had discovered any peculiar characteristics of the writer in the class of writing shaded on the base line. The witness noted that the small letter "n" never began with a straight upstroke, while the letters "r," "p" and "t" begin with a straight upstroke.

He was then asked to take the Dr Martha Case letter and point out these different characteristics. This the expert proceeded to do, though he stated that he could explain much better by illustration on the blackboard. After he had reached the word "kept" in the sixth line, he was asked to illustrate on the board how the letter "p" had been retraced to destroy the individuality of the writer, as he asserted.

He was then asked if the hook of the "k" in the word "acknowledged" was similar to the hook of the letter "p" as shown in greatly enlarged form. He replied that there was no similarity.

Attorney Boyce then requested the expert to draw the letter "f" as peculiarly formed in one word of the Case exhibit; Kytka did so, and stated that the letter as so formed was found but twice in that letter; that it resembled the letter as printed in the Italian language, and also the italic letter "f" in English. It was a style of "f" that might be used by a person wishing to disguise his handwriting by printing. It might be that the person became familiar with the style from being around newspaper offices.

"Then you infer that the person who wrote that was familiar with newspaper offices?"

"No, sir. I said he might have become familiar with that style from being around the offices.

He was handed another document, and asked to examine a letter "f" appearing therein, and point out if there was any similarity with Case letter "f."

"I discover nothing; when you begin to analyze it there is no resemblance in the details."

The small letter "h" was next taken up for comparison. One with a broken back was especially noted by the attorney, and he asked Kytka to trace it on the board.

"There is a much better point on your lover here," said Kytka as he went to work with his chalk.

"I am much obliged to you," returned Mr. Boyce graciously. "I may get something out of you at last."

When the expert had finished, Mr. Boyce selected another letter "h" in the same exhibit, and asked if it was not similar to the first.

"Why, bless your soul," exclaimed Kytka, "it is just the reverse. One has the right curve and the other has the left."

"Then, if they are the reverse, I shall ask the jury to examine them."

Mr. Boyce directed the attention of the witness to other "h's" with the broken back characteristic. Some were found in the closing lines of the Case letter.

"As an expert you are aware of the fact that in attempts to disguise a hand, or to simulate the writing of another, ... was stopped by striking the fiber of the paper too deeply.

"I will ask you to look at the same exhibit and observe the interlineation 'at all hours' and ask you what you infer as to the manner in which it was done?"

"I would infer that it was written after the line below was written."

"The whole letter gives signs of having been laboriously written?"

"No, sir; only in the down strokes, which are heavily shaded. Some letters are slowly formed and others are more rapidly written." Kytka then pointed out certain letters in which there was no tremor, indicated that they were written in the more natural hand of the author.

The expert, when his attention was called to the letter "w" in the word "with," stated that the visible extra stroke might have been written with the intention of forming the letters "n" or "u."

"All these things," asked Mr. Boyce, "are to a degree speculative? These inferences are drawn from probabilities? The trunk is left unconsciously—"

"That trunk is an elephant's trunk," interrupted Kytka.

"That is it. It is on the color of the elephant that we differ."

"Please look at the last ten lines," continued Mr. Boyce, "and taking into consideration the manner in which it is written, the insertion 'at all hours,' and the manner in which the words 'non read with' are constructed, the sameness of the strokes in the word 'completely,' and the whole aspect of those ten lines, is it not indicative that the writer made this writing from a copy?"

"I can not swear."

"I ask you if it is not indicative of such?"

"I can not say, that is speculative. I do not speculate on anything."

The attorney was compelled to repeat time and again the question as to the last ten lines. He wanted the expert to tell whether, if the writer had in mind the ideas of the lines, would the errors that have been pointed out been made.

Witness failed to understand, asking to have the question simplified. He thought it could be made clearer.

"Maybe it could, but unfortunately I am not possessed of your intellect, and you must take me as nature made me."

Attorney Squier—We object to this sarcasm.

"There is no sarcasm intended," replied Mr. Boyce.

The Court—Maybe he means it, the objection is overruled.

City Clerk Crane was called to identify writings of F. N. Gutierrez in city records, Attorney Boyce asking to have Mr. Crane sworn while Expert Kytka was on the stand, for the purpose of comparing writing of Mr. Gutierrez with that of the letters.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier again objected to the introduction of this writing on the grounds that it was the direct evidence of the defense sought to be injected into the cross-examination.

Judge Oster asked if the writing of the records was the work of one person, saying that it was the meaning of his ruling Saturday that only one person's writing, not that of every Tom, Dick and Harry, might be presented by the defense to prove that the alleged writing of defendant was done by another person.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier objected to the writing being used on the grounds that ...

There was a great deal of amusement evoked by the witty and sarcastic sparring between witness and attorney, the court now and then putting in a side remark that sent a ripple of smiles over the audience.

After a short recess Expert Kytka replied that he had examined all of the "block" letters of the writing placed before them. He found no similarity in the writings. Other writing of Mr. Gutierrez contained in the city records was presented. The particular letter was "f," which again witness pronounced unlike that in the exhibits. He found nothing alike but that they were both "f's."

Another page of "f's" in an abstract written by Mr. Gutierrez were found dissimilar to that on the board, not being within "a thousand inches of the same," said witness.

The capital letter "B" in block writing was next referred to, with the same opinion being passed by the witness.

There arose over this letter a discussion of former testimony by the expert as to the same letter in the standards and disputed writings. Similar discussion over other letters continued until court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

THE STORKE CASE.

A Resume of the Evidence Now In.

June 13-1899

Expert Kitka Still Undergoing Examination.

The Storke libel case is now launched fully upon the third week of its lifetime and is still a most lively infant. During the two weeks that have just past so much testimony has been introduced that it may not be amiss now to run briefly over what has been done in order to refresh the memories of our readers as to the present state of the case.

The case against Mrs. Storke was brought on an indictment by the grand jury of this county. She is accused of having libelled Dr. R. F. Winchester in an anonymous letter written to Dr. Martha L. Case at one time an assistant of Winchester's. At the time this Case letter was written a number of other letters were sent anonymously about the town and it is a conclusion that the person who wrote the Case letter wrote the others also.

Dr. Martha Case was the first witness for the prosecution. She identified the letter of the indictment and testified as to her association with Winchester. Her relations with him had been very slight. Mrs. Storke came to her residence at one time to ask about those letters; representing herself as a reporter. At this time she had asked if the names of Hiram Pierce and I. G. Waterman did not appear in the Case letter. Dr. Case had not mentioned those names.

Mrs. George Thompson was the second witness. She swore that she had known Mrs. Storke in a friendly way for a long time and that at one time the letters upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted together with other anonymous letters and these she said were in the handwriting of the accused.

Several witnesses testified to having received anonymous letters and they were identified in court. Postmaster Maulsby also identified the postmarks on the letters as those of the Santa Barbara postoffice showing that they had all been posted here.

Clio E. Lloyd, of the Press, testified that Mrs. Storke had come to his office desiring him to publish certain stories about the anonymous letters at the time they were being sent about the city. She said that she had it in for Winchester and that she would follow him all the days of his life.

Frank Sands, editor of the News, testified that the defendant had at one time been in his employ. From the fact that she produced very remarkable copy this witness who had also seen her write knew her writing. He also gave testimony that the Case and other letters were written by Mrs. Storke. He also testified that at one time Mrs. Storke had told him that she could write three distinct styles of writing.

Mrs. Anna E. West had also been a friend of the ... She had made every effort to prove the defendant innocent of the accusation of having written anonymous letters but when on one occasion she saw these letters and noted the hand in which they were written she came reluctantly to the conclusion that they were written by Mrs. Storke. Through her a number of letters of Mrs. Storke were introduced in evidence.

E. M. Pourade gave testimony of another kind. He had worked up the evidence for the People and it was through his work that Mrs. Storke was indicted by the Grand Jury. He also testified to having found in her room bits of tracing paper and tissue paper which were similar to pieces of paper upon which certain newspaper clippings sent to Dr. Winchester had been pasted.

Frances D. Havens who lives on the outskirts of town said that be had known Mrs. Storke several years and that he had seen her write and that members of his family had received numerous letters from her. He therefore knew her hand and swore with Mrs. West, Mrs. Thompson and Mr. Sands that the writing of the anonymous letters was in the hand he had recognized when taking Mrs. Storke's letters from the post office.

Mrs. W. F. Goss, also an old friend of the accused, testified that at one time Mrs Storke had come to her and said that she was trying to disguise her

BOTH JACKSON AND GUTIERREZ

Defense Will Try to Implicate Them in the Libel.

TO SAVE YDA ADDIS STORKE

Senator Boyce Unhesitatingly Tells Line of Defense---Another Day With Expert Kytka.

If there is any dash or dot, crook, curve or angle in any letter in any of the hundred and one exhibits of handwriting in evidence in the Yda Addis Storke trial that has not received its full share of attention during the cross-examination of Expert Witness Kytka by Senator Boyce, that little dash or dot, crook, curve or angle may be sure that it will not be overlooked, if it is discernible to the eye aided by a powerful microscope. The attitude of the defense in the more or less notorious case leads to the belief that this assertion can be made in truth, and this same attitude of the defense leads also to the belief that the jovial face of the presiding judge will be wrinkled and the jury bearded like Rip Van Winkle of popular legend before the trial is concluded. The court, attorneys, jury and habitues of the court room are receiving a valuable lesson in the profession of writing, if they will live long enough after to profit by it.

To paraphrase a familiar parliamentary phrase, court held a short session yesterday, reported progress and was summoned to meet again at 9 o'clock this morning.

MORNING SESSION.

The important phase of the morning session of the Yda Addis trial Tuesday was a statement made by Attorney Boyce as to the line of defense to be pursued. It was brought out with no hesitancy that the defendant will claim that the anonymous letters, or part of them, were written by F. N. Gutierrez and Grant Jackson.

Expert Kytka was again on the stand, and Attorney Boyce renewed the cross-examination by handing the witness a page from exhibit 12, one of the disputed letters, and a note that had not been previously introduced. District Attorney Squire objected to the introduction of more writings that were not vouched as being in the handwriting of any particular person. Mr. Boyce explained that the defense would contend that the writer of the writing in question was the writer of certain of the disputed writings; that the writing in dispute was by two persons; that they were the product of two different persons that the defense expected to identify the writings. Mr. Boyce added that there had been no thought and no suggestion that the person who signed the document introduced Saturday was the author of the disputed writings, but that the document in question had been introduced for the purpose of identifying comparison therein.

Mr. Squire suggested that when writings are introduced in evidence the name of the writer should be given. He asked Mr. Boyce for what purpose the writings were brought into the case, and the attorney for the defense, opening the session of the day, when he announced:

"We claim that Grant Jackson and F. N. Gutierrez wrote certain of these letters."

The Court—Do you contend that Grant Jackson had anything to do with the writing of the Martha Case letter?

Mr. Boyce—We think so, your honor.

The expert was asked if the words "profession or professional" inserted in one of the anonymous letters were not in the same handwriting as the note handed to him, said to be in the writing of Grant Jackson. He replied that there was no resemblance.

"Will your familiarity with handwriting and your ability as an expert make you competent to judge as to the fixity of a person's writing?"

"Yes, sir."

"If you had a person's writing containing characteristics and idiosyncrasies that appear in the same person's writing ten, fifteen, twenty or twenty-five years later, what would you say in regard to the writing of that person?"

"I would say that he is a curiosity."

"What would you say in regard to the writing?"

"There is no man who has all of the same characteristics in his writing now that he had twenty-five years ago."

"I did not say all of the characteristics. What would you say of you found some of these characteristics?"

"They are very fixed."

"Such a persistency of habit would make it very difficult to throw off, to disguise the writing?"

"Yes, sir."

Books J, L, and M of deeds from the county recorder's office, said to contain the handwriting of F. N. Gutierrez, were introduced by Attorney Boyce, and the witness' attention was directed to certain characteristics and the formation of certain letters.

When one new exhibit was shown him, he asked to be given until 2 o'clock that he might study it.

He was asked if the capital letter "D" on an envelope of one of the anonymous letters did not have the appearance of being copied.

"That 'D' is—that is hard to say, but it is pretty free movement," said the witness.

"Then we will ask the jury to examine and see how free the movement is."

In the discussion over this letter "D," the expert begged the attorney to "please let me go to the blackboard, I can illustrate it so much more plainly," but Mr. Boyce was obdurate and insisted upon a verbal explanation of the ten different characteristics upon which Kytka based his opinion that the person who wrote the standards wrote the letter "D."

Kytka, throughout this stage of the examination, reaffirmed his belief that time could be saved by blackboard illustration and finally remarked that he did not care to be on the stand a month.

"Your agony for the taxpayers is very generous," commented Mr. Boyce.

"My mode runs properly here," replied Kytka.

"You had no objection to being on the stand for four and one half days, on direct examination?"

"I had a contract for six hours on the witness stand."

"But that did not prevent you from continuing four days and a half on the witness stand."

"Well, the sheriff was too close, and I did not care to come back in handcuffs."

The attention of witness was called to his direct testimony, where he had shown that in such words as "public" the letter "c" was above the line.

"Now, I will call your attention to Book K of deeds, and to the word 'public' and ask you if the letter 'c' is not above the line?"

Mr. Kytka examined the page, and noted: "All the letter 'c' are connected. I don't you remember I said they were disconnected?"

"I don't remember, but what I ask you is, if the letter 'c' is not above the line?"

"I find the letter 'c' is elevated above the line."

Kytka added some side remarks that aroused counsel, and in the exchange of compliments, Mr. Boyce told Kytka that he did not like his manner on the stand, and Kytka replied that he did not like the attorney's style of cross-examination.

The expert was asked what he had meant in the direct examination when he had said: "It is not fair to compare that, as it is an entirely different occupation," in reference to a character to which a juror had called his attention.

Kytka stated that he wanted to give the juror a fair study of the letter in question, and that the one noted was a different letter.

"I ask you whether some purpose has been to establish a theory or to discuss the matter and see where the theory leads you to?"

"Yes, sir. I act impartially."

"You are not under a private retainer, are you?"

"I should like to know where it comes from."

"I ask you, are you under a private retainer?"

"No, sir."

He was asked if experts did not sometimes differ as to theories when examining disputed handwriting.

"Sometimes they differ, except in some lines."

"The disputed writings in this case are in those lines, where there could be no difference of opinion by experts?"

Kytka agreed with the statement of counsel, adding that he was not surprised that people who were familiar with the writing of the standards should recognize the writing in the other exhibits.

In reply to a question as to the manner of experting writings Kytka said that he ignored the phraseology entirely, and simply examined the writing as to the manner of its execution.

"You have stated that in the letter written to Mr. Taggart two different kinds of ink were used. Tell the jury why or how you are able to say that it is written with two kinds of ink."

"The microscope tells me. Certain inks have coloring matters that appear in different thicknesses. When I examine a letter I do not read it, I examine it stroke by stroke, and then the ink is a separate matter. Now the Kaldue letter, on the envelope, has two kinds of ink. The writer evidently did not know the full address, when the '11' was written and then added the '25' afterward."

"There is a difference in the writing of the figures '11' and '25,' is there not?"

"No, sir."

The court then adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Attorney Boyce began the afternoon session by asking Expert Kytka:

"Do you find any breaks in the writing or addresses on any other envelopes?"

"The two inks used on the Kaldue letter and an obliteration on another resembling the action of some acid."

The witness' attention was called to the formation of a letter "g" in The Press letter.

"I find that the heavy stroke is retraced; also the heavy stroke on the letter 'a.'"

"Was it done with the same kind of ink?"

"Yes, sir. They are retraced with the same ink."

"I call your attention to other letters in the word 'personality.' Are there any letters retouched?"

"Yes sir, they are retouched on the base line, after the writing was finished, for the purpose evidently of disguising the writing."

"The writer didn't neglect those base lines, did he?"

"No, sir. They are all retraced."

The witness used a newspaper term in speaking of some of the writing, when he was asked if he had ever had any experience in a newspaper office, to which he replied that he once had charge of the art department on the Chicago Tribune.

Retracings, blottings and shadings occupied the time until 3 o'clock, when court adjourned for the afternoon, to allow Judge Oster and others to attend the ceremonies of laying the St. Anthony's college corner stone at the Mission. To make up for time lost, Judge Oster said court would convene at 9 o'clock this morning, and the noon recess will be shortened a half hour.

EWS: SANTA BARBARA, WED

THE STORKE CASE.

The Cross Examination Wearisome.

An Intimation of a Sensation Sprung.

The Storke case has come to a stage where with the exception of now and then some important item it is not worth listening to and is a decided bore. The defense is spending days in apparently useless cross questionings of expert Kitka. He has laid down his opinions a hundred times during the last week and all the questions that are asked him merely bring out the same old points repeated over and over again.

The jury seems to be thoroughly wearied of the present state of affairs.

Yesterday afternoon when court was dismissed at three o'clock there wasn't a juror who didn't get out into the open air with the greatest of alacrity.

And nothing seems to come of all of this useless delay. Kitka merely repeats the things he has so often explained and it seems as if his answers worse for the defense than for the prosecution. The defense if it can keep itself by his testimony has a right to take it but there seems to be something dragging somewhere that is provoking.

The crowd on the benches keeps up to its usual numbers. Everybody is anxiously waiting for the Kitka farce comedy to come to an end and for the developments which are then supposed to be coming.

JACKSON IMPLICATED.

The only thing of importance that took place yesterday was the accusation of Attorney Grant Jackson as the chief conspirator in the plot to ruin Mrs. Storke. The conspiracy is gradually unfolding itself.

A number of old records from the county recorder's office were put into the case yesterday and with them a document upon which appeared some of the writing of Mr. Jackson.

The defense handed the document to the expert and asked him to look at the writing. Kitka smiled and the district attorney objected to the introduction of the document.

Mr. Boyce in stating his position said that it was the intention of the defense to charge two men here with having written the anonymous letters and that the document in issue contained writing of one of the men.

Mr. Squire. Whose writing is this?

Mr. Boyce. It is that of Grant Jackson.

Judge Oster. Do you think that Grant Jackson wrote the Martha Case letter?

Mr. Boyce. We think so your honor and we shall show evidence in support of what we think.

There was a death like hush in the court room and then somebody laughed.

The Kitka business was then resumed once more and continued to such a length that Judge Oster finally remarked that he might throw the blackboard out of the window. Mr. Kitka said that in such a case they might as well pitch him (Kitka) out after it, and so the case wagged on its weary way until adjournment at three.

LOCAL COMMENT.

The bringing in of Jackson's name at this time is causing considerable comment and most of those who have anything to say claim that it is done to raise a doubt in the minds of the jury and to secure a disagreement. The general opinion seems to be that both Jackson and Gutierrez are innocent of the charges brought against them.

Mr. Jackson has very little to say in the matter. He was not surprised at being brought into the affair as he had been warned that such would be the case. He protests his innocence.

"MAMMY" IS IN A CORNER.

MUST FILE SCHEDULE AND AN INVENTORY.

JUDGE TROUTT ISSUES AN ORDER MRS. PLEASANT MUST OBEY.

Sheriff and Creditors Are Ready to Take Charge of All the Property She Possesses.

Judge Troutt has ordered Mrs. Mary E. Pleasant, the old colored woman who for years has been the manager of the Bell household, to file in the Superior Court by to-morrow a schedule and inventory of her debts, liabilities and assets, she having been declared insolvent. Judge Troutt has directed the Sheriff to take possession of all of her property, except such as may be by law exempt from execution, and of all her papers, deeds, vouchers and books of account. The Sheriff is to keep them until an assignee is elected by the creditors. Judge Troutt has set the meeting of the creditors for the morning of June 22d at 10 o'clock in his courtroom.

In the findings which have been signed by Judge Troutt he says that it is not true that any fraudulent representations were made by Lucius L. Solomons to "Mammy" Pleasant to secure from her the deed to property at the northwest corner of Washington and Stone streets and on Sutter street, east of Jones, which she gave him in 1897. "Mammy's" story in connection with that transaction is declared by the Court to be untrue. She had charged Solomons with deceit and had claimed to be still the rightful owner of the property. The ranch in Sonoma county which "Mammy" deeded to Mrs. Teresa Bell in 189[illegible] still belongs to Mrs. Pleasant, the Judge decided, and is to be seized by the creditors, the deed to Mrs. Bell having been made to defraud them.

GUTIERREZ MAKES DENIAL

Says He Knows Nothing of the Anonymous Storke Case Letters.

STRANGE WORDS USED IN THEM

He Swears He Does Not Even Know the Meaning of One of Them.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 15.—Frank N. Gutierrez has occupied the witness stand all day in the Storke trial. This morning he identified several thousand pages of writing in old City and County record books as his work. These voluminous writings were introduced by the defense as specimens to show the persistency of certain characteristics in Gutierrez's penmanship.

The witness' answers were direct and straightforward, and his story bore the stamp of truthfulness. He said that he had never seen the "Martha" Case letter or any of the other letters in the case and had never even seen writing of the kind. He was closely questioned as to his relations with Winchester, Jackson and C. A. Storke. His acquaintance with Jackson was merely a speaking one. He never had any money dealings with either Jackson, Storke or Winchester, and none of them had ever spoken to him about writing anonymous letters. He had once been to Jackson's office to take an acknowledgment, but had found Mrs. Storke there and she had told him the attorney was not in. The tendency of the questions was to implicate not only Attorney Jackson, but Storke and Winchester as having induced Gutierrez to write the anonymous letter. Gutierrez, however, swore that he knew nothing of the fact that there were anonymous letters in the case until last Saturday, when he was told so by an "Examiner" correspondent and asked to write a part of one of the letters from dictation. He then learned for the first time the meaning of the word "roue," which is used in the Martha Case letter, in connection with the name of Dr. Winchester.

SANTA BARBARA.

High School Class Day—Storke Case Progresses.

SANTA BARBARA, June 15.—[Regular Correspondence.] The High School seniors held their class-day exercises last evening with great success. Channel City Hall was crowded. The exercises concluded with John Kendrick Bangs's laughable one-act farce "A Dramatic Evening." The cast included some clever amateurs. The graduation exercises will take place on the 18th.

Messrs. J. W. Taggart, Jarret T. Richards and C. W. Rasey were elected last night to fill vacancies on the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce. They take the places of directors who have left the city. Committees are at work arranging for the entertainment of teachers during the N. E. A. convention. Santa Barbara will offer many features to attract visitors.

The cross-examination of Expert Kitka in the Storke trial came to an end late yesterday afternoon and the defense began its case. F. N. Gutierrez was placed upon the stand to identify certain writings reputed to be his. When the process of identification began it developed that Gutierrez, while in the County and City Clerks' offices, had written several volumes of deeds and ordinances. All of these were introduced, and still other writings went in this afternoon, making in all thousands of pages, some of them written as long ago as 1870. The object of the defense in bringing in all these books is to show the persistency of certain traits of handwriting through specimens taken from widely-separated periods of time. Expert Kitka was recalled for ten minutes today to give an opinion upon the similarity of the writing of Gutierrez to the writing of the anonymous letters. He said there were no marks of identity although there were some accidentally similar strokes. He stated it as his opinion that the anonymous letters were not written by either Gutierrez or Attorney Jackson. The hearing of testimony will probably be concluded tomorrow.

DEFENSE NOW HAS THE FLOOR

Cross-Examination of Expert Kytka Concluded Yesterday.

GUTIERREZ ON THE STAND

Prosecution in Yda Addis Storke Case Rests After Two and a Half Weeks of the Trial.

The 9 o'clock session Wednesday of the Superior court had a discouraging effect upon the crowd of spectators that daily throngs the court room. Possibly, too, the habitue is tiring of the scientific study of chirography, and is waiting for the expert to finish, before resuming his or her regular attendance at the Yda Addis trial. Yesterday morning, almost for the first time since the trial commenced, the defendant was the only woman present.

At the afternoon session Senator Boyce for the defense concluded cross-examination of Expert Kytka, who after a short re-direct examination by Prosecuting Attorney Squier, was excused from further service on the witness stand, excepting that he will be recalled this morning to report on a manuscript that he was to examine during the night. Mr. Kytka has put in nine full days on the witness stand. After recalling Elio L. Lloyd, the prosecution rested its case, and the defense called as its first witness F. N. Gutierrez.

Attorney Boyce continued the cross-examination of Kytka. The letter "e" in the word "decoyed" in The Press letter was drawn upon the board by the expert, and he was asked what he would say as to the characteristics of the letter.

"The letter 'e' was redrawn, twice, nearly the entire letter. Nearly the entire letter was made, rewritten."

"Then the letter 'e' is not the result of a continuous process of writing?"

"The lower portion is a clear stroke, chiefly; the upper portion of the letter is retraced, and the down stroke is separate. The retracing begins on the upper portion of the letter."

He was directed to examine the letter "e" in the word "ostracised" and explain the difference in construction. He said that the letter "e" was disfigured. Other "e's" in the same letter were also compared. The letter "e" in the word "Winchester," in the Dr. Martha Case letter was selected for further comparison.

Kytka was then asked if he discovered any characteristic in the formation of the letter "e" that would enable him to say that the writer of it was the writer of the standards. He replied that he did not, as the "e's" were all bogus.

A little tilt between witness and counsel occurred at this point, and Kytka was directed to confine his remarks to answers of the attorney's questions.

Book K of deeds was produced, and the expert was asked to examine the letter "e" in a number of words throughout the volume. When the first word was indicated to him, Kytka broke out with:

"You don't mean to say that this thing looks anything like—"

"I mean to ask you if that 'e' looks anything like the 'e's' you have been describing?"

"I am either blind, or don't know my business. I don't see anything like it."

"There are none so blind as those who won't see, Mr. Kytka."

Of the "e's" in another word in Book K of deeds, witness said:

"It is absolutely nothing like it, absolutely nothing like it. It is connected, that is all." The examination was continued at some length along this line, with the same result. Mr. Kytka stated that the "e's" were uniform, that they have no up stroke. "It would be the same if you showed me one thousand."

"Does not exhibit 'A' indicate the use of more than one kind of ink?"

"No, sir; one ink all the way through."

"I will call your attention to the Taggart letter, and your testimony that that letter had been written in two different kinds of ink. Point out in the letter the place where the change or distinction takes place."

Witness then reiterated his direct testimony on this point. He had not examined all of plaintiff's exemplars as to the ink used and Attorney Boyce requested him to do so. He stated that The Morning Press letter was not in the same kind of ink as most of the other letters he [illegible] at the afternoon session.

The standard exhibits, or such of them as were written in ink, were taken up in consecutive order. No. 1 was declared to be written in an entirely different ink, designated No. 3 ink; the same ink was found on the envelope of the Independent letter. No. 2 was written with the same kind of ink. No. 3 had two different kinds of ink, No. 1 ink being used in writing the letter, and No. 2 ink in making the corrections and touching up. The expert then remarked:

"I can call your attention to a point in the Taggart letter. The underlining on the first line of the third page of the letter is No. 1 ink; the ink in the words themselves is a new ink, No. 4, so far not found in any other exemplar."

"How far in this letter, is the ink, No. 4, used?"

"With the exception of the underlining, this kind of ink extends to line 17 on page 3. Page 4 of the letter was declared written in ink No. 1, page 1 was written with No. 4 ink; page 2 was written with No. 4 ink, page 5 with No. 1 ink.

Witness then went back to the standard exhibits, passing upon the different kinds of ink used. A number of the writings were laid aside, as some were written in pencil, and others in ink were on colored paper, and the expert did not care to express an opinion as to them, the color of paper confusing the coloring of the ink.

The same course was followed with defendant's exhibits. No. 1, an envelope addressed to Sheriff Stewart, was said to be in ink of a quality similar to ink No. 1. Exhibit No. 2 was in pencil. Exhibit No. 3, another envelope addressed to Sheriff Stewart, was of yellow paper. A signature of the defendant, written in 1890, was declared to be in an ink entirely different from any of the exemplars. Another exhibit of the defendant's, No. 22, was said to be written with the same quality of ink as the Martha Case letter. "Of course, I don't say it was taken from the same ink bottle, but was of the same quality."

"You remember referring to the letters 'lie,' and the letter 'i' as being above the line?"

"Yes, sir."

"I call your attention to the letters 'lic' in Book J of deeds, in this word 'public,' and ask you if you discover any characteristics of the same nature as in the letters 'lie' in the exhibits?"

"The letter 'i' is somewhat higher than the letters 'l' and 'e.'"

"Do you say that these letters have the same characteristics as in the exhibits?"

"No, sir."

"Where do they differ?"

"Oh, in a great many points. Let me illustrate."

"All right; I'll call your attention to another," naming page and line.

"The letter 'i' is on the same level with the letter 'l.'"

"Is it on the same level as the letter 'e'?"

"No, sir."

In looking over the pages of the big book, Kytka remarked:

"Nearly every one of these words is smeared with a pencil."

"What do you mean to insinuate? Do you mean to say that they have been tampered with?"

"It shows only a careless manner of handling exhibits."

"I ask you if that scratch has or could alter the ink lines of this exhibit?"

"No, sir. It simply shows that your expert is careless."

The court here adjourned until 1:30 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The broken back "b" was the subject of discussion when the court reconvened at 2 o'clock. Kytka was shown some letters of that character, in some of the old records written by Gutierrez, and asked if they were not identical with the letters pointed in the exhibits. "They are alike," he responded, "but one is made with one stroke, and the other with two."

The word "acknowledged" was also found in one of these old records, and brought forward for comparison with the enlarged photograph of the same word taken from disputed and admitted exemplars of the defendant's handwriting. Kytka said that the word in the Gutierrez writing was divided seven times, while in the others the word was divided six times in different places, which he pointed out. The expert commented on the beauty of the writing, and when shown more recent writing of Mr. Gutierrez, he said there was no comparison; that the writer did not have his old time ability; that his muscles were then elas[tic] [illegible] that now they are sol[id] [illegible] entire documents were written by Gutierrez. He said he would require time for that, and was given until the following morning.

Other sheets of writings were submitted. He said the writing showed another touch altogether. He found some characteristics of the writing that resembled those of the writing already discussed.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier thought that before this writing was offered for identification Mr. Boyce should have learned by whom the writing was done.

The court replied that it would involve the examination of witnesses under oath to ascertain this, and the writings were admitted.

Another sample of Mr. Gutierrez' writing was handed the expert, to tell whether he could discover similarities in this and other writing. He found some little marks that were alike, he said, but the general style of the writing was altogether unlike.

"Mr. Kytka, when did you first testify in court as an expert?"

"It was in St. Louis, several years ago, in a patent case in which there was forgery. It was more a test in chemistry than writing. My side won, too."

"Oh, it did? I thank you for the information. Did your side ever lose?"

"Yes, sir."

"Not when you had anything to do with the case."

The court called Mr. Boyce to order for this line of questioning, saying that it was but a waste of time.

"When did you first give testimony as a hand writing expert?"

"It was the Martin will case, in San Francisco, in 1895 or 1896."

There was another haggle over the exact date of this trial, after which Mr. Boyce announced that he had finished with the witness.

On redirect examination by Prosecuting Attorney Squier Expert Kytka was again called to pronounce up the Nellie Maguire letter. Witness reaffirmed that it was in the same writing as the other anonymous letters. It was admitted in evidence.

Attorney Squier—Mr. Kytka, have you received any compensation for your services, or do you expect any other than [th]at you will receive from the county?"

"No, sir. I want only enough to get out of the county."

"Can you tell by examination of writing whether it was done by a man or a woman?"

"Yes, sir."

"In your judgment, was the Nellie Maguire letter written by a woman?"

"Yes, sir."

There was a further questioning as to letters that had already been explained, as to their positions and characteristics. The peculiarity of formation of double letters "ll" referred to in the Martha Case letter in cross-examination, was pronounced only an accident.

The witness was excused after one and one-half weeks on the stand. He will be recalled this morning for a short time.

Elio L. Lloyd was recalled.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier—You will remember, Mr. Lloyd, that you testified before as to conversations that you had with the defendant in The Press office, in which these anonymous letters were mentioned, and that Dr. Martha Case was also mentioned?"

Attorney Boyce objected to Lloyd being recalled, this being the third time that he had been on the witness stand, and was now again to bolster up the testimony given before.

The objection was overruled.

"Did Mrs. Storke during either conversation say that she knew Dr. Martha Case?"

Attorney Squier stated that the purpose of the examination was to show that at the time of these conversations Mrs. Storke knew the contents of the anonymous letters, but that she did not then know Dr. Case.

Mr. Lloyd—She did not at the second conversation say that she knew Dr. Martha Case, but upon subsequent conversations."

"When was that?"

"I think it was the next evening after I told her that I knew Dr. Case. She said she had been up to see her and found her a very fine young lady, as I had said. She said it was the first time she had met her."

The prosecution here rested.

DEFENSE OPENS CASE.

F. N. Gutierrez was called as the first witness for the defense. He said that he has lived in Santa Barbara about 4[illegible] years. He is a teacher of Spanish and a searcher of records. He was at one time deputy county recorder, in 1872 or thereabouts.

Books of county records were presented, the witness being asked by Attorney Boyce to designate pages that were entered by himself.

The remainder of the session, from before 4 o'clock until adjournment at [illegible] was occupied with this identification. Mr. Gutierrez pointed out hundreds of pages of his writing.

Court adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning.

NEWS: SANTA BARBARA, T[illegible]

THE STORKE CASE.

The Prosecution Finished Direct Examination.

Defense Opens and Examines Gutierrez.

The prosecution in the Storke case has at last rested or rather been allowed to rest its case. When court convened at 9 o'clock yesterday morning everybody thought that the cross-examination of Kitka would outlast this week as it did the last.

But suddenly at about four in the afternoon the defense said "That's all" to Kitka and with indescribable joy he gathered up his "traps," microscopes etc., and left the court room.

During the day he had been going over the same old routine of the days gone by and the testimony was neither interesting to himself or anyone else. There was a little variation in the morning when the ink subject was gone over some more but the day was uneventful.

Mr. Kitka will remain in the city several days longer and will then return to San Francisco where several important cases await his opinions. Chief Lees has been telephoning Mr. Kitka to come back for the last week.

Following the expert Mr. Lloyd went on the stand for a few minutes. He testified that after the visits from Mrs. Storke of which he gave an account some time ago, she returned once more to the Press office and there told him that she had called upon Dr. Case and had found her a very nice woman.

Lloyd was not cross examined and the prosecution rested its case.

DEFENSE BEGINS.

The defense began its case promptly and without the delay of opening remarks.

F. N. Gutierrez was called as the first witness but did not get anywhere. He said he was 5[illegible] years of age and that he had lived here 19 years. His profession is that of a searcher of records and he teaches Spanish.

He was asked to point out in county record books "J," "K," "L" and "M" of deeds the pages written by him while deputy county recorder here years ago. This he did occupying an hour and a half in the performance. The books were in fact written almost entirely by the witness and there will be no trouble about finding specimens of his writing.

The defense will proceed with the examination of Gutierrez at 10 o'clock this morning.

159

OWNS A COYOTE.

Expert Kitka Acquires a Playful Pet.

Expert Kitka is rapidly becoming one of our towns people. He has been, on the witness stand so long in the libel trial that everyone in town knows who he is, and in fact he has been here almost long enough to vote.

Having become fond of our city and its people, Mr. Kitka, who is a lover of animals, wished to secure some living pet here as a souvenir of his trip. He thought first of a dog but came to the conclusion that no dog he could procure here would thrive in company with a well known bull dog "Bitters" which he owns in San Francisco. Mr. Dunn would not part with any of his venison so Kitka compromised upon the juvenile coyote now chained in the hotel deer park. Mr. Dunn made the expert a present of the wiley infant on condition that the expert should assume all responsibilities of the ownership of the beast. It was also stipulated that if either Mr. Dunn, Captain Waters or F. M. Frye should within the next three weeks be accused of writing the celebrated anonymous letters, Kitka should continue upon the witness stand long enough to show that they could not have done so.

The coyote meanwhile is making himself a reputation equal to that of Henley Booth's dog "Ham" and Mr. Kitka has named his pet after a prominent member of the local bar. Last night the little fellow got loose and killed several of Mr. Dunn's chickens, the Mongolian pheasants fortunately escaping. But this is not the worst. The beast seems to have a mania for destruction. He has destroyed a leather sofa in his owner's room and has eaten the rubber corks out of a number of valuable bottles.

But Mr. Kitka's brother, George Kitka, has solved the matter and Don Coyote is to be presented to Chief Lees, of San Francisco, and will become the pet of Frisco's police department. Here Kitka can see him now and then and be reminded of the pleasant month he spent in this city testifying to the handwriting of prominent citizens.

The 9 o'clock session Wednesday of the Superior court had a discouraging effect upon the crowd of spectators that daily throngs the court room. Possibly, too, the habitue is tiring of the scientific study of chirography, and is waiting for the expert to finish, before resuming his or her regular attendance at the Yda Addis trial. Yesterday morning, almost for the first time since the trial commenced, the defendant was the only woman present.

At the afternoon session Senator Boyre for the defense concluded cross-examination of Expert Kytka, who after a short redirect examination by Prosecuting Attorney Squier, was excused from further service on the witness stand, excepting that he will be recalled this morning to report on a manuscript that he was to examine during the night. Mr. Kytka has put in nine full days on the witness stand. After recalling Clio L. Lloyd, the prosecution rested its case, and the defense called as its first witness F. N. Gutierrez.

Attorney Boyre continued the cross-examination of Kytka. The letter "e" in the word "deceived" in The Press letter was drawn upon the board by the expert, and he was asked what he would say as to the characteristics of the letter.

"The letter 'e' was redrawn, twice, nearly the entire letter. Nearly the entire letter was made, rewritten."

"Then the letter 'e' is not the result of a continuous process of writing?"

"The lower portion is a clear stroke, chiefly; the upper portion of the letter is retraced, and the down stroke is separate. The retracing begins on the upper portion of the letter."

He was directed to examine the letter "e" in the word "witnessed" and explain the difference in construction. He said that the letter "e" was disfigured. Other "e's" in the same letter were also compared. The letter "e" in the word "Winchester," in the Dr. Martha Case letter was selected for further comparison.

Kytka was then asked if he discovered any characteristic in the formation of the letter "e" that would enable him to say that the writer of it was the writer of the standards. He replied that he did not, as the "e's" were all bogus.

A little tilt between witness and counsel occurred at this point, and Kytka was directed to confine his remarks to answers of the attorney's questions.

Book K of deeds was produced, and the expert was asked to examine the letter "e" in a number of words throughout the volume. When the first word was indicated to him, Kytka broke out with:

"You don't mean to say that this thing looks anything like—"

"I mean to ask you if that 'e' looks anything like the 'e's' you have been describing?"

"I am either blind, or don't know my business. I don't see anything like it."

"There are none so blind as those who won't see, Mr. Kytka."

Of the "e's" in another word in Book K of deeds, witness said:

"It is absolutely nothing like it, absolutely nothing like it. It is connected, that is all." The examination was continued at some length along this line with the same result. Mr. Kytka stated that the "e's" were uniform, that they have no up stroke. "It would be the same if you showed me one thousand."

"Does not exhibit 'A' indicate the use of more than one kind of ink?"

"No, sir; one ink all the way through."

"I will call your attention to the Taggart letter, and your testimony that that letter had been written in two different kinds of ink. Point out in the letter the place where the change or distinction takes place."

Witness then reiterated his direct testimony on this point. He had not examined all of plaintiff's exemplars as to the ink used and Attorney Boyer requested him to do so. He stated that The Morning Press letter was not in the same kind of ink as most of the other letters he had examined. The Amy Bennett letter, the Patrick Flannigan letter, the Lloyd letter, the Miss McGilvray letter, the envelope addressed to Dr. Winchester containing newspaper clippings, and the Nellie Maguire letter of December 9th, were written in the same ink as The Press letters. Exhibit B, another envelope addressed to Dr. Winchester, was written in the same ink as the Martha Case letter. The Dr. Simpson letter was written with one kind of ink, but the first few lines showed a trace of different coloring, indicating that the pen had been dipped just previously in ink of another shade. He was asked to make a detailed examination of the inks in this letter during the noon hour, and report found in any other exemplar."

"How far in this letter, is the ink, No. 4, used?"

"With the exception of the underlining, this kind of ink extends to line 17 on page 3. Page 4 of the letter was declared written in ink No. 1, page 1 was written with No. 1 ink, page 2 was written with No. 1 ink; page 3 with No. 1 ink.

Witness then went back to the standard exhibits, passing upon the different kinds of ink used. A number of the writings were laid aside, as some were written in pencil, and others in ink were on colored paper, and the expert did not care to express an opinion as to them, the color of paper confusing the coloring of the ink.

The same course was followed with defendant's exhibits. No. 1, an envelope addressed to Sheriff Stewart, was said to be in ink of a quality similar to ink No. 1. Exhibit No. 2 was in pencil. Exhibit No. 3, another envelope addressed to Sheriff Stewart, was of yellow paper. A signature of the defendant, written in 1890, was declared to be in an ink entirely different from any of the exemplars. Another exhibit of the defendant's, No. 22, was said to be written with the same quality of ink as the Martha Case letter. "Of course, I don't say it was taken from the same ink bottle, but was of the same quality."

"You remember referring to the letters 'lie,' and the letter 'i' as being above the line?"

"Yes, sir."

"I call your attention to the letters 'lic' in Book J of deeds, in the word 'public,' and ask you if you discover any characteristics of the same nature as in the letters 'lic' in the exhibits?"

"The letter 'i' is somewhat higher than the letters 'l' and 'c.'"

"Do you say that these letters have the same characteristics as in the exhibits?"

"No, sir."

"Where do they differ?"

"Oh, in a great many points. Let me illustrate."

"All right; I'll call your attention to another," naming page and line.

"The letter 'i' is on the same level with the letter 'l.'"

"Is it on the same level as the letter 'c'?"

"No, sir."

In looking over the pages of the log book, Kytka remarked:

"Nearly every one of these words is smeared with a pencil."

"What do you mean to insinuate? Do you mean to say that they have been tampered with?"

"It shows only a careless manner of handling exhibits."

"I ask you if that scratch has so could alter the ink lines of this exhibit?"

"No, sir. It simply shows that your expert is careless."

The court here adjourned until 1:30 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The broken back "h" was the subject of discussion when the court reconvened at 2 o'clock. Kytka was shown some letters of that character, in some of the old records written by Gutierrez, and asked if they were not identical with the letters pointed in the exhibits. "They are alike," he responded, "but one is made with one stroke, and the other with two."

The word "acknowledged" was also found in one of these old records, and brought forward for comparison with the enlarged photograph of the same word taken from disputed and admitted exemplars of the defendant's handwriting. Kytka said that the word in the Gutierrez writing was divided seven times, while in the others the word was divided six times in different places, which he pointed out. The expert commented on the beauty of the writing, and when shown more recent writing of Mr. Gutierrez, he said there was no comparison; that the writer did not have his old time ability; that his muscles were then elastic and young, and that now they are old, well set, and the writing shows tremor.

During the questions following, Kytka showed a disposition to reply before the queries were put to him.

"If you would not anticipate what is coming, and when you meet the bridge go over it, we would get along much faster," suggested Mr. Boyre.

"I can some times swim across," remarked Kytka.

"Yes, I have no doubt you can swim a very turbid stream."

Witness was shown further specimens of the writing of F. N. Gutierrez and asked as to the age of the manuscripts, and if he could say whether or not the ings were admitted.

Another sample of Mr. Gutierrez' writing was handed the expert, to tell whether he could discover similarities in this and other writing. He found some little marks that were alike, he said, but the general style of the writing was altogether unlike.

"Mr. Kytka, when did you first testify in court as an expert?"

"It was in St. Louis, several years ago, in a patent case in which there was forgery. It was more a test in chemistry than writing. My side won, too."

"Oh, it did? I thank you for the information. Did your side ever lose?"

"Yes, sir."

"Not when you had anything to do with the case."

The court called Mr. Boyre to order for this line of questioning, saying that it was but a waste of time.

"When did you first give testimony as a hand writing expert?"

"It was the Martin will case, in San Francisco, in 1895 or 1896."

There was another haggle over the exact date of this trial, after which Mr. Boyre announced that he had finished with the witness.

On redirect examination by Prosecuting Attorney Squier Expert Kytka was again called to pronounce up the Nellie Maguire letter. Witness reaffirmed that it was in the same writing as the other anonymous letters. It was admitted in evidence.

Attorney Squier—Mr. Kytka, have you received any compensation for your services, or do you expect any other than what you will receive from the county?"

"No, sir. I want only enough to get out of the county."

"Can you tell by examination of writing whether it was done by a man or a woman?"

"Yes, sir."

"In your judgment, was the Nellie Maguire letter written by a woman?"

"Yes, sir."

There was a further questioning as to letters that had already been explained, as to their positions and characteristics. The peculiarity of formation of double letters "ll" referred to in the Martha Case letter in cross-examination, was pronounced only an accident.

The witness was excused after one and one-half weeks on the stand. He will be recalled this morning for a short time.

Clio L. Lloyd was recalled.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier—You will remember, Mr. Lloyd, that you testified before as to conversations that you had with the defendant in The Press office, in which these anonymous letters were mentioned, and that Dr. Martha Case was also mentioned?"

Attorney Boyer objected to Lloyd being recalled, this being the third time that he had been on the witness stand, and was now again to bolster up the testimony given before.

The objection was overruled.

"Did Mrs. Storke during either conversation say that she knew Dr. Martha Case?"

Attorney Squier stated that the purpose of the examination was to show that at the time of these conversations Mrs. Storke knew the contents of the anonymous letters, but that she did not then know Dr. Case.

Mr. Lloyd—She did not at the second conversation say that she knew Dr. Martha Case, but upon subsequent conversations."

"When was that?"

"I think it was the next evening after I told her that I knew Dr. Case. She said she had been up to see her and found her a very fine young lady, as I had was occupied with the identification. Mr. Gutierrez pointed out hundreds of pages of his writing.

Court adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning.

NEWS: SANTA BARBARA, TI

THE STORKE CASE.

The Prosecution Finished Direct Fxamination.

Defense Opens and Examines Gutierrez.

The prosecution in the Storke case has at last rested or rather been allowed to rest its case. When court convened at 9 o'clock yesterday morning everybody thought that the cross-examination of Kitka would outlast this week as it did the last.

But suddenly at about four in the afternoon the defense said "That's all" to Kitka and with indescribable joy he gathered up his "traps," microscopes etc., and left the court room.

During the day he had been going over the same old routine of the days gone by and the testimony was neither interesting to himself or anyone else. There was a little variation in the morning when the ink subject was gone over some more but the day was uneventful.

Mr. Kitka will remain in the city several days longer and will then return to San Francisco where several important cases await his opinions. Chief Lees has been telephoning Mr. Kitka to come back for the last week.

Following the expert Mr. Lloyd went on the stand for a few minutes. He testified that after the visits from Mrs. Stork of which he gave an account some time ago, she returned once more to the Press office and there told him that she had called upon Dr. Case and had found her a very nice woman.

Lloyd was not cross examined and the prosecution rested its case.

DEFENSE BEGINS.

The defense began its case promptly and without the delay of opening remarks.

F. N. Gutierrez was called as the first witness but did not get anywhere. He said he was 54 years of age and that he had lived here 19 years. His profession is that of a searcher of records and he teaches Spanish.

He was asked to point out in county record books "J," "K," "L" and "M" of deeds the pages written by him while deputy county recorder here years ago. This he did occupying an hour and a half in the performance. The books were in fact written almost entirely by the witness and there will be no trouble about finding specimens of his writing.

The defense will proceed with the examination of Gutierrez at 10 o'clock this morning.

city and its people, Mr. Kitka, who is a lover of animals, wished to secure some living pet here as a souvenir of his trip. He thought first of a dog but came to the conclusion that no dog he could procure here would thrive in company with a well known bull dog "Bitters" which he owns in San Francisco. Mr Dunn would not part with any of his venison so Kitka compromised upon the juvenile coyote now chained in the hotel deer park. Mr. Dunn made the expert a present of the wiley infant on condition that the expert should assume all responsibilities of the ownership of the beast. It was also stipulated that if either Mr. Dunn, Captain Waters or F. M. Frye should within the next three weeks be accused of writing the celebrated anonymous letters, Kitka should continue upon the witness stand long enough to show that they could not have done so.

The coyote meanwhile is making himself a reputation equal to that of Henley Booth's dog "Ham" and Mr. Kitka has named his pet after a prominent member of the local bar. Last night the little fellow got loose and killed several of Mr. Dunn's chickens, the Mongolian pheasants fortunately escaping. But this is not the worst. The beast seems to have a mania for destruction. He has destroyed a leather sofa in his owner's room and has eaten the rubber corks out of a number of valuable bottles.

But Mr. Kitka's brother, George Kitka, has solved the matter and Don Coyote is to be presented to Chief Lees, of San Francisco, and will become the pet of Frisco's police department. Here Kitka can see him now and then and be reminded of the pleasant month he spent in this city testifying to the handwriting of prominent citizens.

YDA ADDIS STORKE.

Professor Kytka Leaves the Witness Stand.

First Witness for Defense, F. N. Gutierrez, Appears and Gives Evidence as to the Record Book—A Case of Virtuous Indignation.

Sands, inspired by a serving spirit, voids himself of an editorial thus violently moral as to verge upon virtuous indignation. There appears to be something quite putrid in our commonwealth when an accused party cannot be taken into court, and upon general principles of dispatch, immediately judged, found guilty and hanged.

Much time has been consumed in this trial to give the prosecution a chance to prove Yda Addis guilty as charged, and though the immaculate Sands holds that to write anonymous letters is "hardly less grave than murder, we beg leave to say that anonymous publications of a vile nature are worse, because they are in print and remain on record. The virtuous Sands has fathered such publications, and particularly one written by Yda; he should hence say nothing and let the law in the Storke trial take its weary, lengthy course. If men and women would but adopt our way, they would on receiving anonymous letters, glance over them and throw them aside and never after even think about them. In that case nobody would be injured and no law violated but those of the postal department, and as Uncle Sam usually knows how to take care of himself, our Court and attendant cost to the tax-payers would not be brought in requisition.

Honest people can get along without litigation, and since our courts are constantly in operation, it follows that dishonesty is the cause. Any American citizen, no matter how depraved and worthless, can sue or get arrested any man or woman in the community. The accused party per force is drawn into court and at loss of time and money must defend himself. Be the charge criminal, the State pays the cost of prosecution; be the charge civil, the individual not worth a cent in money or reputation always finds a lawyer who for the want of lucrative practice must do something to keep his hand in. As a rule a man having a just cause and compelled to resort to law, wishes the matter disposed of as soon as possible, hence submits his case to the Judge of the Court. The individual with a shady case is invariably seeking to win, right or wrong, calls a jury, trusting to get things mixed up to the extent that the men judging the case get confused to the degree that the verdict frequently is a matter of toss up. Men having served as jurymen will bear us out in the above assertion.

That innocent people are drawn into this trial may be true; Sands and Lloyd were in it and survived. F. N. Gutierrez and Grant Jackson most assuredly must be held innocent until proven guilty, and to establish such innocence it either is placed on the witness stand to to tell the truth and nothing added.

A truthful witness can tell his tale unvarnished and concise, and no matter how searching the cross-examination, the witness may vary in expression but the sense will always be the same.

To say before hand that people are honest is decidedly hazardous, because man cannot judge the heart and God, whom Sands invokes on the least provocation, takes no interest whatever in mundane courts. Likely Sands, Tebletts, Lloyd, Gutierrez, Jackson, etc., are never called upon to act as jurymen for potent reasons, and though their honesty should not be questioned their respective names as endorsers of promises to pay the banker commands little if any respect.

Professor Kytka elucidates the handwriting on the wall, and confusion still confuses all but those gifted with superhuman smartness. What a task indeed to ascertain the action of the mind as displayed with rapid and slow movement of the pen. Psychology supposed to be taught in one lesson. Who struck Billy Patterson is still a matter of conjecture. "Grant Jackson did not write the letters," says the expert, who is loth to leave his illustrations.

F. N. Gutierrez on the stand. Witness requested to point out in City Ordinance book his hand writing. District Attorney's objection overruled. Some of the handwriting the witness states is not his—not positive. It appears that the mass of writing was done by the deputy. A dreary, long time is consumed and nothing is elicited but the refrain "Written by me." In the meantime the jury is trying hard to look bright and wide awake.

Afternoon—F. N. Gutierrez on the stand.

Q. Can you tell when the writings in the books were made in regard to the date they bear? A. No.

The books are from May, 1874, to 1787, was city clerk then. Entries were made from first to last date the last signature being in August, 1893; was clerk to the election of 1894.

Entries were made during that incumbency of office.

Witness was shown a paper and recognized his handwriting, dated 1879; recognized another written in 1880. The next paper is not written by him; still another is not his unless following copy. He admits another writing in full, a certificate of acknowledgment admitted, dated 1873—District Attorney overruled—and handwriting by Guiterrez proceeds. The next letter witness admits the writing but can not tell the date.

Portions of the next, written by him.

Subsequent exhibits written by the witness as late as three to four weeks ago.

Taught Spanish and did writing in 1897-1898; was with Mr. Putnam then, but not sure. Objection overruled. Describes his place of business near Judge Gammill's office. Occupied said office four months. Had two offices during that time. Objection sustained. Has known Grant Jackson, but does not know how long. Had no business with Jackson; went to his office recently to inquire. Saw Yda Addis in Grant Jackson's office. Objection overruled. Does not recollect having had any financial business. Jackson may have engaged his services, but can't remember. Objection sustained.

Witness is positive that he never had any conversation with Jackson regarding anonymous letter writing, because his sense of honor would have revolted at a thing so vile. He cites the history of his boyhood embracing his education. Has always followed a clerical pursuit; is able to write several or various hands; has done so for 25 years. Uses different pens. Exhibits a pen to illustrate this kind of writing.

THE STORKE CASE.

Mr. Gutierrez Spends a Weary Day.

Volumes of Musty Writings Produced and Identical.

Kitka was recalled yesterday morning for a short time by the defense and was asked to give his opinion as to whether he could find any similarities between the writings of Mr. F. N. Gutierrez and the Martha Case letter. There was an up stroke in the letter r that was similar but it was made with a different pressure of the pen. There was also a similarity in the body of the v, but there was an upstroke in beginning the letter in Gutierrez's writing which never appeared either in the disputed writing or in Mrs. Storke's admitted letters.

There was in Gutierrez's writing a great variety of ways of making the letter f while this was not true of the Case letter. Kitka said there were mighty few points of similarity in the writings and those strokes which were alike were made in a different way. The pen was held in a different position.

Witness shown a writing of Attorney Grant Jackson's in which appeared the word "professional" and asked if it was like another writing of Mr. Jackson's. Kitka explained that he knew without giving a professional opinion that the writings were Jackson's because he had in the presence of the district attorney seen Jackson write a great many words.

On cross examination by Mr. Squiers said that none of the disputed writings, not a stroke of them had been written by either Jackson or Gutierrez. There were a few accidental similarities, he said, but no real identities.

GUTIERREZ TESTIFIES.

Mr. Gutierrez went once more upon the stand at 10:30 o'clock and proceeded to point out page after page, or rather book after book of his handwriting done some time in the early seventies when Gutierrez was in the city clerk's office of this city.

The district attorney objected to having the records of the court encumbered with these voluminous samples of penmanship, but the court overruled the objection and in went the city ordinances, rulings and resolutions, with motions by mouldering councilmen and the rulings of mayors long since passed away. Gutierrez has undoubtedly lived a most industrious life. His writings fill immense and heavy volumes. The famous wharf rate ordinance of years gone by is in Gutierrez's hand.

After another long hour spent in the introduction of city records the district attorney again objected to the bringing in such voluminous specimens of writing.

Mr. Boyce explained that the volumes introduced would come handy in relation to expert Kitka's testimony as to the fixity of a person's handwriting and he said also that as the evidence of experts had been of a detailed nature it was necessary to have the very records themselves in order to examine them in the same detailed way.

Judge Oster. How many of those volumes have you?

Mr. Boyce. Only two more. The witness appears here as one hostile to us and we would like to have these pages put in identified.

Judge Oster. Well, as we have got so far into this we might as well let the other volumes go in. We don't mind the time any longer. We seem to have gotten beyond that. We will charge it up to elemnastinure and pay for it.

Gutierrez then went on and identified a lot more writing.

The defense in this libel action seems to have one trait that is attributed to the blessed angels above. It don't seem to know the difference between one day and a thousand years.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

In the afternoon Gutierrez identified a number of other red [illegible]

Continued on page six

[illegible] STORKE CASE [illegible]

[illegible] man and [illegible]

Q. What was your occupation [illegible]

A. [illegible]

[illegible]

Q. How long [illegible] you [illegible] Grant Jackson?

A. I don't remember how long I [illegible] him but I never [illegible] him intimately.

Q. When did you first meet him?

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you known him more than a year?

A. I [illegible] have known him [illegible] four years.

Q. During the year 189- did you have any business with Grant Jackson?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Were you ever in his office since the death of Judge Stratton?

A. [illegible] I was there once to have an acknowledgment. I asked Mrs. Yda Storke if Grant Jackson was there and she told me.

Q. You saw the defendant there?

A. Yes. She was in the [illegible] room. I don't know how many rooms he has.

Q. Did Grant Jackson ever call at your office?

A. My belief is that he did not call at my office at any time.

Q. Were you ever in the habit of meeting him at any other place during 1897?

A. No sir. I never met him except to say how do you do sir? Good day sir.

Q. Did you ever have any financial dealings with Grant Jackson during the year 1897?

A. No sir.

Q. Did Mr. Grant Jackson ever hire your services in 1897 during the months of July of that year up to the month of July 1898?

A. I really couldn't remember.

Q. Did you ever do any work for him, writing during that time?

A. If I did writing I do not remember.

Mr. Squiers objected to this line of examination as a cross in stead of a direct examination.

Q. Do you remember having any talk with Grant Jackson in regard to any anonymous letters said to have been circulated during the years 1897 1898?

A. Upon that question Mr. Boyce I am positive that I never had any conversation with Mr. Jack Boyce upon any such subject. (The words Jack Boyce were changed to Grant Jackson.)

Q. Why are you positive?

A. Because I never wrote any such letters. If Mr. Jackson had ever said anything about letters of that sort I should have said I do not want to talk about any letters of that sort.

Q. You stated yesterday that you were 51 years old and had lived here about 19 years?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you educated?

A. I studied Spanish here with a man named Palma Mesa, with a man named Pine, with Jesuit here and in the Public Schools when Mr. Eliza B. Williams were teaching here.

[illegible]

Q. [illegible]

A. [illegible] those persons asked me questions who dare to ask me such questions about these letters.

Q. Do you use other kinds of pens?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you changed your habit of writing at any time during the past few years?

A. I may change ten times a day.

Q. Have you within the last few years adopted any particular style of writing?

The district attorney's objection was sustained.

Q. You mentioned a gone over the writing of Book 3 of ordinances this morning that there were two places where you could not tell whether the writing was yours or not?

A. I know the first was not of my writing.

Witness shown the interlineation of a word in an old city ordinance. This he could not identify as being his or anyone else's.

Q. You stated with reference to a writing that the shape of the letter y made you think it was not your writing unless you copied it from some other document?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you accustomed to copying?

Objection sustained.

Q. Do you know what is meant by retouching?

A. Going over it better I suppose to put on shading to make the letter look better.

Q. Do you do that kind of shading upon the school diplomas?

A. Yes I do.

Q. You are acquainted with C. A. Storke, the attorney here?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Were you ever employed by him to do any writing from July 1897 to July 1898?

A. I don't think I did. I don't remember.

Q. Do you ever remember having had any conversation with C. A. Storke with regard to doing any engrossing or writing or copying during the months from July 1897 to July 1898. (Objection sustained.

Did you ever do any writing of any kind for C. A. Stork? (Objection sustained.)

Have you ever heard of any anonymous letters going through the mails?

No. Not till last Saturday.

That was after you were subpoenaed?

No sir.

Was that conversation with any person connected with this case. With Grant Jackson or Mr. Storke?

Oh, No sir!

You have never received any money from C. A. Storke.

No sir. Never.

Was the conversation anything about the testimony in this case?

I was told that I was to be called as witness in regard to the [illegible] of this [illegible] any- [illegible]

Q. Was that also the conversation?

A. Yes. The substance. I was under the supposition when I was subpoenaed that I was to translate some letters that were in the Spanish language.

Q. Then you expected as a translator [illegible] to translate letters in this case that were in Spanish?

A. That was it. A letter or two. That was what was said.

Q. When was that?

A. About three weeks ago.

Q. How did you know you could translate them?

A. I didn't say I could translate them.

Q. How were they connected with this case of the People vs. Mrs. Storke?

A. Well they may not have any connection with this case if they were never written.

Q. Where did this conversation take place.

A. In the city of Santa Barbara, State of California with Ramon J. Leyva.

Q. Did he exhibit the letters to you?

A. Oh no. He had no letters in his possession.

Q. Do you remember when the grand jury found the indictment in this case?

A. I don't know whether I heard about it or not.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Dr. Winchester in this case?

A. No sir. Not at all. That is the best of my knowledge.

Q. You know the Doctor do you not?

A. Yes sir as well as I know you.

Q. Do you remember where you were in May 1898. Where you then had your office?

A. On Carrillo street near Anacapa street.

Q. Do you remember having had any conversation with Dr. Winchester in May 1898, about [illegible] letters?

A. [illegible] I never had any conversation with Dr. Winchester about any anonymous letters.

This was the direct examination and Mr. Squier took the witness and showed him the Martha Case letter.

Q. Did you ever see that letter before?

A. Never.

Q. Did you ever see this letter? (Witness shown Independent letter.)

A. No sir I never did see that letter. This is the very first time I ever saw writing of that kind.

All of the other anonymous letters were shown the witness but he denied having ever seen any of them before. After Mr. Squier's had finished his examination Mr. Boyce began again.

Q. Mr. Gutierrez, I will ask you why you were amused when you were shown those letters. Why did you smile? (Witness shown one or two letters)

A. Mr. Boyce I don't know that I laughed.

Q. I understand you to say that you never had seen any such writing as was displayed in the Case, Independent and Press letters. What kind of writing do you call that?

A. I don't know what to call that. I see that there is a kind of pressure on some of the letters.

Q. I understand you to answer when this Martha Case letter was handed to you and you looked at it that there was something in the phraseology that attracted your attention. What did you mean by the phraseology?

A. I must have seen a word or two that I never use in writing

Q. Was that the whole reason?

A. I never did see those words.

Q. What words do you refer to.

A. There is the word Madame. I don't know what kind of a word that is with an e. There is the word roue and the word mistress. I don't know what the word roué means. I was told what it meant about a day or two ago.

Q. How did you happen to know about its being in the letter?

A. I happened to ask about it. One of the reporters of this matter showed me a copy of a few words of this character and I saw the words madame and roue.

Q. What reporter was that?

A. He was a reporter for the Examiner.

Q. Did you ever have anyone speak to you about the case before you were subpoenaed?

A. I don't remember having heard anything about this case before I was subpoenaed.

Recross examination.

Q. As the time the reporter called upon you did you write any for him?

A. Yes sir. I wrote some words for him.

GUTIERREZ DID NOT WRITE THEM

Expert Kytka Says So of the Anonymous Letters.

DIFFERENT STYLE OF WRITING

Gutierrez Knew Nothing of the Letters Nor Had He Heard of Them Until Last Saturday.

Interest in the Yda Addis Storke trial now centers in speculation as to what the defense will next spring. Expert Kytka has at last been exhausted and F. M. Gutierrez finished at adjournment time yesterday. The effort to fasten writing of the libelous letters on Gutierrez does not seem to have succeeded well. Unless the defense has a whole pack of cards up its sleeve, that will be played with the deliberation of former proceedings, to-day, or tomorrow at the most, ought to complete the trial.

MORNING SESSION.

Expert Kytka was on the stand for a short time again Thursday morning to report as to the peculiarities and characteristics in certain of Gutierrez's writings in comparison with those of the admitted writings of the defendant, Kytka, in reply to Boyce's question, said

"I examined the writings with a view of locating some of the characteristics. From the appearances of this writing the only similar characteristic is the up stroke of the letter 'r' but it is made in a much different manner; the letter 'a' struck me most forcibly, as it has a stroke that is not found in any of the disputed characteristics." The letters "p" and "f" were compared in detail. The letter "f" was started in a different manner entirely from the freak "f" found but once in the exhibits; "and here is a man that makes the letter 'f' thousands and thousands of times," secured Kytka.

Boyce suggested that the witness should testify and not argue. "What I ask is if you find any similar characteristics?"

"They are mighty few, and those few are made in a different manner."

"Do you find any 'p's' that have what you have called the 's' finish?"

"Here is one that is retraced—"

"Do you find any of the broken-backed 'k's' in this?"

"If there are any here they are very scarce."

"Coming back to exhibit 12, to the words 'profession and professional,' I will ask you if the person who wrote these words, wrote the remainder of the letter?"

"Yes, sir."

The witness was then handed the Grant Jackson note and asked to compare it with the words "profession and professional" in the disputed exhibit. He said there was no similarity and added that he was able to pass upon writing of Grant Jackson as he had seen him write. The district attorney had requested Jackson to write certain words in the presence of the expert. Among the words written were "profession and professional" "and some spicy names that I do not care to repeat," explained Kytka when Attorney Boyce asked him what the district attorney had directed Jackson to write. He said he could produce the writing, but Attorney Boyce did not follow the suggestion.

Mr. Boyce announced that he was through with the witness, and District Attorney Squier asked:

"Mr. Kytka, I [illegible] witness defendant's exhibit No. 121 is that in the handwriting of Grant Jackson?"

"No, sir, not a stroke."

"Can you tell after your examination of these books (the Gutierrez records) whether or not the person who wrote the writing, wrote any of the disputed writings in this case?"

"The person who wrote these (the records) did not write one of the disputed exhibits, or any part of them."

The witness was then excused, and F. M. Gutierrez was recalled.

Gutierrez proceeded with the identification of parts of the records written by him.

When about an hour had been taken up with the identification of one book, page by page, line by line and dot by dot, Mr. Squier objected when another book was brought forward.

Mr. Boyce stated to the court that the foundation to this testimony was laid in the question to the expert as to the [illegible] of [illegible]

The Court: Yes, I realize that, but I [illegible] taken a few pages of you have gotten into this, you may as well go ahead with it. It seems that it is no longer a question of time.

As the noon hour was reached, the witness was still in the midst of the second book.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At 2:30 o'clock, Mr. Gutierrez had concluded the identification of the books of records, minutes and ordinances, and Mr. Boyce continued the direct examination of the witness.

"Can you give the dates when those writings were written in respect to the dates they bear on their face?"

"No, sir."

"Can you tell when you were in the county recorder's office?"

"I think it was in '72 or '73."

"Can you tell when you were city clerk?"

"I think about twenty years. From '74 to '94, I believe."

"Now, I will ask you to examine book 'A' of city ordinances and ask you when these entries were made as to year."

"I cannot tell exactly. The first date appearing in this volume is November 21, 1874; and the last July 10, 1885."

"You were city clerk during that time?"

"Yes, sir."

The witness' attention was directed to book "B" of ordinances, and he found the last date is an ordinance bearing his signature to be March 22, 1894.

"Were you city clerk up to the election of 1894?"

"Yes, sir."

"I will show you defendant's exhibit 39, and ask if that is your handwriting?"

"This is my handwriting, Mr. Boyce."

Another exhibit of the defense, No. 38, was also in the witness' handwriting.

No. 21, the document containing the plat with lettering on it, was declared by the witness not to be in his handwriting. No. 24 was also said to be in some other hand.

No. 10, so far as the endorsement and acknowledgment were concerned, was admitted to be in the handwriting of the witness.

Mr. Squier objected to the introduction of these writings in evidence, as no evidence had been introduced to connect the witness with the commission of the crime with which the defendant is charged. Mr. Boyce said that they were not depending upon these writings solely, and the court admitted them, with the restriction that they may be stricken out later.

Other exhibits were examined, some admitted and other said not to be in the handwriting of Mr. Gutierrez.

"Where did you have your office in the year 1897?"

"I think I was with Mr. Putnam, in his office, about that time. I can't remember exactly."

"Where was your office in 1898?"

"It depends upon the months. I think I was at the northeast corner of Anacapa and Canon Perdido street. I also had a room in the St. Charles hotel, where I gave lessons. Justice Gammill's court was next to this room."

"There was a door connecting?"

"Not that I know of; I never saw one."

"During that period did you have an office?"

"I gave lessons at that room; some times at the County bank, and then I had my home on the corner of Anacapa and Canon Perdido streets."

"Where were you in the habit of spending your time during the period?"

Objection. Sustained.

"How long have you known Grant Jackson?"

"I do not remember. I have never known him very intimately."

"When did you first meet him?"

"I do not know."

"How many years have you known him?"

"I do not know."

"Have you known him more than one year?"

"Oh, yes; not less than four years."

"Were you in the habit of frequenting his office?"

"No, sir. I called there once, several months ago to get an acknowledgment. At the time I went there, I asked Mrs. Yda Storke if Mr. Jackson was there, and she said no."

"Then you saw the defendant there?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you ever there at any other time?"

"No, sir. I believe that was the only time I ever called there since Mr. Stoddard's time."

"Did he ever call at your office?"

"I think that he never did. That is my best recollection and belief."

"Did you ever have any financial dealings with Grant Jackson during 1897 to 1898."

[illegible] this city during 1897 and 1898?"

"Upon that question, I can say that I never had any conversation with Mr. Grant Jackson on any such subject."

"Why are you positive to that?"

"Because I am not in the custom of writing letters of that kind."

"And for that reason, you say you never talked with Mr. Jackson?"

"Yes, sir. And if Mr. Jackson had ever said anything about letters of that kind, I should have said certainly, 'I do not want to talk about anything of that sort.'"

"Where were you educated?"

"I studied Spanish many years ago, in this city and in Santa Ynez. Later I studied English in this city, in the public schools."

"You have always followed a clerical occupation?"

"Yes, sir."

"You are able to write several different kinds of handwriting?"

"Yes, Mr. Boyce."

"And you have been in the habit of writing various kinds of handwriting?"

"That is correct."

"When you were in the county recorder's office you were in the habit of changing your writing?"

"That is right."

"Why did you do that?"

"Sometimes for ease, sometimes when a pen did not work well one way I would use it another way."

"Do you use a stub pen?"

"For back hand writing and sometimes for other styles."

"Do you use a fine pen?"

"Sometimes. This is the kind I use in writing out diplomas for the public schools," said the witness, taking a pen from his pocket.

"Are you in the habit of doing that kind of work?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did you happen to have the pen in your pocket?"

"I brought it with me so that I could use it in case I was called upon to demonstrate my style of writing."

"Have you in the past few years adopted any particular style of hand writing?"

"No, Mr. Boyce."

"You mentioned in going over the writing in Book 'A' of ordinances this morning, that there were two places that you could not yourself tell whether they were in your handwriting."

"I believe that I could not state exactly, but believe it was not my writing."

"I call your attention to Book A, to the word 'line' interlined at this point, and ask you if you said you could not tell whether it was your writing or not."

"I think I said that it was not in my writing."

Referring to page 311 of county records, witness was asked if he remembered saying in the morning when he reached the page, which contains writing over erasures, that it would puzzle anyone and might require an expert to tell whether it was his writing or not. Witness reiterated this statement. The writing over an erasure required another position of pen and another movement and was indistinct.

"You are aware of that kind of writing, as that expression used among penmen known as retouching?"

"No, not as you use it."

"Do you understand what retouching means?"

"Not unless it is to retrace and shade after the writing has been done?"

"Are you in the habit of doing writing of that kind?"

Objection. Sustained.

"You are acquainted with C. A. Storke?"

"I am. Know him as well as I know you, Mr. Boyce."

"Were you employed by him in 1897 and 1898?"

"I think not. I am not positive."

"Were you ever employed by C. A. Storke?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you ever hear anything about anonymous letters passing through the mails here?"

"Never until last Saturday. I had not heard of them before."

"Then it was after you had been subpoenaed as a witness?"

not at last been exhausted and F. M. Gutierrez finished at adjournment time yesterday. The effort to fasten writing of the libelous letters on Gutierrez does not seem to have succeeded well. Unless the defense has a whole pack of cards up its sleeve, that will be played with the deliberation of former proceedings, today, or tomorrow at the most, ought to complete the trial.

MORNING SESSION.

Expert Kytka was on the stand for a short time again Thursday morning to report as to the peculiarities and characteristics in certain of Gutierrez's writings in comparison with those of the admitted writings of the defendant, Kytka, in reply to Boyce's question, said:

"I examined the writings with a view of locating some of the characteristics. From the appearances of this writing, the only similar characteristic is the up stroke of the letter 'r' but it is made in a much different manner; the letter 'n' struck me most forcibly, as it has a stroke that is not found in any of the disputed characteristics." The letters "p" and "f" were compared in detail. The letter "f" was started in a different manner entirely from the freak "f" found but once in the exhibits; "and here is a man that makes the letter 'f' thousands and thousands of times," resumed Kytka.

Boyce suggested that the witness should testify and not argue. "What I ask is if you find any similar characteristics?"

"They are mighty few, and those few are made in a different manner."

"Do you find any 'p's' that have what you have called the 's' finish?"

"Here is one that is returned—"

"Do you find any of the broken-backed 'B's' in this?"

"If there are any here they are very scarce."

"Coming back to exhibit 12, to the words 'profession and professional,' I will ask you if the person who wrote those words, wrote the remainder of the letter?"

"Yes, sir."

The witness was then handed the Grant Jackson note and asked to compare it with the words "profession and professional" in the disputed exhibit. He said there was no similarity and added that he was able to pass upon writing of Grant Jackson as he had seen him write. The district attorney had requested Jackson to write certain words in the presence of the expert. Among the words written were "profession and professional," "and some spicy names that I do not care to repeat," explained Kytka when Attorney Boyce asked him what the district attorney had directed Jackson to write. He said he could produce the writing, but Attorney Boyce did not follow the suggestion.

Mr. Boyce announced that he was through with the witness, and District Attorney Squier asked:

"Mr. Kytka, (showing witness defendant's exhibit No. 121) is that in the handwriting of Grant Jackson?"

"No, sir, not a stroke."

"Can you tell after your examination of these books (the Gutierrez records) whether or not the person who wrote this writing, wrote any of the disputed writings in this case?"

"The person who wrote these (the records) did not write one of the disputed exhibits, or any part of them."

The witness was then excused, and F. M. Gutierrez was recalled.

Gutierrez proceeded with the identification of parts of the records written by him.

When about an hour had been taken up with the identification of one book, page by page, line by line and dot by dot, Mr. Squier objected when another book was brought forward.

Mr. Boyce stated to the court that the foundation to this testimony was laid in the question to the expert as to the fixity of habit.

The Court—Yes, I realize that, but I should think that taking a few pages at different dates would answer.

Mr. Boyce—But the prosecution has introduced a mass of 75 or 100 pages of admitted and disputed handwriting, and we would surely be open to criticism in segregating certain parts of these writings. The prosecution has taken four and one-half days in getting their affirmative evidence.

The Court—How many more books have you to submit?

Mr. Boyce—One more after this one, may take another hour.

The Court—Well, I suppose that as

"I think about twenty years. From '73 to '94, I believe."

"Now, I will ask you to examine book 'A' of city ordinances and ask you when these entries were made as to year."

"I cannot tell exactly. The first date appearing in this volume is November 24, 1874, and the last July 10, 1887."

"You were city clerk during that time?"

"Yes, sir."

The witness' attention was directed to book "B" of ordinances, and he found the last date to an ordinance bearing his signature to be March 22, 1894.

"Were you city clerk up to the election of 1894?"

"Yes, sir."

"I will show you defendant's exhibit 39, and ask if that is your handwriting?"

"This is my handwriting, Mr. Boyce."

Another exhibit of the defense, No. 38, was also in the witness' handwriting.

No. 21, the document containing the plat with lettering on it, was declared by the witness not to be in his handwriting. No. 24 was also said to be in some other hand.

No. 19, so far as the endorsement and acknowledgment were concerned, was admitted to be in the handwriting of the witness.

Mr. Squier objected to the introduction of these writings in evidence, as no evidence had been introduced to connect the witness with the commission of the crime with which the defendant is charged. Mr. Boyce said that they were not depending upon these writings solely, and the court admitted them, with the restriction that they may be stricken out later.

Other exhibits were examined, some admitted and other said not to be in the handwriting of Mr. Gutierrez.

"Where did you have your office in the year 1897?"

"I think I was with Mr. Putnam, in his office, about that time. I can't remember exactly."

"Where was your office in 1898?"

"It depends upon the months. I think I was at the northwest corner of Anacapa and Canon Perdido street. I also had a room in the St. Charles hotel, where I gave lessons. Justice Gammill's court was next to this room."

"There was a door connecting?"

"Not that I know of; I never saw one."

"During that period did you have two offices?"

"I gave lessons at that room; sometimes at the County bank, and then I had my home on the corner of Anacapa and Canon Perdido streets."

"Where were you in the habit of spending your time during the period?"

Objection. Sustained.

"How long have you known Grant Jackson?"

"I do not remember. I have never known him very intimately."

"When did you first meet him?"

"I do not know."

"How many years have you known him?"

"I do not know."

"Have you known him more than one year?"

"Oh, yes; not less than four years."

"Were you in the habit of frequenting his office?"

"No, sir. I called there once, several months ago to get an acknowledgment. At the time I went there, I asked Mrs. Ada Storke if Mr. Jackson was there, and she said no."

"Then you saw the defendant there?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you ever there at any other time?"

"No, sir. I believe that was the only time I ever called there since Mr. Stratton's time."

"Did he ever call at your office?"

"I think that he never did. That is my best recollection and belief."

"Did you ever have any financial dealings with Grant Jackson during 1897 to 1898?"

"Not that I remember."

"Did Grant Jackson hire your services from July, 1897, to July, 1898?"

"I can't remember that he did."

"Did you ever do any work for him writing or abstracting, during that period of time?"

"If I did, I do not remember."

"Do you remember having any business with him?"

"Not that I remember."

"Do you remember having any talk with Grant Jackson in regard to anonymous letters said to be circulating in

"You are able to write several different kinds of handwriting?"

"Yes, Mr. Boyce."

"And you have been in the habit of writing various kinds of handwriting?"

"That is correct."

"When you were in the county recorder's office you were in the habit of changing your writing?"

"That is right."

"Why did you do that?"

"Sometimes for ease, sometimes when a pen did not work well one way I would use it another way."

"Do you use a stub pen?"

"For back hand writing and sometimes for other styles."

"Do you use a fine pen?"

"Sometimes. This is the kind I use in writing out diplomas for the public schools," said the witness, taking a pen from his pocket.

"Are you in the habit of doing that kind of work?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did you happen to have this pen in your pocket?"

"I brought it with me so that I could use it in case I was called upon to demonstrate my style of writing."

"Have you in the past ten years adopted any particular style of handwriting?"

"No, Mr. Boyce."

"You mentioned in going over the writing in Book 'A' of ordinances this morning, that there were two places that you could not yourself tell whether they were in your handwriting."

"I believe that I could not state exactly, but believe it was not my writing."

"I call your attention to Book A, to the word 'line' interlined at this point, and ask you if you said you could not tell whether it was your writing or not?"

"I think I said that it was not in my writing."

Referring to page 334 of county records, witness was asked if he remembered saying in the morning when he reached the page, which contains writing over erasures, that it would puzzle anyone and might require an expert to tell whether it was his writing or not. Witness reiterated this statement. The writing over an erasure required another position of pen and another movement, and was indistinct.

"You are aware of that kind of writing or that expression used among penmen known as retouching?"

"No, not as you use it."

"Do you understand what retouching means?"

"Not unless it is to retrace and shade after the writing has been done?"

"Are you in the habit of doing writing of that kind?"

Objection. Sustained.

"You are acquainted with P. A. Storke?"

"I am. Know him as well as I know you, Mr. Boyce."

"Were you employed by him in 1897 and 1898?"

"I think not. I am not positive."

"Were you ever employed by P. A. Storke?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you ever hear anything about anonymous letters passing through the mails here?"

"Never until last Saturday. I had not heard of them before."

"Then it was after you had been subpoened as a witness?"

"Yes, sir."

"Was the conversation you refer to anything to do with your evidence in this case?"

"I was told that I would be called as a witness in regard to a letter in this case. I said that I did not know anything about the case."

"And do you mean to say that is the only time you have heard anything about the anonymous letters?"

"To my recollection that is all. When I was subpoened I thought I would be called to translate letters written in Spanish. I was not told they were anonymous. That was perhaps three weeks ago."

"What connection had these letters in Spanish with this case?"

"Perhaps if they were not written at all, and there were no such letters, they had no connection with the case."

"Do you remember when the grand jury found the indictment in this case?"

"No, sir. I do not remember."

"Did you ever converse with Dr. Winchester about this case?"

"Never a word has taken place between Dr. Winchester and myself as to this matter."

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier—Mr. Gutierrez you have in the past several years been employed in making a great many abstracts?"

"Yes, sir."

The Martha Case letter was handed witness. He replied that he had never seen it before. The same was said of the Independent letter. He had never seen either before, nor any of the others that were shown him. "It is the very first minute that I have seen writing of that kind," he answered.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Attorney Boyce—Mr. Gutierrez I ask you what caused your amusement in looking at these letters?

"I happened to see a word or two that would make anybody laugh."

"I also observed when plaintiff's exhibit 'E' was shown that you smiled. What is there about it?"

"I cannot say that I laughed when I saw this exhibit or some other."

"Well, of course the smile is not on the records."

"Now, I understood you to say that you had not seen such writing as this before?"

Judge Oster—Do we understand, Mr. Boyce, that you propose to use this witness as an expert?

"No, your honor. I only ask the witness what he meant when he said that he had never seen writing of that kind before."

"Now, do you mean as to the form of the letter or the composition?"

"I meant that I never had seen this writing before."

"I ask you if that kind of writing is kind you have never seen before?"

"I don't know that I ever saw any of this kind of writing, and I never did see this writing before."

"I understood you to say, when an exhibit was handed to you, that there was something in the phraseology that attracted you. What did you mean?"

"I saw a word or two there that I never use in writing. There is the word 'Modama,' which I don't know. It isn't Spanish, nor English, and there is the word 'come.' I don't know what that means."

"You don't know what that word means?"

"Well, I asked about it the other day and was told."

Mr. Gutierrez' disposition to answer more than the questions called for led to a long explanation of how he had seen words of the writing if he had not seen the anonymous letters. He simply had seen a sentence or two of the Dr. Case letter, and remembered the words "mal come" and "come," which were out of his vocabulary and struck him because of his unfamiliarity with the words.

The witness was excused and court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

MAY HAVE BEEN A CONSPIRACY

And Still for All that Is Shown There May Not.

WAS YDA ADDIS SENT AWAY

Is Another Matter the Defense Attempts to Prove Through Grant Jackson.

The plan of the defense to prove a conspiracy to fasten the guilt of writing libelous letters upon Yda Addis Storke is succeeding but indifferently. Yesterday's important witness in the superior court in this behalf was Grant Jackson, whose name has been associated with that of Mrs. Storke in a more or less unenviable way since discussion of the libel case began. Some plain statements were made both by counsel and witness when Mr. Jackson was on the witness stand, but how far they went to prove the defendant's innocence is problematical. Mr. Jackson was not a witness for the defense through choice, and he even testified that he could not help but feel a resentment toward Mrs. Storke, because of her actions since she left Santa Barbara after the anonymous letter scandal became public and her name was connected with it.

C. C. Davis was called by the defense to pass upon the newspaperism of the exhibits that have been pronounced perfect specimens of copy as it should be prepared for the printer. Mr. Davis thought differently of it, even finding fault with The Press letter as a manuscript for publication.

Ex-Sheriff Hicks told of the ride that he had with Mrs. Storke more than a year ago, when Detective Fourade was in town.

MORNING SESSION.

Mr. Susan McCaughey, the second witness called for the defense, testified that she now lived in Hope precinct, had lived in Santa Barbara about thirty years, and had known Mrs. Storke about four years.

Mr. Boyce—Do you remember the occasion when Mrs. Storke left Santa Barbara in the fall of 1898?

"Yes, sir."

"State how you happened to be familiar with the circumstances?"

"I saw in the papers that Mrs. Storke was arrested for perjury, I went to offer my services, and to go on her bond if necessary. I met Mrs. West at the door, and she said—

Mr. Squier—We object to the witness testifying as to what Mrs. West said.

Mr. Boyce withdrew the question on that particular, and the witness continued:

"Understanding that she was willing to go on the bond with me, I went to Mr. Jackson's office and found Mr. Storke and told her that myself and Mrs. West were willing to go on Mrs. Storke's bond."

"Did Mrs. West after-ward refuse to go on the bond?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you have any interview with C. A. Storke at this time?"

"Yes, at least three or four conversations."

"He was the district attorney then and was prosecuting the charge of perjury against this defendant?"

Objection was made by the district attorney, and Mr. Boyce stated that he intended to show by this witness that there had been a conspiracy against the defendant in which three persons were parties, that C. A. Storke had made threats that he would bring a charge of writing anonymous letters against the defendant, in order to get her out of town.

The Court—Supposing you do all this, what has this to do with this case? Did not the grand jury bring the indictment? Do you intend to bring the grand jury into it?

Mr. Boyce asked if he could not show that strong reasons had prompted the bringing of the matter before the grand jury, etc.

The Court—I do not care to make a blank ruling, but I do not believe these antecedents should be brought into this case. Here is an indictment, we must assume that indictment is a valid thing, and we cannot go back of it.

Mr. Boyce—Do you hold that we shall not be permitted to show by our own witnesses facts surrounding the circumstances which elucidated this charge?

The Court—The question is whether it did not leave town on this charge of perjury, other charges would be made against her, and the statement was then made that she would be charged with writing these anonymous letters.

The court reported former rulings, and Mr. Boyce continued:

"Will your honor permit us to show by this witness that C. A. Storke—"

Mr. Squier—Now, if the court please—"

The Court—I do not want to make any basket rulings. It would be better to pass upon these points as they come up.

Mr. Boyce (to witness)—You stated that you had several conversations with C. A. Storke at that time?"

"Yes, sir."

"In the course of those conversations, did you have a conversation with C. A. Storke about these anonymous letters, out of which this action grows?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you have any conversation with Dr. Winchester?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you have any conversation with Grant Jackson?"

Objection, sustained. The defence excepted to all these rulings.

"During this time did you in the presence of this defendant and Grant Jackson and Mrs. West, as the representative of the defendant, bring to her attention a certain agreement or stipulation in the case of Storke vs. Storke, which was tendered to this defendant for her signature, upon the payment of a certain sum of money?"

Objection; sustained. Defense excepts.

"I will show witness defendant's exhibit No. 6. Did you ever see that before?

Objection; sustained. Defense excepts.

"During that negotiation was any stipulation presented to the defendant from C. A. Storke, the then district attorney, with the proposition that if she would sign that stipulation, being a dismissal of the divorce case and for claims for alimony, she would receive a certain sum of money, and with this a threat that if she did not sign the stipulation she would be prosecuted for writing these anonymous letters?"

Objection, sustained. Mr. Squier objected to this line of questioning, as it was simply getting into the records a lot of inadmissable matter. The court allowed the questioning to proceed.

"In a conversation between you and C. A. Storke, did he there state to you—"

Mr. Squier objected, as the question was leading and suggestive. Sustained.

"You stated that you had two or three conversations with C. A. Storke?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did he in a conversation with you in his office state to you that unless—

Objection. Sustained.

"Did not C. A. Storke, the district attorney at that time, in a conversation in his office, mention the subject—"

Mr. Squier—We object. It is leading and suggestive.

Mr. Boyce—I am laboring, your honor, very hard to propound a question that will be admissible.

The Court—Well, go ahead with your question.

"Did he not in that conversation, in regard to these anonymous letters, mention—"

Another objection was made at this point by the district attorney and sustained by the court, and the witness was excused without further attempts to establish by her the conspiracy alleged to exist against the defendant.

Edward Trisom was called to the stand. He said that he was the owner of the building known as the Trisom block, 527 and 527½ State street. That the defendant was an occupant of the building about two years and one half. She left there in August, 1898. She occupied rooms Nos. 5 and 6 continuously, and part of the time had room No. 7 as a studio. In June, 1898, she had these three rooms.

Mr. Boyce—What means were used for securing the doors of these rooms?

Mr. Trisom—There were night latches, and she had duplicate keys.

"Did you have any keys to these rooms?"

"No, sir."

"Did the defendant have any keys to the outer doors?"

"She had, too."

"You had an office in that building?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you in the habit of occupying that room on Sundays?"

"No, sir."

"Were you in that room on any Sunday in June, on Sunday, June 26th?"

"I think not."

"I will ask you if any application was ever made to you for permission to enter these rooms, or for any keys?"

Objection was made ... ing with these exhibits?

Mr. Hunt—Only through having seen them in this case.

"Have you any receipt in your possession showing when these papers were withdrawn?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Do you know if there is any receipt for their withdrawal?"

Objection. Sustained.

Mr. Hunt related, in reply to another question, the circumstances of having delivered to the district attorney, upon coming into office last January, a bundle of papers that he had found in the vault.

Carlyle C. Davis was the next witness. He said that he had lived in Santa Barbara since September 6, 1898. For 25 years before that he had lived in Colorado. As a newspaper proprietor he had had experience for 35 years.

Mr. Boyce—You have had experience in handling matter from a variety of people?

"Yes, sir."

"Now, I will show you plaintiff's exhibit 'B' and plaintiff's exhibit 'C' (The Press letter and the Independent letter) and ask you if after examination, from your experience as a newspaper man these letters indicate that they were prepared by one familiar with newspaper work?

"I should say that they were not written by a person familiar with inside newspaper work."

"Kindly point out the evidences that lead you to that conclusion?"

"The first word in exhibit B 'Ed,' is one. No skilled newspaper man would abbreviate the word 'Editor.'

"Are there any other indications that lead you to this belief?"

"I do not think that an experienced newspaper man would use the word 'Sir' after the word 'editor.' It is considered superfluous, and I cannot recall a newspaper that follows that style. My first impression is that a person writing for the press would not be so precise in the matter of punctuation. The punctuation marks do not appear to be in keeping with the general style of the handwriting, and appear to have been added after the letter was written."

"From an examination of the matter contained in these exhibits, are you able to form an opinion as to whether or not some other person added the punctuation marks, after the letter had been written?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Is there anything in the location or position in which the punctuation is found in the matter to indicate to your mind whether the author was familiar with newspaper work?"

"I should say that the person who wrote this, unless designedly, was not familiar with newspaper work."

The witness explained that a newspaper man would not use three or four different kinds of punctuation points. "From my experience and observation I have known few newspaper men who were so precise in punctuation, whose punctuation is not so studied. As to the paragraphing I could criticise it but little, it is largely a matter of taste."

"Let me call your attention to the Martha Case letter, and to the paragraph beginning 'more especially.' What do you say in regard to that appearing in the letter as it does as to familiarity with newspaper writing?"

"It clearly shows inexperience. No experienced writer would make a paragraph at that place. The general appearance of this letter does not give evidence that it was written by a person who understood newspaper work."

In the crossexamination, Mr. Squier asked:

"Are you acquainted with the defendant?"

"I have a slight acquaintance with her. I have known her by sight three or four months."

"You were in the newspaper business in Santa Barbara?"

"For a brief time."

"Did you know the defendant while you were in the newspaper business?"

"She had been pointed out to me."

"Did you ever see any of the defendant's writing intended for publication?"

"No, sir."

"When did you first get acquainted with the defendant?"

"She came to my house or office, some time since the paper suspended, the latter part of April or first of May."

"Did you ever see her in Mr. Carrier's office?"

"In passing through the office, yes sir."

"Mr. Carrier is your attorney in a certain litigation pending?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do not different newspapers have different styles?"

"Yes, sir."

The court here adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

In the continuation of the cross-examination of C. C. Davis at the afternoon session, Mr. Squier asked the witness:

"Do you pretend to be able to say whether a person has had experience by the ideas and sentiments expressed?"

"Not so much as the manner in which they are expressed. My opinion is not based so much upon erroneous punctuation as upon the general construction and characteristics."

The witness was asked to designate in detail the different points that led him to believe that a person not familiar with newspaper work, wrote The Press letter. Among other things he noted the word "dive hole" and said that to a newspaper man "dive" would have been considered sufficient, and 'hole' superfluous.

The Court—Mr. Davis, do you think that a person not used to newspaper work would be more apt to make use of that word than one who is?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

The Court—I do not think so.

Mr. Squier—(to witness)—Now, as to punctuation.

"The punctuation and paragraphing appears to be fairly correct in the exhibit."

"You have read a number of these exhibits, several times in the court room, since the trial commenced?"

"Some of them."

"You have read the one you hold in your hand?"

"Yes, sir."

"In exhibit "C" he said that there were forms that any professional newspaper man would use at his peril. He would not hold his job very long."

"Isn't it possible for a newspaper man to disguise his handwriting?"

"I expect so."

"Do you think that a newspaper man would not disguise his hand writing?"

"I have known newspaper men who would not be above it.

Mr. Boyce—Now, Mr. Davis, you have stated as to the custom of paragraphing, etc. Is there not a general custom or practice known as 'the newspaper style?'

"While every large newspaper office has its style, there are certain usages so common and well understood that they are reduced to written or printed form."

"Do these exhibits conform to these universal rules?"

"No, sir, they violate them in some particulars."

The Court—What would you say of the universality of the rule that no newspaper would accept a communication that is not accompanied by the name of the writer?

The Witness—No well regulated newspaper would accept for publication a communication that would reflect upon an individual, without knowing the name of the writer.

Ex-Sheriff T. H. Hicks took the stand.

Mr. Boyce—Do you remember an occasion when you drove the defendant out to see a witness in the Richardson murder case?

"Yes, sir."

"Was that at the time the detective, Fourade, was here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you know the day of the week?"

"I don't think I do."

"Do you know the day of the month?"

"I do not remember, Mr. Boyce."

"How long were you gone?"

"I think about two hours, or two hours and a half."

"Did you use your ordinary conveyance?"

"I think, Mr. Boyce, I had a livery ...

(Continued to Fifth Page.)

"Do you remember when the grand jury found the indictment in this case?"

"No, sir. I do not remember."

"Did you ever converse with Dr. Winchester about this case?"

"Never a word has taken place between Dr. Winchester and myself as to this matter."

CROSS EXAMINATION.

Prosecuting Attorney Squier—Mr. Gutierrez you have in the past several years been employed in making a great many abstracts?"

"Yes, sir."

The Martha Case letter was handed witness. He replied that he had never seen it before. The same was said of the Independent letter. He had never seen either before, nor any of the others that were shown him. "It is the very first minute that I have seen writing of that kind," he answered.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Attorney Boyce—Mr. Gutierrez I ask you what caused your amusement in looking at these letters?

"I happened to see a word or two that would make anybody laugh."

I also observed when plaintiff's exhibit 'I' was shown that you smiled—what is there about it?

"I cannot say that I laughed when I saw this exhibit or some other."

"Well, of course the smile is not on the records."

"Now, I understood you to say that you had not seen such writing as this before?"

Judge Hatch—Do we understand, Mr Boyce, that you propose to use this witness as an expert?

"No, your honor. I only ask the witness what he meant when he said that he had never seen writing of that kind before."

"Now, do you mean as to the form of the letter or the composition?"

"I meant that I never had seen this writing before."

"I ask you if that kind of writing is a kind you have never seen before?"

"I don't know that I ever saw any of this kind of writing, and I never did see this writing before."

"I understood you to say, when an exhibit was handed to you, that there was something in the phraseology that attracted you. What did you mean?"

"I saw a word or two there that I never saw in writing. There is the word 'Madame,' which I don't know. It isn't Spanish, nor English, and there is the word 'roue.' I don't know what that means."

"You don't know what that word means?"

"Well, I asked about it the other day and was told."

Mr Gutierrez' disposition to answer more than the questions called for led to a long explanation of how he had seen words of the writing if he had not seen the anonymous letters. He simply had seen a sentence or two of the ... Case letter, and remembered the words "madame" and "roue" which were not of his vocabulary and struck him because of his unfamiliarity with the words.

The witness was excused and court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

whose name has been associated with that of Mrs. Starke in a more or less unenviable way since discussion of the libel ever began. Some plain statements were made both by counsel and witness when Mr. Jackson was on the witness stand, but how far they went to prove the defendant's innocence is problematical. Mr. Jackson was not a witness for the defense through choice, and he even testified that he could not help but feel a resentment toward Mrs. Starke, because of her actions since she left Santa Barbara after the anonymous letter scandal became public and her name was connected with it.

C. C. Davis was called by the defense to pass upon the newspaperism of the exhibits that have been pronounced perfect specimens of copy as it should be prepared for the printer. Mr. Davis thought differently of it, even finding fault with The Press letter as a manuscript for publication.

Ex-Sheriff Hicks told of the ride that he had with Mrs. Starke more than a year ago, when Detective Pomade was in town.

MORNING SESSION.

Mrs. Susan McCaughey, the second witness called for the defense, testified that she now lived in Hope precinct, had lived in Santa Barbara about thirty years, and had known Mrs. Starke about four years.

Mr. Boyce—Do you remember the occasion when Mrs. Starke left Santa Barbara in the fall of 1898?

"Yes, sir."

"State how you happened to be familiar with the circumstances?"

"I saw in the papers that Mrs. Starke was arrested for perjury. I went to offer my services, and to go on her bond if necessary. I met Mrs. West at the door, and she said—"

Mr. Squier—We object to the witness testifying as to what Mrs. West said.

Mr Boyce withdrew the question in that particular, and the witness continued:

"Underslanding that she was willing to go on the bond with me, I went to Mr. Jackson's office and found Mrs. Starke and told her that myself and Mrs. West were willing to go on Mrs. Starke's bond."

"Did Mrs. West afterward refuse to go on the bond?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you have any interview with C. A. Starke at this time?"

"Yes, at least three or four conversations."

"He was the district attorney then and was prosecuting the charge of perjury against the defendant?"

Objection was made by the district attorney, and Mr. Boyce stated that he intended to show by this witness that there had been a conspiracy against the defendant in which three persons were parties, that C. A. Starke had made threats that he would bring a charge of writing anonymous letters against the defendant, in order to get her out of town.

The Court—Supposing you do all this, what has this to do with this case? Did not the grand jury bring the indictment? Do you intend to bring the grand jury into it?

Mr. Boyce asked if he could not show that strong animus had prompted the bringing of the matter before the grand jury, etc.

The Court—I do not care to make a blank ruling, but I do not believe these antecedents should be brought into this case. Here is an indictment; we must assume that indictment is a valid thing, and we cannot go back of it.

Mr Boyce—Do you hold that we shall not be permitted to show by our own witnesses facts surrounding the circumstances which stimulated this charge?

The Court—The question is whether or not this defendant is guilty of the charge in the indictment made.

Mr. Boyce—The mere fact that the grand jury was used as an instrument to find the bill, should not prevent us showing the circumstances under which the charge was brought.

The Court—Putting the thing into a nutshell, we must assume that the indictment is all right. Even if there have been animus and fraud we cannot go back to that.

Mr. Boyce stated further that he wished to show that C. A. Starke had stated to this witness that if the defendant

Objection. Sustained.

"Did you have any conversation with Grant Jackson?"

Objection, sustained. The defense excepted to all these rulings.

"During this time did you in the presence of this defendant and Grant Jackson and Mrs. West, as the representative of the defendant, bring to her attention a certain agreement or stipulation in the case of Starke vs. Starke, which was tendered to this defendant for her signature, upon the payment of a certain sum of money?"

Objection; sustained. Defense excepts.

"I will show witness defendant's exhibit No. 9. Did you ever see that before?

Objection; sustained. Defense excepts.

"During that negotiation was any stipulation presented to this defendant from C. A. Starke, the then district attorney, with the proposition that if she would sign that stipulation, being a dismissal of the divorce case and her claims for alimony, she would receive a certain sum of money; and with this a threat that if she did not sign the stipulation she would be prosecuted for writing these anonymous letters?"

Objection, sustained. Mr. Squier objected to this line of questioning, as it was simply getting into the records a lot of inadmissable matter. The court allowed the questioning to proceed.

"In a conversation between you and C. A. Starke, did he there state to you—"

Mr. Squier objected, as the question was leading and suggestive. Sustained.

"You stated that you had two or three conversations with C. A. Starke?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did he in a conversation with you in his office state to you that unless—"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did not C. A. Starke, the district attorney at that time, in a conversation in his office, mention the subject—"

Mr. Squier—We object. It is leading and suggestive.

Mr. Boyce—I am laboring, your honor, very hard to propound a question that will be admissable.

The Court—Well, go ahead with your question.

"Did he not in that conversation, in regard to these anonymous letters, mention—"

Another objection was made at this point by the district attorney and sustained by the court, and the witness was excused without further attempts to establish by her the conspiracy alleged to exist against the defendant.

Edward Dixon was called to the stand. He said that he was the owner of the building known as the Dixon block, 527 and 527½ State street. That the defendant was an occupant of the building about two years and one-half. She left there in August, 1898. She occupied rooms Nos. 5 and 6 continuously, and part of the time had room No. 3 as a studio. In June, 1898, she had these three rooms.

Mr Boyce—What means were used for securing the doors of these rooms?

Mr Dixon—These were night latches, and she had duplicate keys.

"Did you have any keys to those rooms?"

"No, sir."

"Did the defendant have any keys to the outer doors?"

"She had; two."

"You had an office in that building?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you in the habit of occupying that room on Sundays?"

"No, sir."

"Were you in that room on any Sunday in June, on Sunday, June 26th?"

"I think not."

"I will ask you if any application was ever made to you for permission to enter those rooms, or for any keys?"

Objection was made to the question, and was sustained on the ground that it was collateral and immaterial.

Mr Boyce—Does your honor mean that we cannot show that the testimony of the detective, Pomade, was false?

The Court—I do not think you can impeach a witness on immaterial matters.

The witness was excused.

County Clerk Hunt was called.

Mr. Boyce—I will show you defendant's exhibits 15 and 16 and plaintiff's exhibit No. 23 which bear upon their face evidences of having been filed in this court in the year 1892. You are famili-

... and plaintiff's exhibit "I" (The Press letter and the Independent letter) and ask you if after examination, from your experience as a newspaper man these letters indicate that they were prepared by one familiar with newspaper work?"

"I should say that they were not written by a person familiar with inside newspaper work."

"Kindly point out the evidences that lead you to that conclusion?"

"The first word in exhibit H 'Ed,' is one. No skilled newspaper man would abbreviate the word 'Editor.'

"Are there any other indications that lead you to this belief?"

"I do not think that an experienced newspaper man would use the word 'Sir' after the word 'editor.' It is considered superfluous, and I cannot recall a newspaper that follows that style. My first impression is that a person writing for the press would not be so precise in the matter of punctuation. The punctuation marks do not appear to be in keeping with the general style of the handwriting, and appear to have been added after the letter was written."

"From an examination of the matter contained in those exhibits, are you able to form an opinion as to whether or not some other person added the punctuation marks, after the letter had been written?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Is there anything in the location or position in which the punctuation is found in the matter to indicate to your mind whether the author was familiar with newspaper work?"

"I should say that the person who wrote this, unless designedly, was not familiar with newspaper work."

The witness explained that a newspaper man would not use three or four different kinds of punctuation points. "From my experience and observation I have known few newspaper men who were so precise in punctuation, whose punctuation seemed so studied. As to the paragraphing I could criticise it but little, it is largely a matter of taste."

"Let me call your attention to the Martha Case letter, and to the paragraph beginning 'more especially.' What do you say in regard to that appearing in the letter as it does as to familiarity with newspaper writing?"

"It clearly shows inexperience. No experienced writer would make a paragraph at that place. The general appearance of this letter does not give evidence that it was written by a person who understood newspaper work."

In the cross-examination, Mr Squier asked:

"Are you acquainted with the defendant?"

"I have a slight acquaintance with her." I have known her by sight three or four months.

"You were in the newspaper business in Santa Barbara?"

"For a brief time."

"Did you know the defendant while you were in the newspaper business?"

"She had been pointed out to me."

"Did you ever see any of the defendant's writing intended for publication?"

"No, sir."

"When did you first get acquainted with the defendant?"

"She came to my house or office, some and characteristics."

The witness was asked to designate in detail the different points that led him to believe that a person not familiar with newspaper work, wrote The Press letter. Among other things he noted the word "dire hole" and said that to a newspaper man "dire" would have been considered sufficient, and 'hole' superfluous.

The Court—Mr. Davis, do you think that a person not used to newspaper work would be more apt to make use of that word than one who is?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

The Court—I do not think so.

Mr. Squier—(to witness)—Now, as to punctuation.

"The punctuation and paragraphing appears to be fairly correct in this exhibit.

"You have read a number of these exhibits, several times in the court room, since this trial commenced?"

"Some of them."

"You have read the one you hold in your hand?"

"Yes, sir."

"In exhibit "C" he said that there were forms that any professional newspaper man would use at his peril; "he would not hold his job very long."

"Isn't it possible for a newspaper man to disguise his handwriting?"

"I expect so."

"Do you think that a newspaper man would not disguise his hand writing?"

"I have known newspaper men who would not be above it."

Mr. Boyce—Now, Mr. Davis, you have stated as to the custom of paragraphing, etc. Is there not a general custom or practice known as 'the newspaper style?' "

"While every large newspaper office has its style, there are certain usages so common and well understood that they are reduced to written or printed form."

"Do these exhibits conform to those universal rules?"

"No, sir, they violate them in some particulars."

The Court—What would you say of the universality of the rule that no newspaper would accept a communication that is not accompanied by the name of the writer?

The Witness—No well regulated newspaper would accept for publication a communication that would reflect upon an individual, without knowing the name of the writer.

Ex-Sheriff T. H. Hicks took the stand.

Mr. Boyce—Do you remember an occasion when you drove the defendant out to see a witness in the Richardson murder case?

"Yes, sir.

"Was that at the time the detective, Pomade, was here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you know the day of the week?"

"I don't think I do."

"Do you know the day of the month?"

"I do not remember, Mr Boyce."

"How long were you gone?"

"I think about two hours, or two hours and a half."

"Did you use your ordinary conveyance?"

"I think, Mr. Boyce, I had a livery

(Continued to Fifth Page.)

"Did you not use your rental rig and go out and meet her?"

"I may."

"Do you remember meeting Tom Lee [illegible] on the road?"

"Yes, sir."

"You went to his house, did you not?"

"We stopped at Mr. Packard's, and then went on to Mr. Leslie's."

"You cannot remember the day of the week?"

"No, sir."

"It was not Sunday, was it?"

"No. I can say it was not Sunday."

Grant Jackson was the witness next on the stand. He said he had lived here about twelve years.

"You know the defendant?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you ever act as her attorney?"

"Yes, sir."

"When did you first act as her attorney?"

"I think it was in 1891."

"In what litigation did you represent her?"

"In the case of F. A. Storke vs. Yda Addis Storke."

"When did you cease to act as her attorney?"

"Until she went away in August, '98. My name was on the record as her attorney until October, when it was stricken off on my motion."

"How did the relations as attorney and client cease?"

"She went away. She stated that she did not want me to represent her any more."

"When?"

"Just before she went away."

"Did she give any reason?"

"Not that I recall. I was tired of representing her, and I suppose she was tired of having me represent her."

"Do you remember what the defendant said to you, in the presence of witness, the reason she had for terminating the relationship?"

"What witness?"

"I ask you if you remember any such occurrence?"

"When and where?"

The Court—Did she ever state to you her reason for not wanting you to represent her?

"Well, she said, I believe, that she thought I was not loyal to her interests."

Mr. Boyce—When and where was that?

"I think it was in her room in the Trussell building, a day or two or three days before she went away."

"Have you not in your possession a written notice from her, dated November 10, 1897, dismissing you as her attorney?"

"I do not remember any such thing. I know I continued to act as her attorney after that."

A letter was handed witness, Attorney Boyce asking him if he had a copy of it.

He had not, he said, and he had no recollection of ever having seen the letter.

"Is it customary for you to destroy letters of this kind?"

"I think not."

"Will you state that you never did receive this letter?"

"I will say that I have no recollection of ever having received a letter of that kind."

Prosecuting Attorney Squier objected to further examination of witness in relation to the letter until the prosecution had seen the letter. It was given to the attorney to read, and then presented for identification.

"As Mrs. Storke's attorney in the divorce case, you had collected for her several sums of money, as alimony, had you not?"

An objection was sustained, when Attorney Boyce stated that the purpose was to show the termination of the relations between the defendant and witness. The ruling was allowed to stand.

"Did you take any steps in the case of Storke vs. Storke since November 10, 1897?"

"I think there were no steps taken by anybody since the spring of that year. It has been hanging fire since."

Judge Oster—Mr. Jackson, you like all attorneys, make a very bad witness. Do you or did you not take steps in this case since the time stated?

"No, sir."

Attorney Boyce—Were the relations between you interrupted prior to that time?

"They were somewhat interrupted, but I considered myself still her attorney."

"But, on in the year 1897, have the key to the outer door of the Trussell building?"

"Yes."

"[illegible] or less [illegible] to the [illegible] or [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Petition in the month of June, 1898."

"Yes."

"Did you surrender your keys to the detective, Pourade, in the month of June?"

"I did not. I never surrendered the keys to anyone."

"Did Detective Pourade consult with you as to the object of his visit?"

"No, I never had a conversation with him of any kind."

Witness said that all of the correspondence that he had with Mrs. Storke and all notes that he had received from her in connection with her divorce case had been returned to Mrs. Storke before she left the city. He did not know where she kept the letters from him.

He said that he was familiar with Mrs. Storke's rooms in the Trussell building and had been there a great deal. He assisted in clearing up the apartments after Mrs. Storke left in August. He assisted Mrs. West.

"Did you know of the circulation of anonymous letters in 1897 and 1898?"

"Not in 1897."

"Did you in 1898?"

"Yes, I heard a great deal about anonymous letters in 1898."

"When did you receive an anonymous letter?"

Witness answered that he had received one of the anonymous letters and had given it to Sheriff Hicks.

"Are you acquainted with F. N. Gutierrez?"

"Yes, sir. I have known him ever since I came to Santa Barbara." Witness had not had business with Mr. Gutierrez. He had occasion now and then to go to Gutierrez' office, but he was never there alone with him, nor was Gutierrez ever in Jackson's office, so far as witness knew, within the past four or five years.

"Do you remember the months of April, May and June, 1897?"

"I do."

"Did not the defendant during that time pack up her things preparatory for leaving Santa Barbara, and did not you induce her to remain?"

"She talked a great deal about going away, but I did not persuade her to remain."

"Did you not persuade her to take employment on San Francisco papers and remain here during the time of the circulation of these anonymous letters?"

"I knew nothing about the anonymous letters until a day or two before I received one."

"Do you mean to say you did not persuade the defendant to remain here?"

"I did not."

"You had the key to her rooms?"

"Yes."

"You were at her apartments a great deal?"

"I was."

"You used to eat there?"

"No, sir. I did not."

"You made your headquarters there?"

"I did not, and you know it."

"You went there at all hours?"

"I went there in the evening, but never during the day unless on business connected with her suits."

"You mean to say that you did not, in combination with F. A. Storke, place all the obstacles you could in the way of Mrs. Storke's leaving here?"

"No. I never entered into a combination with Mr. Storke."

"You remember an incident in Dr. Winchester's office that you related to defendant when you said there were anonymous letters circulated. You remember a scandal on Dr. Winchester that you asked the defendant to write up for the San Francisco papers?"

"No, sir. I never asked her to write up a scandal."

"You remember that the defendant took quite an active interest in the anonymous letters?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Did you not suggest that Dr. Winchester might be the author of the letters?"

"No, sir. I did not." Jackson said that he asked Mrs. Storke if she knew that it was reported that Dr. Winchester was sending out the letters.

This took place in Mrs. Storke's apartments. She expressed herself for a moment, and then witness told [illegible] a great deal about the scandal and returned [illegible] interest [illegible]

Mr. Jackson denied that he had entered into a combination with Sheriff Hicks and Detective Pourade to get Mrs. Storke out of the way so that they might enter and search her apartments.

"Did you consult with the witness before the grand jury in regard to this case?"

"I may have had some conversation with Mrs. McGaughey in regard to the anonymous letter [illegible] but none other [illegible]

A specimen of writing that had been used before the grand jury was presented and identified by witness as writing that Mrs. Storke had shown him, saying it was the writing of Miss McGillivray. The bit of paper was marked "Miss McGillivray's handwriting," by Mrs. Storke, and was a part of her alleged detective work in connection with running down the author of the anonymous letters. Witness said that he had seen the paper, but once before, when it was shown to him by defendant.

"Did you have any motive in inducing Mrs. Storke to leave Santa Barbara?"

"The only reason that I had was that she was charged with perjury and was in ill health."

"Was nothing said about anonymous letter writing?"

"Yes. Something about that was said."

"Did you not say to defendant that she was charged with the writing of anonymous letters, and that so many persons here were opposed to her that they would convict her, whether or not she was guilty?"

Objection was sustained.

"Have you now any feeling of resentment against this defendant?"

"I can not help but feel a resentment on account of her actions since she left Santa Barbara."

"Didn't you in August want to get rid of this defendant because you were afraid of her?"

"No, I'm not afraid of her, nor of you."

Mr. Jackson in replying to further questions in this line said that he had never had any fear of Mrs. Storke. She had annoyed him upon her return to town by going to his house, and he had threatened to have her arrested if she went there again.

During this time Mrs. Storke appeared greatly agitated, and as the witness was leaving the stand, the court adjourning for the day, she arose and striking an attitude of defiance, followed Jackson with her eyes as he was passing out. When he was opposite her, Jackson stopped and faced about, the two for an instant glaring at each other. Sheriff Stewart stepped between them and told Jackson to move on, and the little drama closed.

Court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

DAILY NEWS

FRANK SANDS.

SUBSCRIPTION, 60 CENTS PER MONTH.

Entered at the Post Office at Santa Barbara, Cal., as Second-Class matter.

All communications relating to subscriptions and advertising should be addressed to the DAILY NEWS, Santa Barbara, California.

Publication Office, 26 West Ortega Street.

TELEPHONE - - MAIN 18.

Official Paper of the City of Santa Barbara, Cal.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., JUNE 15, 1899

For over two weeks past, the people of Santa Barbara have been quietly listening to evidence in the action charging criminal libel against the person now undergoing trial before our Superior Court.

Although the facts charged are of the most serious nature—hardly less in gravity than murder—we have seen no person yet show the least desire to do anything or say anything that could tend to deprive the person accused of every opportunity of proving innocence; we have seen no taxpayer who regretted the money expended, though this trial is of necessity very costly. Only one thing has seemed foremost in the minds of the people; find out the person guilty and let punishment be properly and lawfully meted out.

This trial, then, has been before the court for approaching three weeks; the jury has cost its $21 per diem and the expert Kitka has to be paid we do not know what. That is all right.

But new developments are showing up and we see the most patient of the people speaking decidedly their opinions. It is apparently not enough to have made so large a number of our people unhappy—miserable—over the receipt of the vile letters themselves; not enough that families are splitting up—have been hopelessly divided; not enough that not a few blameless and innocent women have been kept at home out of fear lest they meet men, who may have received communications purporting to have been written by themselves, and making suggestions beneath even the lowest and most shameless of an unmentionable class. That is not enough, it appears. The defense will now without cause and without reason seek to fasten the blame on others.

To this latter proposition even the patient citizens object and ask what next?

In Tuesday's proceedings it was made plain that the defense was "out fishing" and seeking to bring into the affair Grant Jackson as a party to the dastardly crime.

This new move lacks reason as the handwriting of Mr. Jackson is so different from the Case letter that the expert, Kitka, laughed outright as he brushed it aside. Mr. Jackson never wrote those letters. He was and is incapable of such an act. He may have been indiscreet in many ways, as are some other young men, but no one who knows the man will for even a moment believe Mr. Jackson ever wrote or was even aware of the disgusting letters.

Attempt is being made to bring in Frank N. Gutierrez in connection with Jackson in this matter with no more reason than in the other. Mr. Gutierrez was born and reared in this city and we hazard the assertion that not a decent man in the whole neighborhood believes even for a moment that Mr. Gutierrez could write such letters or be made a party in producing them.

It is an outrage to couple an innocent man with such a case. It seems like an attempt to cast a shadow over a man's life just out of spite; to blacken his reputation and blast his future.

We protest against the injustice of such work and denounce it as being inspired by hate with no tempering of justice. It seems a direct attempt to injure the man in this community, to impair his usefulness as a citizen and a lawyer. It lacks every element of an excuse and should be frowned on by all lovers of fair play and justice.

Any young man has plenty of trouble in establishing himself in any business or profession, in these days of hot competition and rivalry, without the handicap of having his fair name smirched or being accused of crimes which, to commit, any lawyer knows will eventually be ferreted out and made public.

Let the accused in this suit have a fair, impartial trial, but, in God's name, do not make the mistake of allowing innocent people being dragged into the affair simply to distract attention from the main issue.

MRS. STORKE SUES HER FORMER FRIEND.

Litigating for the Recovery of Certain Personal Effects Stored With Mrs. Anna E. West.

SANTA BARBARA, June 30.—Interest in the doings of Mrs. Yda Addis Storke has not died out here. Her appearance in a Justice Court this morning drew out as large a crowd as graced her presence in the Superior Court rooms during her long libel trial. The case to-day was one in which Mrs. Storke was suing a former confidential friend, Mrs. Anna E. West, for recovery of certain personal effects stored at Mrs. West's house some time ago, when being accused of writing the celebrated Storke anonymous letters, she left hurriedly for Mexico. The plaintiff asks for $20 on the goods and for $117 damages.

Mrs. Storke acted as her own attorney and conducted her case on the broadest principles. The court allowed the testimony to take its own course, and when the women quarreled with each other, let them quarrel.

Mrs. Storke Loses Her Case.

SANTA BARBARA, July 1. Yda Addis Storke sued Mrs. West, her former friend, for damages for the retention of certain goods stored by her at Mrs. West's while Mrs. Storke was in Mexico. The plaintiff alleges that goods amounting to $20 have been held unlawfully by the defendant, and $117 is asked for goods and $117 as damages sustained through their disappearance. The jury this morning decided the case in favor of defendant.

THE DARE THAT DIDN'T EVENTUATE

19

Attorney Boyce and Editor Lloyd Glower Fiercely.

A DEFIANCE IN COURT.

Barberenos Promised Themselves a Scrap, but Were Disappointed.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

SANTA BARBARA, June 19.—The testimony of the Storke case is practically all in. When court adjourned this evening the prosecution said that only one more witness would be called to-morrow in rebuttal and that the examination would be a short one.

The day was, as usual, eventful, and, like most of the other days of the trial, saw insults very freely passed and passed over.

Mrs. Storke began the day by testifying as to the inks of various letters. She said the inks were picked up in various places in Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and in San Francisco. She renewed the charge that her mail matter had been stopped in the local postoffice and given to her enemies. Mrs. Storke stated positively that she had seen Jackson and Gutierrez coming from the latter's office in May, 1898, while the letters were being circulated, and said she had seen Jackson there alone a number of times. She said she knew Jackson's forms of expression, and said certain of the anonymous letters written in dialect were in his style. Certain words and phrases she picked out, saying the attorney used them habitually.

Jackson later denied ever using the expressions.

The defendant was shown the anonymous letters and denied ever having seen any of them before she was accused. Upon examination of the Marina Case letter, she found a number of words and letters that, she said, were so like hers that she believed them to have been traced from words written by her. Concerning two of the letters shown her, she said: "From the bottom of my soul I know he wrote them." The "he" was Jackson.

Mrs. Storke said that Lloyd, editor of the "Morning Press," Jackson and Sheriff Hicks had told her that some of the anonymous letters were typewritten, but all of these men denied in rebuttal having ever done so. No such letters are in evidence in the case.

A number of the envelopes, in which several objectionable letters were mailed, were shown the defendant, and she said she had used envelopes of exactly the same kind at the time the letters were circulating, and that she had some of them now. She also stated that at the time the letters were written she and Jackson had had their stationery in common and that he had often taken envelopes and stamps from her rooms.

The defense rested its case and Clio L. Lloyd, manager of the "Morning Press," was called in rebuttal. But a short time ago he was one of Senator Boyce's best friends, but now they do not speak to each other. Lloyd denied having ever gone to Mrs. Storke's rooms as she swore he did. He said she had repeatedly asked him to go to the rooms, but that he would never go. He said he had branded her assertion that they went there as an infamous lie, and then followed the storm of the day.

Boyce used the word "thing" in referring to Lloyd, and the editor, in great anger, dared the lawyer to use such language out of the courtroom. Boyce replied that Lloyd would see him about four minutes after the court adjourned, and the two glared fiercely at each other all through Lloyd's cross-examination.

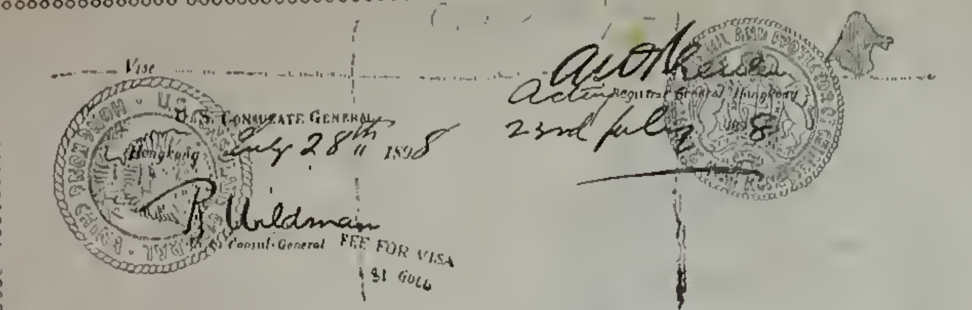
Jackson then went upon the stand and swore that, shortly after Mrs. Storke's arrest on the present charge, she had accused him of having betrayed her, and had said: "If I go down in this case we will go down together."

Mrs. Storke had already denied this very emphatically.

When court adjourned, the whole audience waited developments. Watches were out on all sides, and the four minutes counted off while there were offers of odds on both Boyce and Lloyd. Lloyd evidently did not enjoy his situation, but finally Boyce, accompanied by his wife, left the courthouse and the courthouse grounds, and no heads were punched. A number of the jurors showed signs of evident disappointment.

It is probable that to-morrow evening the jurors will have to decide upon the guilt or innocence of Mrs. Storke.

BOGUS SEALS AND FORGED SIGNATURES ARRANGED TO COMPLETE THE SCHEME TO GET INTO COUNTRY ON COUNTERFEIT CHINESE CERTIFICATES



Under an opinion of the U. S. Attorney-General, dated May 20, 1896, this certificate will be valid if signed by the proper officer of the Government in which the Chinese last resided, and the Registrar-General at Hongkong is recognized as competent to sign certificates for Chinese residents of that Colony of the exempt class. The Secretary of the Treasury has uniformly held that the omission from these certificates of any of the statements required in the Statute, is fatal to the sufficiency of the certificate, as showing prima facie right to enter the United States.

COPY FURNISHED THE ENGRAVER WHO MADE THE BOGUS SEALS.

Two Chinese ordered copies of the Consular stamp at Hongkong and of the one used by the British Registrar-General, on the plea that the ones in China were worn out. Their purpose undoubtedly was to use them in conjunction with fraudulent certificates.

FOLLOWING close upon the attempt in Oakland to procure the printing of 6,000 copies of certificates used for identification by Chinese merchants and students to obtain admission to America comes the counterfeiting of the official stamps employed by the United States at Hongkong and the British Registrar-General and protector of Chinese in the same city, to give authenticity to these documents.

Every Mongolian merchant or student who desires to come to America is required to establish his identity by the presentation of a certificate stamped and countersigned by both of these officials. Many efforts have been made to provide papers of this sort to coolies and laborers. It is so difficult to obtain genuine certificates that the Federal officials believe there is a great scheme afoot, engineered by Chinese and aided by whites, to issue a quantity of false documents signed with forged consular signatures and stamped with counterfeited seals.

Several weeks ago two Chinamen went to the office of S. O. Holmes, 423 Washington street, and gave him a copy of a genuine certificate upon which impressions of these two seals were stamped. They told him the dies in Hongkong had worn down so that they were nearly useless and that they desired to have new ones made to send over there.

Unmindful of the improbability of the United States Consul and a British official ordering new seals at the same time, from the same source, and above all through Chinese who refused to give their names, Holmes accepted the order and employed another engraver named Gillier on Montgomery street to cut the dies.

Gillier made them, and the one for the British Registrar-General was satisfactory. The other was too large, and the border had not been exactly copied. It was sent back again and Gillier fixed it over. The Chinese are to call at Holmes' office for it to-day.

Holmes says he has known the Chinese by sight for years, but not their names. They are described as young men of medium height, and are presumed to live on a small alley above Dupont street, just off Jackson.

Collector of Customs Jackson says there is no doubt that the Chinese procured the stamps as part of a scheme to illegally land a dozen of their countrymen. They intended to partly imitate the printed forms, impress them with the counterfeit seals and then forge the names of the two officials. In many cases these certificates would undoubtedly take their holders past the inspectors unless those officials had some knowledge that such a design was contemplated. But the Collector adds that while a crime is undoubtedly in contemplation, he can do nothing until it is consummated. It is not illegal to have unauthorized consular seals in possession, nor is it against the law to aid or abet Chinese to land fraudulently. This latter question was decided by Judge de Haven, who said that the statute could not be violated until the Chinaman had actually effected an illegal landing in America.

If the stamp is applied to forged certificates, then those doing it would be amenable. In the mean time under the law nothing will be done, although the Chinese bureau will undoubtedly take steps to secure information regarding the Chinamen who ordered the stamps, so that it can check any attempt to flood the country with coolies and laborers.

YDA ADDIS STORKE AND THE MAN SHE TRIED TO MURDER.

Attorney Grant Jackson.

TRIED TO KILL AN ATTORNEY.

Yda Addis Storke's Night Visit to Her Former Lawyer.

USED CHLOROFORM AS HE SLEPT.

HE AWAKENS BEFORE BECOMING UNCONSCIOUS AND A FIGHT ENSUES.

The Eccentric Woman Wields a Pistol, but Is Put in Jail and Charged With Attempted Murder.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

SANTA BARBARA, July 9.—Yda Addis Storke again languishes in jail, this time under the serious charge of attempt to commit murder. To-morrow she was to appear in the Superior Court for sentence for criminal libel, she having been convicted of this offense three weeks ago, a stay of execution having been granted while her attorneys could prepare their bill of exceptions and a motion for a new trial. Pending this she has been allowed her liberty on the nominal bond that had been accepted shortly after her first arrest, it being thought that she had not the nerve to carry out the supposedly idle threats that she had made against the lives of her enemies.

Last night, however, armed with two pistols, a bottle of chloroform, another of prussic acid and potassium, a glass cutter and a putty knife, two strips of narrow binding, eight or ten feet long, and a liberal supply of cartridges, matches and string, she entered the residence of Grant Jackson, her former attorney and now her arch enemy, and attempted, he claims, to chloroform and kill him. She was restrained only after a most desperate struggle, during which a pistol in her hands was discharged, but without damage, the ball passing harmlessly through the floor.

With her hands tied so that she could do no further injury she was closely watched by the one whom she had sought to kill until an officer arrived. She was then conveyed to jail. She refused at first to talk to the officers, but this afternoon she told her story freely to a "Chronicle" reporter, disavowing any attempt to injure Jackson by claiming that she had gone to his room as she had frequently done before at that hour, this time to get him to divulge the evidence she says he possesses that would clear her of the charge of writing the anonymous letters which led to her conviction for libel.

Jackson states that when he awoke shortly before daylight he had been disturbed by something tickling his mustache. He turned toward the window, and in the faint light saw an object sitting on the floor at the bedside, and a hand on which chloroform could be plainly detected was withdrawn from his face. He asked "Who is there?" and the person, whom he then recognized as Mrs. Storke, replied: "It is me. Have you got a gun?"

When Jackson answered that he had, she told him to give it to her, adding: "I've got the drop on you."

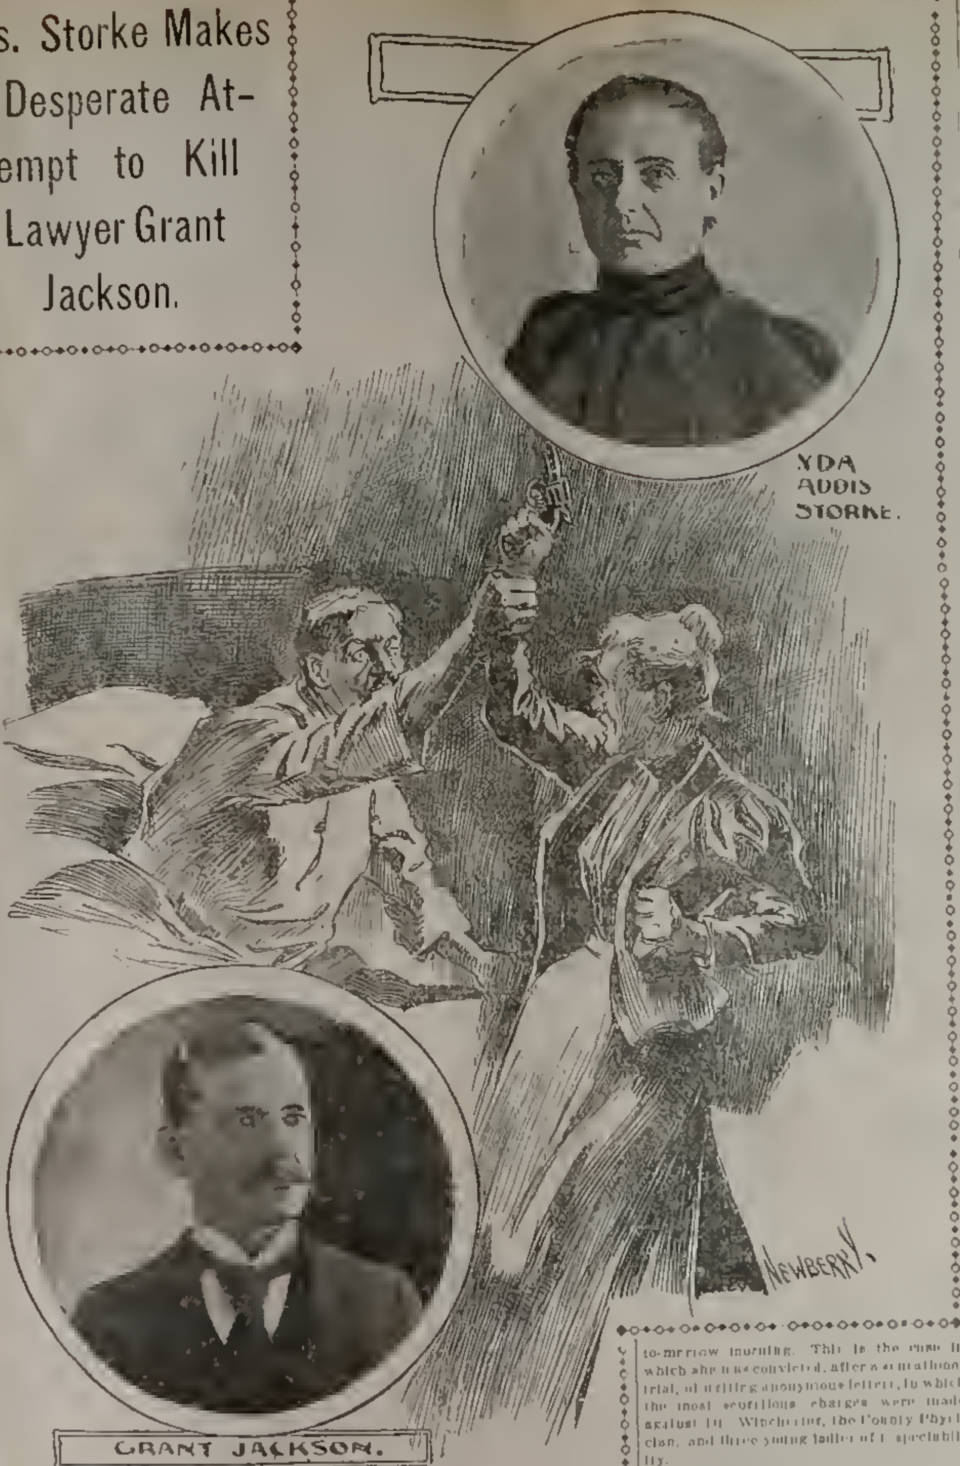
He could by this time plainly see a bulldog revolver pointing at his head and concluded the wiser course would be to deliver his weapon. Then, with one revolver in her hand and two others at her side on the floor, she ordered him to remain quiet. He tried to appear unconcerned and to draw her into conversation until after half an hour or more she told him to get up and lace in the screen, which she had cut in order to gain an entrance. Some one passing, she said, might think that a burglar was in the house and send officers to investigate. While he was going into the other room she kept him within close range of her revolver.

When the screen was removed he was ordered back to bed, but, grasping the only opportunity he had had, seized her unexpectedly by the waist and threw her over, gripping the gun at the same time. She struggled violently and it was several minutes before he had her under control. Then he tied her hands and the tables were turned, she lying quietly on the bed while he stood guard. A few minutes later, when, mistaking the quietness of his prisoner for weakness after her exertion, Jackson was a little lax in his watchfulness, she leaped from the bed and seized one of the revolvers in her two hands. He rushed at her, securing a tight grasp of her wrists, and held them down until the weapon was discharged.

After a short delay a neighbor was aroused and dispatched for an officer. Deputy Constable Shoup arrived shortly after 6 o'clock. Shoup says that Jack-

YDA ADDIS IN THE ROLE OF MURDERESS AGAIN STARTLES SANTA BARBARA

Mrs. Storke Makes a Desperate Attempt to Kill Lawyer Grant Jackson.



GRANT JACKSON.

DESPERATE STRUGGLE FOR MRS. STORKE'S PISTOL.

Yesterday morning Mrs. Yda Addis Storke of Santa Barbara, the generally known writer, cut her way into the room of Lawyer Grant Jackson, who had been her attorney and lover, and tried to kill him. She had two pistols and bottles of chloroform and prussic acid. In the struggle she fired one shot, but the ball went through the floor and did no harm. She is to be sentenced to-day on a charge of criminal libel, but probably will be examined as to her sanity before any punishment is inflicted on her.

SANTA BARBARA, July 8.—Yda Addis Storke has capped her strange career with an attempt at murder, an attempt so weird in its conception and so desperate in its intent as to leave little room for further doubt that the woman's proper place is in an asylum.

At about 3 o'clock this morning she cut her way into the house of Attorney Grant Jackson, formerly her lawyer and lover, but whom she accused of writing the anonymous letters for the writing of which she recently was convicted of libel. She took with her a glass cutter for the purpose of making her way into the house, two revolvers, a bottle of chloroform and a bottle containing a mixture of prussic acid and potassium cyanide. She carried death enough for an army.

Jackson gives a graphic account of the woman's attempt to kill him. He said to your correspondent this afternoon:

"I was aroused from my sleep at about 3 o'clock this morning. I felt something brushing across my face and turned over several times. Still the tickling continued, and then I raised and saw a woman standing on the floor beside my bed. It was Yda Addis, and I was looking straight down the barrel of a revolver. A pistol was under my pillow. I grabbed it and pointed it towards her, but she told me to hand it to her, as she had the drop on me. [illegible]

[illegible] side. She half turned her head and threw her pistol out of the range of my heart. At once I jumped from my bed and sprang upon her, seizing both her arms. Then she fought like a wildcat. I am a large man. She is small and looks frail and weak. But she had the strength of a mad woman, and we struggled up and down that room for ten minutes before I could master her. Once she pulled the trigger, and for an instant, as I smelled the powder smoke, I feared that I was shot. But the bullet went through the floor, and before she again could pull the trigger I had overcome her and obtained the pistol.

"As she wept hysterically I tied her securely, summoned assistance and sent for an officer, who arrested her and took her to jail. I hope never to have such an experience again."

On the floor, among the litter caused by the struggle of Jackson for his life were the two revolvers she had brought with her, a big bottle containing chloroform, which she evidently was trying to use when Jackson awakened, a smaller bottle in which was concentrated sudden death, the mixture of prussic acid and cyanide of potassium, a rattan handbag containing a hundred of pistol cartridges, a knife, matches and some [illegible] cord. Near by were two [illegible] strips of twisted bunting, apparently to be used with the cord for tying Jackson as soon as he was [illegible]

[illegible] to-morrow morning. This is the case in which she was convicted, after a sensational trial, of writing anonymous letters, in which the most scurrilous charges were made against Dr. Winchester, the County Physician, and three young ladies of respectability.

Through all the trial she preserved the demeanor of the huntress rather than the quarry. She has threatened and defied, promising all sorts of hair-raising revelations. She has called herself a fighter and a beat. Her manner has been vicious. But after the struggle and arrest of this morning she broke down. She sobbed hysterically and begged not to be taken to jail. Then she wailed that she was hungry, starving, that she could neither eat nor sleep, that she was in despair. A flood of tears quieted her somewhat.

When an "Examiner" correspondent called upon her at the jail she was lying at full length on a pallet in one corner of a cell reserved for crazy people. As the barred door opened she sprang to her feet, crying "Take him away! Take him away!" and then "Oh, no. He is my friend." She said she was Jackson's contract wife and had the right to go to him at any time.

"He is my husband," she said, "as any man is any woman's husband. I only went to him to force him to give up certain information he has that I would clear me of the libel charge. He knows who wrote the letter. I wanted to make him get me a new trial. I was armed. I always go armed, except when I am in jail. Oh, how sure I am all over! The chloroform I used on account of my heart. I suffer the most intense pain from heart trouble, and when I pour chloroform on a rag and hold it to my breast it stops the pain. I didn't buy the chloroform. I just picked it up somewhere."

Again she moaned over her bruised arms and a shin bad. She was in her stocking feet, but when captured at Jackson's bed [illegible]

A policeman asked if she would have a doctor sent her. This set her almost into hysterics again.

YDA ADDIS TRIES TO TAKE LIFE

ALMOST A MURDERESS

YDA ADDIS STORKE.

This notorious woman made an attempt to kill Attorney Grant Jackson at Santa Barbara yesterday.

SANTA BARBARA, July 8.—Yda Addis Storke, who became notorious through the libel suit brought against her by the county for having written anonymous letters attacking Dr. Winchester and certain women, now appears before the public in the role of a would-be murderess. Attorney Grant Jackson, at one time her best friend, but who gained her enmity by testifying against her in the libel suit, was the intended victim.

This morning at about 3 o'clock Mrs. Storke went to Jackson's house with the intention of "finishing him up," as she expressed it, but her attempt was unsuccessful. She gained entrance to a bedroom through the window on the southeast side of the house by cutting a screen. Once in the house she sat down on a bed to arrange her plans. First she opened the hand satchel she brought with her and took out a four-ounce bottle of chloroform, a bottle of prussic acid, and a bottle of cyanide acid and carefully arranged them on the bed. Then she selected the chloroform bottle, and carrying with it some bunting, which she had in the valise, she walked cautiously into Jackson's room.

The would-be murderess stooped over the sleeping form and arranged the chloroform bottle in such a position that her arm would not tire before her work was accomplished. The piece of bunting touched Jackson's nose and aroused him, but he merely turned restlessly on his couch and again fell asleep. He was aroused a second time by the same tickling sensation and sat up. He saw the woman standing over him and asked:

"Who are you?"

"It's me, Grant," Mrs. Storke replied. "Have you a gun?"

Jackson said that he had. Mrs. Storke drew a revolver from the folds of her dress and Jackson was commanded to hand over his weapon, Mrs. Storke saying she "had the drop" on him. He obeyed the command. He asked the woman what she wanted there at that time of the night. She exclaimed:

"That's my business. Don't talk too loud; you will awaken the rest of the house."

They entered into conversation and Jackson attempted to divert her attention. He watched for an opportunity to seize her, but she kept him covered with the revolver. Finally his chance came. She reached for her handkerchief which lay on the floor, and he instantly sprang upon her. They grappled for ten minutes before Jackson overpowered her. He tied both hands behind her back. Then he called E. Tallant, a neighbor, who summoned an officer, and Mrs. Storke was placed under arrest. She begged Jackson on her knees not to arrest her, assuring him that she would pay him a large sum of money if he would let her go. She was taken to the County Jail and a warrant for attempt to murder was served. When interviewed she said:

"I have nothing to say. I merely went to Jackson's room because I knew I would find him in a better mood and then could talk to him undisturbed. I went through the window because I have been accustomed to enter that way, as I have been in the house a number of times and at all hours of the night. The chloroform I had with me on account of heart trouble and why I carry the other articles is nobody's business."

Jackson's story is different. During the conversation at his bedside he asked why she was there and she answered:

"I am here to kill you and then commit suicide, so don't be in a rush—we've both got to go."

"She asked me for my pistol, which I handed to her," said Jackson. "I finally succeeded in striking up a conversation and branched off on to another subject altogether. She has prowled around the house very often, but never seemed desperate in any way. I saw my chance to grab her. I tied her hands and threw her on the bed and called for Ed Tallant, a neighbor. In the meantime she turned over, seized a revolver with both hands and discharged it, the bullet going through the floor. An officer came and she was placed under arrest."

A number of persons have believed themselves in danger since the trial for libel, and the attack upon Jackson will result in a vigorous attempt being made to place Mrs. Storke behind the walls of San Quentin.

Mrs. Storke was to have been sentenced in the Superior Court to-morrow for criminal libel. When Mrs. Storke was searched at the jail she was found to have a second revolver with her.

A MAN IS AT THE BOTTOM OF IT.

Handwriting Expert Kytka Says Mrs. Berg Wrote the Marysville Letters.

(From a Staff Correspondent.)

MARYSVILLE, July 11.—The exclusive publication of an article in The Report on Monday regarding the anonymous letters received during the month of May by the Misses Slattery, and the subsequent indirect charges against Mrs. C. Berg, a wealthy resident of this district, of being the author, has caused no end of excitement and gossip here.

Attorney Carlin, who has been retained by the Misses Slattery to represent them in the matter, was seen in his office, at Second and D streets, and reluctantly said:

"If Mrs. Berg is the author of those anonymous letters it will be a source of intense surprise to me. The evidence will have to be conclusive before I will be sufficiently convinced that she is guilty. I shall make a systematic investigation before being satisfied of her guilt. She is a woman of standing, whose reputation is good. Before any overt charge shall be made accusing her of being the author of the letters, a complete and thorough investigation will be made to the end that no injury should be done an innocent person. For myself, I have not yet arrived at the conclusion that she is guilty. The subject matter of the communications tend to limit the rule of possibilities. The person who wrote these letters certainly has a diseased mind.

"There is no possible reason why she should have written them. I understand, however, that Mrs. Berg and the Misses Slattery had had a misunderstanding which resulted in a difficulty."

"Have you seen the expert's report?" was asked.

"Oh, yes," he continued, "I have it right here. When I received it I showed it to Mrs. Berg, and she stated that it was erroneous, and registered a strenuous denial of knowing anything regarding the anonymous letters whatever."

"Do you not think that this report is damaging in the extreme?" was interrogated.

"I certainly believe it is," he said, "because Mr. Kytka is an expert of handwriting who has a reputation, and is known to understand his business. I saw the two exemplars, which were to be sent to the expert for comparison with the anonymous letters, and must admit that there was great similarity in the writing. These two letters, to which I refer were written by Mrs. Berg, but there is a possibility that the expert did not receive the identical exemplars that I saw. When they are returned to me I will be able to speak more fully in this matter. Mrs. Berg is not such an adept at handwriting that she can disguise it very much. Yes, I had a suspicion that she wrote the anonymous letters, otherwise I would not have laid the matter before her attorney originally. This is a serious matter, and redress can be had criminally as well as civilly, regardless of the United States postal laws. My clients are satisfied that Mrs. Berg is the author of the letters, but I will not permit them to speak as yet."

The report of Handwriting Expert Theodore Kytka, now in the hands of Attorney Carlin, reads:

"SAN FRANCISCO, July 1, 1899.

"MISS KATE SLATTERY, Marysville, Cal.

"Dear Madame—I have carefully examined the handwriting which purports to be written and signed by Mrs. C. Berg, dated April 30, 1899, and also May 11, 1899, and compared these letters with the five anonymous letters addressed to you and your sister, including the envelopes, and I here report to you that the five anonymous letters and envelopes were written by the same hand. I have marked with my seal all admitted and anonymous letters, including envelopes, for further identification. I find that the writing in the anonymous letters and also on the envelopes is a very clumsy attempt to disguise the characteristic handwriting of the writer. Very respectfully,

"THEODORE KYTKA, Handwriting Expert."

The statement that Mrs. Berg is a Protestant is a mistake. Both the Slatterys and Mrs. Berg are Catholics. Mrs. Berg's pew in the church is directly behind that of the Misses Slattery. Developments are now sufficient to warrant the statement that a male character is the principal in the case, and that the difficulty resulted over him.

All three parties are members of the best families in this section. Mrs. Berg is prominently interested in a number of charitable organizations.

SURGEON G. A. LUNG.

YDA ADDIS CLAIMS JACKSON AS HUSBAND

Declares She Was Long Ago United in Marriage by Contract to the Man She Tried to Kill.

Sentenced to a Year in the County Jail for Circulating the Defamatory Letters—She Receives the Sentence Unmoved.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, July 10.—Yda Addis had an eventful day of it. She was sentenced this morning on the libel suit, and this afternoon she publicly added the name of Jackson, the man she tried to murder yesterday, to that of Storke. She must now be called Storke-Jackson, with a hyphen between the two names.

The scene this morning at the opening of the Superior Court was weird and uncanny. Yda Addis appeared almost like a specter when she entered the crowded courtroom. An immense audience awaited her coming. Her exploit at Jackson's room added strength to the interest that would otherwise have surrounded her sentence. She was dressed in black, but with a white kerchief about her neck. Her face was pale as marble and absolutely without color. Her feet did not seem to move. She glided slowly to her seat and sat down. She glanced neither to the right nor to the left. Her attorneys took seats beside her. She answered C. F. Carrier's bow coldly, but neither she nor Boyce spoke.

Boyce opened the proceedings with a motion for a new trial. But he made no argument. He said that the conduct of the defendant had been such as to preclude his taking further steps in the matter.

Yda Addis moved not a muscle, though this move was a surprise.

Judge Oster read the indictment, going over the venomous Martha Carr letter, upon which the true bill was found.

Yda Addis then arose and spoke in her own behalf and said that she had fully expected to produce new evidence in the shape of affidavits tending to show that F. N. Gutierrez had written anonymous letters, and that he had practically confessed to the deed. These her attorneys should have procured.

Boyce, however, said he had seen no such papers, and thought none could be procured.

As to Boyce's desertion of her at the threshold of the jail, Yda Addis said to the court that Boyce was very unjust, as he had not even heard her version of the affair.

Judge Oster then reviewed briefly the case and said that the penalty affixed was one year of imprisonment or a $5,000 fine.

To fix a fine, he said, would be nonsense, and the year he believed to be an inadequate punishment. Nevertheless he imposed the year's imprisonment, with bail, pending appeal, at $1,000.

The condemned woman arose and moved slowly from the room, the people rising and fixing their eyes upon her. She walked slowly to the jail and was locked in her cell.

At 2 in the afternoon she was taken before a Justice to be arraigned for an attempt to murder Attorney Grant Jackson. The complaint was read and she was asked her true name.

"Yda Addis Storke-Jackson," said the woman. "Yes, that is my name. Yda Addis Storke-Jackson. There is a difference of opinion between Mr. Jackson and myself about my assuming his name. I claim that I was married to him by a contract signed before the abrogation of the contract-marriage law in this State. He claims the contract was signed later."

That was all. The examination on this charge will take place Thursday, with bail fixed at $5,000.

In the evening the woman was seen in the County Jail. She was cheerful and perfectly calm, and said:

"My mind has never been clearer than it is now, than it has been to-day. It is as clear as a bell. I am destitute, I have never before fallen so low, yet I feel myself above all this. Even here I can find good work to do for the uplifting of humanity."

Mrs. Storke, or Jackson, has already formed the friendship of a poor fallen Spanish woman whom she is going to teach. She will now devote herself to writing short stories and expects to paint small Spanish pictures to make money. She expects to appeal her case and repeated her former version of the Jackson affair of Sunday morning. She claims to have been married to Jackson under a contract early in January of 1895, and to have lived with him as his wife. The contract, she says, was stolen from her, but she believes that it is still in existence and that it was kept to prevent her from testifying against him should he come to trial over the anonymous letters.

Jackson was interviewed and laughed at the idea of a marriage contract or of any kind of a marriage. He denied that any relations of any kind had ever existed between them and grew angry when he spoke of her having taken his name. He was her attorney in the Storke case and her intimate friend for years. But he denies her right to the hyphen and to the name of Jackson.

Y, JULY 11, 1899.

SENTENCE OF YDA ADDIS.

Eventful Day for the Santa Barbara Woman.

GIVEN ONE YEAR FOR CRIMINAL LIBEL.

IN COURT SHE CLAIMS TO BE THE CONTRACT WIFE OF GRANT JACKSON.

Held for Attempted Murder Under Heavy Bonds—Only Once Did She Show the Least Emotion.

Special Dispatch to "The Chronicle."

SANTA BARBARA, July 10.—Yda Addis Storke, or, as she now calls herself, Yda Addis Storke-Jackson, may be by her own admissions the wife of two husbands. She claimed on the stand during her recent trial for libel that she did not know whether or not she had ever been divorced from C. A. Storke, that Storke claimed to have a decree of divorce, but she could not affirm or deny his assertion. To-day, when arraigned in the Justice Court on the charge of attempt to murder Grant Jackson, she asked that her name be entered as Yda Addis Storke-Jackson, as she had been married to Jackson by contract just previous to the enactment of the law forbidding such marriages. Jackson, she said, claimed that the contract was null and void, as it was made after the law had been passed. This would be something for the courts to determine hereafter, but she was Mrs. Jackson until it was proven otherwise.

Judge Oster of San Bernardino, who presided during the trial, was on the bench. When he announced that the time had come for passing judgment on the defendant State Senator Boyce, her chief counsel, arose and said: "I have here a motion for a new trial, which I will submit to the Court without argument. The statements in the motion come under the five heads. These I had purposed to argue at this time, but since the conduct of the defendant has been such as to preclude any such action by me, I will not ask any further indulgence from the Court." He also presented the bill of exceptions, and added: "I will now submit the matter without argument and state that I shall not have further connection with the case. My associate counsel, appointed by the Court, will follow the bill of exceptions and the appeal."

As he concluded, Mrs. Storke interrupted the Judge as he was about to speak and said: "This movement of the counsel takes me entirely by surprise. I shall ask the privilege of addressing the Court, and for physical reasons will ask to be permitted to remain seated."

Still sitting, Mrs. Storke remarked: "I would like to examine a copy of the motion for a new trial." She then read it to the Court, setting forth the different grounds for a new trial, including statements that the jury had received certain evidence outside the court, that there had been misconduct of jurymen, that there had been errors of court, that the verdict was contrary to law and that important new evidence had been discovered.

"I will now state," she proceeded in a clear, distinct voice, "that I had no advice that any change was to be made by counsel. I supposed that he had obtained affidavits in support of this motion. Since the trial I have discovered the identical type of what was called the 'curly que' letters, written by one other than myself and having no connection with myself. May I state whom?"

The Court: You may proceed as you like.

"The name is Frank Gutierrez. There are several reputable citizens who are ready to supply affidavits and to swear under the second qualification as experts that these letters are in the handwriting of Mr. Gutierrez, and one well-known and reputable man has told me that, upon receipt of a letter of this series, he knew that the writing was that of Gutierrez."

The Court: I have given every opportunity for you to present your evidence. If errors have been committed I believe they were errors in your favor. I gave you the benefit of the doubt and permitted you and your counsel to go fully into all the different phases of the defense. I see no reason whatever for granting the motion for a new trial or for granting further time to present evidence. I believe that counsel conducted the defense fully and well.

Mrs. Storke—I thought so up to this moment. I am in the hands of the Court.

The Court—The offense may be punishable by a fine not exceeding $5000 or by imprisonment in the County Jail for not more than one year. I believe the verdict a correct one, and I assume that the charge is substantiated by the evidence. So far as I am personally concerned I have no feeling except that of deep personal sympathy for one who has violated the law and is about to pay the penalty for such violation.

Mrs. Storke, slowly and with an even accent: "I have violated no law."

The Court—The jury has found otherwise and I am inclined to accept the verdict of the jury. To impose a fine would be impracticable. The limit of imprisonment is not restricted to be commensurable with the wrong done by writing letters of this character, but this limit is fixed by the Legislature, and it remains only for the Court to pass judgment. The defendant will be confined in the County Jail for the term of one year. The defendant is remanded to the custody of the Sheriff.

Yda Addis received the sentence with the same indifference that has characterized her demeanor throughout the trial. Her color did not change a shade and she looked steadily at the Court as the words were pronounced.

Attorney C. F. Carrier, who had been appointed by the Court to defend Mrs. Storke, and who was the associate counsel referred to by Boyce, then asked the Court to fix bail pending appeal. Judge Oster named $1000 as the amount of the bond, and Mrs. Storke was then conducted back to her cell.

At about 3 o'clock she was driven to Justice Whealon's court for arraignment on the charge of attempted murder. After the complaint had been read to her and she was asked if her own name was given therein she said, "My name is Yda Addis Storke, to which you may add Jackson."

The Justice hesitated to place it on the docket as she gave it, and after bail had been fixed at $500 and Thursday

MORNING, JULY 12.

RUMOR SAYS YDA ADDIS IS A MURDERESS

Gossip Connects Her With the Richardson Tragedy.

BUT LITTLE TO GO ON

Whispering Tongues Also Say She Is a Poisoner of Dogs.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

SANTA BARBARA, July 11.—A suspicion has gained currency here during the past two or three days that Yda Addis may have had a hand in a crime far more serious than the libel matter, or the attempt to shoot or poison Jackson. It was whispered yesterday, and is now a matter of public gossip, that she was in some way connected with the murder of the Richardsons. Many people even go so far as to express the opinion that she murdered these women with her own hands.

The reasons given for this belief are various. In the first place, Mrs. Storke had the run of the Richardson home prior to the murder. The murder occurred at an early hour in the morning and when the officers from town arrived on the scene of the murder, Yda Addis was found on the grounds searching, or pretending to search, for evidence.

Her position with regard to the Richardson mystery has been the same as her stand in the anonymous letter case. When the letters were first circulated she went about Santa Barbara pretending to be seeking their author, and made all kinds of threats to make public the names of those who, she hinted, did the writing. She talked more about the letters than any one else in town and was the loudest in condemning their author. After a three weeks' trial she was convicted of having written them. During the trial she accused her enemies of having circulated the libels.

In the Richardson matter, Mrs. Storke took an abnormal interest at the time of its occurrence, and since then she has nearly hit the right days. She invented the story that one Trall, a druggist here, committed the murder and that he was backed by parties here who used the Richardsons' money in various sums amounting to some six or eight thousand dollars. Trall is dead, but Mrs. Storke still tries to impress everyone with his guilt.

The question is now asked: "Is the woman guilty, as in the letter matter? And is she not, as in that affair, trying to throw suspicion upon others to divert it from herself?"

This matter is upon the lips of everyone here. As a side issue Yda Addis is accused of being the dog poisoner who has wrought such havoc here of late. The cyanide with which it is thought she meant to have ended Jackson's life gives color to this suspicion, as where examinations have been made of the poisoned dogs, cyanide has invariably been found to have been the drug used.

MARYSVILLE SOCIETY BADLY TORN UP

Over Anonymous Letters Received by Ex-Mayor Slattery's Daughters.

July 10-97

(From a Staff Correspondent.)

MARYSVILLE, July 10.—A sensation has just been brought to light here that promises to eclipse the notorious Yda Addis Storke case of Santa Barbara, which has created so much attention in this State.

At the time of the conviction of Mrs. Storke for sending anonymous letters to residents of Santa Barbara, several prominent and wealthy people of this city also received anonymous letters.

During the early part of the month of May, the Misses Kate and Annie Slattery, daughters of the late ex-Mayor Slattery of this city, received anonymous letters at intervals of five days. The young ladies are prominent members of the Catholic Church, and are affiliated with several societies of the local church on Seventh street, in positions of trust.

The letters received by the young ladies charged them, it is alleged, with embezzlement of church moneys, immorality and with associating with disreputable characters. The communications were signed "A Friend of the Protest Church," and "A Non-Catholic."

Miss Annie Slattery worried over the anonymous communications, and was confined to her bed in the family home, 425 Seventh street, with nervous prostration.

About five letters were received altogether. The young ladies suspected a well-known and wealthy resident of the city, Mrs. C. Berg, 319 Seventh street, as the author of the letters.

Miss Kate Slattery consulted her attorney, W. H. Carlin, and upon his advice she procured copies of letters written and signed by Mrs. Berg. Counselor Carlin, armed with the communications, consulted M. E. Sanborn, attorney for Mrs. Berg, at Yuba City, and showed him the letters. Attorney Sanborn discussed the matter with his client, Mrs. Berg, and a few days later returned the letters to Mr. Carlin, stating that "there was absolutely nothing in it."

The letters were then sent to a hand-writing expert in San Francisco. On July 1 the expert filed the report of his findings with Miss Kate Slattery, stating that the anonymous letters had been written by the same hand which penned the two original exemplars bearing dates of April 30, 1897, and May 11, 1897, and signed "Mrs. C. Berg."

Attorney Carlin showed the expert's report to Mrs. Berg, but she strenuously denied knowing anything about the anonymous letters. She said she had placed the matter in the hands of her attorney.

Mrs. Berg is the widow of the late C. Berg, a wealthy hotel-keeper and owner of this county. The New Western Hotel, a valuable building on Second street, is part of the estate. Mrs. Berg has also large holdings in Sutter county. The Slatterys are also very wealthy. The matter has been spoken of only in the family circles, and the utmost secrecy is observed. A great deal of excitement has been occasioned here by the news. Mrs. Berg is prominent in the Protestant Church.

WALLACE W. WIDEMAN.

FEDERAL OFFICERS TO TAKE A HAND.

The Social Scandal at Marysville Promises to Grow to Large Proportions.

(From a Staff Correspondent.)

MARYSVILLE, July 12.—The excitement in the Slattery-Berg scandal grows more intense each day, and all the tongues in Yuba and Sutter counties have been set to wagging. The news has spread like wildfire.

Your correspondent visited the home of the Misses Slattery early Sunday morning, and the ringing of the doorbell was answered by a tall, prepossessing blonde.

"Does Miss Kate Slattery live here?" was asked.

"Yes, sir," was the retort, "but the young ladies and their mother went to the country early this morning." (It must have been at sunrise.)

"Could you tell me to what section of the country they have gone, and how long they are likely to stay?" was again asked.

"I haven't the least idea where they have gone," she answered, "and they may only stay two or three days, or may be ten days or two weeks."

I learned that the young ladies had gone to Lincoln, six miles from Marysville, and procured a horse and buggy, and drove to that section. A buggy was standing on the road, lettered "S," and it was decided to watch it. Shortly afterward two young ladies got into the vehicle and drove toward Marysville. Your correspondent followed. On Eighth or Ninth street I lost the trail, but after making several inquiries learned that the Misses Slattery were in church on Seventh street, between C and D streets. I left my team about a block from the house of worship, walked to the church and entered. Miss Kate Slattery was in the church.

Approaching her I said: "Miss Slattery, I believe?" She hesitated a moment, and then answered: "Yes. Well?"

"I called at your house early this morning, and was told that you, your mother and sister had gone to the country, and were not likely to return for several days."

"Yes, we were in the country—rather we had started, but we came back," she ventured.

I informed her of my mission, but she denied having any knowledge of the affair.

"Have you read the expert's report?"

"No, I must say that I have not," was the reply.

A copy of the report was produced, and I was about to read it when Miss Slattery said:

"I will not speak on this matter. You will please see my attorney, Mr. Carlin. The entire affair may result in libel suits all around."

Further than this she would say nothing. Shortly before noon I was informed that Attorney Carlin had also gone into the country with his team. Failing to get the desired information from Miss Slattery, I called upon Mrs. Berg in her beautiful home on Fifth street, early Monday. She was very nervous and wrought up over the affair. At first she declined to be interviewed, but finally said:

"I do not know why I should be charged in this manner. I deny writing the letters, and know absolutely nothing about them. I am well known in this county, and have been president for several terms of the Relief Society of this city. I have also done much for charity. I shall make a proper defense when the time comes. I cannot understand the idea of the whole affair. I shall not make any further statements, but will refer you to my attorney, Mr. Sanborn, in Yuba City. The matter is now in his hands. You will please speak low. I do not desire that my son or any one else in the house shall hear of this matter."

In the room with Mrs. Berg during the conversation was her daughter, who is the only other member of the family who was acquainted with the social scandal.

It has been learned that the man in the case is a prominent citizen here, and is known by the name "Frank." Miss Slattery recently showed the anonymous letters to a friend, and the latter, after perusing them, said: "Why a man figures prominently in this matter." Miss Slattery is alleged to have answered: "Well, Mrs. Berg can have him."

Throughout the anonymous letters this particular male individual was mentioned sometimes as "your friend," "you know who I mean," etc.

Attorney Carlin is now working on the case more diligently than ever. It is stated that warrants will be procured in a few days. The matter will probably also be brought to the attention of the postoffice inspectors.

WALLACE W. WIDEMAN.

THE QUEEN OF THE VOODOOS.

Remarkable Career of Mammy Pleasant and Her Wonderful Influence Over Men and Women.

MAMMY PLEASANT, the mild-mannered old Southern mammy of romantic newspaper [illegible], with her spotless white apron and neckerchief and her clinking bunch of keys and her general air of contrition for being so good, has been for many years the most discussed woman in San Francisco. Others have drawn public attention now and again and for a little brief space have dimmed her prominence, but Mammy seems to bloom perpetually.

Half a dozen times gossip has had her on the point of death; nineteen years ago the papers painted a painful picture of the old woman broken in health, her mind shattered and tottering on the verge of dissolution. She has been called a pauper, then a millionaire; a devout Catholic, a Methodist, a leader among the Baptists; the essence of truth and a perjurer, a friend of the poor and a woman who turned every human passion and foible to her own advantage, and who used the people that she chose to associate with as so many pawns on a chess board.

Mary Ellen Pleasant, for that is her correct name, has been all, and at the same time none, of these things. But in the whole of her career it is certain that she has never feigned a virtue or done a vicious thing that had not for its ultimate object something of benefit to herself. A woman with wonderful persuasive powers and something very like a hypnotic influence over weaker members of her own sex, she has been placed in dozens of positions of trust and has many times been administratrix of estates. Every property of this character that Mammy has controlled has faded into thin air. Charges of mal-administration, of helping criminals to escape from jails and of crimes far more serious than these have been brought against her, but in her whole forty-eight years of residence in California she has laughed at courts, defied the orders of Judges and has emerged somehow from every tight corner in which she has been placed.

A few weeks ago Mammy was adjudged an insolvent debtor. Last Monday she went to one of the attorneys for her creditors and asked him for a dollar with which to buy food. The following day she appeared at the house of a colored woman of her acquaintance, a noted gossip, and took away a loaf of bread with her, claiming she was hungry. That is Mammy's way of showing the world that she is a poverty stricken bankrupt. People who are in a what means she took to practice her so-called voodoo art, and what properties she used in the business. A few days after her eviction from the Bell household, recently, the two rooms that she had occupied for many years on the second floor of the mansion were searched. They disclosed a miscellaneous mass of material, including powdered cork dust, hundreds of singed cock's feathers, also torn into very finest strips, a bottle of lampblack and numerous other articles, all of which she utilized in her secret practices.

This voodoo fad of Mammy's is the only sign of mental weakness or aberration that she has given in her whole career. Her tricks with the implements named, as told by the children of the house, were very simple and must have been the remnant of some myth handed down to Mammy when she was little more than a pickaninny on the Helmcken estate in Virginia, and along the narrow strips of calico she would draw grotesque images with the lampblack and then singe them and repeat [illegible] of them with burning cock's feather at the same time pronouncing her wishes in a mumbling voice and asking some unknown deity to help her out in her numerous enterprises.

An instance of her thorough belief in these gypsy superstitions came out during the trial of the famous Sharon case, when several witnesses swore that Sarah Althea, acting under the advice of Mammy, had gone to a graveyard on a May day and had planted a pair of Sharon's socks and one of the millionaire's shirts in the ground. Sarah Althea then had been informed by her colored guide that this was a sure way to win back Sharon's affections. Although the fact was proven in court beyond any doubt, Mammy brought in several witnesses, including Thomas Bell himself, to swear that on that day Sarah Althea had never left the Bell house where she was stopping. And a curious fact in connection with this attempted alibi has just come to light. It is that all of Mammy's witnesses to this particular testimony believed that they were tell-done handsomely for herself through both of them. It has always been believed, although on a trial of [illegible] Mammy was acquitted, that she effected the escape of the [illegible] prisoners from the County Jail on Broadway. At any rate, it is known positively that [illegible] a week after their escape they were in hiding in the basement of [illegible] Washington street, a place rented by Mammy for their reception after they [illegible], and that she purchased the wigs with which they were to disguise themselves when they attempted to [illegible] the country. There is little doubt that Mammy received some thousands of dollars to effect this escape, and that the jailer who conveniently allowed himself to be gagged and [illegible] was well [illegible] for his little experience, leaving, however, a handsome profit for Mammy. One day she [illegible] down to the cellar [illegible] the Washington [illegible] and told the boys that [illegible] for their escape [illegible] to take them [illegible] her ranch on the San Jose road, [illegible] by way of Howard [illegible] keeping [illegible] would [illegible] getting them off [illegible] Half Moon Bay. [illegible] had been offered for [illegible] the brothers [illegible] their arms to Mammy at [illegible] station, reached the [illegible] and for the furniture insurance in the house, which has been empty for the whole of that time.

William Tomlinson, familiarly known to everybody who ever visited the Bell residence on Octavia street as "Blind Billy the Butler," is a Scotchman who has been in the Bell employ for many years. He is totally blind. Three years ago he received a draft for $150 from relatives in Scotland. Mammy at once told him that she could pay him better interest than any bank, and got him to hand her the cash. Last week he stated that though he had asked her repeatedly for a few dollars he could get nothing.

A beautiful gilt dining-room clock that Mammy bought from a firm in this city for $150 she told Mrs. Bell cost her $500, and took that amount out of the estate money to pay for it. A few weeks ago, when she left the house, she took the clock with her.

John Player was up to the beginning of the present year one of Mammy's most devoted admirers. He has worked for her at one time and another since [illegible] in an humble way. Six months ago he notified Mammy that out of his small savings he had managed to pile up $250, and she advised him that the safest way to keep his money was to invest it in a good gold watch and chain, and offered to secure the article for him. He gave her the money and the next day was the proud possessor of a watch that Mammy told him was worth $[illegible], the balance of easy to get a favorable decision out of him as it was to get a certificate of ill health from a doctor. In vulgar par-

the Bell home, made menials of them, paying for their keep with Bell money, and sold the estate property at the cor-consequently, the only correct portraits of her that have ever been printed.

Mammy Pleasant and the House in Which She Lives.

[illegible] gossip and took away a loaf of bread with h[illegible]ng: she was hungry. That is Mammy's way of showing the world that she is a poverty-stricken bankrupt. People who are in a position to know say that she is worth considerably more than a quarter of a million dollars. This fact, however, will not help her creditors very much. When she was posing for a photograph the other day for the "Chronicle" she was asked what she intended to do with her creditors.

"Do," she replied. "Why, I am jes' sitting looking on. If they find anything, I'll get up and take it away from 'em. But they ain't going to find anything, so I won't need to disturb myself nohow."

Just thirty years ago, when Mammy was in high favor with the wealthy young mining men of San Francisco, she established a resort on the old San Jose road, and called it Geneva cottage. What happened there during the first year of its occupancy may best be passed over without comment, but after that, when the old negress found herself without proteges, and when visitors to her vine-covered roadhouse had begun to drop off in consequence, she became a rancher, and went in for raising hogs and chickens. Every morning, dressed in blue jeans and an old woolen shirt, with a slouch hat on her head, she would drive a team into town and dispose of her produce at the old Washington market.

A few weeks ago, driven out of the Bell mansion and seeking an abiding place where she might rusticate till the storm of her insolvency proceedings had blown over, she thought of Geneva cottage, and taking with her as much of the Bell furniture as she could gather up at short notice from the various residences of the millionaire's estate, she moved out to the old place and went back along the San Jose road to live.

Room in plenty for a pathetic bit of word painting here—the swing of the pendulum after thirty years with Mammy, at the latter end broken down, poverty stricken, surrounded by enemies and in her last stitch. But unfortunately for the picture, Mammy at 84 is as stalwart and unbending and as keen-witted as she was at 40.

Even with a complete knowledge of her career, in which she has bent hundreds of people to her will, and a thorough insight into her cunning and treacherous nature, you cannot help feeling some measure of admiration for this tall, spare negress as she faces you, erect as a girl of 20, with vigorous mentality displayed in every move she makes and every sentence she utters.

In order to avoid attendance at court it has been necessary for her several times of late to feign sickness. She has become an adept at this kind of deception, though there is something humorous in the thought of a woman over 80 years old being compelled to make a pretense of physical ailments. But this is actually what Mammy has to do, for nature has been more than kind to her, and she has had very little experience in actual bodily suffering in her long life. Her imitation sickness takes two forms. To use her own words they are "dizzy spells" and "spasmodics," and among other things she boasts that at no time in the last fifteen years has she been without three or four doctors' certificates of ill health, signed in blank to be used whenever it is inexpedient for her to answer an order of court. On these occasions, to quote her again, "I gen'ally writes down dizzy spells in the blank part, and the Court jes' has to whistle."

It has always been a great mystery to Mammy's friends and acquaintances [illegible]ing the truth, but the woman they really saw in the Bell house was Emma Sterrett, painted to resemble Sarah Althea. Both women looked very much alike under natural conditions anyway, and people who had only seen them a few times were very easily deceived.

Whatever effect Mammy's voodoo art may have had upon her victims can never be known, but it is certain that she has shown wonderful power of persuasion that compels one to credit her with some sense outside of mere ability to argue. Many people who know her best claim that she possesses hypnotic powers in a remarkable degree. The long story of Mrs. Theresa Bell's life, which has already been told in detail in the "Chronicle," proves that some incomprehensible power existed, and it is also known that Thomas Bell himself, always reckoned as a shrewd man of affairs, was deceived and tricked a thousand times by Mammy's false representations to him. Once when she was badly in need of money for one of her numerous deals she sent Mrs. Bell over to San Leandro, and, after keeping her there a week, announced to Thomas Bell that she had gone on to New York for a vacation and asked for $25,000 to be forwarded to her. Bell paid the money, and, ten days later, Mammy went to him again in great agitation and stated that Mrs. Bell had been robbed of all her coin in New York, telling him it was absolutely necessary to forward an additional $25,000 to New York. Bell gave this money to Mammy and the following day Mrs. Bell returned to the house.

The trapping of Bernard Saville, himself a polished schemer, now serving a term of imprisonment in San Quentin, is another instance of Mammy's persuasive art. She tricked him so completely that the day before his intended marriage to Mrs. Bell he went to Mammy, put his arms around her neck and thanked her for all she had done for him, promising to provide well for her as soon as he was Mrs. Bell's husband. Inside of twenty-four hours Saville was in the hands of the police, and Mammy was never afterward threatened with the loss of Mrs. Bell through the success of any suitor for her hand.

The well-known Brotherton brothers, who were convicted in this city in May, 1870, of felony, fell under Mammy's all-seeing eye and before she had finished with them and cast them off she had [illegible] Howard streets where her hack was to be in waiting for them, they found Chief Crowley, Captain Lees and half a dozen police officers with shotguns.

While the Brotherton boys were serving their term of [illegible] they were very much talked about people, both were young, fine-looking men and much sympathy was felt for them in the community. Mammy, always with an eye to her pocketbook, saw that when they were released from jail they would be drawing cards to any [illegible]. In the face of their belief that she had trapped them she actually went to San Quentin and got them to consent to a scheme whereby she should open and furnish a saloon and restaurant at 23 Geary street, managing the business herself and letting [illegible]. When they came out they did this, and for a year the [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] was called, was the most prosperous resort in San Francisco. Then when their popularity began to wane Mammy sold the place out at a big profit, and the Brothertons [illegible].

Instances of Mammy's "[illegible] ways," as she terms them, are innumerable. Here are a few new and true ones. She has been telling Mrs. Bell [illegible] for the last two or three years that the five carriages belonging to the estate, including two elegant landaus and a victoria, were being kept at Black's Livery Stable, where they were looked after, and every month she drew from her mistress $25 as payment to Black for this service. In reality, all the carriages were sold to Shaum & Co. years ago by Mammy, who pocketed the proceeds.

Samuel H. Whittington was a [illegible] in the Bell mansion, who owned considerable property in the Leonard tract in Berkeley. She [illegible] trouble between Whittington and his wife, and then, pretending to be his friend in securing a divorce, told him the best thing he could do was to deed his property to her temporarily and leave the country. Whittington did so, [illegible] his property since.

The house at 1110 Fourteenth street, in East Oakland, is the property of the Bell estate, and eight years ago it was completely furnished with beautiful and costly goods from local stores. The following month Mammy sold this furniture. Ever since that time, however, for the past eight years, she has been collecting money from Mrs. Bell to pay the purchase money she had paid out of her own pocket because of his faithful years of service. Last January Ployer, having left her employ and being nearly penniless, decided to pawn his watch. He then learned that it was worth only $1.

In the face of these incidents, and they are only similar to hundreds of others that might be mentioned, it would be hard for one not understanding Mammy's methods to realize how she could ever have obtained the name of being a generous woman. Her method of getting people to believe this of her, however, was simple enough. Often in a Sutter-street car, full of ladies and merchants returning to their homes, Mammy would ostentatiously give a conductor a $5 gold piece and tell him to keep the change. She had a little basket with which she made almost daily trips down to Washington and Kearny streets, and would stop all her acquaintances on the way to notify them that she was bound on some errand of charity.

Mrs. Bell's own foolishness and easy stultification have been responsible in great measure for Mammy's alleged "honor." Her white apron alone, to say nothing of the bunch of keys that always dangled from it, was worth thousands of dollars a year to her in making people believe that she was nothing but the honest old Southern nurse of the story book and a faithful [illegible] of a millionaire family.

Much of her reputation in this respect, too, was based on her magnificent promises. There is hardly a colored man or woman in the city that Mammy has not at some time or another promised a share in her property when she died. This has always been one of her greatest confidence operations. In fact, many of her dupes still fondly imagine that they are "remembered in Mammy's will."

Another gift that Mrs. Pleasant possesses, in a remarkable degree, is the faculty of evading a pointed question, whether asked her privately or in a courtroom. For many years she has confused Judges of all kinds, and there are very few attorneys of prominence in this city who have not at some time or another had a tilt with her, and given up in despair all hope of pinning her down to any deliberate statement of her affairs. A recent decision handed down by Judge Coffey, who has probably had more wordy battles with her than any other member of the bar or bench, practically declares her a perjurer. But Mammy does not mind a little thing like that.

It will be remembered that two years ago it was proved that Mammy had made a statement to the effect that Judge Coffey was only on the bench to do what she told him, and that it was as [illegible] Judge Coffey didn't do a thing to Mammy when she appeared before him in connection with this affair, but the next day she was around telling all her friends that people had been getting too suspicious with her connection with Department No. 9, and that she had ordered Coffey to make a "bluff" in order to straighten things out.

This, by the way, is another of her favorite schemes. When she was charged the other day with having swindled "Blind Billy" out of his money, this was her reply: "It's too bad about that Billy. The poor fellow worships the very ground I tread on, but it is to my interest to make people believe that we are enemies, so I tell him to abuse me and lie about me all he can. It breaks the poor fellow's heart though every time he has to do it."

The story of Mammy's connection with Rebecca Boone and the way in which she has used that woman to bleed the Bell estate out of over $100,000 is still familiar to "Chronicle" readers. In every residence in this city belonging to the Bell estate, Mammy has installed negresses in charge, and has gradually depleted the Bell mansion on Octavia street of almost everything of value it possessed, by scattering the articles around among the other houses from which they have mysteriously disappeared from time to time. These houses, one at 719 Sutter, another at 1210 Pine, and a third at 49 Clara street, have all been furnished up with Bell money, but Mammy's colored retainers have rented rooms to clerks for business houses and banks to them for years, dividing up the proceeds with Mammy, even the rent of the residence becoming a charge on the Bell estate.

Since Mammy first started to spin her spider's web forty-eight years ago in this city she has by some means or other become the administratrix of several estates. The well-known Park estate, consisting of property on Church street and other streets in this city, is one of these. Park, who was in the employ of the Postoffice Department, and a very weak man physically, had been persuaded by Mammy, with an eye to the future, years before his death, that she was a distant relative. Park left a widow and five children. Mammy prevailed on Mrs. Park to borrow $6000 from the Hibernia Bank on her property "to loan to Mrs. Bell." Of course Mrs. Bell never saw the money, and a year ago the Hibernia Bank foreclosed on the Park family, who are now living here absolutely penniless.

The Ridder estate was another property manipulated by Mammy in somewhat the same manner. The Hall estate went into Mammy's clutches without much difficulty. She was appointed administratrix, four colored children being the heirs. She got them all into [illegible] ner of Clay and Jones streets to Major Rathbone. She took the money and informed the Halls that it had all been eaten up in educating and keeping them, and turned them out.

The Harris estate, over which there has been much litigation, went in the same way, and property which was converted into cash for over $8000 has never got out of Mammy's hands. The two young daughters of the Harris family are now leading degraded lives in Sacramento.

The Susanne estate, of which Mammy had herself made the executrix, and which consisted of three three-story houses and lots at 29, 31 and 33 Stone street, was transferred by her to Mrs. Boone, who made over in place of it a little shanty at the top of Pine street worth about $200. Mammy declared to the two Susanne children that she had done her best—that the "Villainous Mrs. Boone" had got the best of her in a trade and that there was no good crying over spilt milk.

The Taylor estate was left in Mammy's charge by Monroe Taylor, who at one time was a well-known water front character, having control over all the restaurants at the ferries and on the Oakland boats. The property consisted of land in East Oakland. Mammy agreed to trade with Mrs. Taylor for $9000. The property was deeded, and at once sold by the old woman, but instead of the $9000 Mrs. Taylor was put into a residence on Sutter street adjoining one of the Bell houses. Six months later she and her four children were turned out on the street by the real owner of the house, who knew nothing whatever of the transaction, except that Mammy was paying him the rent. Mrs. Pleasant persuaded Mrs. Taylor that her actions in the matter had been perfectly honest, but that Mrs. Bell was demented and that the poor creature was responsible for the whole business, although she had not meant any harm by it.

All of the above mentioned estates were left by colored residents of this city.

Mammy is not a wanderer. "My proverb is," she says, "that a rolling stone gathers no moss. It is better to be a bump on a log, anyway, even if you do get creditors to bring insolvency proceedings against you. I will be here and alive, honey, when all them creditors is dead and gone."

Since her eviction from the Bell mansion at the corner of Octavia and Bush streets, that establishment has ceased to be "The House of Mystery." It has undergone a thorough renovation and complete change, and all of the members of the family have been reunited under its roof.

The photographs of Mammy Pleasant which illustrate this article are the first for which she has ever sat and are,

LINKING YDA ADDIS WITH THE RICHARDSON MURDER

YDA ADDIS STORKE, WHOM RUMOR ACCUSES OF ATROCIOUS CRIMES

Circumstances That Arouse Suspicion in the Minds of Santa Barbara People That She May Have Been Connected With the Atrocious Crime of Three Years Ago.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, July 12.—During the past few years there has been a series of terrible murders committed in the city of Santa Barbara. Of all these the worst by far was the murder on July 6, 1896, of two defenseless women, Mrs. Richardson and her daughter Ethel, at a house on a lonely suburban road. On the evening after the tragedy Officer W. W. Hopkins shot and killed Cyrus Barnard, who was then supposed to have been the author of the double crime. At the time of Barnard's death while there were some who believed him the true criminal, there were many who believed that he was not the guilty party, or at least not the only guilty party.

The evidence at the house where the horrible affair took place was very meager, furnishing little upon which the officers could found an opinion. Of the two women [illegible] [illegible] and a blood spattered shirt were found lying under a culvert half a mile from the scene of the murder.

Barnard's death took place in the evening of this affair. Deputy Sheriff W. W. Hopkins, suspecting him, went to his house. Barnard was within, and as Hopkins addressed him, he [illegible] the officer. Hopkins returned the fire and instantly killed his man.

Public feeling was satisfied. But there were a few people who insisted that the murderer was not dead. These persons [illegible] their suspicions all but one. That one person was Yda Addis Storke, the letter writer who has ruined the peace of Santa Barbara. This woman [illegible] murder [illegible] she has claimed that the murder was not done by Barnard, but by others, by persons who were her own personal enemies [illegible] who could have [illegible]. This tale has at last [illegible] Yda Addis herself [illegible]

[illegible] and her foot is very small. Barnard was also a small man, exactly Mrs. Storke's height [illegible] while short, was very [illegible]. The sheriff himself said this after [illegible] that the small tracks looked like those of a boy's [illegible]. Yda Addis wore small [illegible] made her recent attack upon Attorney Jackson [illegible]. The conclusion is simple.

The overalls and blouse were considered no strong evidence against Barnard. They were of the same size as the [illegible] found in his house. The [illegible] from the [illegible] to the bottom of the [illegible] was the same in Barnard's clothes as in the overalls. The [illegible] of the sleeve of the shirt [illegible] Barnard's [illegible]. But Yda Addis was exactly Barnard's height [illegible] would naturally have [illegible] at the same place that [illegible] Addis.

[illegible]

[illegible] the night of the tragedy. There was no evidence to show how the murderer entered the house. Storke believed that the person who did the killing entered the house as a friend and committed the dreadful crime in the night. He was one of the first who examined the tracks and was the one who found the overalls. He believed to him that Yda Addis is either the murderess or that she was an accomplice and knows who the actual murderer was. He it was who identified the loaded cane as Barnard's. But he says that he places no weight upon this evidence, as Barnard, who often drank heavily, was in the habit of leaving his stick in all sorts of public places.

Above all other things, however, that have attracted suspicion to Yda Addis is the attitude she has taken in persistently accusing E. H. Pratt of having committed the crime. In Pratt is found a counterpart to Gutierrez, whom Mrs. Storke accused of having written the anonymous letters. Mrs. Storke claims that Pratt's people, knowing him to be a murderer, gave out the story that he was dead and buried a fake body. But the man was buried here with Masonic burial services, and all of the Masons in the city saw the body on the day of the funeral.

Further evidence is being looked up in this old murder mystery, and its true solution may yet be found.

APPEALS FROM THE SUPERIOR COURT'S ORDER.

Mrs. Nellie R. Craven-Fair Seeks to Enforce Her Claim to a Widow's Share.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair has appealed to the Supreme Court from the order made by Judge Troutt of the Superior Court denying her petition to be permitted to interplead in the contest for the late Senator James G. Fair's will.

Judge Troutt held that the lady was too late to enter the case in that way, that if she ever had any rights it was her duty to enforce them within the time prescribed by law, that the statute of limitations had run against her, so he shut her out of all participation in the Fair estate as widow of the testator. It is from this order that Mrs. Craven has appealed.

MRS. CRAVEN AND THE FAIR ESTATE

More Suits Filed by Her for Her Share of the Property.

Another chapter in the history of the claims of Mrs. Nettie Craven to the Fair estate was written Saturday afternoon when Mrs. Craven began another battle for her rights.

She filed a petition against the Fair heirs to determine who are the real heirs. In this petition she claims and asks to have set apart to her one-third of all the Fair realty, one-third of its rents and profits and one-third of the personal property after all debts are paid.

Mrs. Craven also filed an objection to the distribution of personal property to Charles Fair and also a petition to vacate the decree of distribution of realty to Charles Fair.

Mrs. Craven recently spent some time in San Rafael, where she expected to gather some new evidence to establish her claim as the widow of the late millionaire. Whether or not these new suits are the result of Mrs. Craven's search in San Rafael is not known.

SAYS THE NOTE IS A BOLD FORGERY.

Philippe Maysounave's Defense to the Suit for $800 Instituted by John Lapique.

When John Lapique asked for judgment for $800 against Philippe Maysounave in Judge Hebbard's court yesterday he was met with the response of the defendant that the note on which the claim is based is a forgery.

The note set forth in the complaint is as follows:

> SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.), Nov. 15, 1895.
> $800. Three months from date I promise to pay to the order of Louise Lagurde eight hundred dollars for value received, with interest at 7 per cent per annum until paid, both principal and interest payable in United States Gold Coin.
> PH. MAYSOUNAVE.
> Indorsed: Louise Lagurde.

Attorney P. A. Bergerot, representing the defendant, suggested that some investigation ought to be made in regard to the making of the note, and read from his client's answer in which it was stated that Maysounave had money in bank at the time the note is said to have been executed, that his business was paying and that he had no need of borrowing money. In addition, the defendant declares under oath that the woman, Louise Lagurde, is a pauper who never had any money to lend, and that as a matter of fact she is still indebted to him for lodging. He says he never saw the note until it was presented to him and he refused to pay it.

Judge Hebbard requested Lapique to submit samples of his penmanship and he did so, writing his own name, the name of Maysounave and of Miss Lagurde.

"Where is this Lagurde woman?" asked the Judge, and no one was able to answer, except that there was an impression that she had left the city.

After examining the specimens of Lapique's chirography, Judge Hebbard intimated that judgment would probably be given for the defendant unless Miss Lagurde appears in court and proves that Maysounave signed the note.

Mr. Maysounave complains that he has been seriously inconvenienced by this suit, which he says has no valid foundation. His property at 1311 Stockton street was attached twice. Lapique was given a week in which to secure the testimony of Miss Lagurde.

YDA ADDIS STORKE, WHOM RUMOR ACCUSES OF ATROCIOUS CRIMES

Circumstances That Arouse Suspicion in the Minds of Santa Barbara People That She May Have Been Connected With the "Atrocious Crime of Three Years Ago.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, July 12.—During the past few years there has been a series of terrible murders committed in the city of Santa Barbara. Of all these the worst by far was the murder on July 6, 1896, of two defenseless women, Mrs. Richardson and her daughter Ethel, at a house on a lonely suburban road. On the evening after the tragedy Officer W. W. Hopkins shot and killed Cyrus Barnard, who was then supposed to have been the author of the double crime. At the time of Barnard's death, while there were some who believed him the true criminal, there were many who believed that he was not the guilty party, or at least not the only guilty party.

The evidence at the house where the horrible affair took place was [illegible], furnishing little upon which the officers could found an opinion. Of the two women murdered the mother was the first attacked. She was shot in cold blood as she lay in her bed and was cut with a pocket knife and beaten with a club. But this was not enough for the murderer. Attracted, no doubt, by the shots Ethel Richardson, a young and innocently beautiful girl, just graduated from the High School, rushed from her room where she was in the act of retiring and ran to her mother's door. There she in her turn was shot, but was not killed. Horrified at the sight she beheld, the girl ran down a stairway, opened a front door, pushed open a wire screen and ran down a path for a hundred yards. In a stubble field, her assassination was horribly completed. Here she was found in the early dawn.

The only evidence in the case was next to nothing. The tracks of the assassin or assassins were found as they pursued the girl in her race for life. There in the dust followed her naked footprints, which grew closer and closer as her strength and speed failed. Near the body was found a bloody cane. A week later a pair of bloody overalls and a blood-spattered shirt were found under a culvert half a mile from the scene of the murder.

Barnard's death took place in the evening of this affair. Deputy Sheriff W. W. Hopkins, suspecting him, went to his home. Barnard was within, and as Hopkins addressed him he fired at the officer. Hopkins returned the fire and instantly killed his man.

Public feeling was satisfied. But there were a few people who insisted that the true murderer was not dead. These persons [illegible] put their suspicions—all but one. That one person was Yda Addis Storke, the letter writer who has ruined the peace of Santa Barbara. This woman, [illegible] of the murder, has talked of little else. She has claimed that the murder was not done by Barnard, but by others, by persons who were her own [illegible], by persons who could have no motive [illegible]. This tale has at last produced its result. Yda Addis herself is now accused of being the murderess. She has developed her character before the people of Santa Barbara in such a way that the great body of the town people believe her capable of the crime. And the evidence seems to point more clearly to Yda Addis than to any other person.

In the first place, her conduct toward the murder mystery has been the same as her conduct toward the letter case. She was the first person here to denounce [illegible] libels. Her mouth was the first to tell about the town that the libellous letters were being circulated. She followed the case and kept it alive until at last she was convicted of it. She has [illegible] convicted of the Richardson murder, but she alone has kept it alive.

The tracks are a strong evidence against her. Two sets of tracks followed Ethel Richardson to her death. One was made by a long, pointed shoe, a No. 8 or No. 10. The other tracks, those which were thick about the dead body, were small and narrow, made by a [illegible] or No. 4 boy's shoe. These small tracks correspond exactly to the dimensions of Yda Addis's foot. She is a small woman, but five feet tall. Her foot is very small. Barnard was also a small man, nearly Mrs. Storke's height [illegible] white shirt, overalls [illegible] could be called this after [illegible] tracks looked like those of a boy's shoe. Yda Addis wore small boy's shoes when she made her recent attack upon [illegible] Jackson Addis. The conclusion [illegible] simple.

The overalls and blouse were considered [illegible] evidence against Barnard. They were of the same size as the trousers found in his house. The distance from the leg [illegible] to the bottom of the [illegible] as in the overalls [illegible] at the elbow of the shirt [illegible] with the [illegible] in Barnard's [illegible]. But Yda Addis was exactly that [illegible] height. Her knees would naturally have [illegible] at the same place that his [illegible].

[illegible] that it was [illegible] to go about the [illegible] of night in [illegible] clothes disguised [illegible].

[illegible] to throw light on the murder [illegible] woman was in the habit of [illegible] about other people's business in outlandish [illegible] not these overalls and shirt [illegible] fitting exactly [illegible] dimensions have been her clothing worn perhaps over her ordinary attire, to [illegible] the crime was committed?

There [illegible] a dabbed paint on the overalls. Yda Addis is an artist. Moreover, the woman was among the first in town who knew of the murder and was at the Richardson house among the first [illegible] out from [illegible]. J. S. Miller, a prominent local Mason, who lived near Yda Addis's lodgings, said this afternoon that while Mrs. Storke usually came out upon the streets at about 10 o'clock in the morning, she was seen by [illegible] on the morning of the murder.

Peter [illegible], a local policeman, says he has always suspected Mrs. Storke of the murder. On the day of the occurrence he suggested her as the murderess, and after working for some time on the case, was assured of her guilt. His theory is that the murderer slept in the Richardson house on

APPE[illegible] SU[illegible]

MRS[illegible]

More[illegible]

SAY[illegible]

HOW DOES THE EXPERT KNOW

It Was Boyce's Purpose to Learn by Cross-Examination.

SOME VERY SHARP FENC[ING]

Witness Is Satisfied [as to] Authorship of Letters b[ut Will] Leave That [to] the Jury.

THE MORNING PRESS, SATURDAY

Cross-examination of Expert Kytka occupied nearly all day yesterday in the Yda Addis Storke trial. The expert stood up well under the fire from Attorney Boyce for the defense, honors being even, or if anything in the expert's favor when court adjourned at 5 o'clock, with the cross-examination not completed. Other witnesses for the state have been recalled, and there is no telling when its case will be finished. That the trial will continue well into next week is now evident, and it may consume the greater part of the third week.

MORNING SESSION.

The writing of the name "de la Vina" was another point illustrated by Expert Kytka Friday morning, in proof of his assertion that Yda Addis Storke wrote the anonymous letters circulated so freely in this city one year ago. The capital "V" in three of the exhibits, both admitted and disputed, was considerably above the line, while the small letters following touched the line.

The expert then, by a diagram on the blackboard, indicated the different styles of final double "l's" found in both admitted and disputed writings. The predominating style was with the first letter shorter than the second; there were 20 of these in the disputed exhibits, and 34 in the admitted. There were two instances in the disputed writing where the letters were of the same height, and two in the admitted. There were three instances in the disputed writing where the final "l" was shorter than the first, and two such cases in the admitted exhibits.

One of the last points illustrated by the expert in the direct examination was a freak "f" which he had found in a very few of the exhibits, but in both admitted and disputed.

"Gentlemen," he concluded, "these are some of the chief reasons why I believe the disputed and admitted writings were written by the same person."

Mr. Squier—You stated that these anonymous letters were written in a disguised hand, in an attempt to disguise. Could they have been written by any person who attempted to imitate the writing of the person who wrote the standards?

Objection. Sustained.

Mr. Squier—You have given your opinion that the standards and the disputed writings were written by the same person. In your opinion were the disguised writings written by any person who attempted to imitate the handwriting of the defendant, or of the person who wrote the standards?

Mr. Kytka—No, sir, they couldn't be. A writer that has the ability to discover characteristics in a hand that is fixed and place them in a writing looking entirely dissimilar to the writing he is attending to imitate, would have the ability to imitate more closely than the disguised exhibits."

The witness and Attorney Boyce at this point exchanged some pointed remarks, and Kytka explained at greater length his meaning. It was necessary to refer to the exhibits, and the witness discovered a strong point he had previously overlooked. It was the disguised capital letter "Y" in one of the disputed exhibits, and the same letter in the signature of the defendant in one of the admitted exhibits, and they were submitted to the jurors for comparison.

Mr. Squier—Mr. Kytka have you examined the ink with which these disputed letters were written, and the ink with which the standards were written?

"Yes, sir."

"Have you compared them?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were any of the disputed letters written with the same ink as the standards?"

"Yes, sir. The Taggart letter was written with two different kinds of ink, and with two different pens. One was a black ink with a yellow tinge, the other a black ink with a blue tinge. The blue ink also appears in the Dr. Martha Case letter, in the Independent letter, the Tallant letter, the Rieglus letter, the La Vies letter, the Ruiz letter—"

Mr. Boyce—You mean the one signed by Ruiz?

"No; it was signed [Ruiz], not by Ruiz," interrupted K[ytka].

He had found [two] kinds of ink used, the third being a blue black, with a greenish [tinge].

M[r. Squi]er—Are these anonymous letters the only letters of the class written in the same kind of ink as the latter portion of the Taggart letter?

"All that I have examined; some of the later exhibits I have not examined."

The witness indicated on the blackboard, by means of colored chalk, the different kinds of ink used.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Boyce—Mr. Kytka, what do you claim to have established by the past four days of testimony?

The Witness—I would like to leave that to the jury.

"But you were called as an expert?"

"That is what they call me."

"But you know what your qualifications are?"

"I know I have been a witness in different courts of California, as an expert, and the lawyers never object to my testifying as such."

"What is your occupation?"

"I am a microscopic photographer and a man who studies handwriting."

"Then you are an expert?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is photography a necessary branch of the profession?"

"No, sir. Most experts have others do their photographing. I do my own. Others have failed to establish points because their photographers did not thoroughly understand chemistry and had no knowledge of handwriting."

Then followed some questions as to the instruments used by the expert in making measurements. Kytka said he had none with him, but could procure some. An ordinary foot rule was handed him and he was asked to measure the word "acknowledged" as it appears in the Martha Case letter.

"I can teach you a much more accurate way," said Kytka. "I know what you are driving at."

"I am not asking you for instruction; I am asking you to tell me how long the word 'acknowledged' is in the Martha Case letter."

"It is three and three-sixteenths inches."

"Now multiply that by 110 and see how much that makes."

"It makes 352 inches."

"How many feet is that?"

"Something over 29 feet."

"Now, did you testify on Monday that the diameter of the photographic enlargement of the word 'acknowledged' was 110 times the size of the original?"

"No, sir. I testified that the enlargement was 110 times the size of the original."

While the attorneys were looking for the stenographer's report of Monday's proceedings, Kytka measured the photographic enlargement with his rule. Attorney Boyce asked what the witness was doing.

"I wanted to see if I told the truth when I said it was eleven diameters," said the expert.

"I ask you now if you did testify on Monday that the word 'acknowledged' was magnified 110 times?"

"I did."

"Was it true?"

"It was."

"Please explain to the jury how it is so."

"I will do so. It is very simple."

Kytka was drawing a diagram on the board, when the court announced the adjournment for the noon recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

When Kytka resumed the stand at 2 o'clock, he continued his explanation:

"I am illustrating what I meant by ten diameters. I mean by ten diameters ten times across. By multiplying the sides you have ten times ten—100." This was demonstrated by a drawing on the board.

Mr. Boyce—I will ask you if on Tuesday, June 9th, in this court, you did not testify referring to the photograph, "the upper one is an enlargement 110 times the size of the original?"

"I said 'about 110,' I say now it is a little more. I had made a rough measurement. I have since made a more careful measurement, and find it is a little more than 110 times the size of the original."

"Do you still insist that the photograph is an enlargement 110 times the size of the original?"

"Yes, sir, or more. You can get at it very simply. If you take the word 'acknowledge' and cut out pieces the size of this word as it is in the original, 110 or 120 of them, it will just cover the large photograph." Then, addressing Mr. Boyce: "I don't know how it was you got mixed up."

"I again ask you, what do you claim to have established in this case?"

"I claim to have enabled the jury to establish whether the person who wrote the standards wrote the disputed writings."

"Would you testify that the defendant wrote these papers?"

"No, sir; because I didn't see her write. I do not want the jury to take my opinion, but to weight the points I brought out."

In reply to another question, Kytka said: "It is my belief upon the examination of the details of these exemplars, that the party who wrote the standards wrote every one of the disputed writings."

"What do you find in the standard writing indicating any capacity on the part of the writer to write all three different kinds of writing in these exhibits?"

"That is what I have been doing for the past three days."

When the question was repeated in a little different form, the expert indicated, by a peculiar way of holding the pen, that the base line could be shaded, as in one of three classes. The different class was created, mainly by simply changing the position of the pen.

The meaning was more fully demonstrated on the board.

Mr. Boyce—To produce letters of that character must the pen be held in a particular way?

"Yes, sir."

"Then I will ask you to point out in the standards, letters made by holding the pen in that way."

This was done in one of the exhibits and the attorney passed to the second class of anonymous writing, which the expert called the "cramped hand" or finger movement. Kytka was also asked to point out a similarity between this class and the standards. In looking over the exhibits for this purpose, the witness came upon something that he had not demonstrated before, and which he said if he had to base his opinion upon the one comparison as to who wrote the disputed and admitted exhibits in question, his conscience would be clear. It was the word "Miss." The manner of making the two final letters was the strong characteristic to which he particularly referred; the heavy unconscious stroke.

"That is what you base your opinion upon, that the defendant wrote all these letters written in the cramped or finger movement?"

"It is not a 1-100th part. This is one of the points."

"What is the next one?"

The word "yellow" was selected by the expert as the answer to this query. He said the first letter "y" had been retraced, as if to cover up the characteristics of the writer.

"Did you subject this word to a microscopic examination?"

"Yes, sir."

"How were you able to determine which line was made last upon the page?"

"The simplest thing in the world. If a farmer plowed a furrow through his field and another came along and plowed a furrow across the first furrow, how would you know who made the last furrow? It is the same with the ink furrows. The last stroke is a little darker because it was written slower."

"Did I understand you to say that the last line was the darker?"

"No, sir. I referred to the intersection."

"Did I say anything about an intersection?"

"No, sir. Because you can't comprehend it, even."

The court rapped for order, as the audience broke into a laugh.

"Now, I have asked you several times what there was in the capacity of a writer to enable him to write the third class you have spoken, the small writing?"

Witness presented an exhibit showing the forming of the letter "s" in anonymous. He was not allowed to illustrate it.

"Now, Mr. Kytka, you have stated that you have had a great deal of experience as an expert?"

"Yes, sir, and I am still a young man."

"Is your opinion as an expert based upon evidence as presented in the exemplars?"

"That is all upon which I base my opinion." Witness said it was the limit of his duty as an expert.

"What is there about handwriting that makes it capable of identification?"

"If I may answer in my own words may I can explain to you," said Kytka, when he explained it was an individuality such as would be found in a class of boys, all given the same advantages. When they grew up they have selected different occupations, each that to suit his character, but that character or individuality was formed in youth and one there. The character is shown in every act, but not more clearly than in handwriting. The nerves play a part; the movement, the manner of holding the pen. It is something that no expert can analyze. The person of an artistic temperament can do more than others. Yet he has seen some artists whose writing had no character.

"Do you establish the identity of the writer by the dissimilarity of the writing?"

"No, sir. No two letters are made here exactly alike, but there is always a similarity."

"What do you mean by a characteristic handwriting?"

"Any person who writes must have a characteristic. You can't go a thousandth part of an inch from that statement."

"All movements of the pen depend upon muscular movement, do they not?"

"Yes, but it is not that upon which we place our opinion. The person who wrote these exemplars has the capacity to write the combined movement and the finger movement."

"Is there anything about the writing which determines the authorship without a detailed analysis?"

"No, sir. From a mere glance at the writing there is nothing to know."

Kytka said that he made his first complete report on the examination of exemplars March 24. On March 28 he arrived at Santa Barbara, but the case being postponed, and he left.

"Have all the papers that have been submitted to you been in court?"

"There is a signature in a box, that I have seen that I did not study. I have had so many I didn't care for more."

"Did you see a letter addressed to O'Connor, Moffat & Co.?"

"Yes, sir."

Attorney Boyce called for an envelope containing newspaper clippings and words written in ink. He asked the district attorney to produce them. When found Boyce called witness' attention to a small slip of tissue paper containing a written word and pasted to a newspaper clipping.

Kytka said the ink used was the same as used in other writing in exemplars, but he had not examined the writing for identification. Another slip he said was in the same ink, but because the writing on this paper was so blotted he would not identify it. He would not pronounce an opinion on the blotted writing on one of the newspaper clippings.

Kytka rather exploded the stories of princely compensation he is to receive for his services here by saying that he gets $25 and his expenses.

"Do you not as an expert occupy something of a judicial position? Is it your practice in the investigation of cases of this kind to first ascertain what evidence is required?"

"No, sir."

"It is your duty to reach an opinion on the evidence presented?"

"Yes, sir. Sometimes I go dead, square against my employers."

"Then there is no difference between you and me as to your duty?"

"I don't know, I am sure."

"Now, to determine handwriting and the authorship, is it necessary to know the anatomy of the hand?"

"No, sir."

"How do you distinguish between a natural or a simulated hand?"

In replying to this Mr. Kytka asked to be allowed to illustrate. There was a long series of fencing between the attorney and expert as to the discovery of characteristics in writing. The illustrations were not made.

The attorney handed witness the Martha Case letter and asked if the date was written by the defendant.

"Yes, sir. It is in the defendant's writing," answered Kytka, illustrating on the board the points upon which he based his opinion.

"Is there any word, line or figure in the letter that does not remind you of the writing of defendant?"

Witness made the letter "t" saying that parts of the letter differed from writing of defendant, though other parts of it were discoverable in other writings.

Illustrations of this sort were in progress when court adjourned.

17

Morning Press.

SANTA BARBARA CALIFORNIA, SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 18, 1899. VOL. XXXIX, NO. 312.

CAN'T FIGHT IN THE COURT ROOM

Jackson and Boyce May Do all They Want Out Side.

JUDGE OSTER WON'T OBJECT

The Lie Passed and Other Things—Mrs. Storke on the Witness Stand Denies State's Testimony.

For three long and weary weeks the Yda Addis Storke libel trial has occupied the superior court, and the chances are more than even that another week will be passed before the case is given to the jury and decided. Evidence of the defense the past two days has been of the most objectionable character. It has gone to show the inner life of the defendant and others connected with the case and makes plain why a witness for the state told on the stand that she wanted to have nothing to do with the matter, because it was "dirty."

Grant Jackson was again a witness yesterday. The examination was conducted on the lines followed Friday, resulting in the witness being provoked to passing the lie to Senator Boyce and such sharp exchanges between the attorney and witness that Judge Oster had to remind them that if they had any fighting to do they must settle it out of the court room, when he did n't care how much they fought.

Mrs. Storke was called as the next witness. She was on the stand until court adjourned, her testimony being all in direct denial of that given by witnesses for the state.

MORNING SESSION.

The direct examination of Grant Jackson by Attorney Boyce was resumed Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Boyce—Mr. Jackson, I'll show you this paper, and ask you to examine it, and ask if this is the one you referred to yesterday as larger in size than the one shown you yesterday.

"I think this is the paper."

Mr. Squier—We object to this paper being offered in evidence.

The Court—It has not been offered as yet, has it?

Mr. Boyce—I was about to offer it. I will state that this is a duplicate of a paper offered by the prosecution. We expect to draw some inferences as to them. The paper is a retraction of the charge of perjury; the theory is that the portion of the paper relating to C. A. Storke and his son Thomas Storke, had been cut out; it had been mutilated and changed, when offered by the state.

The Court—The objection will be sustained. The exhibit was offered as a sample of handwriting, pure and simple, and the jury will be instructed to pay no attention to the contents.

"You tendered your services in this case to assist in the defense, did you not?"

Objection. Sustained.

"You had some connection with the prosecution of this case, did you not?"

"No, sir."

"Do you mean to say that you did not contribute money toward the employment of an expert in this case?"

"No, sir, and if you say I did, you lie."

The Court—Mr. Jackson, that will not do in this court.

Mr. Jackson—I beg the court's pardon.

Mr. Boyce—Do you mean to deny that you stated to Mr. Currier, my associate, that you had given Dr. Winchester money toward paying Pancake?

"Yes, sir; I never told Mr. Currier that. Now, I will tell you what I did tell Mr. Currier. A few days after I received my anonymous letter I met Dr. Winchester and he said they were about to employ a detective to ferret out this matter, and asked me if I would be willing to contribute $5 toward paying the expenses of the investigation. I said I would do so, but from that time to this I have never had any conversation with him, and he has never called for the $5 as he said he would.

"Did Dr. Winchester name the party whom he suspected at that time?"

Objection. Sustained.

Witness was handed the note introduced by the defense as a sample of Jackson's handwriting, and he stated that it was his handwriting.

"Do you recognize this paper?" (showing witness the justice court complaint in the case of Yda Addis Storke vs. Mrs. Anna E. West.)

"Yes, sir."

"When did you see it before?"

Objection. Sustained.

"I will ask you, Mr. Jackson, if you have been in consultation with the district attorney in regard to the conduct of this case, and the evidence to be submitted?"

"No, sir."

"Do you mean to deny that you furnished the district attorney samples of your handwriting, and that you wrote at his dictation the words 'profession and professional?'"

"I do not deny that I did furnish samples of handwriting, and if you call that furnishing evidence, why I did to that extent. And I would like to add that I furnished these specimens after you had accused me of writing three anonymous letters."

These specimens were produced, and Mr. Jackson testified that Mr. Squier and Mr. Kytka had come into his office and requested him to write the words referred, and he had done so. He had written a sentence twice, once in ink and once in pencil. The word "Nell" he had written three or four times as he sometimes made the capital letter "N" in different ways.

"Did they state any reason why they wanted you to write?"

"No, but I knew that I had been charged by you with being an author of these anonymous letters."

"At the time that Mr. Squier came there was there exhibited to you any of the exhibits in this case?"

"No, sir. Not a one."

"Prior to this time had you ever seen any of these exhibits?"

"I think I had seen two."

"Which ones?"

"I do not know. I think I can pick them out."

Witness examined the exhibits, and said he had seen the Independent, the Press and the Dr. Martha Cass letters.

"I saw these documents in the office of the clerk, about ten days ago, since the trial of the case began."

"It was a matter of curiosity on your part?"

"It was a matter of curiosity, except as to plaintiff's exhibit 1, 1 and 2. I looked at that letter at the permission of Mr. Hunt. I had seen the letter unopened in the hands of the postmaster at the time I received the anonymous letter."

"I will show you defendant's exhibit Nos. 12 and 1 and 2, and ask you if you ever saw these exhibits before?"

"No, I never saw that exhibit in my life. I never saw that."

"Positive of that?"

"I am just as positive of that as I am that I am talking to you."

"Did the district attorney have this letter with him when he dictated the words he wanted you to write?"

"No, sir. He dictated them from memory and said that he wished he had brought the letter that he might dictate the whole of it."

"Did he say anything about the peculiar way of spelling 'profession' and 'professional?'"

"No, sir. He didn't say anything about the spelling."

"One of the letters was referred to in the discussion, and Mr. Jackson, in the hour that followed, remarked that he would ... pen and pencil, and I did."

"You did not know when you wrote this sample that this was a letter that you had been charged with writing?"

"No, sir, not that individual letter. I had been informed that you had said in court in reply to a query from Mr. Squier that you expected to show that F. N. Gutierrez and myself were the authors of these letters."

"I will now call your attention to the last six lines of defendant's exhibit No. 12, and ask you to kindly write and copy those lines on a piece of paper."

Mr. Squier—We object, as it is incompetent.

Mr. Boyce—We think that as the prosecution has gone into this, we have a right to follow it up.

The court overruled the objection, and Mr. Jackson took his seat at the clerk's desk and wrote the lines at Mr. Boyce's dictation. These samples were then introduced.

"Now I understood that you stated yesterday that the defendant had gone down to your house, and that you made a complaint to the marshal?"

"Yes, sir."

"At that time did not the defendant accompany you to your house?"

"Yes, sir."

"You did not say so yesterday, did you?"

"You did not ask me."

"Do you remember stating to Mr. Currier that you knew the defendant did not write these letters, and was as innocent as a child?"

Objection. Sustained.

Mr. Boyce stated that the purpose of the question was, if the witness did so state to Mr. Currier, to follow it with a question as to his reasons for having his belief.

"You know, Mr. Jackson, that this defendant did not write the letters charged against her?"

Objection. Sustained.

"You know that during the month of September, 1897, the defendant was confined to her room and bed?"

"I know she was sick at about that time; I am not certain as to the day."

"Do you know where the defendant was in the month of April, 1898?"

"She was in Santa Barbara."

"Where did you see her?"

"In Santa Barbara. In the court room, in her rooms, on the street."

"Where was she in the month of June?"

"In Santa Barbara."

"During that time did you occupy the relation of contract husband to this defendant?"

Mr. Squier objected to the question, and was sustained, but Mr. Jackson succeeded in getting in a very emphatic denial, adding: "You must not judge me by yourself, Mr. Boyce." He was called to order by the court.

Mr. Boyce—Do you now state that you had no motive in inducing her to leave Santa Barbara in August?"

"I stated yesterday my reason, do you want me to repeat it?"

"You told her also that she might be charged with sending letters through the mail in violation of the federal law?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did not the defendant threaten to bring suit against you on the ground that you had embezzled some of the money collected as alimony for her?"

Objection. Sustained.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Squier—When did you first come to Santa Barbara?

"In May, 1887."

"Where had you lived prior to that time?"

"In Lompoc, this county."

"What occupation did you follow when you came to Santa Barbara?"

"I went into Mr. Stratton's office as a law student and remained there until I was admitted to practice."

"When were you admitted to practice?"

"In October, 1891."

"When did you first get acquainted with the defendant in this case?"

"In January, 1891."

"How did you get acquainted with her?"

"She came to my office to consult me as an attorney as to a suit brought against her by C. A. Storke for divorce."

"Do any of your relatives reside in this city?"

"Yes, sir."

"How many?"

"Three sisters and a brother."

OOM PAUL MUST BE CAUTIOUS

England Champions Every Cause of the Uitlanders.

SOUTH AFRICAN PLOT THICKENS

Kruger Must Make Concessions or Something Will Drop—Chamberlain's Position Not Popular.

By the Associated Press.

London, June 17.—The Transvaal situation is still the all absorbing topic of discussion in Great Britain and even the continent has caught the disease, although in a less virulent form. The publication of the Transvaal blue book with emphatic denunciation of Transvaal methods, setting forth in measured paragraphs the alleged political, financial and judicial incompetence of the administration of President Kruger and adopting as a part of the government's program all of the grievances of the Uitlanders, is of highest import. It was an unmistakable warning to Transvaal as well as an indication to the people of South Africa generally that the government has arrived at a fixed decision, impossible to recede from, and there are not lacking indications that the hint has not been lost at Pretoria.

Unless the talked of concessions are speedily inaugurated, momentous consequences are expected.

The position in England of the secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, however is rapidly declining, and an emphatic suggestion is heard in influential quarters to transfer the conduct of negotiations from the colonial to the foreign office.

REGULARS TO THE FRONT.

Nearly 4000 Men Sail to the Philippines This Week.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, June 17.—Nearly four thousand enlisted men and officers will sail next week for the Philippines. The Zealandia will sail on the 23d with four companies of the Twenty-fourth infantry and 100 recruits, and the Pennsylvania on the 24th with headquarters and eight companies of the Twenty-fourth or Twenty-fifth infantry. The Sheridan will also go on the 24th with two troops of the Fourth cavalry, two companies of the Fourteenth infantry, a signal corps detachment and 1265 recruits. The Valencia will go on the 25th with four companies of the Twenty-fourth or Twenty-fifth infantry and 100 recruits.

CALIFORNIAS WON'T GO TO IDAHO

Missouri Miners Leave for the Lead Mines of Coeur d'Alene.

By the Associated Press.

Redding, Cal., June 17.—Everything is quiet at the Iron Mountain mines and about fifty of the strikers have returned to work. Two agents from the Idaho mines are here endeavoring to persuade the idle miners to go to Wardner, but the strikers have declined these proposals, fearing a conflict with the Western Federation of Miners.

Webb City, Mo., June 17.—One hundred and fifty miners from the zinc and lead district left today for Wallace, Idaho, to take the places of the striking lo, to take the places of the strikers.

POWDER WORKS BLOWN UP.

Factory at San Rafael Demolished by Mysterious Explosion.

By the Associated Press.

San Rafael, Cal., June 17.—The United States smokeless powder works blew up this afternoon. Five men were killed. Six buildings were demolished by the shock and a dozen buildings burned.

The cause of the explosion is a mystery. One theory is that the sudden ignition of powder from spontaneous combustion caused the disaster, but the generally accepted explanation is that the explosion was caused by carelessness.

Jeffries and Sharkey Will Fight.

By the Associated Press.

JUDGE OSTER WON'T OBJECT

The Lie Passed and Other Things—Mrs. Storke on the Witness Stand Denies State's Testimony.

For three long and weary weeks the Yda Addis Storke libel trial has occupied the superior court, and the chances are more than even that another week will be passed before the case is given to the jury and decided. Evidence of the defense the past two days has been of the most objectionable character. It has gone to show the inner life of the defendant and others connected with the case and makes plain why a witness for the state told on the stand that she wanted to have nothing to do with the matter, because it was "dirty."

Grant Jackson was again a witness yesterday. The examination was conducted on the lines followed Friday, resulting in the witness being provoked to passing the lie to Senator Boyce and such sharp exchanges between the attorney and witness that Judge Oster had to remind them that if they had any fighting to do they must settle it out of the court room, when he didn't care how much they fought.

Mrs. Storke was called as the next witness. She was on the stand until court adjourned, her testimony being all in direct denial of that given by witnesses for the state.

MORNING SESSION.

The direct examination of Grant Jackson by Attorney Boyce was resumed Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Boyce—Mr. Jackson, I'll show you this paper, and ask you to examine it, and ask if this is the one you referred to yesterday as larger in size than the one shown you yesterday.

"I think this is the paper."

Mr. Squier—We object to this paper being offered in evidence.

The Court—It has not been offered as yet, has it?

Mr. Boyce—I was about to offer it. I will state that this is a duplicate of a paper offered by the prosecution. We expect to draw some inferences as to them. The paper is a retraction of the charge of perjury. The theory is that the portions of the paper relating to C. A. Storke and his son Thomas Storke, had been cut out; it had been mutilated and changed, when offered by the state.

The Court—The objection will be sustained. The exhibit was offered as a sample of handwriting pure and simple, and the jury will be instructed to pay no attention to the contents.

"You tendered your services in this case to assist in the defense, did you not?"

Objection. Sustained.

"You had some connection with the prosecution of this case, did you not?"

"No, sir."

"Do you mean to say that you did not contribute money toward the employment of an expert in this case?"

"Yes, sir, and if you say I did, you lie."

The Court—Mr. Jackson, that will not do in this court.

Winchester and he said they were about to employ a detective to ferret out this matter, and asked me if I would be willing to contribute $5 toward paying the expenses of the investigation. I said I would do so, but from that time to this I have never had any conversation with him, and he has never called for the $5 as he said he would.

"Did Mr. Winchester name the party whom he suspected at that time?"

Objection. Sustained.

Witness was handed the note introduced by the defense as a sample of Jackson's handwriting, and he stated that it was his handwriting.

"Do you recognize this paper?" (showing witness the justice court complaint in the case of Yda Addis Storke vs. Mrs. Anna E. West.)

"Yes, sir."

"When did you see it before?"

Objection. Sustained.

"I will ask you, Mr. Jackson, if you have been in consultation with the district attorney in regard to the conduct of this case, and the evidence to be submitted?"

"No, sir."

"Do you mean to deny that you furnished the district attorney samples of your handwriting, and that you wrote at his dictation the words 'profession and professional?'"

"I do not deny that I did furnish samples of handwriting, and if you call that furnishing evidence, why I did to that extent. And I would like to add that I furnished those specimens after you had accused me of writing these anonymous letters."

These specimens were produced, and Mr. Jackson testified that Mr. Squier and Mr. Kytka had come into his office and requested him to write the words dictated, and he had done so. He had written a sentence twice, once in ink and once in pencil. The word "Nell" he had written three or four times, at the same time, made the capital letter "N" in different ways.

"Did they state any reason why they wanted you to write?"

"No, but I knew that I had been charged by you with being an author of these anonymous letters."

"At the time that Mr. Squier came there was there exhibited to you any of the exhibits in this case?"

"No, sir. Not a one."

"Prior to this time had you ever seen any of these exhibits?"

"I think I had seen two."

"Which ones?"

"I do not know. I think I can pick them out."

Witness examined the exhibits, and said he had seen the Independent, the Press and the Dr. Martha Case letters.

"I saw these documents in the office of the clerk, about ten days ago, since the trial of the case began."

"It was a matter of curiosity on your part?"

"It was a matter of curiosity, except as to plaintiff's exhibit 1, 1 and 2; I looked at that letter at the permission of Mr. Hunt. I had seen the letter unopened in the hands of the postmaster at the time I received the anonymous letter."

"I will show you defendant's exhibit Nos. 12 and 1 and 2, and ask you if you ever saw those exhibits before?"

"No, I never saw that exhibit in my life. I never saw that."

"Positive of that?"

"I am just as positive of that as I am that I am talking to you."

"Did the district attorney have this letter with him when he dictated the words he wanted you to write?"

"No, sir. He dictated them from memory and said that he wished he had brought the letter that he might dictate the whole of it."

"Did he say anything about the peculiar way of spelling 'profession' and 'professional?'"

"No, sir. He didn't say anything about the spelling?"

"One of the letters was attached in the dimension, and Mr. Jackson, in the hunt that followed, remarked that he would like to have it found as Mr. Boyce ought accuse him of "swiping" it. Some personalities were exchanged, until the two were called to order by the court, who said:

"I don't care how much fighting you gentlemen do out of court, but I don't want any in here."

"Were you informed by the district attorney that the spelling of the letter was in an unnatural manner?"

"No, sir. He told me nothing about the letter. He told me to give Mr. Kytka a sample of my natural handwriting in

"I will now call your attention to the last six lines of defendant's exhibit No. 12, and ask you to kindly write and copy those lines on a piece of paper."

Mr. Squier—We object, as it is incompetent.

Mr. Boyce—We think that as the prosecution has gone into this, we have a right to follow it up.

The court overruled the objection, and Mr. Jackson took his seat at the clerk's desk and wrote the lines at Mr. Boyce's dictation. These samples were then introduced.

"Now I understood that you stated yesterday that the defendant had gone down to your house, and that you made a complaint to the marshal?"

"Yes, sir."

"At that time did not the defendant accompany you to your house?"

"Yes, sir."

"You did not say so yesterday, did you?"

"You did not ask me."

"Do you remember stating to Mr. Carrier that you knew the defendant did not write these letters, and was as innocent as a child?"

Objection. Sustained.

Mr. Boyce stated that the purpose of the question was, if the witness did so state to Mr. Carrier, to follow it with a question as to his reasons for having his belief.

"You know, Mr. Jackson, that this defendant did not write the letters charged against her?"

Objection. Sustained.

"You know that during the month of September, 1897, the defendant was confined to her room and bed?"

"I know she was sick at about that time; I am not certain as to the day."

"Do you know where the defendant was in the month of April, 1898?"

"She was in Santa Barbara."

"Where did you see her?"

"In Santa Barbara. In the court room, in her rooms, on the street."

"Where was she in the month of June?"

"In Santa Barbara."

"During that time did you occupy the relation of conjugal husband to this defendant?"

Mr. Squier objected to the question, and was sustained, but Mr. Jackson succeeded in getting in a very emphatic denial, adding: "You must not judge me by yourself, Mr. Boyce." He was called to order by the court.

Mr. Boyce—Do you now state that you had no motive in inducing her to leave Santa Barbara in August?

"I stated yesterday my reason, do you want me to repeat it?"

"You told her also that she might be charged with sending letters through the mail in violation of the federal law?"

Objection. Sustained.

"Did not the defendant threaten to bring suit against you on the ground that you had embezzled some of the money collected as alimony for her?"

Objection. Sustained.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Squier—When did you first come to Santa Barbara?

"In May, 1887."

"Where had you lived prior to that time?"

"In Lompoc, this county."

"What occupation did you follow when you came to Santa Barbara?"

"I went into Mr. Stratton's office as a law student and remained there until I was admitted to practice."

"When were you admitted to practice?"

"In October, 1891."

"When did you first get acquainted with the defendant in this case?"

"In January, 1894."

"How did you get acquainted with her?"

"She came to my office to consult me as an attorney as to a suit brought against her by C. A. Storke for divorce."

"Do any of your relatives reside in this city?"

"Yes, sir."

"How many?"

"Three sisters and a brother."

"Have any of them been subpoenaed by this defendant?"

"My two sisters were subpoenaed by this defendant."

The witness was then handed the anonymous letters, and he stated that he had never seen them before except as stated in his testimony just preceding.

He was asked by the district attorney if he had ever procured any person to write or mail any of these letters.

"I never procured any person to do

(Continued to Second Page.)

SOUTH AFRICAN PLOT THICKENS

Kruger Must Make Concessions or Something Will Drop—Chamberlain's Position Not Popular.

By the Associated Press.

London, June 17.—The Transvaal situation is still the all absorbing topic of discussion in Great Britain and even the continent has caught the disease, although in a less virulent form. The publication of the Transvaal blue book with emphatic denunciation of Transvaal methods, setting forth in measured paragraphs the alleged political, financial and judicial incompetence of the administration of President Kruger and adopting as a part of the government's program all of the grievances of the Uitlanders, is of highest import. It was an unmistakable warning to Transvaal as well as an indication to the people of South Africa generally that the government has arrived at a fixed decision, impossible to recede from, and there are not lacking indications that the hint has not been lost at Pretoria.

Unless the talked of concessions are speedily inaugurated, momentous consequences are expected.

The position in England of the secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, however is readily declining, and an emphatic suggestion is heard in influential quarters to transfer the conduct of negotiations from the colonial to the foreign office.

REGULARS TO THE FRONT.

Nearly 4000 Men Sail to the Philippines This Week.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, June 17.—Nearly four thousand enlisted men and officers will sail next week for the Philippines. The Zealandia will sail on the 22d with four companies of the Twenty-fourth infantry and 100 recruits, and the Pennsylvania on the 24th with headquarters and eight companies of the Twenty-fourth or Twenty fifth infantry. The Sheridan will also go on the 24th with two troops of the Fourth cavalry, two companies of the Fourteenth infantry, a signal corps detachment and 1235 recruits. The Valencia will go on the 25th with four companies of the Twenty fourth or Twenty fifth infantry and 100 recruits.

CALIFORNIAS WON'T GO TO IDAHO

Missouri Miners Leave for the Lead Mines of Coeur d'Alene.

By the Associated Press.

Redding, Cal., June 17.—Everything is quiet at the Iron Mountain mines and about fifty of the strikers have returned to work. Two agents from the Idaho mines are here endeavoring to persuade the idle miners to go to Wardner, but the strikers have declined their proposals, fearing a conflict with the Western Federation of Miners.

Webb City, Mo., June 17.—One hundred and fifty miners from the zinc and lead district left today for Wallace, Idaho, to take the places of the striking [illegible], to take the places of the strikers.

POWDER WORKS BLOWN UP.

Factory at San Rafael Demolished by Mysterious Explosion.

By the Associated Press.

San Rafael, Cal., June 17.—The United States smokeless powder works blew up this afternoon. Five men were killed. Six buildings were demolished by the shock and a dozen buildings burned.

The cause of the explosion is a mystery. One theory is that the sudden ignition of powder from spontaneous combustion caused the disaster, but the generally accepted explanation is that the explosion was caused by carelessness.

Jeffries and Sharkey Will Fight.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 17.—A match was arranged this afternoon for a 25 round bout between Jim Jeffries and Tom Sharkey to take place in the latter part of October before the club offering the largest purse.

Imp Won the Suburban.

By the Associated Press.

Sheepshead Bay, June 17.—The Suburban handicap was won by Imp by two lengths, Warrenton third. Time, 2:05 4-5. lengths, Warrenton third. Time, 2:05 4-5.

YDA ADDIS TRIAL

[Continued from First Page.]

anything with one of them, to write them, or mail them, or publish them, or anything else. And I never wrote them myself."

Mr. Boyce—Why did you think it was necessary to add that you never wrote them yourself?

"Because I have been informed that you accused me of writing them; and I know it isn't true. And you know it isn't true."

Mr. Boyce—Do you want to make any further explanation?

Mr. Jackson—When I want to make any further explanation I'll make it loud enough for you to hear.

Mr. Boyce—And you won't have to walk very fast when you want to see me to tell me about it.

The Court—Gentlemen, when court adjourns you will find the back yard out there. You are excused, Mr. Jackson.

City Attorney Thomas McNulta was called. He testified that he had lived here about twenty-six years. He had known the defendant, had been associated with Mr. Jackson and Mr. Crow in her divorce case.

"Have you ever seen the defendant write?"

"Yes, sir."

"Have you during that time acted upon writing written by her?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, I will show you plaintiff's exhibit 'A' and ask you if you believe that to be in the handwriting of this defendant?"

"I do not."

In the cross-examination he was asked by Mr. Squier:

"Have you seen much of her writing?"

"Not a great deal. I have seen a number of exhibits she copied and a number of affidavits that she prepared, but I am sufficiently familiar with it to have the character impressed upon my mind."

"Have you examined the exhibit you have in your hand?"

"Yes, sir, for twenty or twenty-five minutes."

"Did you examine that letter with sufficient care to be able to say that it was not in her handwriting disguised?"

"Yes, I had that in mind when I examined it. I do not believe it is her writing disguised."

Court then adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Judge P. B. Wright testified that he had known the defendant since the commencement of the suit against Mr. Stork in '91 or '92. He had seen her write, had received letters and notes from her very many; he believed he had a knowledge of her handwriting. He did not believe that the Martha Crow letter was written by the defendant.

Cross-examination by Mr. Squier:

"You are taking a great deal of interest in this case?"

"Not particularly."

"Are you not on Mrs. Storke's bond?"

"Yes, sir."

"Haven't you expressed your feelings regarding the case pretty freely?"

"I did before the trial commenced. I don't think I talked with more than two or three individuals."

He had examined the writing since the trial commenced. Mrs. Storke had brought it to his office, and he had examined it for a few minutes.

YDA ADDIS TESTIFIES

The defendant took the stand, and was sworn. "I so swear," she added dramatically after the oath had been repeated by the clerk.

Mr. Boyce—You are the defendant in this action?

"I am."

"Where do you reside?"

"In Santa Barbara."

"How long have you resided here?"

"Intermittently, since the last of 1890, the periods of absence extending at one time to nearly a year in 1893."

"What has been your profession?"

"Since the early '80's, since I left off teaching up to the time I married Mr. Storke, newspaper and literary work; since my marriage, I could not well follow that, and have been living hand to mouth, working at what I could, teaching, typewriting for attorneys, sewing."

"Where were you in September, 1897?"

"I was in bed, in my rooms in the Tyron block."

"Did you from the first part of September, until the month of October, go upon the streets of Santa Barbara?"

"I think not at all, possibly during the last fortnight, once or twice."

"Where were you in the months of May and June, 1898?"

"In Santa Barbara."

"Did you hear anything about anonymous letters circulating in Santa Barbara?"

"Not in May. The first I heard was on Saturday, the 11th of June."

"When did you first hear anything on that subject?"

"I do not think I know what you mean."

"Explain to the jury the circumstances under which you heard and what you heard at that time."

"In the evening of that day, between 9 and 9:30, Mr. Jackson came to my room. He said: 'Say, you remember that scandal you told me the other day about Dr. Winchester?' I flared up and told him I had told him nothing about any scandal. He repeated rather cruelly, and I replied as before, and I told him it was time I went out to collect my budget.'

"What did you mean by budget?"

"I was sending items to the Call and Chronicle by telegraph, and I went out and went down to The Press office, with which I had made, through Mr. Jackson, a connection. I was to hand in what locals I could find, and they were to tell me what news they could for my telegraph work. I asked Mr. Lloyd if he had heard anything about anonymous letters. He said 'yes, I will tell you for I think you ought to know.'"

(Continued to Third Page.)

St. George
Tonic Port

Enriches the Blood and Nourishes the Brain.

We Sell It

J. T. C

10c

Ricksecker's' Draft

Quick relief and sure cure for all local pain

Price 10c

We are not having a Floral Carnival but we do have a

Procession of Tools

Going out all the time

Builders' Hardware

Now that you are Building and Repairing
Guaranteed Paint. We have the latest thin wires are parallel and will not sag.

there. You are excused, Mr. Jackson.

City Attorney Thomas McNulta was called. He testified that he had lived here about twenty-six years. He had known the defendant, had been associated with Mr. Jackson and Mr. Crow in her divorce case.

"Have you ever seen the defendant write?"

"Yes, sir."

"Have you during that time acted upon writing written by her?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, I will show you plaintiff's exhibit 'A' and ask you if you believe that to be in the handwriting of this defendant?"

"I do not."

In the cross-examination he was asked by Mr. Squier:

"Have you seen much of her writing?"

"Not a great deal. I have seen a number of exhibits she copied and a number of affidavits that she prepared, but I am sufficiently familiar with it to have the character impressed upon my mind."

"Have you examined the exhibit you have in your hand?"

"Yes, sir, for twenty or twenty-five minutes."

"Did you examine that letter with sufficient care to be able to say that it was not in her handwriting disguised?"

"Yes, I had that in mind when I examined it. I do not believe it is her writing disguised."

Court then adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Judge P. B. Wright testified that he had known the defendant since the commencement of the suit against Mr. Stork, in '91 or '92. He had seen her write, had received letters and notes from her very many, he believed to had a knowledge of her handwriting. He did not believe that the Martha Case letter was written by the defendant.

Cross-examination by Mr. Squier:

"You are taking a great deal of interest in this case?"

"Not particularly."

"Are you not on Mrs. Storke's bond?"

"Yes, sir."

"Haven't you expressed your feelings regarding the case pretty freely?"

"I did before the trial commenced. I don't think I talked with more than two or three individuals."

He had examined the writing since the trial commenced, Mrs. Storke had brought it to his office, and he had examined it for a few minutes.

YDA ADDIS TESTIFIES.

The defendant took the stand, and was sworn. "I so swear," she added dramatically after the oath had been repeated by the clerk.

Dr. Boyce—You are the defendant in this action?

"I am."

"Where do you reside?"

"In Santa Barbara."

"How long have you resided here?"

"Intermittently, since the last of 1880, the periods of absence extending at one time to nearly a year in 1883."

that subject.'

"I do not think I know what you mean."

"Explain to the jury the circumstances under which you heard and what you heard at that time."

"In the evening of that day, between 9 and 9:30, Mr. Jackson came to my room. He said: 'Say, you remember that scandal you told me the other day about Dr. Winchester?' I flared up and told him I had told him nothing about any scandal. He reiterated rather rudely, and I replied as before, and I told him it was time I went out to collect my budget."

"What did you mean by budget?"

"I was sending items to the Call and Chronicle by telegraph, and I went out and went down to The Press office, with which I had made, through Mr. Jackson, a connection. I was to hand in what locals I could find, and they were to tell me what news they could for my telegraph work. I asked Mr. Lloyd if he had heard anything about anonymous letters. He said 'yes, I will tell you for I think you ought to know.'"

(Continued to Third Page.)

St. George
Tonic Port

Enriches the Blood and Nourishes the Brain.

We Sell It

J. T. C

10c

Ricksecker's Draft

Quick relief and sure cure for all local pain

Price 10c

We are not having a Floral Carnival but we do have a
Procession of Tools
Going out all the time

Builders' Hardware

Now that you are Building and Repairing
Guaranteed Paint. We have the latest thin wires are parallel and will not sag.

Coal Oil and Gasoline

Of all grades
Orders promp

E. E. PACK
613 State Street.

YDA ADDIS TRIAL

(Continued from Second Page.)

"Tell what he said?"

"He told me he had received two, one a solicitor of The Press, and one in his private capacity, and that they reflected upon Dr. Martha Case. I inquired as to whom Dr. Case was, and he told me she had taught school in the northern part of the county when he taught there and had afterward studied medicine, and had come here a short time before, and was in the office of Dr. Winchester; that she was an irreproachable young lady and that the letters were an infamous outrage.

"Mr. Lloyd asked me if I would not help look into the matter; I said I would; in the first place as a newspaper reporter, and as an outrage was being perpetrated against a woman, I wanted, as another woman, to aid in bringing the guilty one to justice.

"I think I said I hated to meddle with it for one reason, for Dr. Winchester was concerned in it, but I thought I might as well face it and go through with it. So I asked Mr. Lloyd if I could use his phone to talk to Dr. Winchester."

"What was your purpose in calling up Dr. Winchester?"

"To get his version of the story. I said: 'Dr. Winchester, I have heard a scandalous story in which you are concerned. Do you know what I mean?' He said 'yes.' I said 'I am reporting for the San Francisco papers and I want to get your side of it. We are not good friends, but I do not want to send it without asking you.' He said, 'I do not know that we are not good friends.' I said, 'Well, we are not.'" The witness said that the doctor promised to come and see her next day and tell her about the affair, and then he asked her to call Mr. Lloyd to the 'phone. Mr. Lloyd said very little.

"All I heard was when Mr. Lloyd said 'Yes—yes—yes—yes,' she's here. I asked him what Dr. Winchester said about it."

"Did he inform you?"

"No."

"Nothing more was said about the subject?"

"No."

"What action did you next take in regard to the anonymous letters?"

"Monday afternoon I went up town, to a number of places; to Mr. Jackson's office. He said he would show me one of the anonymous letters. He did. One addressed to Mr. Grant Jackson."

"Did you procure a copy of it?"

"That night Mr. Jackson let me take the letter."

"I went to try to find Dr. Case. I went to Mr. Newman's to her office in the Hopkins block, and finally learned that she was living in the Tilted cottage. I went there and saw her.

"I felt a good deal embarrassed at speaking to her about it, it having been reported that she was sending out invitations to men, but I finally summoned up courage and told her I was a newspaper man and told her also that I had talked with some of her friends who were very indignant, and wanted me to help look into the matter." She described the case very graphically. Dr. Case had shown her two letters, and witness had found a short yellow-reddish hair in one of them, and had told her she had better keep it. Dr. Case had given her a list of the letters received. The witness was here handed a copy of the list and a copy of the Kushline letter, which she said she had made at the Case house. They were identified by her.

She said she had written an account of the affair for the Chronicle, but did not know whether it was published. She had continued her investigation, asking various persons if they knew anything about the facts. She kept the copy of the letter and the list for about two weeks. One day two ladies came to her house and told her three names of parties who were suspected of writing the anonymous letters, and she made a memorandum on the back of the copy, and they still appear there. Sheriff Hicks had asked her to get samples of the handwriting of a certain lady, and she had endeavored to do so.

The witness when asked when she had seen the copies last, said she had emptied them out of her handbag on the table in her room, one Sunday morning when she was going to Esperanza to a barbecue. Grant Jackson knew she was going, as she had told him during the week that she wanted to go, and he had urged her to go as he wanted to run for district attorney and wanted her to get votes for him among the Californian voters.

She went, intending to return by the evening train, but had had an offer of a ride by private conveyance, and had arrived home sooner than expected. She got to her rooms about dark. She had

Objection was sustained, but the witness got in the word "Money."

"When did you first know the letters were not in your possession?"

"When Mr. Jackson told me they were stolen from me."

"When was that?"

"At the time I was arrested for perjury for having Mr. Tommy Storke arrested for trying to get a money order that belonged to me. Mr. Jackson told me that Mr. Storke and Dr. Winchester had tried to have me indicted by the federal grand jury for writing these letters; and in the effort to settle this on me, they had had my rooms burglarized, and had found evidence against me. I told him they did not find any evidence against me, as there was none. He was trying to intimidate me into going away, and I wouldn't be bluffed, and told him to have them produce the evidence. He said they had found a list of letters and a rough copy of one of the anonymous letters. I smiled at him, and told him I could knock that testimony into a cocked hat, as I had copied that letter in the presence of Dr. Case and Miss McGilvary and had done it and made the list with their permission. I may have been a little saucy, but I was worked up about it."

"Prior to your going away had you any other intimation that you were suspected of writing those letters?"

"On the 25th of July, Mr. Hoop was talking on the street with me, about Mr. Storke's treatment of me—"

Objection. Sustained.

"Do you now on recollection of events, know that you were suspected of being the author of those letters by any other party than Mr. Jackson?"

The defendant's statement as to what Mr. Hoop said was stricken out.

She was asked to explain the circumstances under which she left in August.

"I had a running fight with certain parties who were trying to bluff me into leaving town. Finally this plea was made, that I was ill and could not work up the case as no one would talk with me, as I was the interested party. But if I would go away for awhile they would push the investigation and vindicate me."

She said that the parties she referred to were Mrs. West and Mr. Jackson.

The stipulation alleged to have been submitted by Mr. Storke to the defendant by which she was asked to accept a certain sum of money and to dismiss her claim for alimony was shown witness, and she said:

"Mrs. West brought it to me, with the requirement that I sign it or go to jail."

"Did you send a representative to him in regard to the matter?"

"Not with my authority. Mrs. West had the whole matter arranged before she told me anything about it."

"You heard the testimony of Mrs. West?"

"I heard it."

"Was that a correct statement of facts as you remember it?"

"She first volunteered to go on my bond when Mr. Storke had me arrested for perjury, and without telling me why, she refused to go on the bond and then kept telling me that I was going to be arrested. Mrs. West promised to straighten all the affairs."

She was told finally, the witness said, that all of her affairs would be looked after and she would be sent out of town for a year or more. Before going away she gave Mrs. West specimens of her writing and other matters intended to establish her innocence of the charges against her, but she did not give up all the evidence she had. She left here August 13, and much against her will went to Mexico, as a through ticket had been taken for her.

She was in Los Angeles after her return from Mexico, with the exception of a trip or two into the country to look up evidence in the Richardson murder case, and a trip to San Francisco on the same mission. When she first heard of the indictment by the grand jury she was all with pneumonia.

"What did you do then?"

"Do? Why, I kept on coughing."

"How long before you wrote to the sheriff?"

"It must have been two or three weeks, when I had recovered sufficiently to be about."

The letter to Sheriff Stewart was read, in which Mrs. Storke asked if she had been indicted. The letter was of somewhat a startling nature. She wrote that she intended to return to secure the arrest of Detective Pomade for burglarizing her rooms and other "good citizens" of Santa Barbara for aiding him. Also she wanted the sheriff to be sure and not allow to be lost a calico shirt and a pair of overalls, that in some mysterious way were important evidence in the Richardson murder case. She also pro ing interviewed by former Sheriff Hicks?"

"He called at my rooms. He walked into my rooms without knocking and I called him down for it."

"Did you ever have an interview with Detective Pomade?"

"He called several times."

Several questions in relation to the calls of the sheriff and detective on Mrs. Storke and the conversations that took place, whether about the anonymous letters or other matters, were objected to and the objection sustained.

Mrs. Storke said that she was very familiar with the writing of Grant Jackson, she had seen him write hundreds of times during a period of four years. She was shown a specimen of writing that she pronounced it was her belief was in the writing of Grant Jackson. When asked upon what she based her belief she replied that she did not want to tell what. She said later that it was her familiarity with the writing that led to the belief.

Attorney Boyce in explaining the purport of a question to which Mr. Squier objected and was sustained, relative to other specimens of Mr. Jackson's writing, said it was to show that evidence which the defense had in its possession had been abstracted since the trial began or within the last five days. No further explanation of the stolen evidence was given at this time.

"Do you remember the testimony of Mrs. Gates?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you remember that she testified that on one occasion she was in your room and you were in a very bitter spirit, and that you said you hoped to live long enough to accomplish Dr. Winchester's downfall?"

"I did make the statement, but not of Dr. Winchester. I said that I hoped I should live long enough to accomplish the arrest of the Richardson murderer, and I hoped to contribute toward bringing him to the gallows."

Mrs. Storke denied the evidence of Mrs. Gates in relation to disguising handwriting.

"Do you remember the testimony of Mr. Sands, as to two conversations he had with you?"

"I remember his account of them."

She denied that she had spoken to Mr. Sands about the anonymous letters in the manner that he testified. She had not said that she could not disguise her gait, but that she had done so on many occasions when about the streets at night as a little Chinese boy or a Spanish boy, but she never made the statement that she wrote three distinct hands and one could not be distinguished from another.

The Martha Case letter was handed to Mrs. Storke.

"Did you write that letter?"

"No, sir. I never did."

She replied in like manner in answer to the question if she wrote The Press letter and others of plaintiff's exhibits.

Court adjourned till Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Yda Addis Storke Found Guilty of Criminal Libel

Jury Returns a Verdict that Brands Her Author of Anonymous Letters Upon Which Indictment of Grand Jury Was Based.

Guilty is the verdict returned at 8:25 last night by the jury in the Yda Addis Storke criminal libel case. The jury was out five hours and twenty-five minutes, but long before they announced readiness to report they had actually reached an agreement and held back the announcement only because they did not want to make it before the crowd that remained in the court room all the early hours of the evening, wishing to spare the accused woman as much as possible.

That the verdict meets the almost general approval of all who heard it last night was apparent. There was a look of relief on many faces when the announcement was made, as if they felt that a just punishment would now be meted to the person guilty of one of the most atrocious of crimes.

There were six ballots taken by the jury, which stood from the first eleven for conviction and one for acquittal.

When the verdict was being read Mrs. Storke leaned on the table at which she has sat during the trial and gazed with a fixed stare at the jury, but made no outward movement to betray her feelings.

Attorney Currier for Mrs. Storke announced that he will make a motion for a new trial, the court giving until 10 o'clock this morning to hear the motion and to pronounce sentence. The maximum sentence for the crime of criminal libel is one year in the county jail.

There was a larger crowd than ever in attendance at the Yda Addis Storke trial yesterday, the last day of the notorious libel suit. From early morning till the arguments of the attorneys were concluded and the jury had received its instructions from Judge Oster and retired, at precisely 4 o'clock, the court room was full to overflowing.

Seldom if ever has any case tried in the local court excited as much interest as has this, and but few have been fought as bitterly. When the trial began, Monday, May 29, it was expected that it would occupy at the most four or five days, but instead twenty full days have been spent in the hearing and volumes upon volumes of testimony has been introduced that at the beginning could have been thought to have little bearing on the case.

Yesterday Senator Boyce spoke an hour and thirty-five minutes, making four hours occupied by him in the two days in presenting his argument. District Attorney Squier then replied for the prosecution, his speech continuing until near 3:30 o'clock, when the instructions to the jury were read and the case was given to the jury.

When the jury had retired, instead of the court room being vacated by the spectators, they lingered, expecting or hoping that an agreement would soon be reached and a verdict announced. But in this they were disappointed, for the hours passed and the jury failed to return. Many anxious glances were cast at the clock, and with the passing of each minute after 4:30 speculation as to the probable verdict grew more animated. At first the majority of spectators seemed of the opinion that a conviction would be the result and that it would be but the work of a few minutes of the jury to come to such a conclusion, but as the time passed this opinion gave place to a feeling that there would be a disagreement, and the crowd began to dwindle.

As if for entertainment of the spectators, a few minutes after the conclusion of the libel trial, Mrs. Storke threw off the role of prisoner before the bar of justice and assumed that of attorney. The case of Storke against Storke in which C. A. Storke is cited to show cause why he should not be held for contempt in not obeying an alleged order of the court to pay Yda Addis Storke alimony, was called before Judge Oster, Mrs. Storke appearing as her own attorney in the case. Mr. Thomas acted as attorney for Mr. Storke. The case was heard and taken under advisement.

At 6 o'clock the jury had failed of any agreement and were taken out to dinner in charge of Sheriff Stewart. Again they were locked up and the balloting upon a verdict recommenced.

One of the twelve jurymen stood out for acquittal until after 8 o'clock when he gave in to the majority.

Because of Mrs. Storke's known reputation as a desperate woman, a special officer was detailed last night to watch the house in Figueroa street in which she has lived during the progress of the trial. It was feared that she might attempt to escape from the house in some one of the many disguises she is known to have assumed when out on her self-styled detective excursions and do some mischief to persons she considers her enemies.

BERTILLON, THE EXPERT, LOSES HIS POSITION

Special Cable to The Call and the New York Herald. Copyrighted, 1899, by James Gordon Bennett.

PARIS, July 5.—"The Dreyfus case," says the Figaro, "has made yet another victim. M. Bertillon has been deprived of the position he held as head of the anthropometrical department. At the sitting of the Municipal Council, Andre Lefebure questioned the Prefect of Police on the subject of M. Bertillon's appearance as an expert in handwriting. M. Lepine urged his past services, and begged that he might be rendered and left in his post; but the majority thought otherwise, and he lost his position."

ATTEMPTED TO KIDNAP A GIRL

In the Heart of the City a Man Tries to Steal Child From Its Mother

Great excitement was occasioned at the junction of Market and Third streets late this afternoon by the attempt of a middle-aged and stoutly built man to kidnap a seven-year-old girl from a woman who passed. The man appeared as if he was waiting for the woman to pass.

Handwriting Expert Kytka was on a passing car, and hearing the woman's cries leaped from the car and made for the man. The little girl was crying loudly and Mr. Kytka struck the man. He started to run and Kytka pursued him. Seeing an officer the man was given into charge of Peter Brown of 748 Howard street, and Kytka ran for the officer. The man was placed in a patrol wagon, but had not reached the Central Station up to the time of going to press.

FAIR WILL CASE IN THE SUPREME COURT.

Attorneys Argue as to the Validity of the Trust, But no Decision Is Arrived At.

The arguments in the contest of the will of Senator James G. Fair were heard before the Supreme Court yesterday, and were concluded late in the afternoon. Judge H. P. Hayne, Garret W. McEnerney and William Pierson represented the trustees, Goodfellow, Angus and Crothers, Judge Van R. Paterson, the minor heirs, children of Mrs. Oelrichs, and Charles E. Wheeler and Judge John Garber the children of the deceased. Judge Hayne opened the argument, maintaining that the decision of Judge Slack was erroneous, and that the trust made by the deceased was valid and permissible under the laws of the State of California. Mr. Wheeler, for the other side, contended that the trust was certainly void, and that the testator did not have the power to alienate his property as set out in the will.

This matter was argued before the Supreme Court last August, but the court could not conclude the opinion and asked for a reargument.

Postponing McGlade's Trial.

Peter W. McGlade was arraigned in Judge Carroll Cook's court yesterday on three charges of forging demands on the Street Department fund while McGlade was bookkeeper for the former Superintendent of Streets. The defendant was allowed until next Friday in which to enter his plea or to demur. It is expected McGlade's trial will be postponed for two months for the reason that former Senator Patrick Reddy, his attorney, will be absent in Idaho, where he is engaged in defending some of the Coeur d'Alene miners. This will not cause delay, as Judge Cook's calendar is crowded with cases ready for trial.

as well face it and go through with it. So I asked Mr. Lloyd if I could use his phone to talk to Dr. Winchester."

"What was your purpose in calling up Dr. Winchester?"

"To get his version of the story. I said: 'Dr. Winchester, I have heard a scandalous story in which you are concerned. Do you know what I mean?' He said 'yes.' I said 'I am reporting for the San Francisco papers and I want to get your side of it. We are not good friends, but I do not want to send it without asking you.' He said, 'I do not know that we are not good friends.' I said, 'Well, we are not.'" The witness said that the doctor promised to come and see her next day and tell her about the affair, and then he asked her to call Mr. Lloyd to the 'phone. Mr. Lloyd said very little.

"All I heard was when Mr. Lloyd said 'Yes—yes—yes—yes,' she's here. I asked him what Dr. Winchester said about it.

"Did he inform you?"

"No."

"Nothing more was said about this subject?"

"No."

"What action did you next take in regard to the anonymous letters?"

"Monday afternoon I went up town, to a number of places; to Mr. Jackson's office. He said he would show me one of the anonymous letters. He did. One addressed to Mr. Grant Jackson."

"Did you procure a copy of it?"

"That night Mr. Jackson let me take the letter."

"I went to try to find Dr. Case. I went to Mr. Newman's, to her office in the Hopkins block, and finally learned that she was living in the Eldred cottage. I went there and saw her.

"I felt a good deal embarrassed at speaking to her about it, it having been reported that she was sending out invitations to men, but I finally came plump out with it and told her I was a newspaper man; and told her also that I had talked with some of her friends who were very indignant, and wanted me to help look into the matter." She described the visit very graphically. Dr. Case had shown her two letters, and witness had found a short yellow-reddish hair in one of them, and had told her she had better keep it. Dr. Case had given her a list of the letters received. The witness was here handed a copy of the list and a copy of the Knibbe letter, which she said she had made at the Case house. They were identified by her.

She said she had written an account of the affair for the Chronicle, but did not know whether it was published. She had continued her investigation, asking various persons if they knew anything about the facts. She kept the copy of this letter and the list for about two weeks. One day two ladies came to her house and told her three names of parties who were suspected of writing the anonymous letters, and she made a memorandum on the back of the copy; and they still appear there. Sheriff Hicks had asked her to get samples of the handwriting of a certain lady, and she had endeavored to do so.

The witness when asked when she had seen the copies last, said she had emptied them out of her handbag on the table in her room, one Sunday morning when she was going to Carpinteria to a barbecue. Grant Jackson knew she was going, as she had told him during the week that she wanted to go, and he had urged her to go as he wanted to run for district attorney and wanted her to get votes for him among the Californian voters.

She went, intending to return by the evening train, but had had an offer of a ride by private conveyance, and had returned home sooner than expected. She got to her rooms about dusk. She had been there but a little while when Grant Jackson walked in. He had keys to her room. He was greatly surprised to see her and exclaimed "My God," or "good God" or "Great God, are you back already?"

"I did not like his tone, and gave him a rap for it. He stayed nearly all evening; he went out during the evening to the Mascarel to 'see a man.'"

"Did you miss the papers that night?"

"No, I was looking for something else."

"What was it?"

... presence of Dr. Case and Mrs. McGillivray and had done it and made the list with their permission. I may have been a little saucy, but I was worked up about it."

"Prior to your going away had you any other intimation that you were suspected of writing those letters?"

"On the 28th of July, Mr. Roop was talking on the street with me, about Mr. Starke's treatment of me—"

Objection. Sustained.

"Do you now on recollection of events, know that you were suspected of being the author of those letters by any other party than Mr. Jackson?"

The defendant's statement as to what Mr. Roop said was stricken out.

She was asked to explain the circumstances under which she left in August.

"I had a running fight with certain parties who were trying to bluff me into leaving town. Finally this plea was made, that I was ill and could not work up the case as no one would talk with me, as I was the interested party. But if I would go away for awhile they would push the investigation and vindicate me."

She said that the parties she referred to were Mrs. West and Mr. Jackson.

The stipulation alleged to have been submitted by Mr. Starke to the defendant by which she was asked to accept a certain sum of money and to dismiss her claims for alimony was shown witness, and she said:

"Mrs. West brought it to me, with the requirement that I sign it or go to jail."

"Did you send a representative to him in regard to the matter?"

"Not with my authority. Mrs. West had the whole matter arranged before she told me anything about it."

"You heard the testimony of Mrs. West?"

"I heard it."

"Was that a correct statement of facts as you remember it?"

"She first volunteered to go on my bond when Mr. Starke had me arrested for perjury and without telling me why, she refused to go on the bond and then kept telling me that I was going to be arrested. Mrs. West promised to straighten all the affair."

She was told finally, the witness said, that all of her affairs would be looked after and she would be sent out of town for a year or more. Before going away she gave Mrs. West specimens of her writing and other matters intended to establish her innocence of the charges against her, but she did not give up all the evidence she had. She left here August 13, and much against her will went to Mexico, as a through ticket had been taken for her.

She was in Los Angeles after her return from Mexico, with the exception of a trip or two into the country to look up evidence in the Richardson murder case, and a trip to San Francisco on the same mission. When she first heard of the indictment by the grand jury she was ill with pneumonia.

"What did you do then?"

"Do? Why, I kept on coughing."

"How long before you wrote to the sheriff?"

"It must have been two or three weeks, when I had recovered sufficiently to be about."

The letter to Sheriff Stewart was read, in which Mrs. Starke asked if she had been indicted. The letter was of somewhat a startling nature. She wrote that she intended to return to secure the arrest of Detective Ponvale for burglarizing her room and other "good citizens" of Santa Barbara for aiding him. Also she wanted the sheriff to be sure and not allow to be lost a calico shirt and a pair of overalls, that in some mysterious way were important evidence in the Richardson murder case. She also proposed to make it warm for a certain burglar, whom she accused of having committed several abortions on girls of the city.

She received a reply from the sheriff informing her that the grand jury had indicted her. She wrote again from San Francisco, when she went there about the Richardson murder. She understood there was no warrant for her arrest, or she would have come here at once.

"Now, going back to a week after you called on Dr. Case, do you remember the

JURY WILL GET THE CASE TODAY

Testimony In Yda Addis Libel Trial Has All Been Heard.

PROBABLE DECISION BY NIGHT

One Witness Called Yesterday--Gutierrez Exonerated--Summing Up by Attorneys Begins.

Taking of testimony in the Yda Addis Storke trial ended yesterday morning and the attorneys' arguments began in the afternoon. District Attorney Squier spoke briefly in summing up the case for the state, when Senator Boyce for the defense took the floor and for two hours and twenty minutes reviewed the evidence of both sides, pouring veritable floods of oratory into the ears of the jury and a court room crowded full with spectators. And the senator had not finished when court adjourned at 5 o'clock, but will be at it again this morning.

A principal feature of yesterday's proceedings was the striking out of all evidence introduced by the defense in the effort to make out that F. M. Gutierrez was author of the anonymous letters upon which the indictment of Mrs. Storke for criminal libel is based. This was done upon motion of the prosecuting attorney, on the grounds that no evidence had been produced in support of the defendant's allegation that the letters were written by Gutierrez.

There is hardly a doubt but the speech-making will be finished before adjournment today, and the case given to the jury and probably decided.

Public interest in the trial increased as it was nearing the end, and yesterday it took a decided leap. The court room was crowded to capacity during both sessions and many came who were turned away, for there wasn't standing room to be had during the afternoon when the speeches were in progress. There is a great deal of speculation as to the verdict of the jury, some bets even having been made as to what the twelve wise men will find from the evidence presented. The guesses range from acquittal to conviction, with a great many expressing the belief that the jury will fail to agree.

Stenographer Gerrin completed the transcript of the evidence yesterday. It makes 1000 typewritten pages, or about 4000 folios.

THE LAST WITNESSES.

The first witness at the Tuesday morning session, called by the defense, was F. M. Selores, who testified as to a concert reported by Mrs. Storke for The Press. He was shown a note to defendant, signed "L. L. Lloyd per S," which he identified as his handwriting, asking Mrs. Storke to furnish a report of the concert. He testified that it was his recollection that some one in the office had told him that Mrs. Storke wished to report the concert for a ticket or tickets, and that he had consulted Mr. Lloyd, and it was agreed that Mrs. Storke should be asked to give the report. He had left the note at Mrs. Storke's door, she not being in at the time. So far as he had known she had received no other compensation than the tickets, the witness adding that he considered it a trivial matter at the time, and the details were not very vividly remembered.

Mrs. Storke then took the stand and testified that she had received no tickets from The Press, but had admission to the opera house on an annual pass from the San Francisco Music and Drama, in the name of William Newell, which had been turned over to her by William Newell when he left the city.

After waiting half an hour for a witness who was then not called, the attorneys announced that the testimony was closed, and court adjourned until 2 o'clock for the arguments.

THE ARGUMENTS.

District Attorney E. W. Squier made the opening address to the jury, occupying about thirty-five minutes.

"In my opening statement," he said, "I stated that you were about to investigate the details of a crime that was certainly disgusting, but I had not supposed that the investigation would consume so much time."

The libel, he said, was based upon the Dr. Martha Case letter, and he believed that the defense would not claim that this letter did not constitute a libel.

Then the district attorney proceeded briefly to review the case, and read instructions that were to be presented to the jury by the court, outlining the crime of libel, and the extent to which they should entertain "a reasonable doubt" as to the guilt of the defendant.

Mr. Squier referred to testimony of the witnesses who had fixed the authorship upon the defendant: Mrs. E. J. Thompson, whom the defendant's attorney had attempted to browbeat, but whose testimony remained unshaken. Mrs. West, had been charged with prejudice, and in support of that claim they had shown a complaint in a case brought by Mrs. Storke against Mrs. West. "That suit was not begun," said Mr. Squier, "until a short time before this trial, and when the defendant knew what Mrs. West could give testimony that would injure her." Frank Sands had been charged with prejudice, but it was not reasonable that a man in his position would stoop to perjury because he might have some ill-feeling against the defendant. Mr. Stevens was an unprejudiced witness, and he and the others had sworn that in their opinion, based upon familiarity with the defendant's handwriting, she had written the libelous letters.

Counsel for the defense, continued Mr. Squier, will tell you that the testimony of Expert Kytka should be most cautiously considered. But he has shown the jury by thorough demonstration where the similarity exists between the admitted and disputed writings. He received not one cent from any private individual, but he was employed by the authorities of this county, the same as other officers are employed, and he was asked to give an honest opinion. This opinion he has given, that this defendant wrote the letter to Dr. Martha Case, and other letters of the same nature.

Of Pinarde's visits to Mrs. Storke's apartments, Mr. Squier said that the little piece of tissue paper picked up in her room amounted to nothing of itself, but that piece of tissue paper was of the same texture as a piece of tissue paper found in one of the letters to Winchester, and constitutes a circumstance that must, with others, be considered.

The first thing the defense did was to drag Frank Gutierrez into this case, a meek and inoffensive man, who twenty-five years ago was in the county recorder's office, and for nearly twenty years was city clerk. They did not establish the slightest foundation to the charge that Gutierrez wrote a single one of these letters, and the court has stricken out all records introduced here by the defense against Gutierrez. They have not hesitated to lay open the relations of Grant Jackson with this defendant for no other reason apparently than that the defendant is carrying out her threat to drag him down with her. The attempt to connect Grant Jackson is too flimsy to support any supposition that he wrote a line of the letters, and the effort to drag him into the case was made to ruin him, and she must have known, and her counsel must have known, that by his ruin they could not help her.

That woman has disputed every witness who was introduced by the prosecution. If she has told the truth, then every witness for the people must have lied. It is proper for the jury to consider all of her testimony with great caution.

It seems to be a theory of the defense that Grant Jackson wrote these letters to throw the blame on this defendant. There is absolutely no foundation in the charge. The counsel for the defense will appeal for sympathy because the defendant is a woman. But her conduct in this trial, no matter how skillful and eloquent the attorney may be in his argument, will give the appeal no weight with you in the consideration of this case.

Mr. Boyce in his argument spoke in part as follows:

"I listened with some interest to the remarks of my young friend, the district attorney, after seventeen or eighteen days in introducing evidence for your consultation as jurors to reach a conclusion in this case. He has seen fit to scatter over some points which he has sought to establish, and he asks you in the performance of your duty to base your conclusion upon the remarks he has made.

"I shall attempt to call your attention to some of the evidence, and to endeavor to refresh your memories, and ask you, as honest men, to review the evidence free from anything that has touched you or entered into your mind in any other place.

"We have come to the ultimate tribunal, to which the defendant looks for protection. You represent one of the greatest and proudest results of a long period of Anglo-Saxon development; you represent the rock against which the powers of kings fell down, and the mutual freedom which the United States set forth as an example to man. There have been other men here in the court of justice, when the weak and the timid, without a friend in the world, have asked not sympathy, but they have appealed to a jury of their countrymen for justice.

"You are called upon here to do what? To convict that defendant? Is it your duty to follow out the motives, wishes and efforts of those who have been instrumentalities of those who may have motives of the darkest kind?"

"It is hardly necessary for me to remind you of the peculiarities surrounding a case like this. I refer to the case as it is in the abstract, as it is in this court, and how it may have come here. Reflect for a moment on the fact if yourselves were charged with writing an anonymous letter, what would be incumbent upon you to cast off suspicion that may be directed to you.

"There is but one thing that is absolutely consistent with itself, and that is truth," continued Senator Boyce. As he proceeded in the argument he grew in force, and at times indulged in flights of oratory that were worthy of any cause. As to the crime charged, in the mere matter of writing anonymous letters there is no crime, he said, but in the Martha Case letter there is contained not only a libel, but four distinct libels. Senator Boyce announced that he would read the letter to the jury, when immediately there was an exodus of ladies from the court room, particularly of the younger ladies present, but they all returned after the reading. The four libels contained in the letter, said the attorney after reading, are directed at Dr. Winchester, Hiram Pierce, L. G. Waterman and Dr. Martha Case.

"To whom is the greatest insult lodged? To Dr. Winchester? No, for he is a man, and while every man regards his reputation as sacred, we know as a fact that no man feels the insult of such an attack as does a woman. The person most assailed in that letter is Dr. Martha Case." He paid a high tribute to the character of Miss Case, pointing in strong terms the injury that has been done her, concluding: "If you find this defendant guilty of this crime, the limit of punishment fixed by the law is too small to be inflicted upon her."

After reviewing other evidence of the state, in which Detective Pinarde was pictured in the light of the lowest of his profession, characterized as a crack thief, hired to spy on a defenseless woman, he told of his honest belief in the innocence of Mrs. Storke. It was admitted that the circumstances looked dark against her, and he for several days had felt the influence that later he described as "that mysterious influence that surrounds like the circumambient air. That feeling of disgust toward this defendant wrought by that mysterious something, descending cloud-like—public opinion." He asked the jury if they have not felt this influence since they were called to serve in this trial, and cautioned them against it. Turning to the testimony of Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, Mr. Boyce attacked severely the admission of such evidence. He drew a striking pen picture of the present state of the French republic, nearly rent by the Dreyfus scandal, telling that it was through the testimony of government handwriting experts that the crime was fastened upon the unfortunate captain. He said that the expert, like the attorney, was hired to promote a purpose, and for the same reason that it is said that the attorney for neither side can be believed, so the testimony of the expert should be suspicioned.

The attorney was still on the subject of expert testimony when court adjourned at 5 o'clock until 10 this morning, when the argument will continue. Senator Boyce was speaking constantly from 2:40 o'clock till 5.

PROF. KYTKA SAYS MRS. BERG DID IT.

Handwriting Expert Indignant at the Imputation That Has Been Cast Upon Him.

The first arrests in the Slattery-Berg scandal of Marysville will probably be made in a few days, and every movement or action is being watched with intense interest by residents of Sutter and Yuba counties.

Attorney Carlin's statement that he did not know whether or not Handwriting Expert Kytka had seen the original admitted exemplars is given little credence.

Theodore Kytka, the expert, on Thursday morning said to a Report representative: "I saw the telegrams in The Report on the Marysville scandal, but I am not yet privileged to speak. Now, since Attorney Carlin has given out my report for publication, I do not care to draw the detail studies of my work, but I would like to state that I have been very careful in my examinations, and I find that the writing ought to be easily recognized by any intelligent person. There is hardly any attempt to disguise the handwriting. The examination was certainly the easiest one that I have ever had in all my experiences. All my exemplars, disputed or admitted, are stamped with my dies, and these I have made myself, and they cannot be imitated. I have no fear in this regard. Mrs. Berg's alleged handwriting was not the only style that I examined. A bunch of communications written by various suspected persons were sent to me, and I picked out the letters purporting to have been written and bearing the name of Mrs. Berg, without any trouble. So plain and so identical were the anonymous letters, and these communications that it did not require an expert to connect them.

"The detailed report that I rendered, and which was published in The Report is correct in every detail. Only one word was not exactly right. 'Here' was published instead of 'hereby,' as in the original."

Speaking of the notorious Storke case, Mr. Kytka said: "My experiences in this line of work have taught me that a young woman or a girl will write one anonymous letter; that is, a saucy, impertinent note to another person, and then send no further communications.

"When a woman attains the age of 40 years or over, and starts to write anonymous letters, she does not cease writing after sending the first one. She persistently sends these anonymous communications until such time as she is apprehended."

Mrs. Berg is, apparently from her appearance, over 40 years of age.

Mr. Kytka's studio has been furnished with scientific appliances at a cost of nearly $30,000, and judging by the diligent and careful manner in which he prosecutes his work, one may believe that he is not guilty of making errors in his findings.

MRS. CRAVEN LOOKING FOR NEW EVIDENCE

A Mysterious Week at the Marin Hotel, San Rafael.

HER CASE IS ON APPEAL

Emissaries Have Approached Gilligan, Who Drove Fair in His Hack.

Still fighting for a share of the millions of the late Senator Fair, Mrs. Nettie R. Craven, who calls herself his widow, has been in San Rafael for a week past, mysteriously searching for evidence to strengthen her case before the Supreme Court, where it is now on appeal.

All of her movements have been attended by the greatest secrecy. She registered at the Marin Hotel, the name of which used to be called the Hotel Francaise, and Jacob Schneider, the proprietor, was told that on no account must anyone know of her presence there. Mrs. Craven asked for Room No. 1, and it was given to her. It was in this room that the famous deeds, giving her so much of the Fair estate, were alleged to have been signed. In this room she swore she spent part of her honeymoon with the late millionaire. During her latest stay at San Rafael she remained close in it, only venturing out after dark to take a gallop out into the country.

Each morning she has remained for several hours in consultation with her attorney, School Director L. F. Dunand. As a result of these conferences emissaries have been sent to gather what evidence they could to be presented to the court.

After Judge Slack decided that the deeds purporting to be signed by Fair, which gave her hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property, Mrs. Craven, still maintaining that she was Fair's widow, began suit for that portion of the estate to which she was entitled, if she could prove she had ever been married to him. But the suit failed in the Superior Court, and was at once appealed. In the upper court, questions of law only are considered excepting some new evidence can be presented as ground for asking a cause to be sent down for retrial. That is why Mrs. Craven is making such a diligent search in San Rafael and other places, hoping to find something by which she can establish her marriage. If she can do this, she will receive half of the community property, and one-third of the separate property of her husband, which would amount to millions.

An effort was made to see Mrs. Craven yesterday, but word was brought back that she had gone to San Francisco. Mr. Schneider seemed greatly chagrined that her presence had been discovered.

On the first trial, when the deeds were discredited, a great many residents of San Rafael testified in her behalf. They swore they had been in Room 1 of the famous old Hotel Francaise when the deeds were signed by Fair. Since Mrs. Craven has been there the last time, she has devoted many hours to the study of the old register, and has made many notes from it.

One of the witnesses whose testimony was greatly against Mrs. Craven, was Matthew Gilligan, now a shoe merchant of San Rafael. When the honeymoon was alleged to have taken place he was proprietor of a hack. He swore that at the very time it was claimed the deeds were signed, he was taking Fair for a ride in his hack. During the past few days Gilligan has been approached by a number of strangers. After making some small purchase, they would try to get Gilligan to talk about the Fair case and to express himself regarding its merits. But Gilligan would not talk. He said he again might be a witness and he preferred to wait till he got upon the stand before saying anything further. Then the emissaries, probably agents for the Craven side, would go away visibly disappointed.

MRS. LUNG SAYS SHE STILL LOVES THE MAN WHO ASKS DIVORCE

SHE AND HER HUSBAND REMAIN LOVERS.

"THERE are four women of whom I have reason to be jealous, and yet I do not want to get a divorce from my husband," said Mrs. Elizabeth Lung, wife of Dr. George A. Lung. "I don't think it would be right for me to consent to a divorce, because he needs my help in his life work. He needs my companionship. Very few know Dr. Lung as I do. They do not know his moods and nobody else can minister to his mental and spiritual wants as I can. He is of a very morose disposition, and this will come as a surprise to many of his friends who have imagined that they knew all about him.

"I could illustrate this with a great many stories of his peculiarities, but it will suffice to tell of his going away from home in a row boat one night with only a dog as his companion, and remaining out all night. He said nothing to me or any other living person about where he was going and I was left to fear until he returned.

"There was no reason for his going away in that solitary manner, except that he was suffering from depression on account of a fit of the blues. I learned afterwards that he went to the house of an old colored man and sat and talked all night upon the most trivial matters. That was while we were stationed at Port Royal. Until midnight I supposed that he was engaged in his professional duties, but after that I could not rest until assured of his safety by his return."

"Some people ask why I still cling to my husband after what I have suffered," said Mrs. Lung. "That is clear enough to one who knows a woman's heart. I do not want to separate from him, because I love him. When we were married I was a mere girl, and I can think of no one else in this world. Besides, I fervently hope for a reconciliation with my husband. I am sure that if our enemies would let us alone we would get along all right. There would not be the slightest difficulty between us.

"Some of my friends have advised me to let him go and for me to get a divorce on the ground of desertion, but I couldn't conscientiously do that, for he has never failed to support me. To be sure he has cut my allowance down to $30 a month in place of $80, but I can stand that and will. What I want is my husband. He loves me yet—he showed that by the way he broke down in court the other day, while our letters were being read—and I love him, so it would be outrageous to divorce us. All we ask is to be let alone, and we'll be reconciled all right in a short time."

Mrs. Lung showed a photograph of Honolulu harbor, portraying the celebration of the flag-raising when Uncle Sam took possession of Hawaii.

"I was there at my husband's invitation, and you can see that the cruiser Philadelphia, with which he is connected, was far out in the stream. He met me at the boat landing, took me out in the launch, and was with me an hour before he even thought that I had been drinking, so it can't be possible that I was much under the influence of liquor. In fact, I had taken only one small glass of sherry, but his anger caused me to have a hysterical attack, and so I was blamed for the trouble he caused.

"Now, I want to say that there is no truth in the charge made by Mr. Humphries that I called Mrs. Humphries a flat-nosed Chinawoman in Honolulu, but if I had I don't see how that would be a valid ground for my husband to get a divorce from me. I knew Mrs. Humphries when she was Miss Marie Afong, and if her nose is flat I can't help it, but I didn't say so. Her father has gone back to China, his native country."

Mrs. Lung introduced several witnesses to dispute her husband's assertion that she was addicted to the use of stimulants at Vallejo and other places. Miss McEneroey testified that she always considered Mrs. Lung a charming woman of correct habits and good principles, and a perfect lady in every sense of the term. Mrs. Newcomb corroborated this view, as did Messrs. Gomez and Edgerton of the naval pay office. All of these had opportunity to observe Mrs. Lung's conduct daily.

Mrs. Lung denies that her husband's residence is in California, but says that if he wishes to press his suit for divorce he must go to their home, Onondaga, N. Y.

Judge Murasky requested counsel for Dr. Lung to submit authorities in support of the claim of plaintiff's residence in California, and on the point as to what constitutes habitual intemperance, that being the only charge against Mrs. Lung.

SHE CALLED HIS WIFE A FLAT-NOSED CHINESE

THE DEFENDANT AS SHE APPEARED IN COURT.

Dr. George A. Lung, surgeon of the United States cruiser Philadelphia, has sued his wife for divorce on the grounds of drunkenness. She denies all the things he has attempted to prove.

DR. GEORGE A. LUNG'S suit for a divorce from Elizabeth Lung was called for trial by Judge Murasky yesterday afternoon, and the testimony of Dr. Lung, who is the surgeon of the United States cruiser Philadelphia, was taken.

The story of Dr. Lung is that for several years his wife has been addicted to excessive indulgence of her appetite for liquor, that she has appeared aboard the Philadelphia in an intoxicated condition; has used boisterous language in the presence of his brother officers of the navy, and has caused him great humiliation and mental agony. He said that their marriage occurred in Philadelphia, January 1, 1885.

Answering questions by Attorney P. G. Halpin, the husband said that Mrs. Lung had spoken rudely to him in the presence of others.

Mrs. Lung's answer was presented, in which she denies all the charges made by her husband, and informs the court that after the dates mentioned in her husband's complaint they lived together as husband and wife, implying that if he hitherto thought he had cause for complaint, all of her alleged offenses had been condoned.

On her behalf there was introduced a letter written by A. Barnes, in which he said he believed Mrs. Lung is the victim of a conspiracy; that she is a good woman, and that all the accusations against her are unfounded.

Several depositions bearing on the case were introduced. In the affidavit of A. S. Humphries are several statements tending to corroborate Dr. Lung's complaint. Mr. Humphries swears that he saw Mrs. Lung intoxicated several times in Honolulu, that she drove to his house while his wife was entertaining at dinner a party consisting of Mrs. Neville Castle, Mrs. Clarence G. Follis and Mr. Brayton; that when Mrs. Humphries declined to call the deponent to the door, Mrs. Lung swore at her and said: "You are a flat-nosed Chinese woman, and I intend to see your husband before I leave."

Mr. Humphries says the only way in which the incident was ended was by ordering Mrs. Lung's driver to leave the premises.

Dr. Dwight Dickenson deposed that he was called on to quiet Mrs. Lung one day aboard the Philadelphia, in the harbor of Philadelphia. He found her lying on the floor of her room, screaming and yelling, and that she seemed to be under the influence of liquor. The depositions of Charles H. Rockwell, Patrick Wall, J. Surman and W. A. McKenzie were that they had seen Mrs. Lung under the influence of liquor at Port Royal, S. C.

Attorney George D. Collins, attorney for Mrs. Lung, said he would present testimony on behalf of Mrs. Lung at the next hearing of the case.

SCANDAL AT BRANCH JAIL.

June [illegible] 1899.

Guard Moore's Story Is Confirmed by Gately.

KIRSCHBAUM'S FOE AND GAY MRS. BOTKIN.

FORMER SUPERINTENDENT SAYS HE REBUKED BURLY McFARLAND.

He, Too, Declares That the Assistant Was in the Habit of Carrying a Deadly "Black-Jack."

Guard Maurice W. Moore's story of the tragedy at County Jail No. 3 on Sunday night, a result of which may yet be the death of Guard Louis Kirschbaum, was amply confirmed yesterday, in spite of the efforts of the Sheriff's office to keep the truth from the public.

The truth in this case is bad for Assistant Superintendent Frank McFarland, who is in jail because of the fracturing of Kirschbaum's skull, and it is bad, also, for the Sheriff's office, inasmuch as it reveals a scandalous condition of affairs in the women's department of the County Jail.

As related in yesterday's "Chronicle," Guard Moore stated that McFarland's attentions to Mrs. Cordelia Botkin were at the bottom of the trouble between McFarland and Kirschbaum, and that the assistant superintendent was constantly breaking the rules which govern the relations of officers and prisoners.

Moore said also that he had not doubt that the blow which is likely to cost Kirschbaum his life was struck with a slungshot, which McFarland habitually carried. Evidence in abundance is at hand that Moore's statement is trustworthy, and, further, that the truculent assistant superintendent once had a quarrel with former Superintendent James Gately, in which he made as if to draw his ugly and unlawful weapon.

McFarland's history since he came into his present position in January last, as given by Gately and by his wife, who was the matron at the jail, is such as to show him to be unfit to hold any position of public trust. According to them his conduct with women prisoners of the jail was a matter of scandal before his fancy had turned toward Mrs. Botkin. Gately said yesterday:

"I resigned my position as superintendent of the Branch County Jail and my wife resigned hers as its matron on March 15th solely because we both saw that we would have continual trouble with this man McFarland and that we might at any time be dragged into scandal by his actions. On two different occasions I took McFarland to task for his conduct with women prisoners. The second time I referred to his behavior toward Mrs. Botkin, which was becoming the talk of the jail. Both times he flew into a passion, and once I thought that he was about to strike me with a murderous black-jack, which it was his custom to carry. I told him that if he made a move to injure me one of us would never leave the jail alive. The man counted on his pull, and as he was upheld in the Sheriff's office in spite of my protestations, I thought it time to remove myself and my wife from an atmosphere which was a continual insult to her and which might develop a scandal at any moment.

"When McFarland went to work at the jail in January he told me he was unmarried. I have since found that this was untrue. Soon I had cause to reprove him for his actions toward two women prisoners who were employed in the dining-room. Later I had reason to reprove him for his bearing toward Mrs. Botkin.

"I read the statement of Guard Moore in to-day's 'Chronicle,' and it is the truth in every particular. The only trouble with it is that it does not tell a great deal else that might be told. As long ago as March McFarland sought the company of Mrs. Botkin on various pretexts. It was he who drove her back and forth from the jail to the courtroom and ran all her errands. Often he has given me trouble by coming up into the dormitories, where his visits were unnecessary."

Mrs. Gately concurred in all that her husband had said, and substantiated without reservation the story of Guard Moore. "My husband reported McFarland's misdemeanors to Sheriff Martin," she said, "but he was ignored. We knew then that some such scandal as has now cropped out would arise, and, on account of our positions in the jail, reflect severely upon us, so we decided to resign. This was shortly after my husband had rebuked McFarland for his attitude toward Mrs. Botkin."

Sheriff Martin declined yesterday to discuss the charges against McFarland. "I regard the matter as an administrative one," he said, "and it will be investigated at the proper time. I don't think it is a matter about which the public has any right to be informed through the newspapers at this time." Asked whether he had received any complaints as to McFarland's conduct toward the women prisoners, the Sheriff said: "I have no information whatever to give."

Under Sheriff Dave Martin expressed horror that anyone could be found who would asperse the character of so model a prisoner as Mrs. Botkin. He said: "That woman has been slandered. Why, she would not have anything to do with one of the subordinates out at the jail. She holds herself far above them. They are rough men drawn from every quarter of the city, and a woman like Mrs. Botkin, who takes a bath nearly every day and whose laundry bills must be something enormous, would hardly hold any communication with an underling at the jail. Mrs. Botkin has been a model prisoner, uncomplaining and apparently satisfied with her treatment. She will feel deeply hurt at the attack that has been made upon her, and I presume that this office will receive from her soon a letter protesting against it."

McFarland, who is still in the City Prison, refused to speak about the matter. All he would say of the star prisoner at the jail was: "Mrs. Botkin is a lovely woman."

Study of the Storke Woman, Who Has Stirred U

Brilliant Writer Who Has Lost Her Balance And Instinctively Does Deeds of Malice.

Santa Barbara, July 15.

AN entire community arrayed against one little woman, one little woman fighting a whole city—is the extraordinary situation that Yda Addis Storke and Santa Barbara present. If this were the days of Cotton Mather, and Santa Barbara were Salem, Yda Addis Storke would be burned at the stake as a witch possessed of seven devils, and no one who so has [illegible] and alarmed and harrowed and [illegible] and entangled and, indeed, terrorized this otherwise cheerful community?

This one little woman, this one fragile, little, ninety-pound, five-foot high woman, has set the whole city by the ears. She has frightened half the men into being good or at any rate into being half-decent, and set half the women trembling for their reputations. Santa Barbara's attitude toward her is not without resemblance to the attitude of pedestrians on a crowded street down which a mad dog is running and yelping and snapping indiscriminately. In self-protection the hand of the community is against her. There are not a dozen people who believe her innocent of the anonymous letters that upset the peace of the city, and there is not one to champion her cause or lift a voice in her defense. The feeling against her is so bitter that here and there it runs to extravagant excess, and in the gossip that flies back and forth she has been accused of everything from poisoning dogs to having a hand in the shocking murder of the Richardsons. In discussing the [illegible] poisoning feature of her mischief-working, one plain citizen said, with as much earnestness as [illegible]:

"Why, all she need to do is spit on a dog, and she'd kill him, she's so devilish."

And this woman, who has stirred a city into ferment, who has shattered domestic peace and smirched reputations and pointed an accusing finger at [illegible] citizens, who has been adjudged guilty of writing the vilest letters imaginable, and capped the climax by an apparent attempt at sensational murder and suicide, what manner of woman is she? Just a tiny, fragile, bright-eyed little creature, not much bigger than a twelve-year-old girl.

I found her in jail getting rid of the third day of her year's sentence for sending the disturbing letters—a little figure, cuddled up in a corner on a gray blanketed cot with plenty of reading matter and a few woman's trifles about her, looking out of her barred window with lofty contempt on Santa Barbara passing by. An unlovely dragging gown of gray wool with red yoke and cuffs was her garment and a coarse gray blanket was swathed about her legs. Her dark hair, silver threaded, was brushed straight back and hung in a little braid. She gave her height as exactly five feet. I guessed her weight at ninety pounds. She was without ornament or the slightest attempt at toilet, yet despite her small size, her [illegible] dress and her prison surroundings there was undeniable distinction in that little figure, an exceptional intellectual brilliance flashing out of the small white face, and the not to be imitated stamp of breeding in manner and speech. Whatever of mischief or crime or maliciousness may be laid at Yda Addis Storke's door, eye and judgment must concede she is a lady—a most relentless and [illegible] wicked little lady, perhaps, but still a lady.

Locked in with her in the room adjoining is a poor fallen young Spanish girl who is effectively conceded her [illegible]. She serves Mrs. Storke as maid [illegible] much deferential willingness [illegible] ever maid served grand dame in [illegible] and Mrs. Storke, cuddled up on her [illegible] by the barred window, accepts [illegible] with the grateful condescension of a little Queen in durance vile.

Yda Addis Storke, in the flower of her youth and her palm [illegible] must have been a beauty, yet even in her [illegible] and the hour of her tribulation she is piquant, fascinating, brilliant [illegible] delicacy and insidiousness [illegible]. Something of the character credited to her lies in her face, in the quiet, bright flame of her big brown eyes and in the thin, delicate, beak-like nose. There is something very suggestive of the cruelty and watchfulness of a hawk. Her mouth is rather small with excessively thin lips, the merest line of red. Her ear is very small; her forehead is broad and high and full; her top head is good, and a weak little chin slips away [illegible] in her collar. She has extremely small, beautifully-shaped hands and a pretty little foot she takes a certain pride in.

She is a younger looking woman than the camera makes her. She gives her age at forty and does not look it by four or five years. Time has traced fewer trails on her than the [illegible] of [illegible]. She is just a tiny body out of balance with its sharp of mind and nerves. Her linguistic power is unusual. She is fluent, fearless, emphatic, picturesque and exact in speech, and her spoken word has much the same exquisite appropriateness and keen edge as Mr. [illegible]'s written word, but her spoken word, as well as her written word, however much it is feared, is given little credence in Santa Barbara nowadays, so her own story of her whole stormy life and her troubled career here must be taken as it is written on her unsupported word.

To lay a ghost it is necessary first to raise it, and it is as true of scandal and suspicion as it is of the unpleasant visitor from behind the [illegible], which is why the strange tale that Yda Addis Storke tells is spread in black of printer's ink. [illegible] Santa Barbara, which has guessed and [illegible] about her for years, does not know the [illegible] certain whether Addis Storke [illegible] the street [illegible] those who have known her well or ask twenty to tell you who she is and you will get twenty different [illegible] of them the story she tells [illegible] each, mayhap, with a grain [illegible] from here [illegible].

"There is not," she said, [illegible] a drop of Spanish blood in me, although perhaps because I am dark and

EXHIBITS IN THE JACKSON SHOOTING CASE.

The small pistol, discharged in the fight, as the large one, which was laid down, cartridges, hatchet and knife, large bottle of chloroform, small bottle of cyanide and prussic acid, strips of bunting, glass cutter and putty knife, bag in which articles were found.

[illegible]d Up Santa Barbara.

She Has Become Strangely Vindictive And Runs Down All Who Come In Her Way.

GRANT JACKSON AT HIS DESK.

[illegible] speak Spanish. It has often been stated that I am partly Spanish. I was born in Kansas, of French Huguenot stock on both sides, although my people for four generations are American. Mother's great-grandfather was Colonel James Harrod, who built the first white man's habitation in Kentucky and in whose honor Harrodsburg was named. So my [illegible] come of good old Indian fighting stock, which may account for my [illegible] [illegible] myself [illegible] to fight to the end [illegible]

[illegible]

"[illegible] little [illegible] of my troubles. When I was [illegible] young my father took [illegible] Mexico, where he owned mines. [illegible] came to California and settled in Los Angeles. I was educated at home chiefly and had altogether less than four years' schooling in the public schools of Los Angeles. My special talent seemed to be for languages, and I learned French, Spanish and German, a little Italian, some Chinese and a smattering of Indian dialect. I had no talent for music. There is no more music in me than in a tea kettle, but I could paint, and it is by painting and teaching that I have managed to support myself for the past eight or nine years here. My art feeling found expression in writing, and while I was still at school I dressed myself with my pen. I taught in the public schools of Los Angeles for six years. Then I went with my parents to Mexico. My social position was of the best in Los Angeles, and even after the [illegible] matter it remained unimpaired, and, indeed, was stronger than ever.

"Sunny Santa Barbara, ideal city of the [illegible] a place whose picturesque, dreamy beauty has been for years the inspiration of poet and painter, the favorite lounging ground of the wealthy globe-trotter and the last hope of the luckless invalid, [illegible] chosen home [illegible] of her who apparently [illegible] Zola character [illegible] or a brute from [illegible] Keith's pastoral [illegible] canvases.

The Rev. Frank Forbes, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Santa Barbara, has made a careful study of Yda Addis' psychology. "But I am unable," he said, "to come to a conclusion as to her sanity. She should undoubtedly be brought before a lunacy commission. But she is such a brilliant woman that she might turn about and convict the commissioners. As to her guilt in writing the anonymous letters, I can simply say that I have every confidence in the men who composed her jury. She has stirred up this community beyond all belief. Something should surely be done to secure her."

Attorney Henry P. Starbuck, one of the leading lawyers of Santa Barbara, was appointed as one of Mrs. Storke's counselors to act in the libel case. He drew out of that matter because he could not agree with Mrs. Storke as to which of the two should run the case.

"The woman is a nuisance," was his remark concerning her. "She is not physically dangerous, perhaps, but she is dangerous to attorneys. She will probably keep the attorneys of this bar at work for the next ten years as appointees to defend her in her altogether too numerous troubles. It's a pity the woman can't be got rid of. The town would be much better off without her."

"Would you have put her under a bond and told her to leave the country?" he was asked.

"No, for she wouldn't have gone away. But it's too bad the town can't be done with her."

W. B. Metcalf, County Treasurer and cashier of the Commercial Bank, has had hard work to make up his mind as to the woman's sanity. "I can't express any opinion as to the woman's character or motives," said the Treasurer. "She puzzles me. I cannot see why she should do so many things to disturb the peace of the community. Lack of motive leads me to believe her insane."

Dr. Ida V. Stambach, the lady physician who went upon Mrs. Storke's bond in the libel matter, absolutely refused to say anything as to the woman's character. Friends are scarce with Yda Addis.

Alfred Poett, a leader of the Santa Barbara "400," and a prominent engineer, took the charitable view of the woman's case.

"The vindictive side of her nature has been gradually developed," said he. "From shock or injury to some nerve center, she has lost her nervous balance, and this tendency has become greater until she is [illegible] these deeds of malice. She is a [illegible] brilliant woman, but has lost her balance, so that her mind runs only along one line. That line has been [illegible] time."

The Rev. A. H. Ramsay, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, said: "I haven't followed the trial closely. I know only what I read in the newspapers. But if she is guilty of having written those letters, she deserves everything she has got, and more, too. Such a person is a menace to the peace and happiness of a community."

Ex-Mayor Frank M. Whitney said: "Public sentiment here is much against Mrs. Storke. I cannot see how her trial could have ended in any way but as it did. She has an appetite for prying into the relationships of men and women, and too readily puts an evil interpretation upon the most innocent circumstances. In this way she has acquired a considerable reputation as a [illegible]-maker and busybody."

Theodore Kytka brought back from the country recently a young coyote. His uncle owns large ranches in Southern California, which he hunted upon a great [illegible] during his vacation. While on one hunt during his [illegible] trip he was fortunate in capturing the youngster.

MRS. BOTKIN WILL GET A NEW TRIAL

Precedent Established by Supreme Court in Hoff Case.

COURT'S INSTRUCTIONS

Judge Cook Followed Ex-Judge Murphy's Formula Regarding Motive.

"If the decision of the Supreme Court granting a new trial in the Hoff case is final, then the granting of a new trial to Mrs. Botkin must follow as a matter of course," said Judge Carroll Cook yesterday.

This was the conclusion reached by Judge Cook after making a careful comparison of his charge in the Hoff murder case with the charge which he gave in the trial of Mrs. Botkin. His attention was directed to the matter by a representative of "The Examiner," who assisted in the comparison, and the language in each instance was found to be identical on the question of motive for the perpetration of the crime charged against the prisoner.

Judge Cook said he had been informed that District Attorney D. J. Murphy, formerly Judge of the Superior Court, is preparing a statement on which to base a petition for a rehearing, and the position of the Court may be modified upon a further presentation of all the points involved in the case.

"In dealing with the subject of motive, when the case rests mainly on circumstantial evidence, I followed the definition given by former Judge Murphy, now District Attorney of this city and county," said Judge Cook. "I assumed that anything which had passed muster in the Durrant case might be accepted as settled. Accordingly I copied ex-Judge Murphy's language, word for word, placing the same in quotation marks to show that I had borrowed that part of the charge to the jury from a learned jurist who preceded me on the bench, but of course adopting and using the same as the charge of the Court in each particular case. I employed the same motive in the Figel case, the 'Little Pete' case, the Williams and Abrahams cases, and ex-Judge Murphy took identically the same course as I have intimated in the McNulty and Durrant cases."

The substance of the language used by Judge Cook is as follows:

It is undoubtedly a truism that all sane persons committing crime are actuated by some motive. Therefore, the presence or absence of any motive to commit the act of homicide, if homicide was committed as charged against this defendant, is a circumstance to be considered by you in connection with all the evidence in the case. An accused person has the right to have every fact and circumstance in his favor weighed by the jury. Motive for the killing is an important, essential fact in a trial for murder, particularly so when the [illegible] is sought to be established solely by circumstantial evidence. If upon a review of the whole evidence no motive is apparent or can fairly be imputed to the accused for the commission of the crime charged against him, then this is a circumstance in favor of innocence, and should be so considered by you. The motive may not be apparent in many cases of homicide; there may be no motive discernible except what arises at or near the time of the commission of the act [illegible] which they claim are based and founded upon the evidence, and it is for you to determine from all the evidence in the case whether or not any motive existed for the commission of the crime charged against the defendant in this [illegible].

[illegible]

With regard to the grounds from which motive may be inferred, the law has never limited them. Therefore, it is immaterial whether the motive be hatred, wealth or the gratification of desires or passions resulting from any other cause, so long as the motive exists. You must bear in mind that motive, being an ancillary fact from which, if established, in connection with other necessary facts, the main or primary fact of guilt may be inferred, it may be established by circumstantial evidence the same as any other fact in the case.

To this objection was made by Attorneys Schooler & Simpson, who defended Albert F. G. Vennewalchockochhoff, commonly known as Hoff, and the Supreme Court sustained the objection, saying:

[illegible] might not be able to prove it, the defendant may have had a "hidden design of vengeance of some [illegible] to be satisfied." This was not the statement of the rule of law, but an argument against the defendant as to [illegible].

Twice in the course of his charge Judge Cook used this language:

You will distinctly understand that in this charge the Court is by no means or form [illegible] or desiring to express any opinion on the weight of the evidence, or any part of it, or on the truth or falsity of any witness' testimony, or that any alleged fact in the case is or is not proved. With the questions of fact, the weight of the evidence, the credit that you should give to any witness sworn in the case, the Court has nothing to do. These are matters entirely within your province and which you, as jurors, under your oaths, must determine for yourselves.

This the Supreme Court indicates does not cure that which is assigned as error in the other part of the charge to the jury. District Attorney Murphy said:

"I have not compared Judge Cook's charge in the Hoff case and the Botkin case with the charge given by myself in the Durrant trial, but I am informed that they are identical. My charge in the Durrant case was the same as I had given in other cases for ten years whenever the matter of motive was a vital question to be decided by the jury. It was prepared with great care and embodied my understanding of the law touching that proposition. Other Judges have used substantially the same language in many cases, and this is the first time that I have heard that it was successfully attacked."

CHILD THIEF FOUND GUILTY

Judge Mogan Will Sentence George Howard on Saturday.

George Howard, alias Coad, the Oakland gardener who created a sensation at Market and Third streets on Tuesday by attempting to steal a child from its mother, was found guilty on charges of battery and vulgar language by Judge Mogan and will be sentenced on Saturday. He stated that he was intoxicated and did not know what he was doing. He is a California pioneer and claims relationship to Irving M. Scott.

FREAK OF [illegible] GEORGE HOWARD.

While Intoxicated He Attempted to Steal a Child.

An old man giving the name of George Howard took a 2-year-old child from its mother at the corner of Third and Market streets late yesterday afternoon and was walking off with it in spite of the woman's remonstrances, when Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, and [illegible] Brown interfered. The would-be kidnaper abused the rescuers with vile epithets and struck them in his efforts to retain possession of the child. Detective George [illegible], who was passing on a car, saw the disturbance and stepped off in time to arrest Howard before any one was injured. While the detective was busy with his prisoner the woman went away with the child. Howard was intoxicated and was charged with battery and using vulgar language. Late in the evening, when he was sober, he said his love of children probably led him to accost the child, but that he remembered nothing of the circumstances. He claimed to be a native of Kentucky and a California pioneer, having practiced medicine here in the early days of the State.

MRS. BOTKIN'S CASE IS NEARLY READY.

Bill of Exceptions and Transcript on Appeal to the Supreme Court to Be Soon Completed.

Mrs. Cordelia Botkin, convicted of murder for poisoning Mrs. John P. Dunning, and sentenced to life imprisonment in the State Penitentiary, has been granted fifteen days' additional stay of execution by Judge Carroll Cook of the Superior Court. By the end of this month it is expected that Mrs. Botkin's bill of exceptions will be settled, and her transcript on appeal will be ready for presentation to the Supreme Court.

The appeal of Mrs. Botkin rests mainly on the question of jurisdiction. Knight & Heggerty, her attorneys, contend that the courts of California never have obtained and never can obtain jurisdiction of Mrs. Botkin, and that there is no warrant of law for her trial in this State. It is on this point principally that they will base their arguments for a reversal of the judgment pronounced in Judge Cook's court.

At the end of fifteen days application for a writ of probable cause will be made by Mrs. Botkin, and following the usual course without doubt will be granted, the effect of which will be to allow Mrs. Botkin to remain in the County Jail until her appeal is decided by the Supreme Court, a year or two hence.

Hunt Charged With Forgery.

Two charges of forgery were yesterday placed against George Hunt, who on Wednesday was arrested for passing a fictitious $100 check on J. Dosbarela, his landlord.

HIS ATTORNEY LEAVES HIM.

Carson Will Not Act Any Longer for John Laplque.

John Laplque and his attorney, John B. Carson, have disagreed, and Carson has filed a notice in the Superior Court that he will act no longer for Laplque in the latter's suit against Philip Maysonnave. The suit was on a promissory note, that Maysonnave declared was a forgery, and Judge Hebbard, after inspecting the handwriting of both parties, gave judgment in favor of Maysonnave. Then Laplque obtained a warrant for Maysonnave's arrest on a charge of perjury, and Maysonnave swore to a complaint against Laplque for forgery. Maysonnave's signature was on record at the Hibernia Bank, and the police went there and made a comparison of it with the writing on the note. The conclusion was that the signature on the note was not genuine. The clerk of Judge Hebbard's court, Robert Fitzgerald, has been guarding the note carefully. It was left with him as an exhibit in the case, and it will be used in the prospective criminal proceedings. Laplque asked Fitzgerald for it more than once, so that he might look at it, but the clerk did not have it at hand then. He was apprehensive that an attempt might be made to destroy it, and he decided not to let Laplque handle it except when other persons were present.

Yda Addis Ill.

SANTA BARBARA, August 29.—Yda Addis Storke was to have been arraigned this morning on the charge of having attempted to kill Attorney Grant Jackson, but she sent a note to the Superior Judge stating that she was too ill and unable to appear in court. She also said that she [illegible] had been disappointed in that her attorney from San Francisco had not arrived. She claims that [illegible] is to defend her. The Court granted a delay of a week. Mrs. Storke will ask for a new trial.

RECORDING OF CRIMINALS' FEATURES.

The Bertillon System to Be Introduced in San Francisco, and a Laboratory for the Purpose is Being Fitted Up Under the Roof of the New Hall of Justice.

ONE OF THE most interesting parts of the new Hall of Justice will be on the roof. There far above the rush of the city's criminal business, and accessible only by a special elevator and a private stairway, will be the splendid laboratory—the [illegible] of a cherished scheme of [illegible] Lees for the betterment of the San Francisco police service. It was not possible to [illegible] this innovation into the [illegible] plans of the building, and for a time there seemed to be no room for the [illegible]-fangled [illegible]. But the Chief [illegible] that the roof was just the place for it. Therefore Kytka, the writing expert, with his knowledge of the [illegible] needs of such a laboratory, planned an interesting labyrinth of rooms, and Shea & Shea, the architects of the Hall of Justice, [illegible] the working drawings and made it possible [illegible] the structure [illegible] around the [illegible] with a [illegible] of which will be eventually [illegible] the [illegible]. Nothing of the [illegible] building [illegible] from the street [illegible] will not [illegible] way detract [illegible] the lines of the structure.

Not until [illegible] has the Chief [illegible] the system as he wished it and the [illegible] appropriation of $[illegible] was not made until a still nearer date. It [illegible] the case that an ill wind in [illegible] the [illegible] through the [illegible] and unaccountable delay in the [illegible] of the Hall of Justice [illegible] has time to develop any number of [illegible] in regard to the plan and to [illegible] the needed money. So when at [illegible] the building is turned over to the city and the police headquarters are transferred the Chief will, at least, have the laboratory ready to equip for the establishment of the Bertillon system—yes, that and more, for he will have every improvement that experience has suggested, and can install an equipment for making speedy and practical application of the knowledge gained through these mediums.

The laboratory will be absolutely fireproof, with a frame of steel and a covering of terra cotta. All the partitions will be of expanded metal and concrete and the roof will be of the same materials, only the concrete will there be in a thin [illegible]. At this point further protection from the elements will be afforded by felt and asphaltum. The floor will also be of the best of all [illegible]. The cement used, however, [illegible] will [illegible] but large [illegible]. The skylights are to be made of [illegible] covered wire in glass [illegible] which [illegible] of light and a strength that [illegible] absolutely safe for the man [illegible] over roofs where [illegible] skylights exist, and also for the [illegible] might have to stand under [illegible] when it was struck by the heaviest possible object.

The gallery for taking the Bertillon photographs and measurements will be covered with a roof of half dome of glass extending from the floor, which admits of infinite possibilities in handling the light. It was suggested from a similar form in use in the Adele gallery in Vienna. Here the glass will be heavy plate and just slightly frosted, to kill the glare of day.

The elevator leading to the laboratory is on the Washington street side of the building toward the front and will run from the court used by the patrol wagons. It will land the prisoner close to the room in which are placed all the appliances for making the Bertillon tests and measurements.

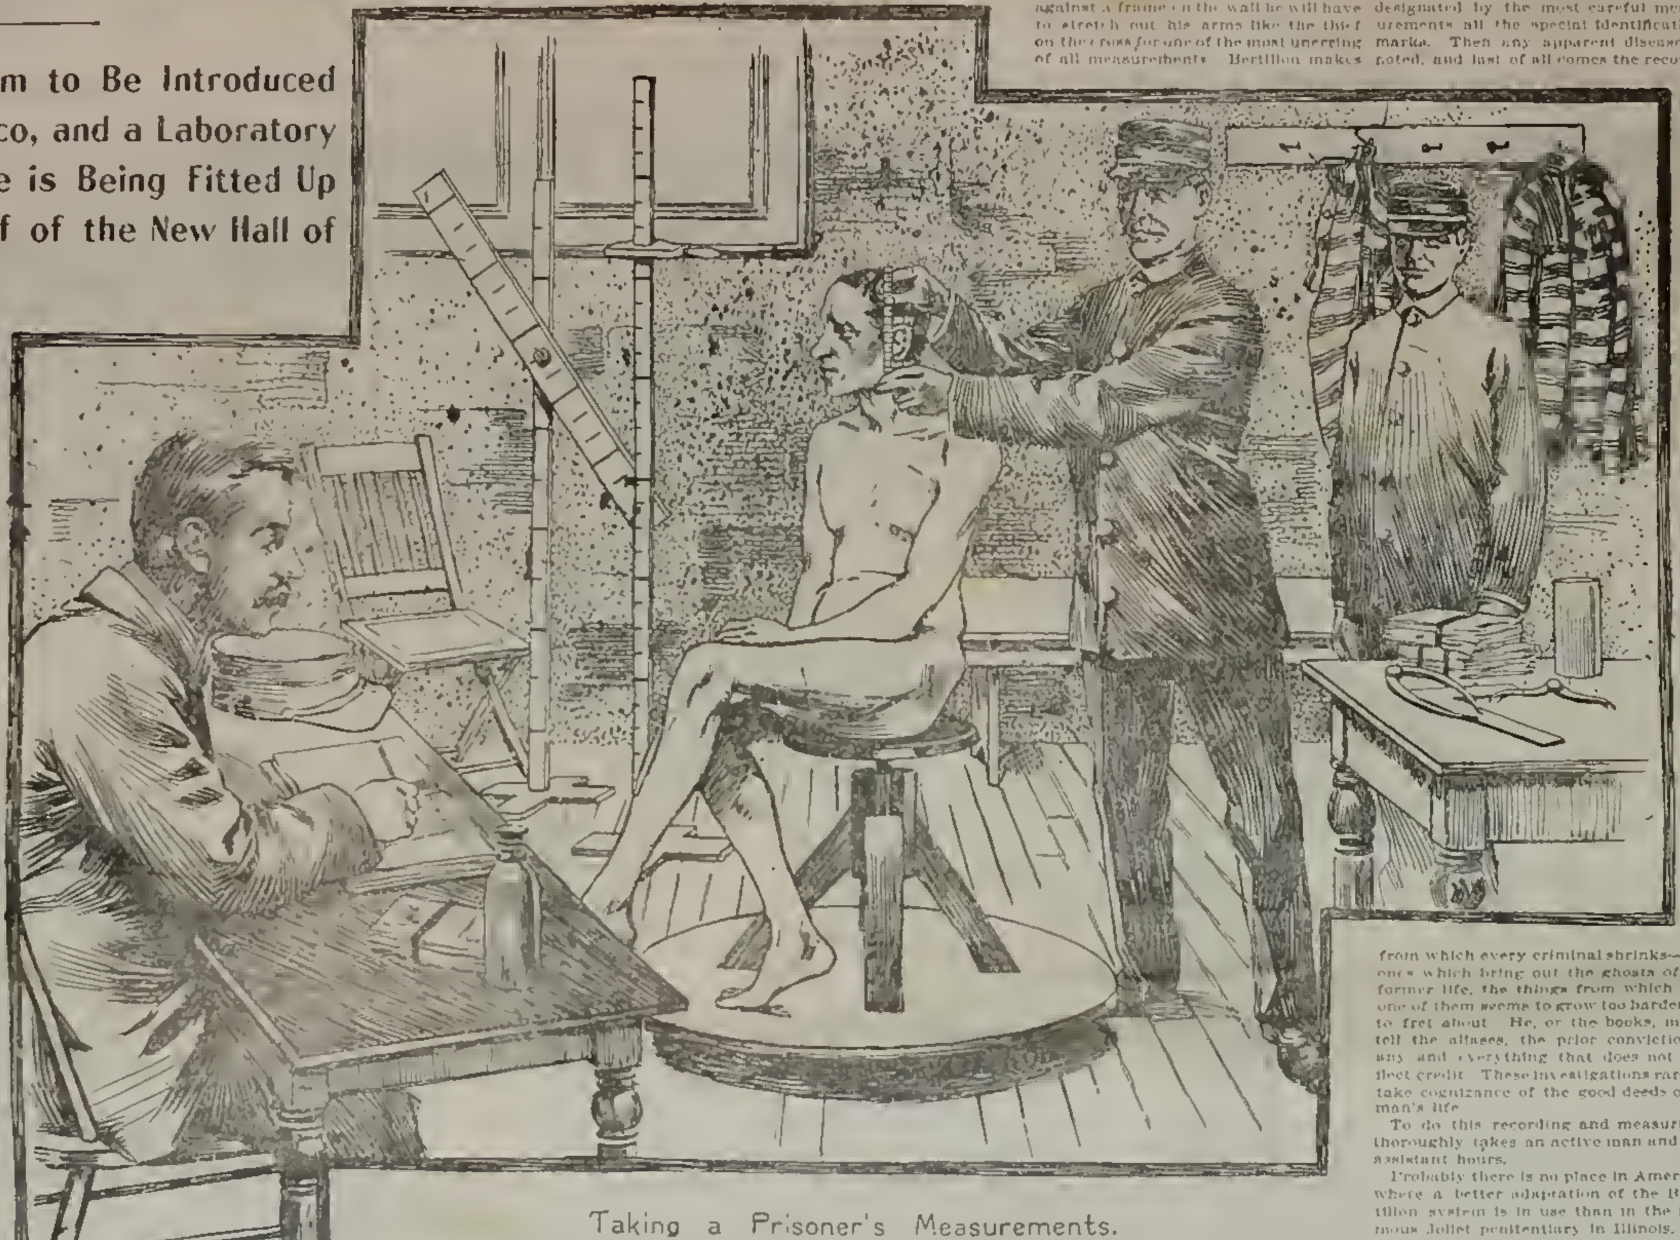
It is here that Kytka commenced to supplement the work of the [illegible] ten years ago he went from Chicago to the Joliet Penitentiary for one of the large papers, to take photographs, make drawings and a general study of the system. With that knowledge and with the experience he has since had in studying criminals and doing expert photography he has been able to suggest expedients for the Bertillon room which will make it possible to get good photographs of criminals whether they will or not. The offender will be placed in a revolving chair, where straps will be adjusted similar to those on New York's chair of death. By this means the exact position desired for the photographs can be gotten. This accomplished the subject, not being able to see the camera, will not know when he is in focus, and consequently will not be able to defeat this essential part of the record. Kytka has arranged for a false wall, behind which will be the cameras and the photographer. The lens will be so sharp that even if the subject manage to make some distortion the likeness will be secured. When the side face is to be taken the attendant will simply turn the chair and the hidden agencies will do the rest. The Bertillon system admits of no retouching of the negatives and the lights are so adjusted that every furrow and line is faithfully reproduced.

For measurements as well, precautions have been taken for every contingency. Unless the present programme be changed, all will be taken by the metric system as it admits of greater expedition and is more accurate. In many places where the measurements are taken by this standard, they are changed into yards, feet and inches, but as the probability is that in time the French system will supersede all others, the Chief thinks it as well to start San Francisco records in that way.

In the new "hall of measurements" the prisoner may save time of others and his strength by making no opposition of any kind, for from almost any corner of the room is apt to spring a mechanical contrivance which will bolster up at any weak or rebellious point.

Briefly, the exactions of the system will strip a man after his photographs have been taken. He will be weighed and his height recorded and then against a frame on the wall he will have to stretch out his arms like the thief on the cross for one of the most unerring of all measurements. Bertillon makes allowances for the changes wrought by the years, but the length of a man from hand to hand and the impression of his thumbs will stand always without question. His chest and skull are measured and several of his fingers. The color of hair and eyes are specified, the teeth carefully examined and the date of birth secured, if possible. Then comes one of the most interesting parts of these combined systems of investigation, which in the entirety he called the "anthropometrical." It is the study given to the eyes and ears. The Chief will have charts with some three dozen plates of both features. This collection presumably designates all possible variations where accident has not marred the organ. At this point of the investigation the eyes and ears of a criminal become as the man or woman does when finally committed to prison, a number. This method is an accurate short cut, and saves no end of time and trouble. No two persons would write the same description of the same pose, but with this plan the story is told accurately and at a glance.

Then two cards are taken, one showing the front, the other a back view of a human figure, and upon them are designated by the most careful measurements all the special identification marks. Then any apparent disease is noted, and last of all comes the records from which every criminal shrinks—the ones which bring out the ghosts of his former life, the things from which not one of them seems to grow too hardened to fret about. He, or the books, must tell the aliases, the prior convictions, any and everything that does not reflect credit. These investigations rarely take cognizance of the good deeds of a man's life.



Taking a Prisoner's Measurements.

To do this recording and measuring thoroughly takes an active man and an assistant hours.

Probably there is no place in America where a better adaptation of the Bertillon system is in use than in the famous Joliet penitentiary in Illinois. It has been adopted in Kansas, Chicago, Boston, New York, Austria and, as a natural consequence, in France. Although it is used by all the civilized nations in their armies, it has not as yet been generally used in prison work or statistics. Bertillon presented his system fifteen years ago, and has had all possible honors bestowed upon him. In January of this year he was received and decorated by the Emperor of Germany. Bertillon was not 25 when he first gave to the world this revolutionizing system.

While in the main the system will be here as it is known to the world, its application in California will mark an epoch in the history of criminology in the West, and when, with its adjuncts, it will be in working order, there will be plenty of surprises and food for students along these lines. The elaboration of the Bertillon system is where the brisk, fresh interest lies. In planning the laboratory and all its adjuncts, Kytka placed the office and microscopic room next the elevator and stairs. Beyond this will be the Bertillon and portrait room also facing Washington street. From this point the construction is carried in an L to the Dunbar alley side of the building, and in this part will be a dark room for developing dry plates, another for wet plates, each apartment to be fitted with every modern appliance and on a scale for doing extensive work. Still following the Dunbar-alley line will be the etching sinks, benches and the blocking bench. Inside are placed the photo-engraving-room and a sensitizing-room so conveniently planned as to make a photographer green with envy. On the south outside upon a wooden platform will be every facility for printing in good weather. For the rainy, cloudy days provision is made indoors. Still down the south side is a toning-room and next to it is a printing-room. In these two departments will be the possibilities for the work that will astonish the most credulous.

To illustrate: Should a criminal escape at 12 o'clock it will be possible by 3 o'clock to have 500 pictures of him ready for distribution on the streets. The negative, on which will be etched on wax the criminal's description, will be placed in a table prepared for it. The negative will be exposed automatically and the printing done by electric light. With machinery like a ringer the roll of sensitized paper will be passed into the developing-room, and here it will be possible to handle in the trays fifty to sixty pictures at one time. They will be passed along almost automatically from the developing to the clearing, fixing and washing trays to the drying-room, and when all is done there are finishing, distributing and mailing benches at hand to complete this lightning work. When the rush is not so great there will be the opportunity and equipment for doing the finest of half-tone work. It has been decided to use, when it suits the occasion best, the private mailing card approved by Congress, May 19, 1898. This is sensitized, and upon it pictures can be printed with great expedition.

Besides running down criminals the Chief knows one use for this fine plant which will appeal to every parent or lover of children. He sees that when a little one has been stolen or lost and has not been recovered in the few hours during which it should have been restored he can get out its picture by the thousands in a few hours. He will also utilize this process for helping to discover the whereabouts of men or women missing, not for criminal reasons, but for the innumerable causes which come up with the conditions of complex civilization—good and bad. In fact, so enthusiastic is the Chief that he feels that he will have almost a panacea for the ills that beset criminal work and all its far-reaching ramifications.

Out of this it is planned to eventually develop a well-nigh perfect system for the routine police work. In the tower, with its absolutely immovable foundations, will be placed the presses and machines for all the printing required for the department. It will then be possible to have daily bulletins and a weekly comprehensive issue of police doings. The watches may be printed, instead of having to be read off, and all told a revolution is in sight.

To equip the laboratory will require about as much more as has been given for the construction. When in good working order this department will not only be economical but a credit to the municipality. To maintain it need not be a bugbear, for besides one competent superintendent the skill of men on the force can be utilized. Among the hundreds "of the finest" there are men capable of handling the most intricate and artistic processes. They can be detached when necessary, and the requisite clerical force will not have to exceed that now handling the police records.

BACK FROM THE ARCTIC A CRIPPLE

Walter Wellman Returns From Northern Trip.

ACCIDENT FORCED HIM TO TURN BACK.

FELL INTO A CREVASSE AND RECEIVED INJURIES WHICH MAY BE PERMANENT.

Dogs and Sledges Lost in an Icequake —The Explorer Found No Trace of Professor Andree.

Special Dispatches to the "Chronicle."

TROMSOE (Norway), August 17.—Walter Wellman and the survivors of the Polar expedition led by him arrived here this evening on the steamer Capella, having successfully completed their explorations in Franz Josef Land. Mr. Wellman has discovered important new lands and many islands.

The expedition brings a grim story of Arctic tragedy. In the autumn of 1898 an outpost called Fort McKinley was established in latitude 81. It was a house built of rocks and roofed over with walrus hide. Two Norwegians, Paul Bjorvig and Bert Bentzen, the latter of whom was with Nansen on the Fram, remained there. The main party wintered in a canvas-covered hut called Harmsworth House, at Cape Tegethof on the southern point of Hall's Island, latitude 80.

About the middle of February, before the rise of the sun to its winter height, Mr. Wellman with three Norwegians and forty-five dogs started north. It was the earliest sledge journey on record in that latitude. On reaching Fort McKinley, Mr. Wellman found Bentzen dead, but Bjorvig, according to promise, had kept the body in the house, sleeping beside it through two months of Arctic darkness. Notwithstanding his terrible experience the survivor was safe and cheerful.

Pushing northward through rough ice and severe storms, with a continuous temperature of ten days between 40 and 60 degrees below zero, the party found new lands north of Freedom Island, where Nansen landed in 1895.

By the middle of March all hands were confident of reaching latitude 87 or 88, if not the pole itself. Then began a succession of disasters. Mr. Wellman, while leading the party, fell into a snow-covered crevasse, seriously injuring one of his legs and compelling a retreat. Two days later the party was aroused at midnight by an icequake under them, due to pressure. In a few moments many dogs were crushed and the sledges destroyed. The members of the expedition narrowly escaped with their lives, though they managed to save their precious sleeping bags and some dogs and provisions.

Mr. Wellman's condition became alarming, inflammation having set in, and the brave Norwegians dragged him on a sledge, by forced marches, nearly 200 miles to headquarters, arriving there early last April. Mr. Wellman is still unable to walk and will probably be permanently crippled.

After reaching headquarters other members of the expedition explored regions hitherto unknown and important scientific work was done by Lieutenant Evelyn B. Baldwin of the United States Weather Bureau, Dr. Edward Hofma of Grand Haven, Mich., and A. Harlan of the United States Coast Survey.

The expedition killed fourteen bears and many walruses.

The Capella arrived at Cape Tegethof in search of the expedition on July 27th last. On August 9th she met the Stella Polar, bearing the expedition headed by Prince Luigi, Duke of Abruzzi, which had sailed from Archangel to reconnoiter the northwest coast of Franz Josef Land and to meet, if possible, the Wellman expedition. Mr. Wellman and his companions found not a trace in Franz Josef Land of the missing aeronaut, Professor Andree.

STORY OF WELLMAN TRIP TO THE ARCTIC.

Hoped to Reach the Pole by a Quick Dash—One of His Motives Was to Make a Search for Andree.

WASHINGTON, August 17.—When Walter Wellman started in the spring of 1898 to find the North Pole he started with a heart full of confidence. He believed that in the closing years of this century the knowledge of the northern regions and of the best means of Arctic travel had progressed so far that the chances of success had become really good. It was a "dash for the pole" in which he started. While he contemplated being gone more than a year at least, and perhaps two full years, the greater part of that time was to be spent in preliminary travel and in winter hibernations which the deep darkness of the Arctic night made necessary. In the three months of March, April and May of this year a rush was to be made from Franz Josef Land to the north, which, he hoped, would be successful in bringing him to the much desired latitude of 90.

His was one of two expeditions which were being planned at the same time. The other was that of Lieutenant Peary, and Mr. Wellman was friendly enough to the other expedition to hope that if he himself was not successful his rivals would be. The plans of the two expeditions were the same, with the exception that Lieutenant Peary was to start on his northward d h from Northern Walter Wellman, Who Has Returned From the Arctic a Cripple.

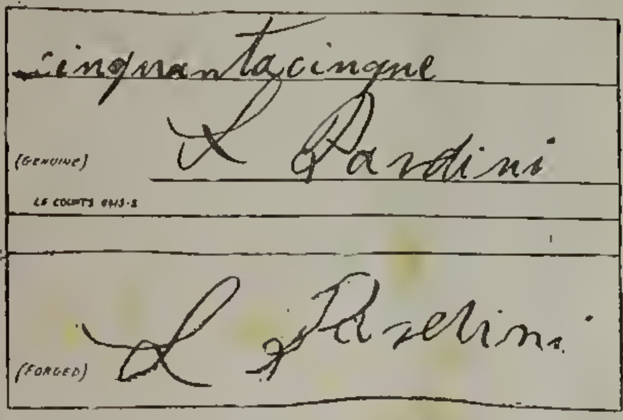
SAY THE SIGNATURE IS A FORGED ONE.

The Heirs of Louis Pardini Refuse to Pay a Note Held by Pastene.



WHEN Louis G. Pardini died August 28, 1898, he left an estate valued at from $50,000 to $75,000, much of which was in cash. To the surprise of the family and executors, John Pastene, within a few months, presented for collection a note for $2500 executed June 1st previous to Pardini's death. Although the deceased had kept his accounts carefully there was no record of his having borrowed $2500 from any one, so the claim was not allowed.

A few months later Pastene brought suit in Judge Hunt's court to recover the amount. The heirs, through their attorney, William J. McGee, filed their answer and unhesitatingly averred that the signature to the note in question was not that of the deceased. They were well fortified for such a charge as the camera had told an interesting story. Theodore Kytka had pronounced the signature the first case of the Italian method of forgery that he had found in San Francisco.

During the negotiations pending a possible settlement and before the signature had been repudiated, Pastene and his attorney agreed to have a photograph taken of the note, ostensibly for a necessary record. All interested went to Kytka's laboratory, and, with a guard over the note, several negatives were secured. As soon as developed and before comparison with an exemplar, Kytka showed the defense the sort of forgery which he claimed it to be.

Kytka says that it is in all respects a typical Italian forgery, done by placing a genuine signature on a window and tracing it on another paper with a needle or sharp tracing point. The creased fiber makes a furrow and through this the signature is traced with pen and ink. He says that this method is employed by the Italian forgers in contradistinction to the plan of many of the American criminals in this line, who trace with pencil and then follow the outline in ink.

The signature in question, Kytka explains, shows in more than a dozen places where the one who did the work slipped from the tracing. Kytka claims it to be a particularly clumsy piece of work, and shows in it what experts call "the tremor of fraud." Just now Kytka is making an eight-foot enlargement, which will be used when the case comes up for trial. This will be just as soon as the suits in Judge Hunt's court can be given a place on the calendar, probably this month. The heirs are quite willing to rest their claims of fraud upon the results of the investigation of the camera. They say that at the time the note is said to have been made the deceased had an abundance of ready money, and instead of borrowing he had loaned money. They further contend that if he entered into such a transaction it would have been with the banks where his credit was good or with some of his business associates. On the other hand, testimony will be introduced to show that Pastene is not well situated, financially, and that at the time it is claimed that the note was executed he was embarrassed. He conducts a commission business.

TWICE THE HUSBAND ABANDONED HIS SUIT.

John Worrall's Courage Failed When Confronted With Handwriting Experts as Adverse Witnesses.

When the suit of John Worrall against Mrs. Clara Fallbfnt, administratrix of the estate of Mrs. Sophie Worrall, was called for trial in Department 1 of the Superior Court yesterday, the plaintiff asked for a dismissal of the case without the taking of testimony, and it was so ordered after the expenses of the court had been paid.

The complaint filed by Worrall stated that in 1891 he was about leaving for England, and in order to protect his family during his absence he deeded property worth over $10,000 to his deceased wife. That upon his return in 1896 he demanded a reconveyance of the property, but his wife refused to reconvey. That thereupon she gave him her promissory note for $1,000, bearing interest, in lieu of the property.

This was Worrall's second attempt to secure something from his late wife's estate. Immediately after her death Worrall placed a deed on record which purported to reconvey the property back to him, and to have been executed by his wife shortly before her death.

Mrs. Fallbfnt, who is Worrall's daughter, was appointed administratrix of her mother's estate, and she secured a judgment against her quieting title to the property. Subsequently the genuineness of the deed held by Worrall was disputed, and the decree in his favor was set aside. When he was called on to defend the validity of the deed he failed to make the attempt, and lost the case. Then he produced the note which was the basis of yesterday's action, and this was attacked by Attorneys Groezinger, Rosenheim and Newburgh, on the ground that it, like the deed, was fabricated, that it was not signed by Mrs. Worrall.

When Worrall appeared in court and saw a dozen witnesses, including two experts in handwriting, arrayed against him, his courage failed and he voluntarily abandoned his claim. As the statute of limitations has run against him, he will not be able to renew the suit.

JUDGE GROEZINGER EXPLAINS

Judge Groezinger, of counsel for John Worral, in the case before Judge Daingerfield yesterday in which John Worral withdrew from the suit against his daughter, has written the following letter to Mr. Worral:

"To John Worral, Esq.: Upon your request, will state that Mr. Kytka reported signature of Sarah Worral to $2000 note to be the signature of your deceased wife. We had no experts in court as to signature, but relied merely upon want of consideration.

"C. L. GROEZINGER."

PERJURY CHARGED.

John Laplque, a well-known character, of 1300½ Stockton street, has procured a warrant for the arrest of Philip Maysonnave, for perjury. Laplque claims that the defendant recently testified before Judge Hebbard that he had not signed a certain promissory note for $800, made in favor of Louise Legarde, and bearing the name of Maysonnave. Laplque alleges that he has several witnesses who saw the defendant affix his signature to the note.

CHARLES FAIR'S LATEST TOY A GIANT LONG-RANGE CAMERA.

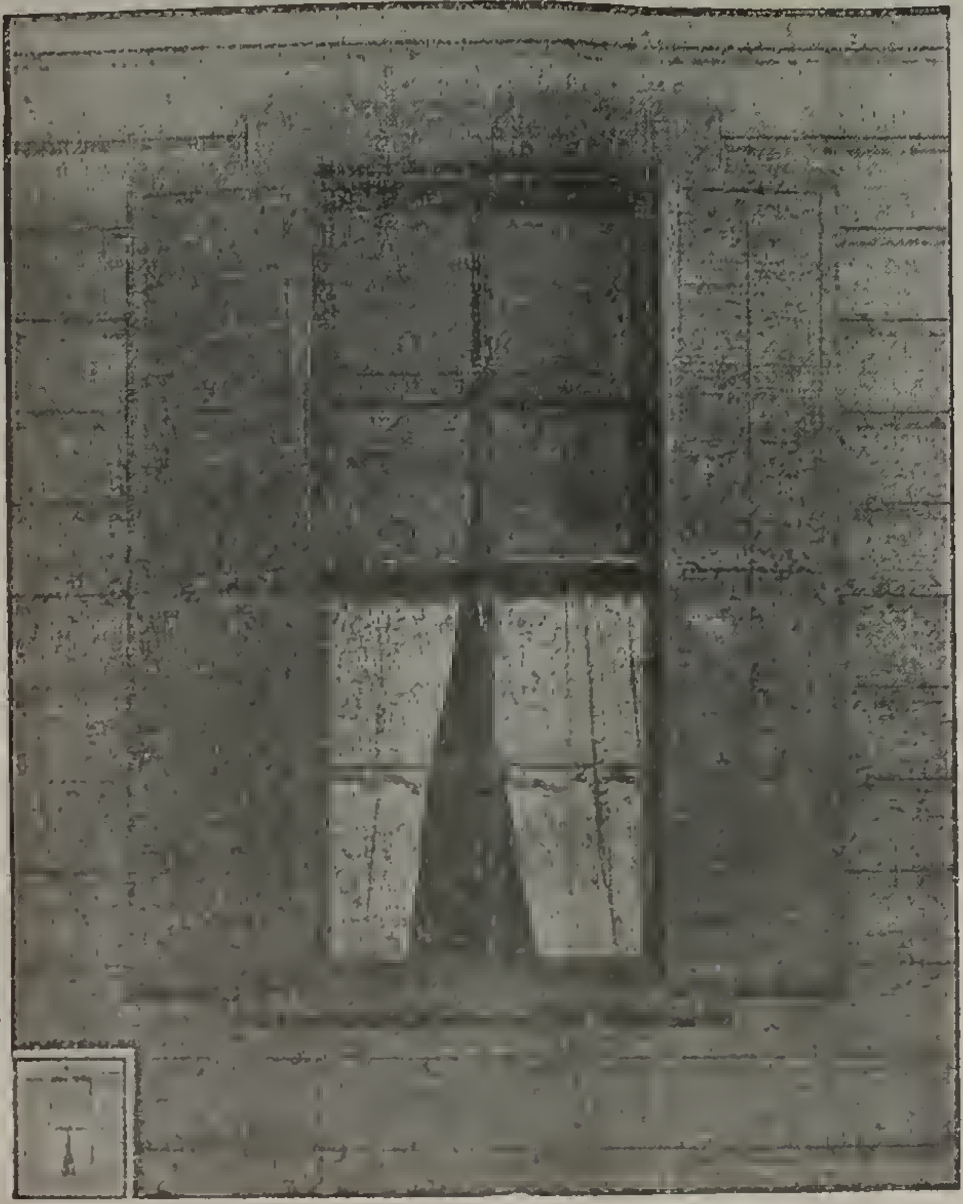
At 250 Feet It Shows Flies on Window Shutter.

Owner Had It Built to Make Yosemite Pictures.

CHARLES L. FAIR, who does not care for anything unless it is out of the usual, is rejoicing now in the ownership of a gigantic long-range camera, a "Big Betsey" among its kind, which was built under the direction of Expert Theodore Kytka, who is making the tests. The persistent foggy weather for the last week, since the camera was ready for work, has delayed some of the picturesque work it is destined to do. So just now its reputation rests on photographing some flies on the shutters of a window in a Shotwell-street house, 250 feet away from the lens. Restive under the continued muggy weather, Kytka watched for a clear hour and made a test with the homeliest possible subject, but with results so satisfactory that prints are now on the way to Zena, Germany, to the manufacturer, and to New York experts.

Kytka first took the unsuspecting window with the most powerful 8 by 10 field camera made in which is used the Voigtlander euriscope lens. With this he secured a little quarter-inch picture. Then the new camera, which defies distance, was focussed on the same point. That gave a startling magnification 8 by 10 and so sharp as to astonish Kytka, who was prepared for almost anything. He expected all sorts of astonishing results, because he had tested the lens and found it better than the binocular, which will bring out two miles away the chevrons on a sergeant's sleeve. The window picture which the long-range camera has produced picked out at a distance of nearly 100 yards the creases in a green shade, the pattern on the sash curtains, the design on a cushion which was lying presumably on a couch by the window, the places on the edge of the window-panes where putty had fallen off, the weather-stains on the tin cap above the window, the joinings in the rustic near the window, and, most astonishing of all, four flies which were basking on the open outside shutters.

The building of this record-breaking camera is the result of Fair's trip into Yosemite valley early last July. He arrived at the Sentinel Hotel at noon and ordered mules and a guide for the afternoon. He went up one of the most alluring trails, but to the unspeakable astonishment of the guide he gave a right-about-face order, and, without explanation, took the stage for home early the next morning. Now the reason for his defection appears. He stood transfixed before the grandeur of the valley's heights and depths, but his camera did not fit. He found what many another has found in the valley—that the best camera gives only the most disappointing results, so he simply turned around, went home and had a camera made to fit the landscape. In a few weeks he expects to return to Yosemite, and to make the trip more notable he is going to take his two automobiles, the one which he uses here and the new one which is now nearing completion. By way of practice for the valley and to further test the camera, Fair and Kytka went out to Twin Peaks yesterday. Like all other days of this week, the atmosphere was not clear, but in one not altogether sharp picture taken from there the camera showed the hour as recorded by the Chronicle clock three miles away. To-day they go to the top of Mount Tamalpais to get the Farallones, if possible, and some view of San Quentin prison.



What the Long-Range Camera Will Do.

On September 14th Theodore Kytka exposed two plates in two cameras focused on a second-story window in a Shotwell-street house, the distance being exactly 250 feet. One was a fine field camera, with a powerful lens. The 8x10 negative gave the window a height of about seven-eighths of an inch. The other camera was Fair's telephoto affair. It produced a splendid negative, full of detail, giving the window a height of more than nine inches. The reproduction above shows the two photographs in their exact proportions, each being reduced by about one-third from the original prints.

As Fair wanted the camera to use in the Yosemite this season, Kytka telegraphed East for the lens and attachments and had the camera proper constructed by Pollard, a skilled cabinet-maker of Oakland. Kytka contended that the cause of failures with the telephoto lens was the fact that a camera had never been made to suit it. Accordingly the holder for this valuable lens has been made heavy and strong. Rigidity being the desideratum all sorts of devices have been resorted to by Kytka in order to brace every part at an angle of 90 degrees. Mahogany was chosen for the case and brass for the mountings. Though a monster, it has everything [illegible] that it is possible to fold the formidable camera up like a Japanese puzzle. From the pedestal, [illegible] to fifteen [illegible], the bellows open both ways, making the distance when the camera is ready for action some five feet from the plate holder to the end of the lens tube. This lies on a revolving table which rests in turn on a [illegible] tripod. With this it is possible to turn the camera to all points of the compass without disturbing the tripod. It can be fastened at any point as firmly as if the whole affair were made in one piece of wood. In addition to this the camera has been further steadied by metal braces, which fold like a jackknife's blades.

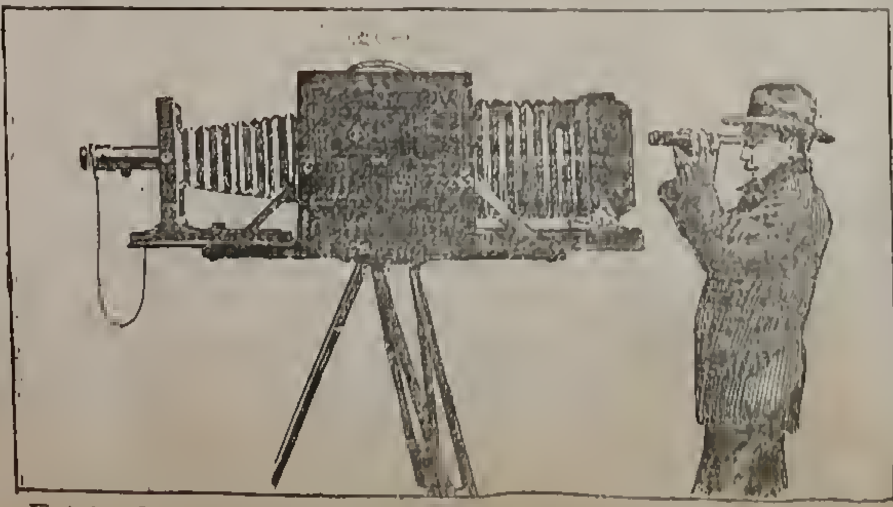
It is in the lens tube, however, that all the mystery lies. The construction of this tube is telescopic and as it is drawn out for adjustment to [illegible] distance, one might think that a telescope was being focussed. In this tube are the wonders of the telephoto attachment. The story on the end of the tube tells that the Zeiss' [illegible] Anastigmat lens is on the inside, and expert classification of this new thing makes it a telephoto-collinear [illegible] lens.

A man in the employ of the German lens manufacturers allowed the special [illegible] into this place, which has been known in this country for the past six months. It is recorded that some successful pictures were taken with it when Uncle Sam's balloon hung over Santiago de Cuba during the siege and blockade. These pictures have not been publicly shown, so the success of the California camera has a real scientific interest.

Taken apart this tube is seen to be filled with beautiful glasses. The first or receiving lens is, in truth, six lenses cemented together. There is a hard crown for the outside, [illegible] flint for the filling and a soft crown inside. From this the image is sent back to the dispersing lens, which, in turn, has its [illegible] visible levels. Back of this, at the end of the tube, is the telephoto lens, which enlarges the image and sends it back to the plate. Even the negative holder [illegible] its part in this interesting [illegible]. Kytka has so adjusted it that it can be tilted to bring out more sharply something in the foreground or vice versa.

Kytka claims for this camera a range of from three to ten miles. Its working is virtually instantaneous, but it has the diaphragm shutter, which adjusts the time exposure.

This plaything for Fair, which incidentally has made a valuable contribution to scientific photography, has cost him almost $1500. After it fulfills its mission in Yosemite it is to be used for studies of animals, its value being that it can be placed so far away that the most timid wild thing can be photographed in easy, natural attitudes.



Fair's Gigantic Camera Extended and Ready for Use.

A MARVEL OF PHOTOGRAPHY.

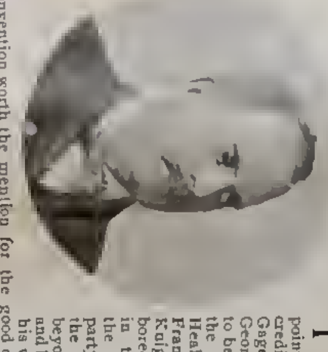
A camera with a range of from three to ten miles, such as has been made for Charles L. Fair of this city, has a wide variety of useful attributes. Mr. Fair was after an instrument which would enable him to get what no photographer ever got before—an adequate likeness of the Yosemite as viewed from one of the high points of observation. He seems to have succeeded in this, and we do not doubt that the pictures he will make and which others will make by like agencies are going to mark a tremendous advance in landscape photography. But they will do something more.

As an adjunct of coast surveying the giant camera will show its value, for with it a vessel on a clear day could follow the windings of an ocean shore, miles distant if need be, and make a continuous picture of all the topographical details. The Fair camera even catches the flies on a far-off window; it will pick out the buttons on a soldier's uniform while out of rifle range from the soldier himself. In taking a coast line it would develop every shrub and bowlder, to say nothing of ravines and exposed reefs and coves.

For military purposes the new camera must prove invaluable. Safely hidden almost out of cannon shot every presented detail of the enemy's fortress or intrenchments, every disposition and movement of his troops, every mounted gun would be revealed to it. It would not be necessary to send out spies to report unless the weather were too thick for photographic purposes, for the camera, mounted on an elevation miles away, must see everything that goes on in the open and report it accurately.

And the device is so simple. But that of itself makes it kindred to all the great and useful inventions of the time.

An Intelligent Appointment.



THERE is at least one popular appointment to the credit of Governor Gage — that of George A. Knight to be attorney for the Board of Health of San Francisco. Mr. Knight has labored vigorously in the cause of the Republican party, has stumped the State times beyond reckoning and has raised up his voice at every convention worth the mention for the good of the cause. From time to time empty dignities have been thrust upon him. He has been "delegated-at-large" until he is tired, has been Presidential Elector and convention chairman, and even "mentioned" for the Senate, but offices with attached emoluments have been conferred on the less deserving. This, however, is a change for the better, and proves what the Governor's friends have urged—that he has glimpses of judgment at irregular intervals. Mr. Knight is one of the lawyers at the San Francisco Bar whom success has not spoiled. Indeed he had amply deserved as well as earned the smiles of the fickle goddess ere she turned her glances upon him. Latterly he has rather given the go-by to criminal practice, in which his reputation was partly achieved, for his time has been taken up by the Fair case. As the the attorney for Charles L. Fair, Mr. Knight has found ample scope for his legal and forensic talents, and the connection has proven profitable in many other directions. To-day the firm of Knight and Heggerty has one of the valuable law practices of San Francisco, and the attorneyship of the Board of Health will not prove nearly as important an acquisition as it might have some years ago.

HANDWRITING AS TESTIMONY IN CRIMINAL TRIALS DENOUNCED AS BARBAROUS AND UNSCIENTIFIC

WHILE the eyes of the civilized world are fixed upon the drama being enacted in the trial hall of the French town of Rennes, thousands of honest minded persons are deeply concerned with the monstrous fallacy of convicting accused persons upon the far fetched chirographic evidence of so called experts.

In olden times the ordeal of touch often brought the accused face to face with the grisly crime of murder. In our modern days property, honor—nay, even life—are wagered upon the battles of the theoretical specialists.

Medical jurisprudence and the modern practice of technical refinement of theory have developed a class of "recognized experts," whose services, like Sir John Hawkwood's free company, are at the beck of the highest bidder.

The Carlyle Harris and Dr. Buchanan cases, the celebrated "ptomaine" trial and many others will prove this. A wearied judge and twelve befogged jurors are often swamped under the flood of the opposing tides. It is only fair to the unfortunate in limbo to say that much evidence has been introduced and allowed in later years which should be relegated to Munchausen or the Arabian Nights.

Its Relation to the Dreyfus Case.

The honor of a family and race, the stability of the French army—even the very existence of France—are now staked upon the handwriting squabbles in the Dreyfus case, which may once more open the gates of the Temple of Janus. After conspiracy, suicides, confessions and the revelations of the secret bureau have clouded all the written evidence proposed, the thin, bare rules of theory will be admitted to prove Alfred Dreyfus either a base felon or a noble martyr.

The whole world is concerned in the outcome of such procedure. It passes in refined cruelty the Council of Ten or the Spanish Inquisition. Assuming chemical analysis, when loyally conducted, to be an exact science, medical jurisprudence has at least an honest basis for the introduction of expert testimony. But any conviction upon handwriting theories is always open to the very gravest suspicions.

A case in point—William C. Ralston, when president of the Bank of California, in San Francisco, was nettled at the apparent self-assumption of a German engraver of San Francisco. After a few hot words the engraver remarked, "Give me your private check book." He dashed off a dozen signatures in imitation of the great financier's name, with its private mark, seen for the first time.

Then the workman and millionaire sat together in a gloomy unrest till the messengers brought up the bags of coin, unhesitatingly paid out at his own bank on the forged checks.

Handing his victorious opponent $500, Mr. Ralston said, "You should not be at large!"

Every man who has an official signature which travels far and wide has his own story to tell of imitations which beggar belief. And not only men of refined technical skill but isolated persons of little practice and inferior education have received from nature the dangerous gift.

A Genius in His Art.

The "boy forger" of two seasons ago in New York city was a genius in his illicit art. Within thirty years there have been hundreds of cases where upon handwriting evidence life, honor and property have been frightfully imperilled. The Broderick will case, the Botkin murder, the Morey letter, the Montreal intercepted letter, the famous Whittaker cadet trial at West Point, and the great criminal murder issue now pending in New York city, where a label and address may or may not send a man to the electric chair, are modern instances. All these reek with fraud.

The "poisoned package" crime seems to have come to stay, and the investigation of these cases brings up many handwriting disputes, deeply interesting to the lover of the curious in jurisprudence, but, alas! pregnant with an awful meaning to the accused.

In old times chirography was an art confined to clerk and seer, to the refined few, the stout knight or bold baron signing like the Turk or Arab of to-day with his seal, or the Iberian with his "rubrica" or "firma." There are no favored upper classes to-day who monopolize the once restricted art of penmanship. Handwriting is no longer characteristic, either of class or of person.

There are in nations and social grades many schools of almost identical penmanship which are now producing thousands of contemporary, duplicated "personal equations" in the use of the pen.

Literary, banking and advertising demands, as well as the enormous increase of official and financial signatures, have brought the art of cunning fac-simile work up to a state of marvellous excellence. Valuable signatures are open to the practice of thousands. In America and Europe the schools of diplomatic, official, commercial and social penmanship have entirely obliterated individualism, save with the freak or the cuffinè dangler of high life.

Means of Judicial Error.

Evidence as to the individual execution of special forms of chirography is to-day often only a means of judicial error, false conclusion, or an aid to unmerited dishonor or the ruin of the innocent. Where, as in the Dreyfus case, the whole question of guilt or innocence hangs upon defending or attacking a particular piece of handwriting and fastening its execution upon some individual—always the accused—the situation is one to appal the fair minded thinker. As Shakespeare says, "Occasion waits on opportunity."

Strange to say, just in proportion as this class of evidence becomes intrinsically more and more worthless every day by the similar executions by thousands, so the causes célèbres seem to increase, and the prosecution grasps at these last, weak floating straws.

It is well known that in any large city where modern reproductive processes are largely followed, and in financial centres—in France, England, Germany, Russia and America—hundreds of technical people of vast practice can be easily reached who, for a social jest, a trifling bet, or mere malicious fun, will set the financier's heart quaking with new fears.

Just as the anonymous letter is the weapon of the coward in love, intrigue or slander, so the fac-simile accompaniment of simulated handwriting is always intended to rivet the chain upon the defenceless victim where a well covered crime is conceived. These cases have marvellously increased lately. The avidity with which courts seize upon anything to protect the vast amount of capital covered by negotiable paper has made successful pecuniary forgery difficult, for slap dash convictions follow.

And yet millions are wasted in each decade upon stuffed pay rolls, simulated mortgage signatures and false writings of all descriptions. In many cases the experts are absolutely useless here, but when only a personal honor or the safety of an individual is concerned, when property issues are absent, the door of conviction opens to a mere preponderance of so called expert evidence.

Clerical excellence is so general now that the skilled accountant grades far below the productive operative or the robust mechanic in wage. In all cities for a pittance reckless floating human beings can be had for a song, with special excellence for good or evil. True it is that expert handwriting testimony will yet sink to the level of mining lawsuit evidence in the old bonanza days, when at last each side of the great warring factions had bought all the oldest inhabitants of Virginia City several times, until the force of the conclusions was lost. The sweep of the forger in the Reavis cases and the Maxwell grant, and in the great Limantour and Almaden cases in California, extended more than several generations, and in some cases hundreds of years.

Much of the evidence was admitted by our highest courts! The open manufacture of Spanish and Mexican land grants flourished in early Californian days, and Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines will soon give us a new crop of this baleful harvest of crime. It is moral murder to take away a man's life or honor on such flimsy stuff. There is not one case in a thousand where incriminating writings can be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

A case is on record of a bank president who swore the signature of a forged check of a large amount upon a poor cashier, but a quick witted lawyer on the defence casually obtained the president's signature, in his own hand, upon four bank checks. When, in open court, the easy witness stoutly swore to the four as his own when they were handed to him on the stand, the whole case fell through, when his own lawyers admitted that the set handed up were only hasty forgeries, neatly dashed off before witnesses by a mere casual practitioner in forgery.

There was the yawning prison door for a defenceless man, and his freedom depended only upon the trap set by wit. Shame upon such inhuman methods! It is time to call a halt upon such brutal procedure. This fungous class of buyable "experts" infests all great centres of population now, ready to sell, to either side, for gold, their evidence and rivet the links of disgrace or dishonor on fellow human beings for "the unearned increment." These human ghouls are often lower than Rahab sitting by the city gate.

The Chatterton manuscripts and the Shapiro rolls are shining examples.

There is a case now pending of the deepest interest to the lovers of justice before the highest authorities of America—one in which liberty and honor are in issue and the hitherto unspotted reputation of a brilliant life.

It is as vital an issue as that other one which confronts the prisoner in the Tombs upon whom thousands of eyes are turned to-day. In both cases the flimsy meshes of handwriting are woven around the imperilled men. No conclusion can be drawn in one of these cases till the sea gives up its dead; in the other an outrage menaces a man who is absolutely innocent. It is the outrage of the unmerited brand of the felon.

In this last instance the "expert" swore in the strongest and most solemn way that the vital signature on a certain check was absolutely written by a man who it was proved later was in London at the time, and, as the disputed check was only four days old, it was a physical impossibility that it could have in any way been transported to London.

This is an atrocious insult to the name of justice. This case is pending now, and its whole conduct smirches the ermine of the banded angel guardians—law and liberty. Particular attention may be called to this last later, when events unfold themselves, but in the meantime an innocent man languishes under a moral cloud, the victim of a technical conviction brought about by the evidence of facile underlings and jealous official rivals.

No man whose personal or official signature is worth a sou marqué is now safe against the "simulator" and his masked friend the "expert," "for sale to the highest bidder."

In a land where the government cannot prevent the fabrication en bloc of huge amounts of false bonds, token money and securities, the weathercock paid expert glibly swears away life and honor, under the rule which admits his garbled conclusions. The handwriting expert must go. Where were they when the Whittaker case ended with the negro's confession? RICHARD HENRY SAVAGE.

ADVANI VISITS AGAIN. A. A. Advani, the Hindoo, whose recent visit to this city was made unpleasant by the police, has had a similar experience in Seattle, where he masqueraded as A. Punjetalia, a millionaire land-owner from India. Information sent out from this city by Chief of Police Lees enjoined Advani's plans, and he left Seattle a few days ago for parts unknown.

DOORS OF THE STATE PENITENTIARY MAY SWING OPEN FOR "BILLY" DUNN, NOTORIOUS AS POOLSELLER AND POLITICIAN

Called "Bribe-Taker and Thief" in Open Court.

Money Paid for a Place in the Fire Department.

TOLD BY HANDWRITING

Perjury Charge Against Senator Braunhart Submitted to the Court.

THE notorious Billy Dunn has overreached himself in his effort to be revenged upon Senator Samuel Braunhart. He now not only stands exposed as a man who sold a position in the city government, but a prosecution for perjury, backed by strong documentary and oral evidence, is staring him in the face.

No wonder he fidgeted in his seat over the developments of the hearing in Police Judge Graham's court yesterday morning. Attorney McEnerney excoriated Dunn with all the vigor of his forceful vocabulary. Pointing him out with accusing finger, he called him "boodler, bribe-taker and thief." But Dunn is case-hardened to that sort of thing. He was forced to hang his head, but that was all.

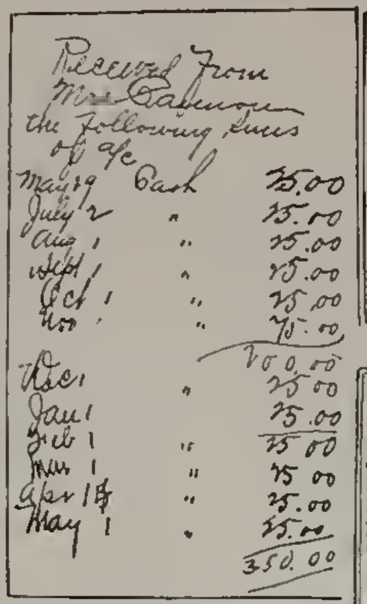
It was the documentary revelations, however, which made him bleach and twist, and evidently wish that he had not tried to revenge himself on Braunhart by bringing the flimsy accusation of perjury because in Dunn's suit against "The Examiner" the Senator testified to that which is the common knowledge of thousands, that Dunn's reputation is bad. Perhaps when he had denied his own handwriting, he saw the return charge of perjury staring him in the face and didn't like the looks of the apparition. In any event, it was apparent to all that he was far from being a happy man. Dunn's attorney scented the danger from the beginning and fought hard to keep out the damaging evidence.

"We have subpenaed two witnesses and desire to have them testify," said Attorney McEnerney as Judge Graham took his seat.

"We certainly object," replied Dunn's attorney, who was far from eager to have the facts come out. He went on to talk at length and Mr McEnerney explained as follows:

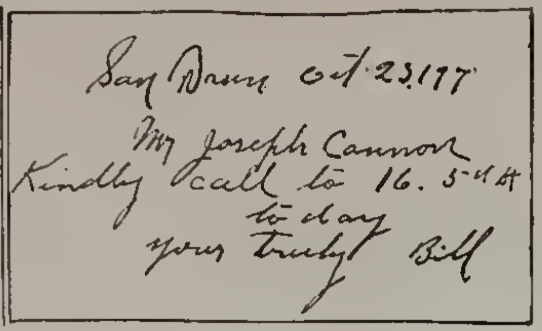
"John F. McGovern testified in this case that all these accounts of Dunn's wrongdoing came to him from Braunhart. I want to show that in one of the matters, the sale of a place in the city government, McGovern and Dunn acted as partners and confederates. This is why McGovern is lying. He is afraid of Dunn. It is a question whether thieves fall out. We want to show that the reason McGovern is testifying against Braunhart is that he is afraid of Dunn—afraid that Dunn will expose him."

Judge Graham permitted the calling of witnesses and McGovern shambled to the stand. He is one of two men relied on by Dunn to prove that he never did tell Braun-



Received from Mrs Cannon the following sums of a/c

May 29	Cash		25.00
July 2	"		25.00
Aug. 1	"		25.00
Sept. 1	"		25.00
Oct. 1	"		25.00
Nov. 1	"		75.00
			200.00
Dec. 1	"		25.00
Jan. 1	"		25.00
Feb. 1	"		25.00
Mar. 1	"		25.00
Apr. 14	"		25.00
May 1	"		25.00
			350.00



Say Dunn Oct 23/97

Mr Joseph Cannon
Kindly call to 16. 5th St
to day
yours truly Bill

lowing entries, which probably will play a very important part in the future criminal history of California:

Received from Mrs. Cannon the following sums of account:

May 20, cash	$25 00
July 2, cash	25 00
Aug. 1, cash	25 00
Sept. 1, cash	25 00
Oct. 1, cash	25 00
Nov. 1, cash	75 00
	$200 00
Dec. 1, cash	25 00
Jan. 1, cash	25 00
Feb. 1, cash	25 00
Mar. 1, cash	25 00
Apr. 14, cash	25 00
May 1, cash	25 00
	$350 00

"You say that money was not paid for a place in the Fire Department?"

"It was not."

"It was not paid on account of Senator R. Linder of Tulare, was it?"

"No, sir."

"Did you give that card to Mr Cannon?" asked McEnerney, passing up the card of "R. Linder, Tulare."

"No, sir."

"And you never talked with Dunn on this subject?"

"No, sir."

"Call Senator Dunn," said McEnerney, when he had concluded his baiting of the pitiful McGovern.

"Do you know whose handwriting that is?" asked McEnerney, handing up a note on a telegraph blank.

"It is not mine," replied Dunn.

"You are perfectly sure that is not your handwriting and that you didn't write that note?"

"I am."

The note referred to was unsigned, and read as follows:

OCEAN VIEW, 1896.
To Mr. Gannon: Come in McGovern's No. 401 Third St. this afternoon and bring your son with you.

"Do you know, then, who wrote this note?" went on the insistent McEnerney, handing up another paper. "Is that your complaint charges that Braunhart said Dunn's reputation for truth, honesty and veracity was bad, whereas the transcript of testimony shows that he confined himself to saying that Dunn's reputation for honesty was bad. "Bart Burke's testimony does not contradict, but confirms this; and so does the testimony of McGovern," declared Braunhart's lawyer, and then went on to show from the testimony that Dunn's two witnesses had entirely corroborated the defendant.

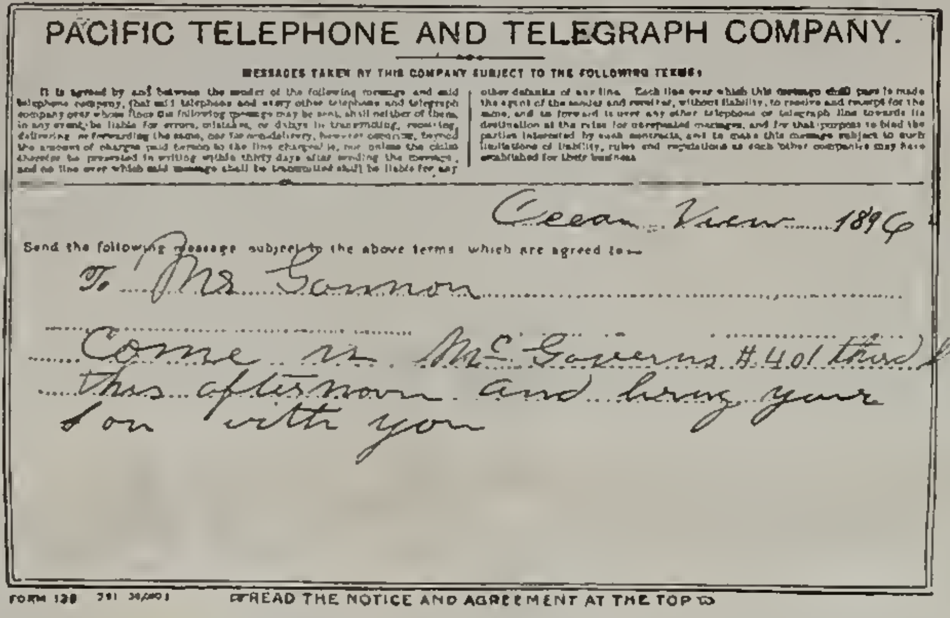
After referring to Burke's total want of candor and McGovern's pitiful shiftiness, Mr. McEnerney showed that both had admitted that they told Senator Braunhart that Dunn had the reputation of being a boodler.

"Is not that a discussion of his reputation for honesty? Has the public conscience become so degraded, and the public service so utterly demoralized, that a man who has a general reputation as a boodler and



PACIFIC TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

MESSAGES TAKEN BY THIS COMPANY SUBJECT TO THE FOLLOWING TERMS:

It is agreed by and between the sender of the following message and said telephone company, that said telephone and every other telephone and telegraph company over whose lines the following message may be sent, shall neither of them, in any event, be liable for errors, mistakes, or delays in transmitting, receiving, delivering or forwarding the same, nor for nondelivery, however occurring, beyond the amount of charges paid thereon to the line charged; nor unless the claim therefor be presented in writing within thirty days after sending the message, and no line over which said message shall be transmitted shall be liable for any other defaults of any line. Each line over which this message shall pass is made the agent of the sender and receiver, without liability, to receive and receipt for the same, and to forward it over any other telephone or telegraph line towards its destination at the rates for unrepaid messages, and for that purpose to bind the parties interested by such contracts, and to make this message subject to such limitations of liability, rules and regulations as such other companies may have established for their business.

Ocean View 1896

Send the following message subject to the above terms which are agreed to—

To Mr Gannon

Come in McGovern's #401 third St this afternoon and bring your son with you

FORM 120   791 30/401   ☞READ THE NOTICE AND AGREEMENT AT THE TOP☜

SOME RECORDS WHICH ARE VERY APT TO TROUBLE "BILLY" DUNN.

In the Police Court yesterday the notorious poolroom-keeper was accused of having, in conjunction with John F. McGovern, sold a position in the Fire Department to Joseph Cannon for $350. He admitted that he wrote the letter signed "Bill," but denied writing the Ocean View note on the telegraph blank. Expert Theodore Kytka declares there is no possibility of doubt that both notes were written by the same person, and Dunn may be prosecuted for perjury on account of his testimony. The payments on the $350, as recorded by McGovern, are shown in a fac-simile of a page in a passbook of McGovern's grocery.

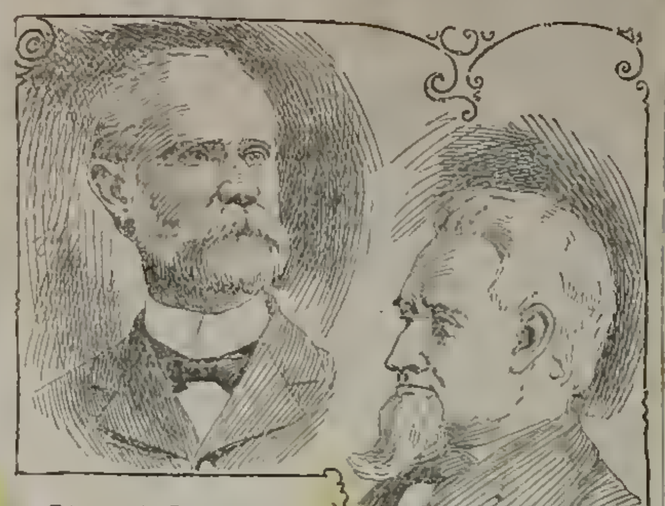
bribe-taker has a good reputation for honesty?"

Mr. McEnerney then addressed himself to the rule requiring two witnesses in cases of perjury, and said: "The Legislature knew that at some time a man who bore the reputation of a bribe-taker and a thief would put his word against that of a man of honor. This is just that case. It is brought with the temerity of a man who bears the reputation of a boodler and a bribe-taker. That reputation is testified to here by his friend Bart Burke and his friend J. F. McGovern. And that man dares come here for justice against this man who, whatever his faults, [illegible] stands before this people as a truthful citizen and an honest public servant.

"That under the testimony in the case we demand that your Honor dismiss the charge against this defendant, and dismiss it out

SAN FRANCISCO

LEADING WITNESSES IN THE FAMOUS MURDOCK NOTE CASE.



Edward I. Robinson. Thomas J. Kirkpatrick.

fair grounds he said he met William Murdock in company with Mrs. Murdock and Dr. Hicks. He remarked then to Dr. Hicks, "Why, this is the gentleman we went to the hotel to see about his $100,000 note." Robinson had shown the note to his partner, Alexander, while he had it. Alexander is now in San Francisco and will testify to-morrow.

When cross-examined, Robinson said that Mrs. Murdock gave him the note in Dr. Hicks' house, in Sacramento. He had made her acquaintance a few days before, and had had several talks about the note. She was negotiating for property, and showed him the note to attest her title to credit. Robinson could not give the faintest description of William Murdock's personal appearance, and Barnes, asking him fifty questions on the subject, made much of the witness' ignorance. The next time witness heard of the note was about five years ago, when Joe Campbell of Reddy, Campbell & Metson spoke of it to him in that law firm's office in San Francisco.

H. A. Skiff, a passenger conductor out of San Francisco on the Southern Pacific and a former employe of Gawn Murdock, testified that in May, 1890, he heard William Murdock say to plaintiff, who asked him for "some interest money," "You ought to be satisfied. You hold my note for $100,000 at 12 per cent." Skiff was taken fore and aft by the defense. He was asked if he had not stated to a half dozen persons that he would make a stake out of the Murdock case. The names and dates, with minute circumstances of these alleged conversations, were cited, but Skiff negatived every question. The defense read from depositions by three or more acquaintances of Skiff in Washington and California to the effect that Skiff had said his "price for evidence in the Murdock case was $10,000, and no less would buy him." The defense sought to prove that Skiff had negotiated with Mrs. Murdock by mail, and had finally come to California at her bidding. He will undergo further examination to-morrow.

Cam Ashurst, a brother of Mrs. Gawn Murdock, the plaintiff, and whose wife is a sister of Gawn Murdock, testified that on September 4, 1877, he paid Sam-

LAPIQUE IS HELD.

Chronicle Oct 3 1899

He Must Again Stand Trial on a Charge of Forgery.

John Lapique, accused of forgery, was held to answer yesterday by Police Judge Mogan, the bond of the prisoner being set at $2000. The specific offense for which Lapique must stand trial is the alleged forgery of Philip Maysounave's name to a note for $800 drawn in favor of Mrs. Louise Lagarde.

The note was the subject of a suit in Judge Hebbard's court, but Maysounave swore that the signature was a forgery and a decision was given in his favor. Maysounave threatened to have Lapique arrested, and the latter swore to a complaint charging Maysounave with battery. The case fell through and Lapique was arrested on a charge of forgery. During his hearing he assisted in his own defense, availing himself of the constitutional right to cross-examine witnesses. In his testimony he declared that he had purchased the disputed note for $400.

Lapique was once tried and convicted of forgery and was sentenced by Judge Belcher to twelve years imprisonment, but the Supreme Court freed the prisoner on a technicality.

…reason McGovern is testifying against Braunhart is that he is afraid of Dunn—afraid that Dunn will expose him."

Judge Graham permitted the calling of witnesses, and McGovern shambled to the stand. He is one of two men relied on by Dunn to prove that he never did tell Braunhart that Dunn's reputation was bad. He is the same McGovern who declared that when he made the affidavit for Dunn he was drunk and did not know what he was doing. He now holds a position as wharfinger under the Board of Harbor Commissioners.

"Do you know Joseph Cannon?" asked McEnerney blandly.

"Yes."

"How long have you known him?"

"About four years."

"What does he do?"

"He is a machinist."

"Where employed?"

"I have known him to be employed in the Risdon Iron Works and other machine shops about town."

"Did you ever know of his being in the Fire Department?"

"Yes."

"Is his father dead?"

"Yes. I think he died about three years ago."

"Did you have anything to do with getting Joseph Cannon in the Fire Department?"

"I did not."

"When he was in the department did you collect any money from him?"

Whew! How Dunn's attorneys pumped out the objections to this, and at first Judge Graham seemed inclined to think that the question was not proper. So McEnerney vigorously explained:

"We will show that 'Billy' Dunn and McGovern got a man of influence with the Fire Department to get them a place to fill and that they sold that place to Joseph Cannon. We will show why this man McGovern is lying on the witness stand. We will show that it is because he is afraid of Dunn. We will show that McGovern told Braunhart that Dunn was selling places in the city government. We will show that he lied when he testified that these things came from Braunhart and prove the lie by the very tongue in the witness' own mouth. He does not testify that he told Braunhart about Dunn's evil reputation. He concealed the fact that he was just as guilty as Dunn in the transaction. He is a co-conspirator with Dunn, and so his testimony is not to be believed. We will show that the information to Braunhart had to come from John F. McGovern, because Braunhart could not have obtained it in any other way."

Despite Dunn's violent objections the question was finally permitted, and repeated:

"When Joseph Cannon was in the Fire Department did you collect any money from him?"

"Well, Mr. Cannon's family were dealing with me when I was in the grocery business," repeated the witness shiftily. The Cannons lived in Ocean View. McGovern's grocery was on Third street.

"Didn't he pay you $25 a month until he paid $350 in all for his position in the Fire Department?"

"That was for money his father owed me."

"Did you pay that money, or any of it, to Dunn?"

This question made Dunn's attorney desperate. The crime of selling a place in the city government was being brought very close home. So the objections began to flow and Judge Graham took pity on Dunn and shut off the line of inquiry, though McEnerney flatly offered to prove that McGovern was lying again about the payment of that money.

"Whom did you receive that money from?"

"Sometimes his mother and sometimes he came."

"Is that your handwriting?" asked McEnerney, handing the witness a pass-book of McGovern's grocery.

"It is," admitted the witness.

On a page of that pass-book are the following:

To Mr. Gannont: Come in McGovern's No. 401 Third St. this afternoon and bring your son with you.

"Do you know, then, who wrote this note?" went on the insistent McEnerney, handing up another paper. "Is that your handwriting?"

"Yes," admitted Dunn in a low voice. "That is my handwriting."

The note which Dunn admitted he had written read as follows:

SAN FRAN., Oct. 23, '97.

Mr. Joseph Cannont: Kindly call to 16 3d St. to-day. Your truly

BILL.

"Did you write Joseph Cannon that if he did not pay you certain money he would lose his place in the Fire Department?"

"I did not."

"Did you procure from Senator Linder the place that Cannon got?"

An objection cut off this interesting inquiry, and Dunn was permitted to escape from the stand. Though most of his testimony had been a series of negations, he had placed himself in a position to be prosecuted for perjury. He swore that the Ocean View note written on the telegraph blank was not in his handwriting, but that the note signed "Bill" had been written by him.

"The Ocean View note was manifestly written by the same person who wrote the 'Bill' note," declared Theodore Kytka, the eminent expert on handwriting, after he had examined both documents. "There isn't any possibility of doubt about it. There isn't even any attempt at disguise. Writing experts would all be forced to this conclusion."

So there may be a lively time in store for Billy Dunn because of that little bit of testimony. The perjury charge probably will be transferred from Senator Braunhart to Dunn, and the notorious saloon-keeper may have a lively time to keep out of State prison, where Mr. McEnerney yesterday said he belonged.

The story of the transaction about the place in the Fire Department seems to run somewhat as follows:

In 1896 Senator R. Linder of Tulare, who had been friendly to the Fire Department management during his legislative career, desired a place in the department for a man from his county. He was told that if he would bring up a man who was qualified and would make a good fireman he could have the place, or that an effort would be made to find a place for him. After a time Linder notified the department management that he did not care about putting in the man of whom he had spoken, and he was told that if he had some other first-class man that the department authorities would be glad to give him an appointment.

At this time Joseph Cannon was a machinist in this city, and in due course his name was sent in as the one to fill the appointment promised to Senator Linder. Whatever Linder knew of the matter, Billy Dunn and John F. McGovern were to the front in looking after Cannon's interest and on May 29, 1896, Cannon was given a job as a machinist at $4 per day.

It is interesting to note that the very first entry which McGovern made in that account-book is dated May 29th. So on the day of Cannon's appointment there was paid to McGovern the sum of $25—the first payment in the total of $350. It is also certain that Dunn was very much interested with McGovern in getting Cannon appointed, and Expert Kytka is absolutely certain Dunn wrote the note telling Cannon to call on McGovern. It is expected to be susceptible of proof that Cannon paid $350 for his place in the department, where he served two years before he was dismissed, and that Dunn and McGovern shared in the money paid for the place.

In connection with the development of the case is the following note which Dunn and McGovern say they cannot identify. So far it is a sort of mysterious document floating through the case, but it may play a very important part in the evidence in case criminal proceedings are instituted against Dunn:

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., June 15, 1897.—Mr. Joseph Cannon, city—Dear Sir: You will please call to see me at once. Important. Yours, etc.,

Now it will be noticed that the note that Dunn admits he wrote is dated October 23d: "Kindly call at 16 Third street to-day." And it will also be noticed that on November 1st there is a credit of $75 instead of the usual $25 on that account kept by McGovern "because of the money which Cannon's father owed him."

Then, again, there was that note which Mr. McEnerney hinted at, but which he did not produce, evidently holding it back for future use. He asked Dunn: "Did you write Joseph Cannon that if he did not pay you certain money he would lose his place in the Fire Department?" Now it is surmised that this note was written early in April of the year after the "Bill" note and the payment of the $75. It will be noticed that in McGovern's account-book there is a great irregularity in payments along about the first of each month until April. Then there is no payment until the 14th. To all appearances, Cannon let his monthly payment lapse until a threat that he would lose his place brought him to time with the $25.

And so, take it for all in all, a prosecution of Dunn for perjury would make a most interesting case, and it might bring out many other facts concerning brokerage and bribery.

But Dunn was not permitted to escape with nothing but this penitentiary scare. He had to listen to one of the strongest denunciations ever given to a man in the history of San Francisco. McEnerney mercilessly exposed his career of crime, and from the words of his own witnesses showed that they believed him to be a boodler and bribe-taker.

"There was a time in the history of the city that the politicians had a notion that if they didn't like a man all they had to do was to go to the Grand Jury and get an indictment against him," began the eloquent attorney. "This indictment was not to be prosecuted, but it was used to degrade the man against whom it was issued. The custom became so general, and the purpose of the indictments so widely known, that they ceased to have the desired effect.

"Billy Dunn is a survival of those bad old days," continued McEnerney, pointing his finger at Dunn, who sat gathered up in a bunch in front of his lawyer. "He thinks that as he doesn't like Senator Braunhart, he can degrade him by charging him with perjury. But those days are gone. The courts are not intended to permit men of the stamp of Billy Dunn to degrade men who tell the truth, no matter what their other faults may be.

"The charge is that Senator Braunhart testified that Dunn's reputation was bad and that Bart Burke and John F. McGovern had told him so. And this complaining witness, drunk with a petty success in the civil court, comes here to prosecute Braunhart for perjury while the testimony shows that if Dunn had his deserts he would long since have been in the penitentiary, to remain there forevermore."

Then Mr. McEnerney proceeded to show that the complaint against Senator Braunhart did not fit the facts of his testimony in the case of Dunn against Hearst. The testimony… against this man who, whatever his faults may be, stands before this people as a truthful citizen and an honest public servant.

"Still under the testimony in the case we demand that your Honor dismiss the charge against this defendant, and dismiss it out of hand. It is your duty to say out of hand that your court is not to be used as a means for working out the petty revenge and contemptible spite of a man who has the reputation of a boodler, a bribe-taker and a thief. It is your duty to say that John F. McGovern has admitted it, shifty though he may be, and that Bart Burke has admitted it, with all his trickery and want of candor. It is your duty to give warning to the Dunns and all their boodle and bribe-taking breed, that they are well off to be out of the penitentiary, and that they must not attempt to work their contemptible revenges through the medium of the courts of justice.

"Bart Burke said he believed Senator Biggy when he charged that Dunn was a boodler and that he hadn't changed his opinion since. If he believed Senator Biggy's charge he believed that Dunn was not only a bribe-taker and a boodler, but that he had progressed so far in the art that he had organized a combine for public plunder. And Your Honor must know that he told this to Braunhart.

"You are asked to hold Braunhart to answer simply because he is offensive to Dunn and all the Dunn tribe, and they think the courts are organized to permit them to wreak their petty and puny vengeance. But I don't think they can do it in this court. This is an attempt to persecute a man for private motives, but the attempted revenge will never be accomplished.

"So, I leave the case with the Court, certain that Your Honor will hold that, to impute perjury to Senator Braunhart on this testimony, is infamous. There is no foundation for the charge. It is born out of the old order, when a man thought the courts were established to work out his vengeance and vent his spite. The time has not come in San Francisco when a man can be held for perjury because he is not pleasant to every one he meets in his walks on the street. We ask Your Honor to dismiss the charge, because you must admit that Senator Braunhart's testimony was true, and because the San Francisco police court will not permit a boodler and a bribe-taker to smirch a man who may have his small faults, but who stands before the public as an honest man, his reputation invulnerable as a private citizen and with a record to be proud of as a public officer."

After Dunn's attorney had attempted a brief reply to McEnerney's argument and denunciatory Judge Graham said he would examine the records and the authorities and render his decision on Monday morning.

"BILLY" DUNN, THE NOTORIOUS POOL-SELLER.

In his argument yesterday before Judge Graham of the Police Court, in the perjury charge against Senator Braunhart, Attorney McEnerney denounced Dunn, the complaining witness, as a "boodler, bribe-taker and thief."

THE MURDOCK NOTE CASE.

Motion Made by Plaintiffs for a Change of Venue.

WILLOWS, September 23.—Hayne & Platt, attorneys for the defense in the Murdock $100,000 note case, arrived from San Francisco to-day and appeared before Judge Pirkey this afternoon with a motion for a change of venue on the grounds that it will be impossible to obtain an unprejudiced jury in this county. Judge Pirkey will not pass upon the motion until November 20th. Another motion was then made to postpone the case from November 27th to December 4th. This motion was granted.

BRAUNHART GOES FREE.

Charge of Perjury Is Dismissed by Judge Graham.

Port Warden Samuel Braunhart has been relieved of the inconvenience of having frequently to answer the summons of a Police Court. His case was called yesterday, and after a brief preface Police Judge Graham dismissed the charge of perjury and exonerated Braunhart's bondsmen. The decision recited that the evidence would not justify holding the defendant to answer before the Superior Court, and, under the circumstances, a dismissal was deemed the only proper way in which to dispose of the case.

The charge against Braunhart was made by ex-State Senator W. J. Dunn, who alleged that Braunhart had perjured himself in a libel suit brought by Dunn by testifying that he had heard Bart Burke and John F. McGovern declare Dunn's reputation to be bad.

…morrow.

Cam Ashurst, a brother of Mrs. Gawn Murdock, the plaintiff, and whose wife is a sister of Gawn Murdock, testified that on September 4, 1877, he paid Samuel Murdock about $10,000, of which about $8000 was in coin. He owed him the money and was used to borrowing from him often. Samuel and his son Gawn were partners. They kept their money buried and dug it up when he came for a loan. He swore that he also borrowed the county's money from the Assessor and Treasurer of Tehama county without interest, the Treasurer enjoining secrecy as to his illegal actions. Ashurst described a number of transactions with Samuel Murdock and said that his last business was a settlement by him when witness deeded him 160 acres of land.

Thomas J. Kirkpatrick, former preacher and former Justice, whose startling testimony was the feature of the trial, was recalled to explain that Samuel Murdock called his grandson, Stanley, "Sammie" and "grandpa." Gawn Murdock also testified to this fact. Coming testimony will show that Samuel Murdock said several times that he wanted his money to go to "Sammie."

To-morrow the plaintiff will call D. E. Alexander, a former partner of E. J. Robinson, to testify to his seeing the note in 1887. Mrs. Glover, once Mrs. Lewis, will corroborate Mrs. Murdock's story of leaving Allen's springs to be home on September 6, 1877. Others not now known may be brought in. The defense asserts that they will break down the edifice reared by the plaintiff's attorneys and paint in darkest colors the characters of plaintiff's witnesses. The experts have prepared a wonderful exhibit of signatures of William Murdock and laugh at the idea of the note being proved genuine.

ATTORNEY FINED FOR CONTEMPT.—Because of heated language during a trial before Police Judge Treadwell yesterday, Attorney Joseph F. Coffey was fined $50 for contempt of court. The trouble was due to an exchange of compliments between Coffey and Attorney Wise. The fine was afterward remitted.

COMPROMISE NOT EFFECTED.

Attorneys in the Murdock Note Contest Deny a Settlement.

Attorneys in the famous $100,000 Murdock note contest deny that a compromise has been made. They say they are preparing to argue the motion for a change of venue, which comes up on the 20th of November, for the trial, which is set for the 4th of December. It is not denied that there has been talk of a compromise, and they do not affirm that the case may not be settled out of court before the time for trial. This admission is made simply on the ground that there is always an effort at compromise in any big case and that it is always desirable if a satisfactory basis can be reached.

The first trial, which resulted in an evenly divided jury, was held in Willows during April and May of this year. Suit was brought on September 5, 1897, twenty years after the alleged execution of the note. The case was bitterly contested, the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock, presenting a mass of corroborating testimony as to the circumstances of the making and the causes which led to the making of the note. The defense insisted that the signature was a forgery.

If M. Bertillon's system for the identification of criminals be as faulty as are his conclusions, chart and evidence in the Dreyfus case, burglars, murderers and other evil doers need have no fear so far as the Bertillon system of identification is concerned. Chief Lees may secure a valuable hint in this direction by carefully studying the Frenchman's testimony before he finally decides to adopt his system.

Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, arrived from San Francisco on the afternoon train. (Willows)

MURDOCK CASE SETTLED.

Plaintiff Receives Fifty Thousand of the Estate.

WILLOWS, October 16.—The Murdock note case will be settled in the Superior Court here this afternoon, the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Helen Murdock, receiving $50,000 from the estate of the late William Murdock. The suit, which Mrs. Murdock brought to collect the principal and interest of a note amounting to over $100,000, was begun here last April. After six weeks' proceedings the case went to the jury. Six held that the note was a forgery and the others rendered a verdict for Mrs. Murdock. The second trial was to have begun on December 5th.

PHOTOGRAPHS ALTERED TO SUIT BERTILLON

Discovery That the Negatives Were Retouched to Conform to His Testimony.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—A World cable from Rennes says: The World correspondent is able to send this most important news, which is exclusive and absolutely reliable: Labori and Demange, Dreyfus' lawyers, passed this afternoon carefully studying the photographs which M. Bertillon put in evidence this morning. With them was Gershell, an expert photographer, of Paris, who found that Bertillon's photographs of the bordereau and other documents have been carefully retouched to make them conform to the mathematical rules he claims to have discovered and applied to handwriting.

As soon as Bertillon has finished his testimony Labori will put Gershell on the witness stand and demand that Bertillon's original negatives be produced. Generals Mercier, Roget and Gonse have all pledged their words that they have studied Bertillon's work and found his deductions absolutely correct.

This doctoring of the negatives will not only destroy Bertillon's testimony, but in effect and in fact is a forgery, in which several of the most important generals may be implicated.

The retouching of the photographs is said to be so cleverly done that it is almost impossible to detect it.

VOL. XX. No. 12 SAN FRANCISCO — SEPTEMBER 16, 1899 — SEATTLE PRICE 10 CENTS

J. [illegible] J. B. Reinstein Paul Wallot Walter Cook John Belcher Turner Photo

THE JUDGES IN THE INTERNATIONAL ARCHITECTURAL COMPETITION.

Y. APRIL 12, 1899.

JOHN PIGGOTT, WHO WEARS FINE RAIMENT AND PICKS POCKETS.

Site and Present Buildings of the University of California

Perspective View of the Prize Plans, by E. Benard

Photographed by Oscar Maurer

Facade of the Gymnasium and the Tribunes, by E. Benard

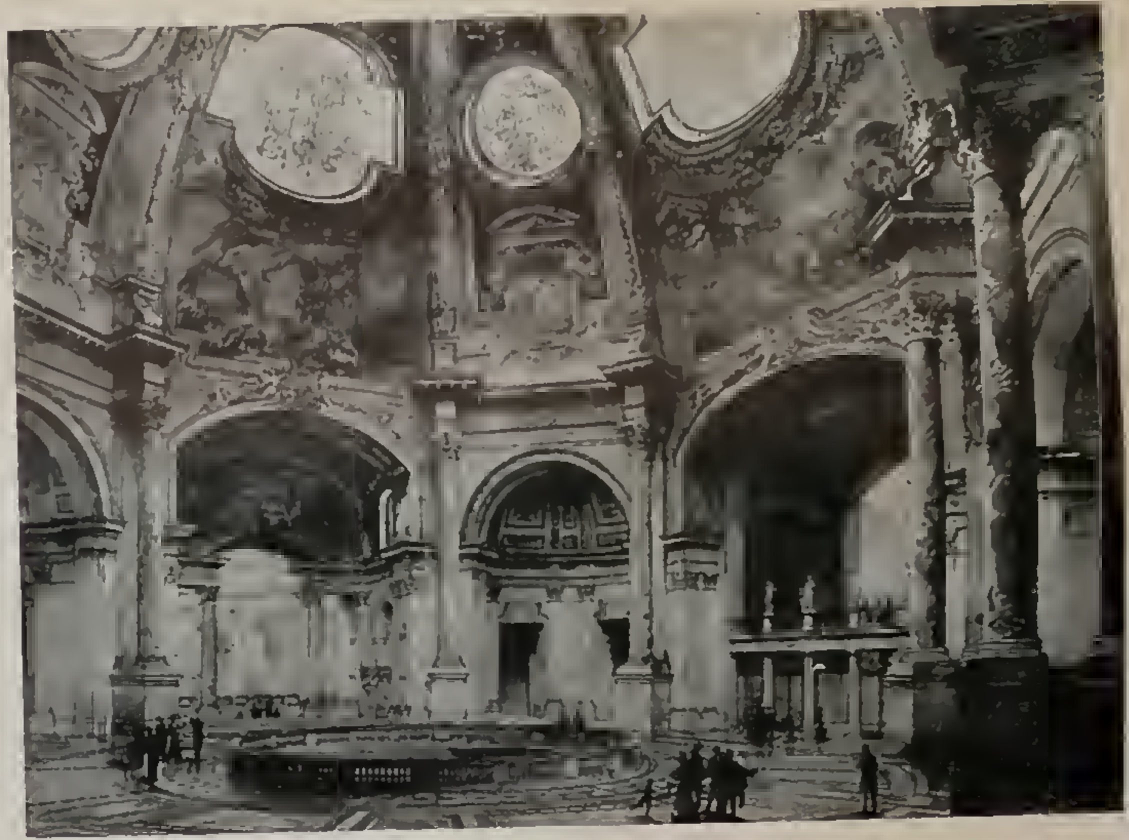
THE PRIZE PLANS.

The First Prize of $10,000 in the International Competition for the Phebe Hearst Architectural Plan for the University of California Architectural Contest was Awarded to E. Benard of Paris

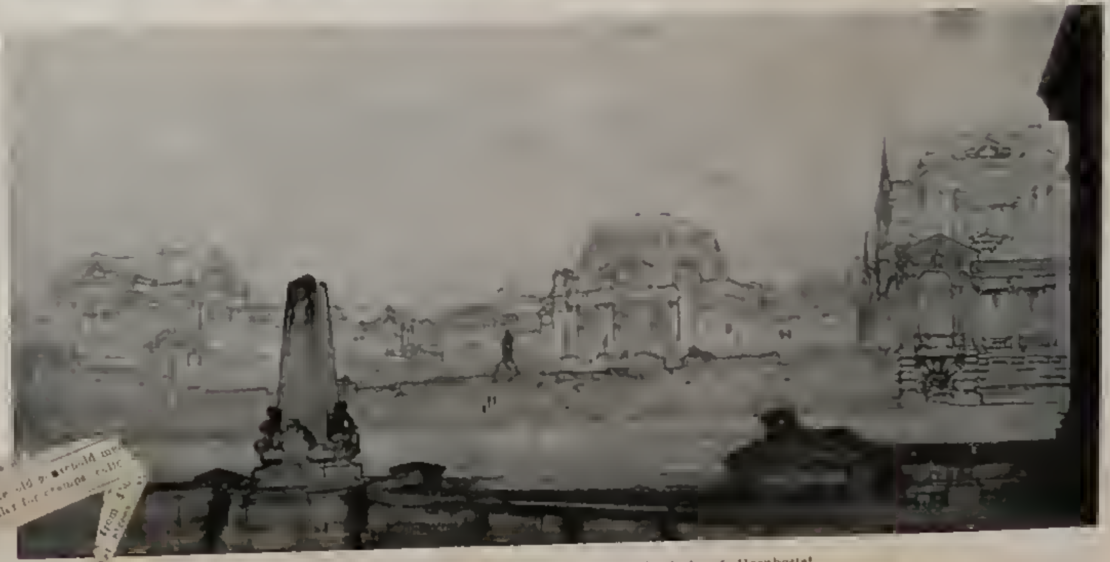
Perspective of 4th Prize Plans by Howard & Cauldwell

Perspective of 3rd Prize Plans, by E. Despradelles & Stephen Codman

Aisle of the Ferry Building where the Plans were Exhibited



Reception Hall of the Gymnasium, 1st Prize



Perspective of Library Court, 2d Prize. Howells, Stokes & Hornbostel

THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA ARCHITECTURAL CONTEST.

The International University Concours.

By Max Junghaendel.

IN San Francisco last week was seen the end of an architectural contest in which the interest of scientific and artistic circles in both hemispheres had been aroused in an unusual degree. Architects all over the world were invited to display their talents in a great Concours for the Phoebe Hearst architectural plan of the University of California. An ample financial reward, the opportunity of realizing his plans and herewith the laurels of immortality, were the dazzling prizes to be won by the successful artist. The decision was placed in the hands of four leading architects of America, England, France and Germany.

It was as much the magnitude of this purpose to secure the plan of an ideal home for a university as the unusual generosity in its management which made this competition so far surpass any previous one. Never before were architects confronted with such a gigantic scheme or asked to deal with such a vast array of buildings and requirements.

Whatever the final outcome of this competition may be, there is no doubt that the originators, and in particular its magnanimous patroness, Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst, are entitled to the unstinted praise and gratitude of the scientific and artistic world.

It is in fact unique that architects have been given so splendid an opportunity to show their talents in such a noble task on such a large and beautiful site. This site comprises some two hundred and fifty-five acres of land at Berkley, rising at first in a gentle and then in a bolder slope from an elevation of about two hundred feet above the sea level to one over nine hundred feet. It thus covers a range more than seven hundred feet in altitude, with a mountainous background which rises a thousand feet higher. The aspect of the site is decidedly a fine one, and its bold slope should enable the artist to group the manifold buildings in such a way that their ensemble presents itself as a grand picture to those who cross the bay. The prospect of the site, the panorama formed by the bay and city, the surrounding plains and hills, dominated by Mount Tamalpis is equally superb.

The fundamental motive of the Concours was to get, first of all, the ingenious, all-convincing "Situation Idea," a comprehensive arrangement of the buildings in accordance with the topographical formation and the aspect and prospect of the site. The natural features of the grounds, the water courses, groups of trees, etc., should be preserved as far as possible. Every building of the scientific and technical institutes, as well as of the habitation and recreation departments should present itself unobstrucedly to the eye of the casual observer. and should command a perfect view of the bay and the distant mountains. This view from every building of these groups should not be sacrificed to so-called grandeur, which has nothing to do with true monumentality. Is it not the clear view of a beautiful landscape that exercises such a beneficial and refreshing influence on the overworked mind and widens not only the terrestrial but also the spiritual horizon. As the bay becomes visible at the height of 260 feet above sea level they should not be erected at a lower elevation.

Considering the vast number of structures asked for in the programme, to conform to this condition presents a most serious problem. There are twenty-eight different groups of buildings to be arranged, mutually connected and easily accessible from without as well as from within the grounds. The library, which as the treasury of the scientific capital, forms undoubtedly the principal feature of the modern university, should be treated as such. The administration buildings are most properly located at the entrance to the grounds, so that those who have only to transact business need waste no time in reaching their destination. The chief entrance should undoubtedly be towards Berkley, easy access must be provided from the Oakland side in the axis of existing streets. The general service structures do not belong to the artistic ensemble, and are best situated in a corner of the lower ground and near the town.

After having thus cleared the problem there is seemingly no particular difficulty at reaching a solution complying with the ideal requirements before mentioned, provided that some other fundamental architectural and general principles are admitted, viz: that the unit of modern architecture is the man and not an imaginary giant or god; secondly, that the future California University has a decided university character; and, thirdly, that there is a limit in everything as regard both time and money

In the present case buildings are to be erected for the benefit of young men and women striving for a solid education and preparation for the struggle of life. The majority of them belong to well-to-do families of the middle spheres of society, where home life is still considered an essential part of this earthly happiness. Many leave humble homes bare of any architectural decoration. I fully appreciate the possibilities in an American girl or boy, but I cannot believe that these young students would feel themselves at home and preserve the equanimity so essential for a quiet, studious life, in halls and colonnades, on terraces and staircases designed in gigantesque proportions and overdone in decoration? Do you believe that they would be comfortable in auditoriums, theatres and hotels which would even excite the blase members of Parisian high life? Is it not better to have them housed in a substantial home-like way, to teach them the importance of simplicity in order to attain that best dispensation of kind fortune, independence and a well-arranged inner life?

I love my profession, as an architect should, and gladly greet every opportunity where it can show its possibilities. I am far from advocating a mean or sordid scheme of housing the university, but an architecture which shows a clear, simple, and yet original expression of the underlying idea, a decoration in which the form follows the function and an ensemble which has the appropriate character; in short, that the new university should have the character of a university and not of the Chicago Fair.

Every age has its own ideals and tastes. We laugh to-day about things which fifty years ago were regarded as great achievements. Are we not right in presuming that they will ridicule fifty years hence many a thing on which we have lavished thought, time and money. Is it not a healthy egotism to think of ourselves and our own comfort first, and let the ungrateful future take care of itself?

If anything is felt by the majority of men and institutions it is the limitation of capital. Even the multi-millionaire feels it sometimes even harder than the poor man. My own experience has taught me that the American millionaire is of a calmly calculating turn, and needs to be strongly convinced of the practicability and final success of an enterprise, especially in the scientific and artistic line before he opens his mind and purse. But from the moment he has identified himself with it he goes in with heart and soul. The Hearsts, Stanfords, Phelans prove this conclusively. But even the most lavish among them are not inclined to spend their money for Chateaux d'Espagne, celestial schemes which are far beyond earthly realization.

Having cleared the problem also in this direction, we are sufficiently prepared to visit the exhibition of the competitive plans for the University of California. Even an architect who has seen much and can stand a shock will surely be bewildered by this great array of artistically rendered schemes of abnormal size. The first impression reminds one of the exhibition of designs for the Grand Prix de Rome at the Ecole des Beaux—Arts in Paris. Some of the present competitors have apparently fought for this highest honor the young architect of the Paris school can attain. Several may have even won it. Nearly all the designs show the distinguished merits but also the defects of this famous school of which E. L. Pascal, the president of the university jury, is one of the leading teachers.

Of all languages the French is the most agreeable in which to talk much and say nothing; to pose and impose; to hide ideas, if there be any. Architecture is language in inorganic material and form. The modern French school architecture is undoubtedly elegant and well defined. It is pretentious and imposing, without expressing much thought which strikes us original and deep. The majority of the French school rendus are always superb and highly artistic. But the professional man knows that drawing is not building, and that good draughtsmanship is often bad architecture. He looks through the exterior into the inner value of a project. What do we find in the present instance, especially in the five designs which the international jury of four leading architects deemed the best solutions of the problem in question?

It is needless to criticise to-day the single plans. Four of them, the first prize included, present a broad avenue running up hills, lined on both sides with the buildings of either one or of the three principal groups as their prominent feature. Any child can see that only the buildings in front would command the beautiful prospect of the site, and that those back of them must be hidden This is a fundamental defect. Not one of the competitors has shown in the perspective drawing an ensemble of the buildings as it ought to appear from a natural standpoint. All have selected imaginary standpoints high up in the air. But we do not yet live in the era of aerodromes. The first prize project is in this regard essentially weak. It has neither head nor tail. There is neither at the beginning of the avenue a grand entree nor at the end a point de vue. The arrangement of the three principal groups of buildings is incongruous and illogical. The library is not the prominent feature it ought to be. The housing of the students in two big hotels on the the central square must be considered unfortunate. There are many other weak points in the project to enumerate which is not within the sphere of this paper.

The only project which shows that its authors had an idea of the essential requirements of the problem, is the third prize design of Messrs. Despradelles & Codman. They arranged the dormitories in a great segmental sweep, high up the hill on a steep retaining wall, so that in connection with the imposing library—a copy of the Parthenon—and the two flanking structures, they would make quite a factor in the landscape. But the colleges are unfortunately arranged one behind the other, and four of them would not come into view at all. Furthermore the authors have disregarded the limits of the site. In a smaller plan they show their arrangement within the limits, yet have to confess themselves that it becomes crowded. But as Goethe says, the limit shows the master.

Surveying again the entire exhibition, there is not one design which does justice to the prospect and aspect of the site, or which complies with the requirements of good, practical architecture. None of them inspires any hope of ultimate realization. It is not here the purpose to show who is responsible for this result. I came from New York to San Francisco with the intention of writing a eulogy of this great architectural event and those who participated in it. I sincerely regret that I am bound to say that instead of this I have to record another of the tragic episodes of my life in proclaiming this competition, for which Mrs. Hearst and hundreds of architects have so willingly devoted their energy, money and time, more or less of a failure.

There is an old saying: "Who strives for the best seldom gets the good." Now that the straining after the best is over, we may hope for the attainment of the good.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—ARCHITECT MAX JUNGHAENDEL IS A WELL KNOWN ARCHITECTURAL CRITIC AND AUTHOR OF SOME PUBLICATIONS ON THE ARCHITECTURE OF SPAIN AND EGPYT.

HE CAME TO SAN FRANCISCO EXPRESSLY TO CRITICIZTHE CONCOURS FOR CERTIN LEADING EUROPEAN ART JOURNALS.

PASSING OF PROFESSOR LAD, THE WELL-KNOWN POINTER

C. [illegible] lost by death last week his famous pointer Professor Lad, [illegible] by all sportsmen who have had the [illegible] remarkably well-trained [illegible] working on birds [illegible] whistle, [illegible] perfection. Mr. [illegible] which [illegible] as he cannot be replaced [illegible]

Oroville
March 15—1900

OUT OF JAIL

Mrs. Minnie Houseworth Removed to the Hospital

Mrs. Minnie Houseworth was yesterday removed from the county jail to the Infirmary on the advice of her physician and an order of the Court. She is still very ill and the doctor believed that her chances of improvement would be much better in the hospital No one was detailed to guard her and she will be in charge of the Superintendent.

NAVIGABLE IRRIGATING CANAL.

BRENTWOOD GRAZING FARM.

LOCATION, CLIMATIC CONDITIONS, GOOD FEED AND MANAGEMENT MAKE IT A PARADISE FOR HORSES.

ROW OF BOX STALLS

Who does not know this model resting place for that noble animal, the horse? Something of its kind used to be recorded in the annals of old England as the Farmers' and Breeders' enjoyable recreation grounds.

Along the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers the time was when nobody thought of reclaiming the marsh lands, although it was known that they were rich for the raising of grasses, alfalfa and vegetables, but as time rolled on the enterprising investor ascertained that the dark alluvial soil, if protected from the overflow by substantial levees would in a very short time not only repay the outlay for improvements, but give good returns on the investment. To-day millions of acres have been reclaimed, and those who have put their money in the ventures are pleased with the result.

The Brentwood grazing farm is owned by Mr. H. Dutard, the well known grain and commission merchant of San Francisco, and the general superintendency is entrusted to Frank Nugent, a man thoroughly experienced in all the departments of the horse world and in the competent management of a property of this nature.

When the land was purchased by the owner some four years ago it only had its desirable location, and the requisites of soil and climatic conditions, but by judicious expenditure of means and careful management it has been brought into a state of cultivation and subdivided for pasturage uses which make it one of the best grazing farms on the Pacific Slope.

It is within convenient distance from San Francisco, 68 miles, and may be reached either by the Southern Pacific system to Brentwood or by the steamers of the Union Transportation Company of Stockton to Antioch. From the latter place to the farm is nine miles, from Brentwood Station, five miles.

When the Valley (Santa Fe System) Road is open for traffic, two hours ride from the city will land the visitor at the farm.

Horses may be forwarded by the Stockton steamers to Antioch where a competent attache of the farm is in waiting. They are cared for there over night in a comfortable stable, and in the morning taken to their destination.

Views of portions of the property which accompany this article, in a measure, tell the story, but there are other important features which will interest horse owners.

The area of the property which is oval shaped, is about 300 acres. It has been subdivided into sections which in turn have been laid out in box stalls for stallions, paddocks, departments for brood mares, jockey stables and other convenient buildings and enclosures to suit. The fencing, separating the various parcels of land and water, is the best to be seen in California.

In dry weather, when the feed is beginning to turn, the patches are irrigated by means of a hydraulic pump. It is situated at the north end of the farm over the levee. The supply may be regulated to suit, and the various little ditches convey the water where needed.

During the winter rains when the land is overburdened with water there is a large steam pump close up to the levee which sends the water out. There is a low circular pond which receives the surplus of water from the drains and ditches, and the pump operates from it. By this means the land is kept in proper condition the year round. In other words, when it is dry weather the hydraulic pump supplies the demand, but when the winter rains immerse the soil the steam pump exhausts the over supply.

About one-half the land is in alfalfa, the other half, exclusive of building parcels, being devoted to sections of timothy, red top and mixtures of natural grasses. At the north sections of the land the soil was originally soft and boggy, but cattle were put upon it during the dry seasons, and by regulating the water supply the rich decomposed matter was made firm and fit for cultivation. Here is where the new-comer in need of rest, crippled and footsore finds relief. Natural grass and the gentle elasticity of the soil give the animal the initial coolness of foot, while a tit bit to eat fits the noble guest for pasturage in one of the other subdivisions where a suitable change of diet is supplied. I was told by an expert in these matters that this short growth, which is of a rye nature, hardens the tissues and improves the animals wind.

HORSES GRAZING IN NATURAL GRASS.

In the other subdivisions there are succulent grasses and alfalfa, and in the majority of them alfalfa predominates.

In the various enclosures are to be found horses of every description; the light harness, flyer, carriage, truck and down to the every day buggy horse. Due regard is observed to the separation of sexes and the family quarters. The latter is a most interesting nursery. Some of the youngsters look very promising. In company with three well-known San Francisco horse owners, Eddie Graney, Captain Harris and G. Wempe I visited this section. Eddie Graney was there to see his first born flyer, four months old. I asked Captain Harris, who was there on professional business, for his opinion of the farm and the horses in general. Said he: "While looking over the beauties and natural advantages of this ranch I am more than surprised. The perfect system in vogue here is to the practical horseman a source of great pleasure. Mr. Dutard is to be congratulated that in the superintendent, Mr. Nugent, the right man is in the right place. In looking over the colts we were all attracted by the unnamed daughter of Sallie Sensible and Figaro (Mr. Graney's). One old man, whom I afterwards learned was a Kentucky veteran of the pigskin, remarked, 'that there were many fine and blue bloods here in the nursery, but as a racing prospect he would rather own Sensible filly than all the rest.' His enumeration of the many points of her superiority showed conclusively the justification of his opinion."

EXERCISE PADDOCK AND JOCKEY BARN

But there are others who have, and have had horses and colts there, among them I noticed by the register the following: J. J. Crooks, W. Lester, G. Wempe (who has a very promising light harness colt there), Frank Carr, F. O'Kane, R. F. Gallagher, F. Gourmet, Barney Schreiber, Ed. Corrigan, Cesar Young, Eddie Graney, W. F. Stanfield, S. Hildreth, Frank Taylor, Burns & Waterhouse, W. B. Sink, Sr. and Jr., E. M. Brattain, Ned Lannigan, D. J. Lynch, George A. Pope, A. L. Hart, Atkin & Lotteridge, George Rose, Col. Dickie, James Chesley, P. Ryan, George Berry, Sam Merriweather, and others. Besides there are horses from leading livery stables, breweries, trucking concerns, wholesale and business houses.

On the farm are produced hay, corn, carrots, sorghum and other vegetables. Horses are supplied liberally when the occasion calls for it. The canal supplies the best of fresh water for man and beast, and the irrigation system for the entire farm.

To the west of the property the lands are tilled which accounts for the entire absence of mosquitos and flies.

Small steamers and schooners are enabled to reach the barns with horses or other supplies.

Diseased horses are not received under any circumstances.

Nature has provided knolls in the various enclosures, where horses may rest, and when in need of gentle exercise, there is a swimming spot in the canal for that purpose.

There is a well appointed new residence on the property where the Superintendent and his family reside, and communication by telephone may be had with the farm at any time.

D. M. Fraser.

"CAPTIVE" IN YOUNG ALFALFA FIELD.

SUBDIVISIONS AND BUILDINGS VIEWED FROM CENTER OF FARM LOOKING TOWARDS MOUNT DIABLO.

Yda Addis Storke Found Guilty of Criminal Libel

Jury Returns a Verdict that Brands Her Author of Anonymous Letters Upon Which Indictment of Grand Jury Was Based.

Guilty is the verdict returned at 9:25 last night by the jury in the Yda Addis Storke criminal libel case. The jury was out five hours and twenty-five minutes, but long before they announced readiness to report they had virtually reached an agreement and held back the announcement only because they did not want to make it before the crowd that remained in the court room till the early hours of the evening, wishing to spare the accused woman as much as possible.

That the verdict meets the almost general approval of all who heard it last night was apparent. There was a look of relief on many faces when the announcement was made, as if they felt that a just punishment would now be meted to the person guilty of one of the most atrocious of crimes.

There were six ballots taken by the jury, which stood from the first eleven for conviction and one for acquittal.

When the verdict was being read Mrs. Storke leaned on the table at which she has sat during the trial and gazed with a fixed stare at the jury, but made no outward movement to betray her feelings.

Attorney Currier for Mrs. Storke announced that he will make a motion for a new trial, the court giving until 10 o'clock this morning to hear the motion and to pronounce sentence. The maximum sentence for the crime of criminal libel is one year in the county jail.

There was a larger crowd than ever in attendance at the Yda Addis Storke trial yesterday, the last day of the notorious libel suit. From early morning till the arguments of the attorneys were concluded and the jury had received its instructions from Judge Oster and retired, at precisely 4 o'clock, the court room was full to overflowing.

Seldom if ever has any case tried in the local court excited as much interest as has this, and but few have been fought as bitterly. When the trial began, Monday, May 29, it was expected that it would occupy at the most four or five days, but instead twenty full days have been spent in the hearing and columns upon columns of testimony has been introduced that at the beginning would have been thought to have little bearing on the case.

Yesterday Senator Bayre spoke an hour and thirty-five minutes, making four hours occupied by him in the two days in presenting his argument. District Attorney Squier then replied for the prosecution, his speech continuing until near 3:30 o'clock, when the instructions to the jury were read and the case was given to the jury.

When the jury had retired, instead of the court room being vacated by the spectators, they lingered, expecting or hoping that an agreement would soon be reached and a verdict announced. But in this they were disappointed, for the hours passed and the jury failed to return. Many anxious glances were cast at the clock, and with the passing of each minute after 4:30 speculation as to the probable verdict grew more animated. At first the majority of spectators seemed of the opinion that a conviction would be the result and that it would be but the work of a few minutes of the jury to come to such a conclusion, but as the time passed this opinion gave place to a feeling that there would be a disagreement, and the crowd began to dwindle.

As if for entertainment of the spectators, a few minutes after the conclusion of the libel trial, Mrs. Storke threw off the role of prisoner before the bar of justice and assumed that of attorney. The case of Storke against Storke in which C. A. Storke is cited to show cause why he should not be held for contempt in not obeying an alleged order of the court to pay Yda Addis Storke alimony, was called before Judge Oster, Mrs. Storke appearing as her own attorney in the case. Mr. Thomas acted as attorney for Mr. Storke. The case was heard and taken under advisement.

At 6 o'clock the jury had failed of any agreement and were taken out to dinner in charge of Sheriff Stewart. Again they were locked up and the balloting upon a verdict recommenced.

One of the twelve jurymen stood out for acquittal until after 9 o'clock when he gave in to the majority.

Because of Mrs. Storke's known reputation as a desperate woman, a special officer was detailed last night to watch the house in Figueroa street in which she has lived during the progress of the trial. It was feared that she might attempt to escape from the house in some one of the many disguises she is known to have assumed when out on her self-styled detective scoutings and do some mischief to persons she considers her enemies.

able local celebrity on account of the prominence of the parties. The plaintiff is the widow of Joseph A. Kenney, and the defendants are the executors of his will, joined with certain of his heirs at law. Judgment in the lower court went for the plaintiff.

The evidence presented no important conflict. Each of the Kenneys owned considerable property, both real and personal. Having no children, they entered into an agreement in writing to execute deeds each to the other, conveying absolutely, in fee simple, all of their respective estates situated in Santa Barbara county. These deeds were deposited in escrow with the cashier of the First National bank of Santa Barbara, and were to be delivered to the survivor in the event of the death of either party. Joseph Kenney died, whereupon the widow demanded that the deed of his property be delivered to her or be recorded. Her demand was refused. The question was, did the title to the property wherein the plaintiff was named as grantee pass to her by reason of the husband's death? The decision is that this was a direct grant, but no deed whatever. The next question arising is was the delivery by the husband to the cashier sufficient to pass title to the wife? The supreme court says that no title passed because the grantor reserved the right to recall his deed upon the happening of a certain event, namely the death of the wife, and such reservation was fatal to a valid delivery.

A VINDICATION FOR BRAUNHART

Police Judge Graham Dismissed the Charge of Perjury.

E.... —Sept 26

DUNN BALKED OF REVENGE

Realized the Hopelessness of His Case and Was Not in the Finish.

"In the matter of Samuel Braunhart, the court finds that the evidence is insufficient, and the case is dismissed."

So decided Police Judge Graham yesterday morning, and in those brief words put an end to the despicable attempt of notorious "Billy" Dunn to smirch the good name of Senator Braunhart. There was a murmur of approval in the courtroom, and after Senator Braunhart and Daniel McElnerney, his attorney, had bowed their thanks to the court, many men pressed forward to grasp the Senator's hand and congratulate him on his vindication.

"It is a complete vindication and the best possible answer to the charge against me, and that seems to be all there is to say about it," said the Senator when asked if he desired to make any statement in the matter.

As for "Billy" Dunn, he had stuck out of sight, if he had been near the court at all. He was not even represented by an attorney. Evidently he knew that his effort for revenge had been abortive, and that all he could expect from the case was a prosecution for perjury because of his testimony regarding the sale of a place in the San Francisco Fire Department. Senator Braunhart has not yet made up his mind whether he will press that charge and cause Dunn's arrest. The evidence in the matter is accumulating, however, and the law officers may be forced to take cognizance of it and bring Dunn up for a vigorous prosecution.

The charge on which Senator Braunhart was so triumphantly acquitted grew out of his testimony in the case which Dunn sued "The Examiner" for damages for calling him a time-keeper at a prizefight. "The Examiner" had exposed him at Sacramento when Senator Bliss openly charged him with getting up a boodle combine, but he did not seem to think this had damaged him. "The Examiner" had told about him when he was arrested as a jury briber in the Curtis murder case. But this did not move him to sue for damages. His interest in and management of a notorious poolroom was duly exposed. Still, he was not hurt. But when, by a mistake, he was charged with being a timekeeper, he felt dreadfully injured, and so brought suit for $25,000 for damages to his feelings and reputation. The jury valued his damages in a nominal sum.

In that suit Senator Braunhart swore that Dunn's reputation for honesty in this community was bad, and when asked who had discussed that reputation with him, he gave, among others, the names of Hart Burke and John P. McGovern. Dunn had been in the Senate with Hart Burke, and had been a partner with McGovern in selling that place in the city government. So he went to these men, knowing they would have a fellow feeling for him, and got them to make affidavits that they never had discussed Dunn's reputation with Braunhart. Then Dunn had the Senator arrested on a charge of perjury, thinking this would be a fine revenge.

When it came to the witness stand, Burke shifted and wriggled so much that it was entirely apparent that he had talked to Braunhart about Dunn, and he was forced to admit that he believed Senator Bliss's charge that Dunn was in a boodling combine. As for McGovern, he admitted he had criticised Dunn's legislative record in the presence of Braunhart, and that he had also told the Senator that Dunn got him drunk when he made that affidavit. Then came the documentary evidence that Dunn and McGovern had been partners in the sale of that Fire Department position.

And this flimsily evasive testimony was all that Dunn had to offer. As a consequence Judge Graham kicked him out of court and completely vindicated Senator Braunhart.

A MARVEL OF PHOTOGRAPHY.

Oakland — Sept 11 - 19

A camera with a range of from three to ten miles, such as has been made for Charles L. Fair of this city, has a wide variety of useful attributes. Mr. Fair was after an instrument which would enable him to get what no photographer ever got before—an adequate likeness of the Yosemite as viewed from one of the high points of observation. He seems to have succeeded in this, and we do not doubt that the pictures he will make and which others will make by like agencies are going to mark a tremendous advance in landscape photography. But they will do something more.

As an adjunct of coast surveying the giant camera will show its value, for with it a vessel on a clear day could follow the windings of an ocean shore, miles distant it may be, and make a continuous picture of all the topographical details. The Fair camera even catches the flies on a far-off window; it will pick out the buttons on a soldier's uniform while out of rifle range from the soldier himself. In taking a coast line it would develop every stretch and bowlder, to say nothing of ravines and exposed reefs and coves.

For military purposes the new camera must prove invaluable. Safely hidden almost out of range, almost every essential detail of the enemy's fortress or intrenchments, every disposition and movement of his troops, every mounted gun would be revealed to it. It would not be necessary to send out spies to report unless the weather were too thick for photographic purposes, for the camera, mounted on an elevation miles away, must see everything that goes on in the open and report it accurately.

And the device is so simple. But that of itself makes it kindred to all the great and useful inventions of the time.

July 11th, 1899.

The Morning Press

Published Continuously Since 1863.

Member of the Associated Press.

Fithian Building, 635 State Street.

EASTERN BRANCH OFFICE:
60 Tribune Building, New York, T. R. Elliot, Manager.
CHICAGO OFFICE:
817 Chamber of Commerce, A. Frank Richardson, Manager.
WASHINGTON OFFICE:
516 Fourteenth Street, Near Pennsylvania Avenue.
SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE:
L. P. Fisher, Merchants Exchange Building.
LONDON OFFICE:
L. O. Johnson, 13 and 14 Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, London, England.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Daily, per year, in advance........$8 00
Daily, delivered by carrier, per month .75
Weekly, one year, in advance........ 2 00

TELEPHONE NO. 73

The Press Publishing and Printing Company

CLIO L. LLOYD, Manager.

The Official County Paper

A WHOLESOME SENTENCE.

Judge Oster fittingly closed the trial of Yda Addis Storke yesterday, when he sentenced the defendant to imprisonment for the maximum term provided by the law. He expresses the regret of the community when he said he was sorry the penalty was not greater, for a year in the county jail was not sufficient punishment for the crime committed.

But the sentence will be welcomed with feelings of relief by the people of the county. They know that a dangerous and desperate woman is where she can do no harm for a few months at least. The county is to be congratulated upon the result of the trial, and congratulations from the county are due those who conducted the case so successfully. District Attorney Squier made a state record by the manner in which he handled the prosecution.

Much credit, too, should be given one whose good work has possibly been partially overlooked in the excitement of succeeding events, but who, by his scientific and painstaking analysis of the writings involved did much to strengthen the case against Mrs. Storke. It is Theodore Kytka to whom reference is made. Mr. Kytka is an ideal witness. He was on the stand longer than any one handwriting expert in any other single trial in the United States. He underwent a severe cross-examination for four days. But not a flaw could be found in the mass of convincing testimony presented by him; so admirably was his evidence presented, that it was only strengthened by the attacks upon it. Kytka impressed all who heard him as fully qualified as an expert, and conscientious and truthful as a witness.

FOUND GUILTY OF FORGERY

San Jose Attorney Who Put Up Bogus Mortgages.

SAN JOSE, October 13.—S. H. Terrill, attorney, who is charged with securing numerous sums of money under false pretenses and by means of forged mortgages, was convicted of forgery to-day on his second trial. On the first trial a few weeks ago upon a Grand Jury indictment for embezzlement the jury failed to agree. By means of his knowledge of the law the attorney had managed matters so cleverly that the embezzlement charge would not hold.

The trial this week was for forgery upon another count, Richard J. Hanks of New Almaden being the complainant. A fictitious name, Leon McAtee, was forged to a bogus mortgage upon four lots and $750 was obtained upon it. The trial was a very short one, the defense presenting no testimony. The jury was out but a short time to-day before it brought in the verdict of guilty.

There are still four other indictments pending against Terrill upon which he will be tried. Other information may be presented, and now that a conviction has been obtained there is a possibility that the young man may go to jail for a long term of years.

TWO WILLS IN CONTEST.

Alleged Forgery of the Second Gregory Document.

AN ADOPTED CHILD'S SHARE IN THE CASE.

W. C. RIPPEY SAID JAMES G. FAIR JUNIOR WAS HER FATHER.

Rippey Accused of Forging Mrs. Gregory's Name in Favor of Mrs. Martha Munson.

The contest over the estate of Mrs. Catherine E. Gregory will begin next week before Judge Troutt in Department 10. Two wills are involved, and the charge that the second one was forged is to be entered into. Though the amount involved is not large, less than $20,000, a number of peculiar features render the case of more than usual interest.

Mrs. Gregory lived at 905 Bush street. She is the widow of Charles Gregory, well known in the old days as a faro dealer at Virginia, Nev. After his death, about 1890, Mrs. Gregory adopted a girl baby 5 days old, which had been left by unknown persons at the San Francisco Foundling Hospital. This child was named by her Charlotta B. Gregory.

Among Mrs. Gregory's intimate friends were W. C. Rippey, the old man who achieved notoriety by shooting John W. Mackay on February 24, 1893, and Mrs. Martha Munson. Mrs. Munson is the widow of John Munson. Mrs. Gregory loaned money to Rippey after he was released from jail, which was in 1894, and also provided a house for Mrs. Munson at her house. Rippey told Mrs. Gregory that the child she had adopted was the daughter of James G. Fair Jr., and said he could secure evidence sufficient to force Fair to give money for her support. Rippey said the child's mother, soon after the birth of the child, committed suicide at Carson, Nev. Through this story Rippey is said to have obtained money from Fair, and when Rippey died, at 428 Natoma street, on January 15, 1896, $80 was found under his pillow, which was said to be a loan from Fair. No proof, however, was ever forthcoming from Rippey as to the child's parentage. The only fact that seemed to substantiate his claim was that the child, when left at the hospital, was richly clothed and had been left under circumstances of strict secrecy.

Mrs. Gregory died on August 16, 1898, without learning anything further concerning the pretty little girl. Three days later two wills were filed, each purporting to be her last. One was dated March 22, 1892, and the other December 10, 1895. The first said:

I give to my little adopted daughter, whom I have named Charlotta B. Gregory, one-half of all my property, both real and personal, and I hereby appoint Robert Ash, Esq., her guardian, to give bonds as such.

If any man or woman should come and claim possession of said child after my death they must take her as penniless as I did, and the above bequest to her shall go to the Catholic Orphan Asylum to Virginia, Nev.

The balance of my property, both real and personal, I give to Robert Ash, Esq., excepting a few private legacies. I hereby appoint Robert Ash, Esq., to be executor of this, my last will and testament, without bonds.

The second will bequeaths all the property to the child, in consideration of love and affection, "to have and to hold said property as if purchased during her lifetime." The will continues:

I further stipulate as a good and motherly woman for my child I appoint Mrs. Martha Munson, widow of the late John Munson, as guardian over my child, in whom I have the most implicit confidence, the income of said property to be applied to the support of both child and guardian, and that without bonds."

The witnesses to the first will were Mrs. S. E. Wellington of 810 Turk street and M. Melzgil of 20 Ellis street. The witnesses to the second were J. Schnikin and A. Bowen.

On August 26, 1898, Attorney Ash filed a contest to the second will, alleging that it was a forgery by W. C. Rippey. The suit is now over this matter. The demand has been made for a jury trial and a long contest is expected. Lloyd & Wood appear for Ash and Mrs. Clark & Foltz for Mrs. Munson, while Adams & Adams appear for the child. Charlotta Gregory. She contests the will of 1892, and acts with Mrs. Munson in upholding the later instrument.

Ash charges in his complaint that if the will is not an absolute forgery by Rippey, the signature of Mrs. Gregory was obtained while she was under the influence of liquor administered by Rippey and Mrs. Munson. He alleges that Mrs. Gregory was addicted to liquor.

The will of 1895 is written with an aniline lead pencil, except one or two lines added with an ordinary lead pencil. Ash said yesterday that he could easily prove that it was Rippey's handwriting, and that as Rippey had previously forged Mrs. Gregory's name the trick would not be a novel one for him to perform. [illegible]

ADVANI THE SWINDLER.

Bogus Hindoo Prince Who Has Gone to Portland.

THE ACCOMPANYING picture is a reproduction of the photograph of Advani, the Indian swindler who was detained and investigated by the San Francisco Police Department, as he has been by the police of other places. It was taken by Theodore Kytka for Chief Lees. This self-styled "Hindoo Prince" is presumably on his way to Portland, but wherever he may go these pictures will greet him. Against his claims of Eastern royalty Advani's hands are severed and look as if at some time he had done some hard work. The story of the long scar across his forehead, presumably from a saber, he will not tell. However, he thought out just before he departed a new way to account for his continued trouble. He says that he had a servant who is his double in appearance and that the fellow is using his name and doing all the unlawful things that are attributed to himself. When questioned as to the identity or whereabouts of this bad man Advani stated that he was at present in India. He bemoans his lack of knowledge of American customs, and says that his faithless valet is making his life a burden. No answer has yet been received from the cable for money sent to India through Landlord Gallagher of the Langham Hotel, where Advani made his headquarters after leaving the Grand.

MURDOCK NOTE CASE SETTLED

Compromise Reached by the Litigants and the Money Paid.

FORTUNE FOR THE PLAINTIFF

Ninety Thousand Dollars Said to Have Been the Sum Which She Received.

The famous Murdock note case of Glenn county was compromised yesterday by the executors of the estate and Mrs. Mary H. Murdock, the holder of the note which was drawn in her favor twenty years ago by William Murdock, now deceased, for $100,000. Yesterday's compromise ends all litigation and leaves Mrs. Murdock a fortune of about $90,000 in gold. H. H. Burton, one of the executors of the estate, and Mrs. Murdock arrived in this city some days ago and yesterday reached a settlement in the office of one of the attorneys in the case.

The suit which Mrs. Murdock brought to collect the principal and interest of the big note was begun last April at Willows. Hundreds of people attended, handwriting experts testified, and between $30,000 and $40,000 was spent in counsel fees. After a month's proceedings the case went to the jurors, who were evenly divided in their opinions, six holding that the note was a forgery and the others rendering a verdict for Mrs. Murdock. A new trial was set for December 6th and depositions were already being taken when the compromise was effected. It is said upon good authority that the executors proposed a settlement and that the plaintiff accepted the sum mentioned. The costs of retaining a dozen lawyers, it is believed, had much to do with bringing the litigants to an understanding in private.

William Murdock, it was claimed, was the custodian of money belonging to his cousin, Samuel Murdock, twenty years ago. The note was alleged to be a settlement made between the two, drawn in favor of the wife of Samuel Murdock's son, G. Murdock. Samuel Murdock died some years ago and the litigation followed upon the maturity of the note.

MRS. CRAVEN IS ACCUSED.

Her Marriage Contract Alleged to Be a Forgery.

CHARLES L. FAIR ALSO CHARGES CONSPIRACY.

SAYS SHE AND OTHERS ENTERED INTO A DISHONEST SCHEME.

The Object, He Declares, Was to Secure by False Evidence a Part of His Father's Large Estate.

The amended answer of Charles L. Fair to the petition of Mrs. Nettie R. Craven, who asked for an allowance of $5000 a month out of James G. Fair's estate, was filed yesterday. It says:

"After the death of James G. Fair, Nettie R. Craven with other persons whose true names are unknown, combined and conspired a fraudulent scheme and conspiracy for the purpose of procuring for themselves a part of the estate of Fair by means of forged documents and false evidence, and to falsely and fraudulently assert and claim that Nettie R. Craven and James G. Fair were married and that they made and signed a marriage contract."

This alleged contract is set forth as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 21, 1892.
I take Nettie R. Craven to be my lawful wife. JAMES G. FAIR.
I take for my lawful husband James G. Fair. NETTIE R. CRAVEN.

The answer states that Mrs. Craven prepared and uttered this "false, forged and pretended declaration;" that she and Fair were never married; that Fair never signed this alleged contract, and that his name thereon was forged.

It is also said in the answer that Mrs. Craven is estopped by the partial decree of distribution made in 1897 from asserting herself to be the wife or an heir at law of Fair and from claiming an allowance or a portion of his estate on that account. This decree of distribution declared that Charles L. Fair, Theresa A. Oelrichs and Virginia Fair were the only heirs at law of James G. Fair. The answer says that Mrs. Craven and Attorney D. M. Delmas, who then represented her, had notice of the filing of the petition for the decree of distribution, that Delmas appeared in court and opposed it because it applied to the two pieces of San Francisco property which Mrs. Craven claimed under deeds that she alleged Fair gave her; that the attorneys for the children then consented that the decree should not apply to these two pieces of property and they were not included in the distribution; and that Delmas when his objection was thus overcome withdrew all opposition to the distribution. In Mrs. Craven's recent petition to have this decree set aside she stated that she did not know about the filing of the petition for distribution of the real estate or the action taken on it by the Court in 1897 until a few weeks ago. Judge Troutt lately denied her petition to set aside the decree, as the time in which the decree could be revoked or changed had expired long ago. In the answer filed yesterday the point is made that it is now too late for her to have the list of heirs as set forth in the decree changed.

CHRONICLE, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1899.

FIGHT KEPT UP BY MRS. CRAVEN.

HER LAWYERS ANSWER THE FAIR CHILDREN.

THEY CLAIM THAT PROCEEDINGS AGAINST HER ARE VOID.

Allege That in Depriving Her of a Widow's Rights the United States Constitution Was Violated.

An amended answer to the petition of Mrs. Nettie R. Craven for an allowance of $5000 per month as the widow of James G. Fair was filed yesterday by Lloyd & Wood and Bishop & Wheeler, attorneys for Mrs. Theresa A. Oelrichs and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt, Fair's daughters. It is similar to that filed by Knight & Heggerty, attorneys for Charles L. Fair, a few days ago, and it charges Mrs. Craven with forging the marriage contract under which she claims to be the widow of James G. Fair.

Mrs. Craven's attorneys yesterday filed a demurrer to the answers of the Fair children to her petition for an allowance. It says: "The said Nettie R. Craven Fair, as such widow of said deceased, became and was upon the death of said James G. Fair, thereafter continued to be, and now is entitled under the statutes of said State of California to a reasonable provision for her support, to be allowed to her out of said estate by said Superior Court or a Judge thereof, and to such reasonable allowance out of said estate as may be necessary for her maintenance during the progress of the settlement of said estate."

The demurrer alleges that in connection with the decree of distribution to the children the Court so construed the California statutes as to deprive her of her rights as Fair's widow without due process of law, and to deny her the equal protection of the laws, contrary to and in violation of section 1 of article 14 of the amendments to the United States Constitution. Her attorneys also allege in the demurrer that sections 1658, 1659, 1660 and 1661 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the proceedings against her that she desires to have set aside were taken, are unconstitutional and void and in violation of the section of the United States Constitution above mentioned. Concerning the explicit charge that the marriage contract was manufactured fraudulently no response is made in the document filed by Mrs. Craven's lawyers yesterday. The question as to the alleged violation of the United States Constitution in the proceedings by which Mrs. Craven has been estopped from now setting up a claim as Fair's widow, as the attorneys for the Fair children assert, may afford a ground for taking the litigation into the Federal courts and protracting it for years.

THE "HINDOO PRINCE" GOES TO PORTLAND.

Noted Swindler Driven Out of San Francisco Through the Efforts of the Local Police.

A. A. Advani, the notorious swindler who has been traveling through the country and victimizing many people by his pretensions of being a Hindoo Prince, quietly left this city Friday night for Portland, Or. Advani obtained [illegible] from the Nevada Bank upon a fictitious check for [illegible]. The bank required the clerk who advanced the money to make the sum good, and then, not having lost anything by the swindle, refused to assist the police in prosecuting Advani. The Hindoo settled his bill at the Grand Hotel and went to the Langham. He induced Landlord Gallagher to cable to India in his behalf for money. No reply was received and he pawned his clothing, all of his jewelry having been already pledged, raising thereby [illegible], with which he left the city.

All of Advani's checkbooks, blank drafts and other aids to his swindling operations are still in the custody of Chief Lees, who has notified the Portland police of Advani's intention to visit the northern city. It is believed that the dusky "Prince" will find his future plans checkmated, no matter where he may go, as his description and photograph are by this time in the hands of the leading police officials all over the Coast.

FORGERY CHARGED IN MILLS CASE.

DEAD MAN'S SIGNATURE ALLEGED TO BE BOGUS.

GENUINE WRITING ALSO SAID TO HAVE BEEN TAMPERED WITH.

All the Testimony Now In, and the Case Will Probably Go to the Jury Monday Night.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

REDWOOD CITY, October 13.—George C. Hickox, a former cashier and now treasurer of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, testified this morning as to the signature and writing appearing in the declarations made by Robert Mills in two different books. He was of the opinion that the writing in the small blue book was genuine and that that in the sheep-covered book was not. He explained his reason for this by stating that Mills made peculiar Rs, Bs and Ts, and this characteristic did not appear in the sheep-covered book. On cross-examination he admitted that he might be mistaken.

Expert Max Gumpel of San Francisco gave similar testimony. He was firm in his opinion that the signature in the sheep-covered book was not genuine. The witness was shown several checks bearing the signature of Mills. He then caused a surprise by stating that the "t" in Robert had been tampered with in order that it might conform to the signature in the sheep-covered book. On cross-examination he was asked if he did not testify in the celebrated Sharon case, and if he did not change his opinion during the trial. The witness became snappish and replied "Never," and, with a show of vanity, remarked that the case was decided the way he testified.

L. P. Behrens, cashier of the San Mateo County Bank, also gave expert testimony. This closed the rebuttal testimony for the plaintiffs.

The defense put on several witnesses from San Francisco to sustain the good reputation of their star witness, whose integrity was attacked yesterday. Mrs. Mills was also recalled, but the line of questioning was not permitted by the Court, and this ended the celebrated case so far as the testimony is concerned.

There are eight attorneys in the case to hear from. There was some talk of night sessions, but no conclusion could be reached. At 2 o'clock this afternoon Ed F. Fitzpatrick began the opening argument for the plaintiffs. To-morrow morning Attorney Richards will speak for the defense. The case will not reach the jury before Monday evening.

Sensational charges are whispered about by the knowing ones against a certain individual here. They are made very covertly at present, but should they be true there will be a great shaking up in a certain quarter presently, and much political business will be exposed.

The latest sensational report is that the "ring" has set itself to work to impeach our Superior Judge. Petitions are being circulated, I am told, and meetings are being held looking to that end. Think of it, voter, with one fell swoop the man you elected against a combination of outside lawyers, inside churches and a hoard of gold, is to be pitched out of office. On what ground is not apparent. It is presumed, however, that the reason will be that he had the hardihood to beat the idol of the (un)Godly sect who wish to run the politics of the county. Wonder if that gang know that no other power save the Legislature can impeach a Superior Judge for grounds, and that it will require two years of anxious waiting before that body meets again? Wonder again, that if such a thing did happen and Governor Gage should appoint Frank Freeman to fill the vacancy, which would likely be the case, how they would like the change?

The ready-made affidavits in the Murdock note case which have been spoken of before are a revelation. Every man who signed that document is a Moody partisan and Frank Moody has the bad grace to head the list. Firl

WILL SAID TO BE A FORGERY

Prominent Chico People Indicted by Grand Jury.

FORMER MAYOR AND A WOMAN ACCUSED.

ALLEGED SCHEME TO SECURE THE ESTATE OF A DEAD MISER.

Large Sums of Money Said to Have Been Offered for Witnesses to the Bogus Document.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

CHICO, October 25.—This community was thrown into a state of great excitement to-night by the arrest of two prominent and well-known citizens. To-day the Grand Jury, which has been in session seven days this month, returned indictments for perjury and forgery against Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, John M. Garner and Mrs. Minnie Houseworth, and this evening Sheriff Wilson arrested Dr. Rodley at his office and Deputy Sheriff Coe arrested Garner at his ranch, a few miles out of town.

Two years ago Alfred Fuller died here, leaving an estate worth about $50,000, of which there is $33,000 cash. Fuller was a miser and never married, but left relatives in Missouri and Illinois. A year after his death a will was presented for probate purporting to be a holographic will written and signed by Fuller and witnessed by Rodley and Garner. This will was received from the Postoffice by H. Carmack, and by its terms $1000 was left to Fuller's heirs and all of the rest to Mrs. Housworth. Carmack delivered it to Mrs. Housworth. Upon the will being probated Mrs. Housworth said she received the will from Carmack, who demanded $2000 for it. This Carmack denied.

Rodley testified that Fuller came to his office with the will and asked him to sign it as a witness, and that he was about to go out for another witness when Garner came in and Fuller asked him to sign. They did not see Fuller sign the will, but he said he did, whereupon they signed as witnesses, he acknowledging it to them to be his signature. The document was admitted to probate as Fuller's will.

This created a great stir in the community, as Mrs. Housworth was in no wise related to Fuller, nor had it ever been known she was friendly with him. She had been hunting for such a will for several months, claiming she was told that it was in existence. This occasioned the investigation by the Grand Jury. Carmack, who is a most respectable man, was alarmed, fearing it would be thought he had done some wrong, and he courted the most rigid examination of what he had done in the delivery of the will, which he received through the Postoffice, no letter accompanying it.

J. R. Swearingen, a prominent farmer here, testified before the Grand Jury that Mrs. Housworth offered him $5000 if he would act as a witness to such a will, which was after Fuller's death.

R. T. Batchelder, County Clerk, testified that he was offered $3000 by Dr. Rodley if he would sign as a witness with Rodley to the document, which was probated as Fuller's will. There is now a contest of the will by the heirs, they claiming it to be a forgery.

On the evidence given by Mrs. Housworth, Dr. Rodley and Garner at the time the will was probated the indictment for perjury was found and for presenting the instrument for probate the indictment for forgery. There have been at least fifty witnesses examined by the Grand Jury. The matter was before the last Grand Jury, but it did not have time, owing to the close of its term, to finish its investigation.

Dr. Rodley is a leading physician here and has a wife, son and daughter. He served in the City Council for six years and for the last two years was Mayor. His practice is worth $10,000 a year and he is worth considerable money. John Garner has a family consisting of a wife, two sons and a daughter, all grown, and has farmed here all his life and has borne an excellent reputation. Mrs. Housworth was left a fortune by her first husband, J. G. West, but spent it. About eight years ago she married her present husband, who is a man of probity. She has a grown family, two sons, and her daughter recently married a wealthy Klondiker, Ike Powers.

Mrs. Housworth is now in San Francisco, and a warrant has been issued for her arrest. Bail has been fixed upon each charge in the sum of $6000 for each defendant.

No Difference in Pleading.

Alfred Fuller, a wealthy man of Chico, died early in [illegible], and after his death A. J. Landis presented to the administrator of the estate a promissory note made by the deceased for $5,000, due in one year, which had not matured on the death of the maker. Payment was refused and suit was brought. The administrator put in a general demurrer to the complaint, alleging that it was fatally defective in that it did not set out particulars. The Court decided that the complaint was fatally defective in that it did not set out sufficient consideration, holding that because of the presentation of the note before maturity such a pleading and showing must be made. The Supreme Court finds no difference in the pleading required in such a case and one in which the note has matured, and reversed the judgment, ordering a new trial.

EXAMINER, SAN FRA

WILL CONTEST LANDS PROMINENT MEN IN JAIL

Two Leading Citizens of Butte County Under Arrest.

CHARGED WITH FORGERY

Mystery of Lost Testament of Alfred Fuller May Be Cleared.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

OROVILLE, October 25.—The Grand Jury to-day filed indictments against Dr. Ellis Rodley and J. P. Garner, and warrants were at once issued for their arrest. Both are prominent citizens of Chico. It is believed another indictment was found against Mrs. Minnie Housworth, also of Chico. This action is the result of litigation over the estate left by A. Fuller, a well-to-do bachelor of Chico who died some two years ago.

At the time of Fuller's death no will was found, although rumors of one were circulated. Just a year later Mrs. Minnie Housworth, a widow, who had resided near Fuller, produced a will. The will was written on a sheet of note paper and the signature was witnessed by Rodley and Garner. The will was filed for probate, and rumors of fraud were heard. The matter was taken up by the Grand Jury last year, but that body adjourned without taking action, it being understood at the time that certain witnesses could not be found. The investigation was continued by the present Grand Jury, with the result stated.

CHICO, October 25.—Dr. Ellis Rodley, a former Mayor of Chico, and John M. Garner, a well-known farmer, were arrested to-night on charges of forgery and perjury, alleged to have been committed in connection with the Alfred Fuller will case. The arrests caused much excitement here.

The will bequeathed $10,000 to Mrs. Minnie Housworth of Chico. Fuller died in October, 1897, and, it was supposed, left no will. Shortly after his death H. Carmack received through the mail a will supposed to have been left by Fuller. Carmack gave the will to Mrs. Housworth. The names of Rodley and Garner appeared on the document as witnesses. After a stubbornly fought legal battle the will was admitted to probate.

The evidence brought out by the Grand Jury indicates that it was a forgery, and it is now claimed that it was actually written after Fuller's death. During the action preceding the probate of the testament Mrs. Housworth testified that Fuller had told her she would be provided for in his will, and that it had already been made and was in the hands of a trusted friend, but that Fuller died without divulging the name of that friend. Up to the time of the suit she had never learned the name of the party who was supposed to have the will in his possession.

Dr. Rodley testified during the trial that Fuller had come to his office, requesting him to sign the will as a witness and to procure other witnesses; that just as Rodley started to leave his office John Garner came in and consented to sign as a witness.

If rumors in circulation here to-night are to be believed, other respectable citizens of Chico had been requested, after Fuller's death, to sign a will in favor of Mrs. Housworth.

IN FAVOR OF MRS. CRAVEN

Judge Troutt Gives His Decision on a Demurrer.

CAN PRESS HER CLAIM AS J. G. FAIR'S WIDOW.

THE WAY OPEN FOR THE FIGHT OVER THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

Trial of the Question as to Whether It Is Genuine or Forged Is Set for Next Month.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven's hoodoo was temporarily overcome yesterday. In her fight for a share of James G. Fair's estate the decisions had gone against her repeatedly, but yesterday she had the joy of a victory. The contest was more of a skirmish than a Glencoe battle, but if she had been defeated in it the position of her opponents would have seemed impregnable. She asked for an allowance of $5000 a month as the widow of James G. Fair. The attorneys for the children of Fair contended that she was estopped from making any claim as the widow because the decree of partial distribution of the estate, which was made in 1897, declared that the only heirs were the three children who were named in the decree, and therefore by that decree it was adjudged that there was no widow. This decree still stands, Judge Troutt having decided that her petition to have it set aside was presented too late under the law.

Judge Troutt decided yesterday, however, that this decree did not settle the question as to who were the heirs of the Fair estate, and that it did not prevent her from establishing her claim as the widow for an allowance. Thus she has the privilege of proving that she is Fair's widow. The trial on the proposition of the marriage of herself and Fair is to take place next month in Judge Troutt's court. The marriage contract, which she says Fair signed, will be produced then. The Fair children have charged that she forged the contract, and handwriting experts galore will figure in the trial.

Judge Troutt in his written opinion said yesterday:

In the first and the second separate answers set forth in the amended answer of the children of decedent to the petition of Nettie R. Craven-Fair for an allowance [illegible] as the widow of decedent [illegible] that the decree of partial distribution, made within [illegible] months after the issuance of letters testamentary on their application, estops her from claiming to be the surviving wife of decedent for the reason that she knew of such application and that in said decree there is a recital that said children are the sole heirs of decedent.

The petitioner demurs to the aforesaid separate answers on several grounds, one (the first) being that such answers do not state facts sufficient to constitute defenses to the petitions.

The aforesaid contention of decedent's children is, in my opinion, unsound, for I take the view that on the hearing of the application for a partial distribution the Court had not the power under the statute to determine who were all of the persons entitled by law to share in the final distribution of decedent's estate.

Judge Troutt quoted as follows from 88 California, page [illegible]:

Proceedings for the administration of the estates of deceased persons and for their distribution to those who may be entitled thereto, including the determination of heirs of the decedent, are purely statutory. The Superior Court while sitting as a court of probate has only such powers as are given it by the statute, and such incidental powers as pertain to all courts for the purpose of enabling them to exercise the jurisdiction which is conferred upon them. Although it is a court of general jurisdiction, yet in the exercise of these powers its jurisdiction is limited and special, and whenever its acts are shown to have been in excess of the power conferred upon it or without the limits of this special jurisdiction, such acts are nugatory and have no binding effect, even upon those who have invoked its authority or submitted to its decision.

The statute permits the question of heirship and the rights and interests of all persons to be determined only upon the final distribution of the estate (sections 1634 and 1665, Code of Civil Procedure) or after the lapse of one year from the issuance of letters testamentary (Section 1664, Code of Civil Procedure. In re Grant, [illegible] California, page 1091). Hence the petitioner's demurrers to the aforesaid "separate answers" are sustained on the first ground. The demurrers are overruled as to all other grounds.

ESTATE SUED

Writing Expert Theodore Kytka this morning filed a claim for $250 against the estate of the late J. P. Turner, who was shot and killed in the Crocker building several months ago by J. P. Freeman. The suit was brought on a promissory note.

BERTILLON AGAINST DREYFUS.

He Seeks to Prove That the Prisoner Wrote the Bordereau.

SUBMITS A MASS OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.

AUDIENCE UTTERLY UNABLE TO FOLLOW THE EVIDENCE OF THE WITNESS.

Another Handwriting Authority Declares the Captain Not to Be the Author of the Document.

Special Dispatches to the "Chronicle."

RENNES, August 25.—After M. Bertillon, the handwriting expert who is at the head of the anthropometric department of the Prefecture of Police of Paris, had concluded the first installment of his so-called demonstration of the guilt of Captain Dreyfus the Dreyfusards refused to regard him as anything but the prince of quacks. They cover his remarks with ridicule and protest that the admission of his fantastic theories as evidence before the court-martial is a disgrace to France.

Nevertheless, even the Dreyfusites do not deceive themselves as to the effect of M. Bertillon's testimony or "demonstration" may have upon the judges, who, they fear, will be gulled by what the friends of Dreyfus consider spurious. All the judges have passed through the Ecole Polytechnique, the highest school of science in France, and they are thus peculiarly interested in such "evidence" as that of Bertillon. Moreover, with the aid of innumerable diagrams and specimens of writing which he submits to them, they may be able to follow his reasoning intelligibly, which is more than any member of the audience could do to-day. If the judges accept Bertillon's premises—that Dreyfus, as an expert spy, did not write in ordinary handwriting, but in close imitation, even contriving to give letters the appearance of having been traced, in order to be able to repudiate them as a forgery if detected—then the structure built upon this groundwork may be scientifically correct. Even Dreyfus, when shown Bertillon's demonstration, admitted the ingenuity and plausibility of the system, though he naturally declared that it was built upon a false basis.

A remarkable feature of Bertillon's deposition was the heat and excitement he put into what was expected to be a calm, dispassionate exposition of his theory. He thundered, shouted and waved his arms as though engaged in some terrible dispute. Once he literally shrieked, and numbers of the usual audience who had been unable to follow him and were taking the air in the courtyard rushed back into the hall, breathlessly inquiring what had happened and imagining that he was fulminating some dreadful denunciation of the accused.

Their excitement was turned into hilarity when they found he was momentarily impressing upon the judges the significance of the exact space, measured in centimeters, between two words in the bordereau. The military witnesses, all of whom sit in a bunch, leaving Colonel Picquart and M. Bertulus severely isolated, followed M. Bertillon's statement with a grave and [illegible] expression of countenance, upon which never a suspicion of a smile appeared, as though they understood every word. Evidently they had received a mot d'ordre to preserve this attitude, for without seeing the diagrams, they could not have understood any better than did the general public.

M. Bertillon when he came into court requested permission to bring in his diagrams and papers. The request was granted, and M. Bertillon retired for a moment, returning at the head of a squad composed of an infantry sergeant and four privates, all staggering under the weight of immense leather satchels, bulging with documents, charts, etc., which they deposited on the stage as a roar of laughter echoed throughout the court. Even the judges were unable to suppress a smile as they gazed on M. Bertillon's stage properties strewn over half the platform. A table was brought in, upon which the plans he was using could be placed. The witness began by saying that only intelligent men could follow his explanations.

M. Bertillon commenced his deposition at 8:20 A. M. It occupied the whole of this session and will, perhaps, occupy a good part of to-morrow's session. The courtroom presented a curious scene while M. Bertillon, whom the Dreyfusards in their most indulgent moments describe as a "dangerous maniac," spent [illegible]

DREYFUS CASE THREATENS NEW FOREIGN COMPLICATIONS.

LONDON, August 26.—The Rome correspondent of the Daily Mail says: Italy and Germany have obtained proofs that diplomatic correspondence passing between Paris and other places is systematically opened. This has been the case particularly since the campaign against Dreyfus began, the French War Office having sought proofs to strengthen the accusation against him. Questions on this subject will be asked in the Italian Parliament.

RENNES, August 25.—An interesting report comes from Paris to-night to the effect that the Italian and German Governments have been consulting on the question whether they will send to France all the documents enumerated in the bordereau and others received from that same source, with a clear and indisputable statement as to the identity of the French traitors. Italy, it is said, is quite willing to do so, but Emperor William takes the ground that Germany having definitely announced that she never had any dealing with Dreyfus does not feel called upon to further interfere in a purely French matter.

[illegible]faction of the military witnesses, who smiled and exchanged joyful glances.

The Echo de Paris announced to-day that the counsel of Dreyfus had obtained possession of certain documents mentioned in the bordereau, in Esterhazy's handwriting, which they would produce in court next week as a coup de theater. The correspondent of the Associated Press inquired as to this in competent Dreyfus quarters this afternoon. He was assured that the statement was erroneous, but was told that the defense intended, in the event of Captain Dreyfus being recondemned, to ask the German Government to communicate these documents proving his innocence, and that they had reason to believe such a request would be granted.

M. Labori to-day summoned ten witnesses for the defense.

DETAILS OF PROCEEDINGS.

Expert Gobert Declares Positively That the Bordereau Was Not Written by Dreyfus.

RENNES, August 25.—At the opening of the session of the Dreyfus court-martial to-day considerable comment was caused by the request of M. Gribelin, the principal archivist of the headquarters staff, for permission to absent himself for twenty-four hours, owing to a summons of the Minister of War, General de Marquis de Gallifet, who desired to see him in Paris. It was suggested that the Minister of War wished to refresh M. Gribelin's memory, which has been so strongly anti-Dreyfus.

Then followed the reading of a medical certificate signed by two doctors, whose names were not familiar with the audience, setting forth that Colonel du Paty de Clam is too ill to leave his bed and appear at Rennes, at which the audience was not surprised. Mme. du Paty de Clam also wrote to the Government Commissary offering a written supplementary deposition from her husband.

M. Labori, after securing the names of the doctors who signed the certificate, asked the court to appoint two well-known physicians to report officially on Du Paty de Clam's condition. Colonel Jouaust, however, declared that it was useless to do so, as the condition of the invalid was well known.

Roland Strong, correspondent of the New York Times and a member of the staff of the Observer of London, was the first witness called. He described at length the interview which he had with Esterhazy, saying the Observer offered £500 for certain documents and a confession that he wrote the bordereau as published April 25th.

Replying to the Court Mr. Strong said that Esterhazy, while admitting the authorship of the bordereau, said the documents enumerated in it had been betrayed by Dreyfus to Germany.

M. Henri Weill, a former officer of the headquarters' staff, was then called, but he was absent and his deposition was read. The facts in the case were published April 20th. M. Weill's statement in substance was that Esterhazy told him in 1894 that Dreyfus was innocent, but that this would not prevent his conviction, because he was a Jew.

A brief discussion ensued regarding the character of Colonel Picquart's former orderly, Savignaud, who testified yesterday to posting letters in May and June, 1896, addressed by the Colonel to M. Scheurer-Kestner, the former vice-president of the Senate, who was prominent in obtaining a revision of the Dreyfus case. During this discussion Savignaud protested that he had been confounded with a bandsman of the same name who had a bad character.

A former sergeant, who was at one time employed in the War Office, testified to seeing Dreyfus copying the list of railroad stations mentioned in the plan of mobilization, to which Dreyfus replied: "It is true, but I copied the list by order of Captain [illegible]." (Sensation.)

HANDWRITING EXPERTS TESTIFY.

The evidence of the handwriting experts followed. M. Gobert, after testifying to the facts published April 23d and April 24th, vehemently protested against the insinuation that he was an interested witness. The court closely followed M. Gobert's exhaustive story of his examination of the bordereau and his interview with Generals Mercier, [illegible] and Gonse. Gobert asserted that the handwriting of the bordereau was natural but that it was almost illegible, whereas Dreyfus, even when writing rapidly, always wrote most legibly.

The witness asked General Gonse if an envelope accompanied the bordereau, as he, M. Gobert, wished to see what the writer's careful calligraphy was like, explaining that the address of a letter is always in a firmer hand than its contents. General Gonse refused the request on the ground that the witness must not know the name of the addressee. The General also refused to allow the bordereau to be photographed, alleging that if the War Office photographers were allowed to photograph it all Paris would be acquainted with the bordereau the next day. (Laughter.)

Thereupon the witness remarked, "General Gonse, this is a very interesting contention."

M. Gobert then suggested that the work be intrusted to the Prefecture of Police, where M. Bertillon is the photographer. Until then, the witness said, he had never heard of M. Bertillon as a handwriting expert, saying he became an expert for [illegible] when he was called from the War Office. (Laughter.)

General Gonse, it appears from the [illegible], was greatly enraged when he learned of the result of M. Gobert's examination of the bordereau and visited the expert repeatedly. The latter always insisted on learning the name of the [illegible].

"It was not proper," said M. Gobert, [illegible] of the bordereau and that of Dreyfus, but, he added, that here were important differences which proved to him that Dreyfus was not the author of the bordereau, and his opinion had since been confirmed "because it was now proved the bordereau was the work of Esterhazy."

Replying to the court M. Gobert suggested that the judges compare the bordereau with a letter admitted to be in Esterhazy's handwriting and dated from Rouen, August 17, 1894, and with documents written by the prisoner.

"You will then unmistakably recognize," said M. Gobert, "that the bordereau is in Esterhazy's handwriting and not in the handwriting of Dreyfus." (Great sensation.)

The witness at this juncture identified the bordereau as the same which was submitted to him, and he proceeded to make comparison with the document and with letters admittedly written by Esterhazy, saying that, while the resemblance was not apparent in Dreyfus' handwriting, in Esterhazy's there were marked peculiarities of punctuation and the manner of beginning lines which were also noticeable in the bordereau, but which were not found in the prisoner's calligraphy.

Proceeding, the witness traversed the old ground of the peculiarities of the tracing paper which it is known Esterhazy used and said the date of the bordereau must be July 24, 1894. The expert refused, in reply to a question by the court, to admit that the bordereau was written in a disguised hand. He said it had been written with great rapidity, precluding all idea of doctoring or tracing.

General Gonse asked permission to question M. Gobert, and said: "In what army list did you look for the name of Dreyfus?"

M. Gobert—I used the list which is generally kept in business houses.

The General pointed out that this list did not give the information claimed by M. Gobert, but the latter maintained that he had stated nothing but the pure and simple truth.

General Gonse having alluded to certain undesirable acquaintances formed by M. Gobert, the latter replied amid a sensation in court: "I emphatically protest against the insinuations of General Gonse. There is not a single word of truth in what he says."

There was a further dispute between General Gonse and M. Gobert over circumstances in connection with the latter's examination of the bordereau. M. Gobert said that Colonel d'Abbeville was present, but the latter promptly advanced and said he had never seen M. Gobert before to-day, adding: "If M. Gobert's other recollections are as exact as this the Court will draw its own conclusions." (Murmurs of disapproval.)

Dreyfus here declared in the most positive manner that he had never been in the Bank of France, where M. Gobert was employed, or had relations with any one there. The prisoner asserted that his sole desire was to know the truth. He admitted he had been engaged in various financial operations, but said he had never asked for either written or verbal information from the Bank of France.

BERTILLON PUZZLES JUDGES.

There was a general movement of curiosity when M. Bertillon, the well-known anthropometist, or specialist in the measurements of the human body, was called. M. Bertillon prefaced his evidence by saying his explanations would be understood only by a very limited number, and therefore he asked the court to permit him to refer to documents which he had brought in order to make his evidence more intelligible. The specialist then unpacked packages of photographs, plans, etc., and another table was brought in to hold the mass of papers produced.

In monotonous tones M. Bertillon proceeded, in the manner of a schoolboy reciting a lesson, to demonstrate technically how he reached the conviction of Dreyfus' guilt, recalling the facts published April 21st. He said he proposed to prove to the court,

First—That the bordereau was a doctored document.

Second—That it could have only been manufactured by the prisoner.

Third—That it had been written in a free hand by means of a key word placed beneath tracing paper in such a way as to be quite visible.

The witness, continuing, declared Dreyfus did not have recourse to imitating Esterhazy's free-hand writing because it required too long study, and he used the tracing process because it is easier to learn and more likely to be successful.

With the view of demonstrating his meaning, M. Bertillon handed round photographs of the bordereau, etc.

During the course of the demonstration the specialist advanced to the judges' bench and with his finger pointed out illustrations of his theory.

MM. Demange and Labori, the Judges and others gathered in a group around the expert.

Dreyfus appeared to be stupefied by this comparatively incomprehensible jargon, and many of the audience left the court.

Suddenly the attention of those remaining in the hall was riveted by the cryptographic remark, enunciated by M. Bertillon in loud tones:

"We clearly have before us a fabricated document. The one word always rests on the other with a divergence of 1.25 millimeters and 7.75 millimeters. That is a phenomenon which is unnatural."

M. Labori watched the specialist for a few moments and then returned to his seat, holding up both hands and exclaiming: "It is most extraordinary."

M. Bertillon continued his explanations and caused such a whirl in the brains of his hearers that Colonel Jouaust finally remarked: "We must have a few minutes' rest."

EXPERT EXPLAINS BORDEREAU.

When the session was resumed, M. Bertillon made further demonstrations. He compared words of the bordereau with words in the documents of comparison. Leaning on the judges' bench he placed the entire bordereau over a graphic chart and proceeded to show that by doing so Dreyfus succeeded in formulating the principal rules which served to guide him in making his forgery, remarking that any copyist in possession of a key to these rules could learn to reproduce the entire bordereau.

The witness, continuing, proceeded to demonstrate the plausibility of this. "When persons are accused," he said, "it is not sufficient to meet the charge with denials, but it is necessary to prove that [illegible] have not done what they are charged [illegible]

[illegible] punctuated the queer expressions of the anthropometrist with peals of laughter. The members of the court-martial evidently tried hard to understand, while Dreyfus appeared fatigued, but endeavored to follow the arguments.

"My theory," continued the witness, "was in 1894 considered by the Minister of War to be favorable to the prisoner. It the defense accepted it, the long magisterial examination would have to be recommenced, and so ——"

Here the witness raised his voice and struck the table with his fist.

"When the word 'grille' (perforated card used for ciphers) was uttered at the court-martial of 1894 the prisoner's face contracted. When I spoke of the fabrication of the bordereau he exclaimed, 'Oh, the wretch! He saw me write, then.' I did not hear the remark, but when it was repeated to me it was a revelation, for if innocent the word 'fabrication' would have delighted instead of frightened him."

Dreyfus listened impassively to this tirade.

The audience again became animated when M. Bertillon announced that he would give a practical demonstration of how the bordereau was fabricated by means of a keyboard.

The witness, seated at a table, began to copy the bordereau on a sheet of paper similar in character to the famous document. After a quarter of an hour Colonel Jouaust suggested that it was not necessary to finish the demonstration, and M. Bertillon rose and showed the judges the result of his labor, remarking: "I was in a bad position."

The audience concluded from this remark that the experiment had not succeeded, and the expression on the judges' faces seemed to bear out this opinion. The court adjourned for the day at 11:15 A. M.

Bertillon Still on the Stand.

RENNES, August 26.—The opening of the sixth session of the third week of the second trial by court-martial of Captain Alfred Dreyfus of the artillery, charged with treason, occurred at an early hour this morning. M. Bertillon, the handwriting expert, resumed his testimony regarding the handwriting of Dreyfus and his reasons for believing the artillery officer guilty.

DENIAL FROM BERLIN.

Statements Made by a Witness at Rennes Proved False.

BERLIN, August 25.—The correspondent of the Associated Press was officially informed to-day that the statement made on the witness stand at Rennes yesterday by M. Mortian de Muller, a friend of M. Beaurepaire (the former Judge of the civil section of the Court of Cassation) that he had seen a newspaper, the Libre Parole, bearing a postage stamp, in Emperor William's bedroom at Potsdam and that on the paper were certain words in German, meaning "Dreyfus has been arrested," could not possibly be true.

It was pointed out that his majesty invariably puts his desk in order before leaving his room and that nothing is left lying around or open, but if he should fail to do so it is the duty of his valet to put things away. Besides, it was also said, the Emperor does not read whole newspapers, but only marked clippings which later are incorporated in scrap books.

New Mystery in Dreyfus Case.

PARIS, August 25.—A dispatch from Lyons says a bag has been found in the river Rhine there containing a paper with this penciled inscription: "Labori to Lorimier, Basle! Nothing will be done. Dreyfus is innocent. Voluntary suicide. Orders executed."

The bag was handed over to the police, but no explanation in the matter has been forthcoming.

There is a possibility that the letter is a hoax. Lorimier was the late Lieutenant-Colonel Henry's secretary and he committed suicide at Basle, Switzerland.

New Documents in Dreyfus Case.

PARIS, August 25.—The Minister of War, General Marquis de Gallifet, has transmitted the dossier of the Tavernier inquiry into the conduct of Colonel du Paty de Clam to the court-martial at Rennes, as requested by Maitre Labori, leading counsel for the defense, on Wednesday last.

GUERIN SHOWS A BLACK FLAG.

The Besieged Anti-Semite Also Fires Upon the Police.

PARIS, August 26, 6:30 A. M.—All was quiet in the vicinity of Rue Chabrol throughout the night, but at 4 o'clock this morning a black flag appeared in the attic window. Some days ago M. Guerin stated that in the event of his death the party would hoist the black flag. It is known that two of the party have been ill, one seriously from congestion of the lungs, but M. Guerin resumed watch on the roof at 5 A. M.

PARIS, August 25.—M. Guerin and his followers created some excitement this afternoon by distributing from the windows of the building circulars denouncing the Jews. When the police prevented the people from picking up the circulars the Guerinites bombarded the police with bricks. The police to-day deluged the walls of the neighborhood of M. Guerin's fort with disinfectants owing to the abominable stench since the water supply was cut off.

At a late hour this evening a reporter from the Anti-Juif tried to revictual the fortress, but was prevented by the police. M. Guerin, greatly incensed, fired two shots at a policeman. Neither reached the latter, but the incident will probably precipitate matters.

LONDON, August 26.—A special to the Daily News from Paris states that the Government of France has reason to believe that the [illegible] of Paris is the owner of the house in Rue Chabrol in which M. Guerin is located and that M. Guerin is only a man of straw, who is acting for her. This, according to the special, perhaps explains the long suffering patience on the part of the Government.

RENNES, August 25.—An interesting report comes from Paris to-night to the

...never had any dealing with Dreyfus does not feel called upon to further interfere in a purely French matter.

SUBMITS A MASS OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.

AUDIENCE UTTERLY UNABLE TO FOLLOW THE EVIDENCE OF THE WITNESS.

Another Handwriting Authority Declares the Captain Not to Be the Author of the Document.

Special Dispatches to the "Chronicle."

RENNES, August 25.—After M. Bertillon, the handwriting expert who is at the head of the anthropometric department of the Prefecture of Police of Paris, had concluded the first installment of his so-called demonstration of the guilt of Captain Dreyfus the Dreyfusards refused to regard him as anything but the prince of quacks. They cover his remarks with ridicule and protest that the admission of his fantastic theories as evidence before the court-martial is a disgrace to France.

Nevertheless, even the Dreyfusites do not deceive themselves as to the effect of M. Bertillon's testimony or "demonstration" may have upon the judges, who, they fear, will be gulled by what the friends of Dreyfus consider spurious. All the judges have passed through the Ecole Polytechnique, the highest school of science in France, and they are thus peculiarly interested in such "evidence" as that of Bertillon. Moreover, with the aid of innumerable diagrams and specimens of writing which he submits to them, they may be able to follow his reasoning intelligibly, which is more than any member of the audience could do to-day. If the judges accept Bertillon's premises—that Dreyfus, as an expert spy, did not write in ordinary handwriting, but in close imitation, even contriving to give letters the appearance of having been traced, in order to be able to repudiate them as a forgery if detected—then the structure built upon this groundwork may be scientifically correct. Even Dreyfus, when shown Bertillon's demonstration, admitted the ingenuity and plausibility of the system, though he naturally declared that it was built upon a false basis.

A remarkable feature of Bertillon's deposition was the heat and excitement he put into what was expected to be a calm, dispassionate exposition of his theory. He thundered, shouted and waved his arms as though engaged in some terrible dispute. Once he literally shrieked, and numbers of the usual audience who had been unable to follow him and were taking the air in the courtyard rushed back into the hall, breathlessly inquiring what had happened and imagining that he was fulminating some dreadful denunciation of the accused.

Their excitement was turned into hilarity when they found he was momentarily impressing upon the judges the significance of the exact space, measured in centimeters, between two words in the bordereau. The military witnesses, all of whom sit in a bunch, leaving Colonel Picquart and M. Bertulus severely isolated, followed M. Bertillon's statement with a grave and wise expression of countenance, upon which never a suspicion of a smile appeared, as though they understood every word. Evidently they had received a mot d'ordre to preserve this attitude, for without seeing the diagrams, they could not have understood any better than did the general public.

M. Bertillon when he came into court requested permission to bring in his diagrams and papers. The request was granted, and M. Bertillon retired for a moment, returning at the head of a squad composed of an infantry sergeant and four privates, all staggering under the weight of immense leather satchels, bulging with documents, charts, etc., which they deposited on the stage as a roar of laughter echoed throughout the court. Even the judges were unable to suppress a smile as they gazed on M. Bertillon's stage properties strewn over half the platform. A table was brought in, upon which the plans he was using could be placed. The witness began by saying that only intelligent men could follow his explanations.

M. Bertillon commenced his deposition at 8:30 A. M. It occupied the whole of this session and will, perhaps, occupy a good part of to-morrow's session. The courtroom presented a curious scene while M. Bertillon, whom the Dreyfusards in their most indulgent moments describe as a "dangerous maniac," spent the three remaining hours of the session in explaining, in unintelligible terms, his "infallible system" of proving Dreyfus the author of the bordereau. The majority of the public, however, were utterly unable to comprehend his theories.

M. Gobert, an expert of the Bank of France, the first witness called to-day, gave strong testimony to show that Dreyfus did not write the bordereau. M. Gobert repeated the evidence he had given before the Court of Cassation. He gave his testimony in a clear, convincing manner and was most emphatic in attributing the bordereau to Esterhazy.

After answering questions of the judges M. Gobert declared his conviction that the bordereau was written in running natural hand and said there was no tracing or other trickery.

General Gonse asked to be confronted with M. Gobert and put a number of questions, over one or two of which the witness stumbled to the infinite satisfaction of the military witnesses, who smiled and exchanged joyful glances.

The Echo de Paris announced to-day that the counsel of Dreyfus had obtained possession of certain documents mentioned in the bordereau, in Esterhazy's handwriting, which they would produce in court next week as a coup de théâtre. The correspondent of the Associated Press inquired as to this in competent Dreyfus quarters this afternoon. He was assured that the statement was erroneous, but was told that the defense intended, in the event of Captain Dreyfus being recondemned, to ask the German Government to communicate these documents proving his innocence, and that they had reason to believe such a request would be granted.

M. Labori to-day summoned ten witnesses for the defense.

DETAILS OF PROCEEDINGS.

Expert Gobert Declares Positively That the Bordereau Was Not Written by Dreyfus.

RENNES, August 25.—At the opening of the session of the Dreyfus court-martial to-day considerable comment was caused by the request of M. Gribelin, the principal archivist of the headquarters staff, for permission to absent himself for twenty-four hours, owing to a summons of the Minister of War, General de Marquis de Galliffet, who desired to see him in Paris. It was suggested that the Minister of War wished to refresh M. Gribelin's memory, which has been so strongly anti-Dreyfus.

Then followed the reading of a medical certificate signed by two doctors, whose names were not familiar with the audience, setting forth that Colonel du Paty de Clam is too ill to leave his bed and appear at Rennes, at which the audience was not surprised. Mme. du Paty de Clam also wrote to the Government Commissary offering a writing supplementary or position from her husband.

M. Labori, after securing the names of the doctors who signed the certificate, asked the court to appoint two well-known physicians to report officially on Du Paty de Clam's condition. Colonel Jouaust, however, declared that it was useless to do so, as the condition of the invalid was well known.

Roland Strong, correspondent of the New York Times and a member of the staff of the Observer of London, was the first witness called. He described at length the interviews which he had with Esterhazy, saying the Observer offered £500 for certain documents and a confession that he wrote the bordereau as published April 25th.

Replying to the Court Mr. Strong said that Esterhazy, while admitting the authorship of the bordereau, said the documents enumerated in it had been betrayed by Dreyfus to Germany.

M. Henri Weill, a former officer of the headquarters' staff, was then called, but he was absent and his deposition was read. The facts in the case were published April 20th. M. Weill's statement in substance was that Esterhazy told him in 1894 that Dreyfus was innocent, but that this would not prevent his conviction, because he was a Jew.

A brief discussion ensued regarding the character of Colonel Picquart's former orderly, Savignaud, who testified yesterday to posting letters in May and June, 1896, addressed by the Colonel to M. Scheurer-Kestner, the former vice-president of the Senate, who was prominent in obtaining a revision of the Dreyfus case. During this discussion Savignaud protested that he had been confounded with a bandsman of the same name who had a bad character.

A former sergeant, who was at one time employed in the War Office, testified to seeing Dreyfus copying the list of railroad stations mentioned in the plan of mobilization, to which Dreyfus replied: "It is true, but I copied the list by order of Captain Besle." [Sensation.]

HANDWRITING EXPERTS TESTIFY.

The evidence of the handwriting experts followed. M. Gobert, after testifying to the facts published April 23d and April 24th, vehemently protested against the insinuation that he was an interested witness. The court closely followed M. Gobert's exhaustive story of his examination of the bordereau and his interview with Generals Mercier, Boisdeffre and Gonse. Gobert asserted that the handwriting of the bordereau was natural but that it was almost illegible, whereas Dreyfus, even when writing rapidly, always wrote most legibly.

The witness asked General Gonse if an envelope accompanied the bordereau, as he, M. Gobert, wished to see what the writer's careful caligraphy was like, explaining that the address of a letter is always in a firmer hand than its contents. General Gonse refused the request on the ground that the witness must not know the name of the addressee. The General also refused to allow the bordereau to be photographed, alleging that if the War Office photographers were allowed to photograph it all Paris would be acquainted with the bordereau the next day. [Laughter.]

Thereupon the witness remarked, "General Gonse, this is a very interesting confession."

M. Gobert then suggested that the work be intrusted to the Prefecture of Police, where M. Bertillon is the photographer. Until then, the witness said, he had never heard of M. Bertillon as a handwriting expert, saying he became an expert for this special occasion, when he was called into the War Office. [Laughter.]

General Gonse, it appears from the testimony, was greatly enraged when he learned of the result of M. Gobert's examination of the bordereau and visited the expert repeatedly. The latter always insisted on learning the name of the suspect.

"It was not proper," said M. Gobert, "for me to accuse any one without being perfectly cognizant of the facts, especially in circumstances of so grave a nature. I would not accuse any one anonymously, for to do so would be contrary to the law."

Amid laughter in court the witness described how, from an examination of an official report on Dreyfus, from which Dreyfus' name had been removed, M. Gobert had the indelicate satisfaction of telling General Gonse the name of the officer they wanted to arrest. It was after M. Gobert had refused to incriminate Dreyfus that M. Bertillon was intrusted with the examination of the bordereau, and after a few hours' study M. Bertillon positively attributed the bordereau to Dreyfus.

From that time forward M. Gobert heard no more of the Dreyfus case. He was not asked to submit a report, but described to the then Minister of Justice, M. Guerin, the circumstances in the case.

M. Guerin counseled the witness, "Intimated that these were soldiers' affairs, which did not concern him as chief of the civil judiciary."

BORDEREAU NOT DREYFUS' WORK.

Colonel Jouaust asked M. Gobert for a more definite criticism of the bordereau, and the witness replied that he noticed certain similarities between the handwriting of the bordereau and that of Dreyfus, but, he added, that there were important differences which proved to him that Dreyfus was not the author of the bordereau, and his opinion had since been confirmed "because it was now proved the bordereau was the work of Esterhazy."

Replying to the court M. Gobert suggested that the judges compare the bordereau with a letter admitted to be in Esterhazy's handwriting and dated from Rouen, August 17, 1894, and with documents written by the prisoner.

"You will then unmistakably recognize," said M. Gobert, "that the bordereau is in Esterhazy's handwriting and not in the handwriting of Dreyfus." [Great sensation.]

The witness at this juncture identified the bordereau as the same which was submitted to him, and he proceeded to make comparison with the document and with letters admittedly written by Esterhazy, saying that, while the resemblance was not apparent in Dreyfus' handwriting, in Esterhazy's there were marked peculiarities of punctuation and the manner of beginning lines which were also noticeable in the bordereau, but which were not found in the prisoner's caligraphy.

Proceeding, the witness traversed the old ground of the peculiarities of the tracing paper which it is known Esterhazy used and said the date of the bordereau must be July 24, 1894. The expert refused, in reply to a question by the court, to admit that the bordereau was written in a disguised hand. He said it had been written with great rapidity, precluding all idea of doctoring or tracing.

General Gonse asked permission to question M. Gobert, and said: "In what army list did you look for the name of Dreyfus?"

M. Gobert—I used the list which is generally kept in business houses.

The General pointed out that this list did not give the information claimed by M. Gobert, but the latter maintained that he had stated nothing but the pure and simple truth.

General Gonse having alluded to certain undesirable acquaintances formed by M. Gobert, the latter replied amid a sensation in court: "I emphatically protest against the insinuations of General Gonse. There is not a single word of truth in what he says."

There was a further dispute between General Gonse and M. Gobert over circumstances in connection with the latter's examination of the bordereau. M. Gobert said that Colonel d'Aboville was present, but the latter promptly advanced and said he had never seen M. Gobert before to-day, adding: "If M. Gobert's other recollections are as exact as this the Court will draw its own conclusions." [Murmurs of disapproval.]

Dreyfus here declared in the most positive manner that he had never been at the Bank of France, where M. Gobert was employed, or had relations with any one there. The prisoner asserted that his sole desire was to know the truth. He admitted he had been engaged in various financial operations, but said he had never asked for either written or verbal information from the Bank of France.

BERTILLON PUZZLES JUDGES.

There was a general movement of curiosity when M. Bertillon, the well-known anthropometer, or specialist in the measurements of the human body, was called. M. Bertillon prefaced his evidence by saying his explanations would be understood only by a very limited number, and therefore he asked the court to permit him to refer to documents which he had brought in order to make his evidence more intelligible. The specialist then unpacked packages of photographs, plans, etc., and another table was brought in to hold the mass of papers produced.

In monotonous tones M. Bertillon proceeded, in the manner of a schoolboy reciting a lesson, to demonstrate technically how he reached the conviction of Dreyfus' guilt, reciting the facts published April 21st. He said he proposed to prove to the court,

First—That the bordereau was a doctored document.

Second—That it could have only been manufactured by the prisoner.

Third—That it had been written in a free hand by means of a key word placed beneath tracing paper in such a way as to be quite visible.

The witness, continuing, declared Dreyfus did not have recourse to imitating Esterhazy's free-hand writing because it required too long study, and he used the tracing process because it is easier to learn and more likely to be successful.

With the view of demonstrating his meaning, M. Bertillon handed round photographs of the bordereau, etc.

During the course of the demonstration the specialist advanced to the judges' bench and with his finger pointed out the intricacies of his theory.

MM. Demange and Labori, the judges and others gathered in a group around the expert.

Dreyfus appeared to be stupefied by the comparatively incomprehensible jargon, and many of the audience left the court.

Suddenly the attention of those remaining in the hall was riveted by the cryptographic remark, enunciated by M. Bertillon in loud tones:

"We clearly have before us a fabricated document. The one word always rests on the other with a divergence of 1.25 millimeters and 2.5 millimeters. That is a phenomenon which is unnatural."

M. Labori watched the specialist for a few moments and then returned to his seat, holding up both hands and exclaiming: "It is most extraordinary."

M. Bertillon continued his explanations and caused such a whirl in the brains of his hearers that Colonel Jouaust finally remarked: "We must have a few minutes' rest."

EXPERT EXPLAINS BORDEREAU.

When the session was resumed, M. Bertillon made further demonstrations. He compared words of the bordereau with words in the documents of comparison. Leaning on the judges' bench he placed the entire bordereau over a graphic canvas and proceeded to show that by doing so Dreyfus succeeded in formulating the principal rules which served to guide him in making his joining marks, remarking that any copyist in possession of a key to these rules could learn to reproduce the entire bordereau.

The witness, continuing, proceeded to demonstrate the [illegible] of this. "When persons are accused," he said, "it is not sufficient to meet the charge with denials, but it is necessary to prove that they have not done what they are charged with. In this case the handwriting was disguised. There is, therefore, presumptive proof that the prisoner is guilty."

After this M. Bertillon pointed out that the questions in the bordereau were traced in the same manner, and added: "I had reached this point in my experiments when I was summoned to the Cherche Midi prison by Major d'Ormescheville. The Major explained that he wished my personal opinion on cryptographic methods, sympathetic inks, etc., which might help the family of Dreyfus in corresponding with him. The request was partly due to the fact that a number of letters addressed to the prisoner by his family had been received by the officials.

"During the course of the interview Major d'Ormescheville produced one of these letters. I had hardly set my eyes on it when I was astounded to notice the same kind of a negative 'B' with which I had been so struck. It was in a letter from Mme. Dreyfus."

The specialist pointed out how he found the same peculiarities of Dreyfus' handwriting in the letters of other members of his family, and proceeded to give a long and perfectly unintelligible exposition, designed to demonstrate that this proved the guilt of the prisoner.

The audience, quite in the dark regarding the meaning of the technicalities,

...give a practical demonstration of how the bordereau was fabricated by means of a keyboard.

The witness, seated at a table, began to copy the bordereau on a sheet of paper similar in character to the famous document. After a quarter of an hour Colonel Jouaust suggested that it was not necessary to finish the demonstration, and M. Bertillon rose and showed the judges the result of his labor, remarking: "I was in a bad position."

The audience concluded from this remark that the experiment had not succeeded, and the expression on the judges' faces seemed to bear out this opinion. The court adjourned for the day at 11:45 A. M.

Bertillon Still on the Stand.

RENNES, August 26.—The opening of the sixth session of the third week of the second trial by court-martial of Captain Alfred Dreyfus of the artillery, charged with treason, occurred at an early hour this morning. M. Bertillon, the handwriting expert, resumed his testimony regarding the handwriting of Dreyfus and his reasons for believing the artillery officer guilty.

DENIAL FROM BERLIN.

Statements Made by a Witness at Rennes Declared False.

BERLIN, August 25.—The correspondent of the Associated Press was officially informed to-day that the statement made on the witness stand at Rennes yesterday by M. Morlinn de Muller, a friend of M. Beaurepaire (the former Judge of the civil section of the Court of Cassation) that he had seen a newspaper, the Libre Parole, bearing a postage stamp, in Emperor William's bedroom at Potsdam and that on the paper were certain words in German, meaning "Dreyfus has been arrested," could not possibly be true.

It was pointed out that his majesty invariably puts his desk in order before leaving his room and that nothing is left lying around or open, but if he should fail to do so it is the duty of his valet to put things away. Besides, it was also said, the Emperor does not read whole newspapers, but only marked clippings which later are incorporated in scrap books.

New Mystery in Dreyfus Case.

PARIS, August 25.—A dispatch from Lyons says a bag has been found in the river Rhine there containing a paper with this penciled inscription: "Labori to Loramier, Basle: Nothing will be done. Dreyfus is innocent. Voluntary suicide. Orders executed."

The bag was handed over to the police, but no explanation in the matter has been forthcoming.

There is a possibility that the letter is a hoax. Loramier was the late Lieutenant-Colonel Henry's secretary and he committed suicide at Basle, Switzerland.

New Documents in Dreyfus Case.

PARIS, August 25.—The Minister of War, General Marquis de Galliffet, has transmitted the dossier of the Tavernier inquiry into the conduct of Colonel du Paty de Clam to the court-martial at Rennes, as requested by Maître Labori, leading counsel for the defense, on Wednesday last.

GUERIN SHOWS A BLACK FLAG.

The Besieged Anti-Semite Also Fires Upon the Police.

PARIS, August 26, 6:30 A. M.—All was quiet in the vicinity of Rue Chabrol throughout the night, but at 4 o'clock this morning a black flag appeared in the attic window. Some days ago M. Guerin stated that in the event of his death the party would hoist the black flag. It is known that two of the party have been ill, one seriously from congestion of the lungs, but M. Guerin resumed watch on the roof at 5 A. M.

PARIS, August 25.—M. Guerin and his followers created some excitement this afternoon by distributing from the windows of the building circulars denouncing the Jews. When the police prevented the people from picking up the circulars the Guerinites bombarded the police with bricks. The police today deluged the walls of the neighborhood of M. Guerin's fort with disinfectants owing to the abominable stench since the water supply was cut off.

At a late hour this evening a reporter from the Anti-Juif tried to victual the fortress, but was prevented by the police. M. Guerin, greatly incensed, fired two shots at a policeman. Neither reached the latter, but the incident will probably precipitate matters.

LONDON, August 26.—A special to the Daily News from Paris states that the Government of France has reason to believe that the Countess of Paris is the owner of the house in Rue Chabrol in which M. Guerin is located and that M. Guerin is only a man of straw, who is acting for her. This, according to the special, perhaps explains the long suffering patience on the part of the Government.

HIDING BEHIND DEAD MEN.

The Weakness of the Prosecution of Dreyfus Apparent.

DRAMATIC SCENES IN THE COURT-MARTIAL.

A CUIRASSIER CAPTAIN GIVES STRONG TESTIMONY FOR THE PRISONER.

He Tells Facts Concerning the First Trial Which Contradict the Evidence of Maurel.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

RENNES, August 26.—"Dead men tell no tales." This is the barricade behind which General Mercier and the general staff have intrenched themselves. But there is a weak point in their defense—Colonel du Paty de Clam—and the military clique know it and are striving to the utmost to keep him out of M. Labori's clutches. If they can prevent Du Paty de Clam, who is now called the "Sphinx of the Dreyfus affair," from appearing at the tribune they can effectively put the silence of the tomb between truth and justice. M. Labori is fighting tooth and nail to drag him into court, but Colonel Jouaust persists in refusing him the necessary assistance. He declines to send reputable doctors to officially report on the state of Du Paty de Clam's health, which every Dreyfusite firmly believes is only diplomatically affected and that he will recover quickly enough after the trial.

While, however, the friends of Dreyfus believe Du Paty de Clam is not seriously ill, they feel a secret dread, which is expressed in the significant remark, not infrequently heard: "Sandherr is dead, Henry committed suicide and Du Paty de Clam will die."

The confrontation to-day of Colonel Maurel, Captain Freystaetter and General Mercier was an instructive and dramatic exposure of the fraud and dishonesty of the general staff, which the absence of Du Paty de Clam alone prevented being complete. The defense might demand that a commission be sent to examine Du Paty de Clam on his sick bed. But M. Labori and Demange despair of obtaining satisfactory results therefrom. They must to bare Du Paty de Clam in court and turn the screws of the rack themselves.

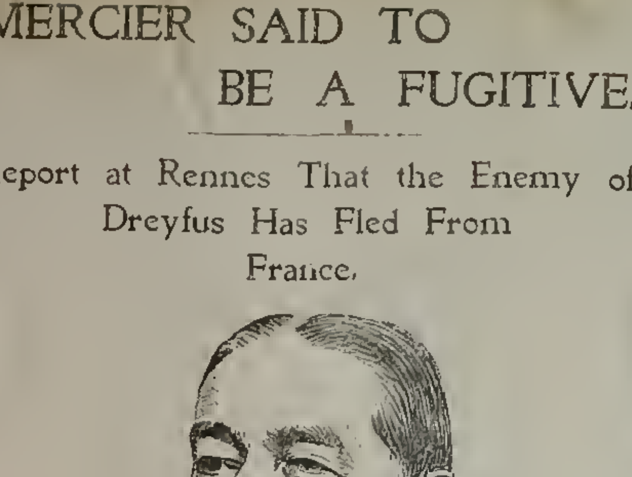
M. Bertillon talked for ten hours, during which time even Colonel Jouaust felt constrained more than once to bring him to the point. Then M. Labori popped a few questions, which, when the president of the court-martial condescended to admit them were answered in an offhand manner by the witness, who thought fit to show contempt by barely looking at M. Labori and to proceed at the same time to pack up his voluminous parcels and diagrams. Captain Dreyfus also spoke a few words, repudiating Bertillon's direct denunciations, and then a military witness was put up to explain to the judges what Bertillon really meant. He only managed to be equally obscure.

To-day's session tore the last shred of credit from Mercier, but added the name of Freystaetter to the little roll of heroes who have risked everything in the defense of Dreyfus. [illegible]

[illegible]

MERCIER SAID TO BE A FUGITIVE.

Report at Rennes That the Enemy of Dreyfus Has Fled From France.



PARIS, August 26.—Petit Bleu prints a telegram from Rennes saying that it is rumored there that General Mercier has fled from that city and is on his way to the German frontier. It is reported here that the Isle of Jersey, and not Germany, is his destination. Neither story can be confirmed. It is doubtful if Mercier can leave France, for he has been closely watched by the Government and it is thought that his arrest would follow any attempt at flight.

[illegible] Captain Freystaetter, in a loud voice told exactly what the documents of the dossier were and how Colonel Maurel not only read those documents, but made comments on them. This practically called Colonel Maurel a thorough liar, and the Colonel glared at the Captain ferociously. Captain Freystaetter, however, was not disconcerted and his words, spoken in a tone of candor and fearlessness, must have carried conviction to every hearer.

General Mercier then asked to be heard and placed himself by the side of Maurel. The forbidding appearance of these two men, both dressed in civilian attire, was in striking contrast with the erect, unflinching attitude of Freystaetter, who wore the smart uniform of a Captain of artillery, with medals on his breast. It was a remarkable scene.

EVENTS OF COURT-MARTIAL.

Bertillon Wearies Judges and Audience With His Tiresome Argument — Exciting Scenes in Trial.

RENNES, August 26.—The reappearance on the stage of the Dreyfus court-martial to-day of the prophet of M. Bertillon, the distinguished anthropometer, was the signal of an outburst of hilarity on the part of the audience.

[illegible]

the bordereau "in order to make out that he was the victim of a plot."

Asked his opinion of the letter from Mathieu Dreyfus, called the "blotting-pad letter," from which the specialist alleged the prisoner took the key-word for his work on the bordereau, M. Bertillon replied that he had no opinion on the subject, but he maintained the letter had been written by the same system as the bordereau.

"That is my hypothesis," said the witness. "Many similar ones can be found." (Murmurs of disapproval.)

M. Labori asked how M. Bertillon reconciled the result of the present experiments, namely that the bordereau is written by Dreyfus, tracing Esterhazy's handwriting with his opinion in 1894, that the bordereau was written by Dreyfus, unless it had been a most crediable forgery. To this M. Bertillon replied that it was only a hypothesis, whereupon M. Labori remarked that the forgery was then of such a nature as to constitute proof in favor of Dreyfus, yet to-day it is made proof against him.

Continuing, counsel said: "Since the witness admits Esterhazy has written in the same mathematical methods as Dreyfus, why has he attributed the bordereau to Dreyfus rather than to Esterhazy?"

M. Bertillon—It was on Dreyfus' pad that the key word "interest" was found, [illegible]

[illegible]

FORMER JUDGE TESTIFIES.

[illegible]

WITNESSES IN CONFLICT.

[illegible]

words as being out of order and M. Labori resumed his seat in silence. This incident which terminated the evidence of Captain Freystaetter caused an immense impression on the audience. The Dreyfusards were jubilant.

M. Paraf-Javal, a draughtsman, was called for the defense. He was brought a blackboard, upon which he proposed to refute a portion of M. Bertillon's problems. The witness said, amid laughter, that the demonstration would occupy no less than two hours. He then proceeded to chalk a number of calligraphic signs on the blackboard and presented to the court photographs of the writing of the bordereau and the prisoner's handwriting, pointing out their dissimilarities and entering into elaborate explanations, which were not concluded when, at 11:30 A. M. the court adjourned.

GERMANS TAKE A DARK VIEW.

Believe That France's Stability Is Threatened by the Dreyfus Case.

BERLIN, August 26.—The Dreyfus case holds Germany's attention to some extent. The anarchist revolt and the murder of French officers in Africa are pointed to as proofs of the increasing national disintegration of France. Emperor William said Monday, while conversing with Generals Portker and Caprivi, during the parade at Maychure: "Revolution is in full swing in Paris."

The comment of the press of every stripe of political faith on the matter is about the same, many expressing doubt whether France can recover. The Kreuz Zeitung asks: "Who will be the savior to rescue France from perdition?" adding: "But, of course, the disintegrating influence of Judaism has already penetrated too far."

The Tageblatt expresses doubt as to whether the Paris exposition of 1900 will really be held. It claims that a majority of the Germans who had intended to go will now stay at home, as they are not certain that life and property would be safe in France.

ESTERHAZY TRIED TO SELL WORTHLESS PAPER.

Germans Say the Documents Mentioned in the Bordereau Were Never Offered to Them.

BERLIN, August 26.—Considering the freedom of the French references to German plotting and the dealings of the German Embassy officials with French spies, it is repeatedly suggested that it is Germany's duty to publish documents proving Dreyfus' innocence. The German Government, however, has plainly intimated that it will take no further official cognizance of the case beyond Chancellor von Buelow's declaration in the Reichstag that Germany had no dealings with Dreyfus.

As a matter of fact Germany does not possess any Dreyfus documents. Military circles believe that Esterhazy obtained from Henry valuable information which Germany purchased from the former. They also say that Esterhazy frequently endeavored to sell worthless information, which was invariably rejected. On one thing all are agreed, namely, that the documents mentioned in the bordereau were never offered to Berlin.

SAN FRANCISCO READY TO CATCH ROGUES

Bertillon System of Identification Ab[out] to Be Introduced by Police Authorities

[illegible]

Special Dispatches to the "Chronicle."

RENNES, August 26.—"Dead men tell no tales." This is the barricade behind which General Mercier and the general staff have intrenched themselves. But there is a weak point in their defense—Colonel du Paty de Clam—and the military clique know it and are striving to the utmost to keep him out of M. Labori's clutches. If they can prevent Du Paty de Clam, who is now called the "sick man of the Dreyfus affair," from appearing at the witness bar they can effectively put the silence of the tomb between truth and justice. M. Labori is fighting tooth and nail to drag him into court, but Colonel Jouaust persists in refusing him the necessary assistance. He declines to send reputable doctors to officially report on the state of Du Paty de Clam's health, which every Dreyfusite firmly believes is only diplomatically affected and that he will recover quickly enough after the trial.

While, however, the friends of Dreyfus believe Du Paty de Clam is not seriously ill, they feel a secret dread, which is expressed in the significant remark, not infrequently heard: "Sandherr is dead, Henry committed suicide and Du Paty de Clam will die."

The confrontation to-day of Colonel Maurel, Captain Freystaetter and General Mercier was an instructive and dramatic exposure of the fraud and dishonesty of the general staff, which the absence of Du Paty de Clam alone prevented being complete. The defense might demand that a commission be sent to examine Du Paty de Clam on his sick bed. But M. Labori and Demange despair of obtaining satisfactory results therefrom. They want to have Du Paty de Clam in court and turn the screws of the rack themselves.

M. Bertillon talked for two hours, during which time even Colonel Jouaust felt constrained more than once to bring him to the point. Then M. Labori popped a few questions, which, when the president of the court-martial condescended to admit them were answered in an offhand manner by the witness, who thought fit to show contempt by barely looking at M. Labori and to proceed at the same time to pack up his voluminous parcels and diagrams. Captain Dreyfus also spoke a few words, repudiating Bertillon's direct denunciations, and then a military witness was put up to explain to the judges what Bertillon really meant. He only managed to be equally obscure.

To-day's session tore the last shred of credit from Mercier, but added the name of Freystaetter to the little roll of heroes who have risked everything in the defense of Dreyfus. One needs to be in the very midst of the storm of passion now raging in France to appreciate the height of moral courage to which Captain Freystaetter has risen in coming forward to the defense of the truth against the army chiefs. They are simply furious at the thorough exposure, and all blame Maurel for falling into the trap laid for him by M. Labori in Thursday's cross-examination, although it is difficult to see what else Maurel could have done.

After the courtroom had been cleared and all the public were supposed to be excluded, General Mercier accosted Colonel Maurel in the courtyard and gave him a piece of his mind, even going to the extent of calling him a blockhead. Maurel vainly protested his helplessness and the impossibility of warding off Labori's home thrusts. Finally Mercier left him in a temper.

There was a highly dramatic scene toward the end of the session. M. Labori, leading counsel for the defense, asked to have Captain Freystaetter, one of the members of the court-martial of 1894, which convicted Dreyfus, called in contradiction of the deposition of Colonel Maurel, the presiding judge on that occasion, who had testified that he only read one of the documents out of the secret dossier communicated to the court-martial. The Captain, who is a finely built officer, and who has a handsome, honest face, ascended the platform with a firm step and fearless air. When he was to recount what occurred he said his conviction of the guilt of the prisoner was formed by the evidence of experts in handwriting, the deposition of Colonel du Paty de Clam, "and," he continued, "I must add, some slight influence was exercised over my mind by hearing the secret dossier read."

The witness was then questioned as to whether one or more of the documents were read, and he said they were all read. This was in direct contradiction of Colonel Maurel and M. Labori at once demanded the confrontation of Captain Freystaetter with Colonel Maurel. The latter mounted the stage and presented a miserable object, his shifting eyes blinking out beneath heavy eyebrows and looking around him with a vicious hangdog look.

"How do you explain this?" asked M. Labori.

The Colonel at bay replied savagely, "I said I only read one document. I did not say only one document was read."

This statement called forth an outburst of hisses and indignant "Ohs" from the audience, which looked upon it as an infamous confession.

The witness trembling with shame, but evidently determined to fight to the end, threw a fierce look of hatred at M. Labori and the audience as the gendarmes shouted "Silence! Silence!" After this the audience listened spell-bound as Captain Freystaetter, in a loud voice told exactly what the documents of the dossier were and how Colonel Maurel not only read those documents, but made comments on them. This practically called Colonel Maurel a thorough liar, and the Colonel glared at the Captain ferociously. Captain Freystaetter, however, was not dismayed and his words, spoken in a tone of candor and fearlessness, must have carried conviction to every hearer.

General Mercier then asked to be heard and placed himself by the side of Maurel. The forbidding appearance of these two men, both dressed in civilian attire, was in striking contrast with the erect, unflinching attitude of Freystaetter, who wore the smart uniform of a Captain of artillery, with medals on his breast. It was a remarkable scene.

PARIS, August 26.—Petit Bleu prints a telegram from Rennes saying that it is rumored there that General Mercier has fled from that city and is on his way to the German frontier. It is reported here that the Isle of Jersey, and not Germany, is his destination. Neither story can be confirmed. It is doubtful if Mercier can leave France, for he has been closely watched by the Government and it is thought that his arrest would follow any attempt at flight.

EVENTS OF COURT-MARTIAL.

Bertillon Wearies Judges and Audience With His Tiresome Argument — Exciting Scenes in Trial.

RENNES, August 26.—The reappearance on the stage of the Dreyfus court-martial to-day of the properties of M. Bertillon, the distinguished anthropometer, was the signal of an outburst of hilarity on the part of the audience.

Before continuing his demonstration, M. Bertillon replied to the comments upon his evidence yesterday. In regard to the prisoner's exclamation of "Oh, the wretch!" the specialist asserted that if Dreyfus, who had up to that time retained his self-possession, so far forgot himself at that particular point, as to insult the witness, it was obviously due to the agitation "when he saw that his method of fabricating the bordereau was discovered. My extraordinarily ingenious demonstration yesterday proves the excellence of my system," added the witness.

M. Bertillon then resumed the exposition of the technicalities of his system, passing around charts, plates, etc. Here followed a re-enactment of scenes similar to those of yesterday. The prisoner was apparently quite indifferent to what was going on, and the judges and counsel alone attempted to follow the specialist in his interminable cryptographic problems.

The witness was heard to say during his demonstration, "The system I have the honor to explain to you can only be carried on under our eyes, and if you like I will again read the notes."

Roars of laughter greeted the deprecatory reply of Colonel Jouaust, president of the court-martial, who said: "Oh, no, don't trouble yourself." As the comedy was prolonged it grew so tiresome the audience brought out newspapers and chatted in low tones. M. Jaurès, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and a strong Dreyfusard, openly showed his impatience, but was not rebuked for so doing.

M. Bertillon advanced fresh proof against the prisoner, namely in the Dreyfus papers seized at the War Office and in which the specialist said he found two words had been traced. As he proceeded the witness became imbedded in paraphernalia. His lecture, delivered in funereal tones, began to pall on the judges, who finally only paid the most cursory attention to the examples submitted. One of M. Bertillon's demonstrations was handed to Dreyfus, who closely scrutinized it and returned the paper with a disdainful shrug of his shoulders and without uttering a word.

M. Bertillon said, concluding: "Fully understanding the responsibility of my positive statements, on my soul and conscience I declare to-day as I did in 1894 on my oath, that the bordereau is the work of the prisoner here."

The witness was asked by the court how he explained the similarity of the handwriting of the bordereau and that of Esterhazy, to which he replied that since 1894 Esterhazy may have practiced imitating the writing of the bordereau in order to render possible the substitution of himself for the prisoner. In support of this theory M. Bertillon produced a fresh array of plates which he alleged proved his hypothesis in regard to Esterhazy. There were murmurs of assent and dissent. The witness pointed out that in Esterhazy's writing there were certain calligraphic blunders which, he asserted, did not exist in the original bordereau, but were found in reproductions of the document in consequence of imperfections in the methods employed to reproduce them. This, he continued, tended to prove that Esterhazy had intended to appropriate the writing of these reproductions.

"Esterhazy," exclaimed M. Bertillon, "is a man of straw and a scoundrel. I have said this in the commencement of the Zola trial." There was a sensation in court at this remark, which was turned to laughter as the witness in his excitement knocked his portfolios to the ground.

SHARP QUESTIONS FOR BERTILLON.

M. Demange asked M. Bertillon if he had submitted Esterhazy's handwriting to the same tests as the bordereau. The witness replied in the affirmative, explaining, however, that the tests were less complete than in the case of the prisoner. Counsel reminded the witness that he said in 1894 that he found in the bordereau a cryptographic signature, "Alfred Dreyfus."

M. Bertillon replied that he was not now positive on this point, to which, he added, he attached "no importance whatever." Referring to M. Bertillon's statements yesterday that he found in the bordereau words Dreyfus was in the habit of using in documents of the War Department, M. Demange asked how the witness accounted for this, and the witness responded with some confusion, that it was a necessary counterpart of the precautions taken by the prisoner when he wrote the bordereau, "in order to make out that he was the victim of a plot."

Asked his opinion of the letter from Mathieu Dreyfus, called the "blotting-pad" letter, from which the specialist alleged the prisoner took the key-word for his work on the bordereau, M. Bertillon replied that he had no opinion on the subject, but he maintained the letter had been written by the same system as the bordereau.

"That is my hypothesis," said the witness. "Many similar ones can be found." (Murmurs of disapproval.)

M. Labori asked how M. Bertillon reconciled the result of the present experiments, namely that the bordereau was written by Dreyfus, tracing Esterhazy's handwriting with his opinion in 1894, that the bordereau was written by Dreyfus, unless it had been most carefully forged. To this M. Bertillon replied that it was only a hypothesis, whereupon M. Labori remarked that the forgery was then of such a nature as to constitute proof in favor of Dreyfus, yet to-day it is made proof against him."

Continuing, counsel said: "Since the witness admits Esterhazy has written by the same mathematical methods, as Dreyfus, why has he attributed the bordereau to Dreyfus rather than to Esterhazy?"

M. Bertillon—It was on Dreyfus' pad that the key word "interest" was found, and Esterhazy might have had access to this word.

M. Labori—Does M. Bertillon admit that Esterhazy is a traitor?

Colonel Jouaust refused to put the question to the witness.

M. Labori, continuing his questions, asked M. Bertillon's opinion as to what system of defense might have been employed by the writer of the bordereau, if the document had been found on him. The witness, in a confused and hardly audible tone, declared that the prisoner would have maintained that the document was a forgery and would have adduced it as a plot.

M. Labori—In that case the prisoner must have foreseen the appearance on the scene of a man so eminent as M. Bertillon, capable of imagining a system so ingenious as the one he exposes to-day. (Laughter.)

M. Bertillon retorted that in his opinion a man of the ability of the accused could have made a model line in a quarter of an hour every time he had occasion to write.

Replying to further questions M. Bertillon admitted he had discovered in Esterhazy's writing peculiarities similar to those in the bordereau.

Counsel pointed out that it was impossible to maintain the hypothesis that Esterhazy was a man of straw, since in 1897, when he might very well have admitted writing the bordereau, he had confessed nothing. The reasoning of M. Bertillon, counsel asserted, therefore fell to the ground.

DREYFUS ANSWERS BERTILLON.

After a short incidental discussion of the Weyl forgery, which it was believed was perpetrated by order of the Prefect of Police, Colonel Jouaust asked the prisoner if he had anything to say in reply to the witness, and the attention of all present was immediately riveted on Dreyfus, who explained how the exclamation, "Oh, the wretch!" escaped his lips yesterday.

"M. Bertillon," the prisoner said, "was constantly turning to me while testifying, calling me the guilty man. I retorted 'wretch' to him. Those are the circumstances under which I uttered the word. I have nothing to reply to the deposition of the witness. But there is one thing of which I am absolutely sure, and that is that I am not the writer of the bordereau."

Referring to his papers which were seized at the War Office, Dreyfus said it would not be strange to see notes written by officers altered. He added: "I was shown yesterday a note relative to General de Miribel. There were in the document corrections made by the chief of department himself, which shows that immediately after having written a note I handed it to the chief of department."

Referring to the so-called blotting-pad letter, Dreyfus said this letter was perfectly genuine. "Mme. Dreyfus can testify to that point. No one here will doubt the word of Mme. Dreyfus and you, gentlemen, less than any one," he added, looking steadily at the judges.

After a brief adjournment the Government Commissary, Major Carrière, called upon Captain Valerio of the artillery to explain M. Bertillon's system and to give an opinion on the subject. The Captain said he thought that M. Bertillon's evidence might be summarized in a sentence. "The bordereau was doctored and the document fabricated by means of secret writing or writing with a key, the key word, 'interest,' being found on the blotting pad letter attributed to Mathieu Dreyfus."

"The system," continued the Captain, "was evidently devised to offer the prisoner two means of escape. Either he would deny being the author of the bordereau by pointing to the difference of the handwriting, or he would contend it was a plot by showing the documents were traced over his writings.

WEAVING A TANGLED WEB.

"However complicated the ingenuity of the human mind might appear," continued the witness, "I propose to show first, that the document was fabricated, second, that it was fabricated by means of the key-word 'interest'; third, that documents written by the prisoner in the War Office contained words written by means of the same key; fourth, that the forgery was intended to enable the prisoner to plead there was a plot against him; fifth, that the prisoner alone could be the writer."

Captain Valerio then attempted to prove his hypothesis, traversing practically the same ground as already laboriously covered by M. Bertillon, during the course of which he pointed to what he alleged were conclusive proofs of the value of M. Bertillon's system. The witness declared that, as he wished to remain on scientific ground, he would not attempt to define the motives actuating the writer of the bordereau, but he was perfectly convinced it could only have been Dreyfus. Esterhazy had declared himself to be the writer, but that could not be true, because it had been proved that the bordereau was forged. In conclusion Captain Valerio declared the court now had in its possession material proof of the prisoner's guilt.

When Dreyfus was asked the usual question, the prisoner pointed out that [...] said. (A great sensation and lively interruptions followed this statement.)

"This telegram, if I remember right," continued the witness, "was in the following terms, 'Dreyfus is arrested. Emissary warned.'" (Renewed cries of "oh! oh!")

At this juncture General Mercier and Colonel Maurel simultaneously asked permission to speak. Their action caused intense excitement, which became breathless as Colonel Maurel stood up, and both the former judges confronted each other with almost defiant looks.

WITNESSES IN CONFLICT.

Colonel Maurel said. "I have only a word to say. The other day Maître Labori drew me from the ground of argument to the ground of secret deliberations. I told him I had only read a single document. These were the words. 'I only read one document.' I did not say 'only one document had been read.'

"I did not go any further than that, and did not wish to violate the secret of the judges' deliberations." Continuing, Colonel Maurel said: "In reply to questions of counsel for the defense, who would have made me say more than I wished, I declared I had only read one of the documents. After reading that document I handed the dossier to the clerk, saying 'I am tired.'"

This caused a sensation and interruptions almost developing into an uproar, which caused Colonel Jouaust to order the commandant of gendarmes to maintain silence.

Colonel Maurel, as he spoke, was greatly excited and troubled. The fingers of his right hand opened and shut nervously while those of his left kept up a tattoo on the bar of the witness stand.

Captain Freystaetter steadfastly regarded his former colleague, his cold, determined attitude having an immense effect on the audience, whose great agitation increased as exciting incidents followed.

M. Labori asked whether Colonel Maurel confirmed the explanations of Captain Freystaetter and what the latter had said in regard to Colonel Maurel. The latter replied, "I answer with all frankness and truth. I only listened to the reading of the documents very absently. It was not interesting." (Shouts of "Oh, oh," and much laughter.)

The witness concluded with saying "That is all, Monsieur le Président. I remember nothing else."

Captain Freystaetter was then requested to definitely give his recollections concerning the production of a secret document at the court-martial of 1894. His manner was quiet and collected as he replied:

"Not only did I see them, but I assert Colonel Maurel had them in his hands. And what is more, I assert that he made a commentary on each document as it passed through his hands." (Immense sensation.)

Colonel Maurel, very pale, nervously protested against the use of the word "commentary," which caused laughter.

"I could not have acted as Captain Freystaetter asserts," said Colonel Maurel. "I was too conscious of my duty to allow myself to influence in any way the judges, whose president I was, and if what Captain Freystaetter has just said in regard to me had been done in my presence, if the president had attempted to exercise pressure on me as a judge, if he attempted to influence me, notwithstanding his age, rank or functions, I would have reminded him of his duty. I would not have waited five years before coming forward to provoke an audience in open court. I have finished. I will say no more in reply to Captain Freystaetter."

Addressing Colonel Jouaust, Captain Freystaetter said: "My excuse for my attitude, my Colonel, is my ignorance of legal regulations. I did not know at all that it was forbidden to make any communication to the judges' room. (Sensation.)

"Moreover, on April 5th last, I wrote to Colonel Maurel, clearly explaining everything I intended to do, when I learned it was irregular to communicate documents in the judges' room."

Colonel Maurel admitted the truth of his statement, adding: "Captain Freystaetter referred to doubts which had been awakened in his mind by Colonel Henry's forgery. He spoke of the anguish by which his conscience was tortured. I did not reply to Captain Freystaetter, because I am accustomed to allow every one the liberty of his own opinions. In my opinion every one ought to guide his ship in his own way."

M. Labori requested the judges to note that no contradiction was offered to Captain Freystaetter's statement that the Panizzardi telegram of November 2d was communicated privately to the judges in 1894, and, under these circumstances, General Mercier having testified that he had given an order that the telegram should not be communicated and whereas he had also testified that the order was carried out, counsel begged the president of the court to ask General Mercier for an explanation concerning the statement, which entirely contradicted his evidence. (Great sensation.)

General Mercier, who had paid close attention to what was going on, pointed out that Captain Freystaetter had spoken of an act of treason alleged to have been described at the 1894 court-martial as having been committed by Dreyfus at the Polytechnic School, adding that Freystaetter seemed to retain very exact recollections of the document communicated, and asked what was referred to in the letter mentioned.

Captain Freystaetter—It referred to a shell. I see the document perfectly in my mind's eye.

General Mercier—So Captain Freystaetter is caught in the very act of lying. (Loud protests.)

"I repeat it," the General said, coolly amid renewed protests. "As a matter of fact the Robin shell to which he refers was only made in Germany in 1895. We were informed of the act of treason in 1896."

Captain Freystaetter adhered to his statement that a shell was mentioned in the commentary submitted to the Generals in 1894.

General Mercier—As for the telegram of November 2d, I maintain that it was not communicated to the court of 1894.

Captain Freystaetter—I am certain that there was a telegram with the words, "Dreyfus is arrested. Emissary warned." There was something else which I do not remember. As regards the reply General Mercier has just made to me, I insist I have not said that there was a document mentioning particular shells, but simply a commentary referring to an act of treason in connection with a shell. I do not know if that affected the evidence of the prosecution. But I only testified that of which I am strictly certain.

General Mercier reiterated that it was impossible to communicate in 1894 concerning the Robin shell.

M. Labori then said: "In view of the incidents occurring, I must insist once more, Monsieur le Président, that the condition of Colonel du Paty de Clam be examined into by impartial physicians. General Mercier has stated that the packet containing the secret documents was prepared by Colonel Du Paty de Clam."

General Mercier interrupted: "Pardon me. I said I had learned from General de Boisdeffre that the package was brought by Colonel Du Paty de Clam. But I also said Colonel Sandherr prepared the package."

M. Labori—Always the dead! Sandherr the dead! Henry the dead! Their testimony is constantly being cited.

Colonel Jouaust protested against these

Oct 27. Chronicle

SAYS HE WAS A TRAITOR.

ARCHBISHOP KEANE TALKS OF THE OREYFUS CASE.

PROOF OF GUILT SAID TO HAVE BEEN STOLEN UNDER PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES.

Returned When the Kaiser Threatened to Make War on the Republic—Story of Catholic Prelate.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

NEW YORK, October 11.—A special to the Sun from Washington says: Archbishop Keane, who has returned from Rome to assume charge of the finances of the Catholic University, declares that Dreyfus was guilty, and tells a strange story of the manner in which proof against him was obtained. He says:

"There is no doubt that Dreyfus was guilty. The great trouble was that in order to prove his guilt the officers resorted to the absurd and silly method of forging each document and attributing it to Dreyfus. I was given a brief history of the case by a man of unquestionable authority, who had been approached by the leaders on both sides, and was, therefore, able to speak from positive knowledge. When France suspected that her military secrets were being sold to Germany she placed in the household of the German Embassador in Paris a French spy. This spy secured several papers, but he reported to his chief that there were a number of most important papers in the possession of the Embassador which he was unable to procure, as they were never left alone.

"One night soon afterward the Embassy was discovered to be on fire. The fire was soon extinguished, but the firemen were detectives and during the excitement the papers mentioned had disappeared. It did not take the Embassador long to discover where his papers had gone, and he telegraphed his Government. The bold robbery of the Embassy was a breach of international law and Germany responded with a demand on France for the restoration of the papers within twenty-four hours under a threat of a declaration of war. The papers were returned on time, but they were photographed before they were returned, and the secret dossier contained the photographs.

"The proofs of Dreyfus' guilt having thus been lost the French authorities, in order to convict him for the crime of which they knew he was guilty resorted to the stupid plan of forging other incriminating documents. After the conviction the Jews discovered that the evidence was not in the possession of the authorities and determined to force a retrial and on acquittal of Dreyfus in order to wipe out the stain on Jewish honor. Vast sums of money were raised and expended in subsidizing the press and in raising agitation here and there, creating demands for a new trial and stimulating public interest and sympathy, yet the court-martial at Rennes resulted in a verdict of guilty."

MRS. HOUSEWORTH ARRESTED FOR FORGING A WILL.

MRS. S. M. HOUSEWORTH, the Chico woman who is accused of forging a will that enriched her some $9,000, was arrested in this city yesterday and is now in the City Prison awaiting the arrival of a deputy sheriff from Butte county to take her to Oroville for trial.

The arrest was made by Under Sheriff Dave Martin on information received from Butte county officials. He found Mrs. Houseworth at 63 McAllister street. She at once admitted her identity and went to jail as calmly as if she were going to church.

The prisoner is 48 years of age, tall and angular and of sedate appearance. She keeps her own counsel, and her only statement to others than her attorney is, "There is nothing to the charge and I have nothing to explain." A deputy sheriff is expected to reach here and take charge of the prisoner to-day.

Mrs. Houseworth's alleged crime consisted in forging the will of Alfred Fuller, a miser, who died near Chico two years ago, leaving an estate valued at $20,000. The will gave several Eastern relatives $500 and left the rest to Mrs. Houseworth. Dr. J. Ellis Rodley and John M. Garner, alleged accomplices of the woman, are under arrest. Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, was a witness at the Grand Jury investigation held in Oroville recently, and testified that the will was a forgery. The findings of the Grand Jury which resulted in the arrests caused a sensation in Chico, where Dr. Rodley and Garner have long been prominent.

CHICO, October 26.—The excitement caused by the arrest of ex-Mayor J. E. Rodley and J. M. Garner on charges of forgery and perjury has not subsided in the least, but, on the other hand, has increased in this city. Chico has never been so thoroughly shaken up by the sensational outcome of the investigations by the Grand Jury. Though both men have for years stood high in business circles in this community, it seemed for a time as though they would be unable to secure bonds. The greater part of last night and until 3 o'clock this afternoon both were busily searching for bondsmen. The bondsmen for Rodley are H. D. Hamerom, $500; Warren Stephens, $250; Mrs. William Elliott, $100, George Vadney, $100, J. W. Barker, $50. Garner's bondsmen are Z. T. Crowder, D. F. Crowder, G. L. Clark and Leon Garner, for $500 each. At 3 o'clock they left with Sheriff Wilson for Oroville.

News reached here to-night that Mrs. Houseworth had been arrested in San Francisco. Bonds for her release were fixed at $10,000 on the perjury charge and $5000 on the forgery. It is thought she will experience great difficulty in procuring sureties. It is reported here that Dr. Rodley's bonds were rejected by Superior Judge Gray, and that Rodley will return to Chico to secure new bondsmen.

Taken Back to Chico.

Mrs. S. M. Houseworth, who was arrested here on information sent from Butte county, charging her with forging the will of the late Alfred Fuller of Chico, was handed over to Sheriff Wilson of Butte county yesterday by the local authorities. She was taken to Chico, in which town she expects to obtain bail and regain her liberty pending her trial.

Oct. 29. Chron

FULLER WILL A FORGERY.

Witness Garner Tells of His Part in the Crime.

FULL CONFESSION TO BUTTE OFFICIALS.

PROMISED FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS TO AFFIX HIS SIGNATURE.

Tempted Four Months Before He Yielded to the Pleadings of Dr. Rodley, the Alleged Arch Schemer.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

CHICO, October 28.—Late last night J. M. Garner, the well-known farmer who was arrested Wednesday on a charge of perjury and forgery as a witness in the A. Fuller will case, appeared at the office of District Attorney Joe D. Sproul and stated that he desired to make a voluntary statement of his connection with the case. In the presence of the District Attorney, Deputy Sheriff Goe and Stenographer Rosenberg, Garner confessed that he placed his name as a witness to the will some six months after Fuller's death, and that he had been urged to do so by Dr. J. Ellis Rodley. He told how, when and where he was approached by Rodley. He at first refused to be a party to any such transaction, but Rodley persistently urged him for four months and he at last agreed to sign the will, Rodley promising to pay him $5000.

Before allowing Garner to make a statement, the District Attorney informed him that if he should make a statement it would be on his own peril. He reaffirmed his desire to relieve himself of the story. After he had stated all he went to his home and during the night his statement was typewritten. This morning Sproul went to Garner's home with the written statement, which was read in his presence. Garner pronounced it correct, signed his name and made affidavit to it. On being interviewed the District Attorney did not dispute any of the facts and said that he was violating no confidence in saying that Garner had made the statement, which he believed to be true and which would show that Garner was not the prime mover in the affair, but the dupe of the arch conspirators. Garner made the statement freely, being out on bail at the time, and to clear his conscience of the load that had for months borne him down.

District Attorney Sproul for proper reasons declines to make public the confession in full, but states that it coincides with the theory of the prosecution heretofore given out and is, in his judgment, absolutely conclusive of the guilt of the accused parties in this affair. Dr. Rodley came to Chico Friday morning in order to procure new bonds, Judge Gray refusing to accept those offered Thursday. He was unable to get others after Garner's confession was made public, and was taken to Oroville this afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Goe. Mrs. S. M. Houseworth, in whose favor the alleged will was drawn, is now confined in jail.

ROBBED BY FRIENDS AFTER HIS DEATH.

Louis Pardini, a Wagon-Maker, Leaves an Estate, but Most of It Disappears.

When Louis Pardini died among friends and countrymen, he was reputed a wealthy man, but when the estate came to be examined, it developed that his ready money, clothing and jewelry had disappeared.

Justice of the Peace Groezinger stated from the bench that he believed Pardini's landlord took the money, and that the dead man had been robbed by those who should have cared for the property.

Pardini was a blacksmith and wagonmaker on Ohio street, a small thoroughfare near the water front. There, by industry and attention to business, he accumulated a fortune, which was mainly represented by money in bank and furniture. A few days before he died, Pardini received $500 in cash, which was added to a store kept by the wagonmaker in a trunk at the lodging-house of his old friend, E. Delrario. The two men hailed from Lucca, where, no doubt, they made olive oil as boys together. So the confidence reposed by Pardini in Delrario was such as to cause him to trust large sums of money in his room.

In the proceedings before Justice Groezinger brought by Frank Pardini, administrator of his brother's estate, witnesses testified that Pardini had $500 in his room at the time he died. Besides there was jewelry, clothing and other property. The defense claimed that the door of the room was left open, but the Justice was satisfied that Delrario got the coin and gave judgment for $250, the balance having been waived by the administrator.

From the testimony it was gathered that considerable of the decedent's property had been stolen, but as the exact amount of money or description of articles could not be ascertained, criminal prosecution was abandoned.

MYSTERY OF A STOLEN RECEIPT FOR BAIL MONEY

Some One Is Guilty of Forgery.

POLICE SEEKING FOR A CLEW

PAPER STOLEN FROM A CHINESE AT A BANQUET.

The police are working on a case of theft and forgery which incidentally shows the loose methods in vogue in some of the police courts in regard to the return of bail money.

On November 1 See Wah, a Chinese, was arrested for aiding and abetting a lottery. He was taken to the California-street police station, and a friend, Charlie Foo, called and put up $100 cash bail for his release. He obtained a receipt from the officer on duty. When the case was called in Judge Conlan's court the following Monday See Wah pleaded guilty and a fine of $10 was imposed.

Charlie Foo was at a banquet in Chinatown the following Thursday, November 9, when his purse containing $5 and the receipt for the $100 bail money was stolen from him. Friday morning a white man called upon Clerk Rice of Judge Conlan's court and presented the receipt and got an order on the City Treasurer for the amount. The man signed Rice's book "Al O'Neill," but in the Treasurer's book he signed the name "H. Meyer" when the money was handed to him.

Charlie Foo reported the theft of his purse to police headquarters, but it was not till Monday that the discovery of the money having been drawn from the Treasurer was made. Detective Dillon, who was detailed on the case, asked Clerk Rice if he could give any description of the man who presented the receipt to him, but Rice was unable to satisfy him, as he could remember nothing. Dillon remarked that the fact of a white man presenting a receipt for money put up by a Chinese should have aroused suspicion in Rice's mind, but Rice thought differently. The detective had no more success in the Treasurer's office in getting a clew to the identity of the man.

The fact was reported to Chief Lees and he employed Theodore Kytka, the expert on handwriting, to examine the signatures on Rice's book and the Treasurer's book in the hope that some clew might be gotten of the forger. Kytka is now working on the case. What puzzles the police is the peculiarity of the theft of the purse, being evidently the work of a Chinese thief, and a white man the next morning presenting the stolen receipt to Clerk Rice. There is a suspicion that when the facts are known a scandal may be exposed that will lead to trouble for some people.

NEWHOUSE ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF FORGERY.

Culmination of Sensational Mining Litigation Which Has Been Pending in the Courts for Years.

As the outcome of the legal and business troubles of E. A. Willcox and Oscar Newhouse, which culminated in a suit for $[illegible] instituted by the latter, Newhouse is now in jail, charged with forgery. He was arrested at midnight upon a warrant sworn to by J. E. Doolittle, the capitalist mining man, who acts as the representative of Willcox.

Newhouse claims to be in ignorance of the charge made against him, but, according to his story, it is in some way connected with the suit which he commenced on October 24, 1896, against Willcox. The latter is said to have gone to Europe and to have assigned his claims to various interests in mining property to Doolittle.

The suit of Newhouse against Willcox brought out allegations of fraud and unfair divisions of profits, as well as failure to keep agreements made, whereby Newhouse was to have received a portion of one-fourth of all the revenue derived. It has been pending in the courts for years. Among the mining properties involved were the Providence and Gold Blossom groups, situated in Tuolumne and Placer counties. Willcox made counter charges of fraud and some sensational testimony was brought out.

The arrest of Newhouse is an outcome of the past litigation. He says that he supposes the charge of forgery is based upon some of the signatures to documents introduced in the suit and declares that the arrest is but a matter of spite on the part of Willcox, who has got trouble to be sponsor for what may take place.

NOVEMBER 15, 1899.

NEW PICTURES OF CAPTAIN DREYFUS AND HIS WIFE AND YOUNG CHILDREN.

A photographer for Black and White of London has paid a visit to the Dreyfus family at Carpentras and secured the picture which is reproduced here. Mme. Dreyfus has heretofore been presented to the public only in well-meaning but inaccurate drawings. This excellent photograph gives a more faithful idea of this now historic personage, whose devotion to so forlorn a cause will remain memorable in the annals of womanhood. In spite of alarmist reports of the health of Dreyfus, the ex-artillery Captain seems to have been greatly benefited by his stay at Carpentras and to be well on the road toward partial recovery from the terrible sufferings to which he was subjected on Devil's Island.

EVIDENCE OF FRAUD FOUND

Records of Police Court Show What Seem Forgeries.

CHIEF LEES ORDERS AN INVESTIGATION.

HANDWRITING EXPERT KYTKA MAKES SOME STARTLING DISCOVERIES.

Clerk John Rice Appears to Be an Offender—Has Been Under Dark Suspicions Before.

John Rice, clerk of Police Court 2, is suspected of collecting many sums of money deposited with him for bail, and of forging the names of the persons to whom it belonged, or signing fictitious names on the book in which the records of bail money are kept. Chief of Police Lees gave instructions yesterday to Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, and to Detective Dillon to make a careful investigation of the book known as "Record of Bail Money Deposited in Police Court 2," and to compare the signatures therein with the signatures on the orders held by the Treasurer and with Rice's handwriting. The result of an examination covering but a few hours' time developed what seemed startling disclosures, and it looked as if the peculations of bail money would reach a large sum.

The investigation was precipitated by the discovery that $100 bail money deposited by Charles Foo, a Chinese, had been collected by some person who was not entitled to receive it. Charles Foo deposited the bail on November 4th for the release of See Wah, who was arrested that day on the charge of aiding and abetting a lottery. Foo was given a receipt numbered 15,641 by Rice. While Foo was attending a party in Waverly place on Thursday night his purse, containing the receipt and $5, he says, was stolen from him. Foo tried to get the bail money, less $10, the amount of the fine imposed, and was astonished to learn that somebody else had drawn the money and had signed the name "Al O'Neil" on the book.

The attention of Rice was called to this, and he was unable to offer an explanation. He declared that he did not know O'Neil, though the same name appears frequently upon the bail book in the column left for the signatures of receivers of bail money. Kytka unhesitatingly pronounces the signature "Al O'Neil" to be in Rice's handwriting. The order for Charles Foo's money in the possession of the Treasurer is indorsed on the back, "H. Myer," in writing very similar to Rice's.

Charles Foo wrote these and other names on a slip of paper for Expert Kytka, but his writing does not bear the slightest resemblance to the signatures in the book or on the orders drawn on the Treasurer.

In the short period of one month the names "Al O'Neil," "K. Walback," "T. T. O'Neil," "A. Campbell" and others, some occurring several times, appear in the book in which the record of bail money is kept, and the chirography of all is very similar to that of Rice.

John Coleman was arrested November 4th, charged with violating the garbage ordinance and he deposited $10 bail for his appearance in court. The money was drawn from the Treasurer before the case was decided. Coleman's name was signed on the back of the order drawn on the Treasurer and also in the bail money book, and both signatures correspond closely with the original entry of Coleman's name which was made by Rice. In the case of George T. Caswell also the bail money was drawn before the case was decided.

The investigations of Expert Kytka and Detective Dillon have only begun, and the instances mentioned are but a few of those that they have noted.

The directory contains no mention of "H. Myer" or "Al O'Neil" or "T. T. O'Neil" or "K. Walback," although there are no fewer than sixteen Campbells whose first name begins with "A." As the makers of the City Directory did not find any one bearing the name "Al O'Neil," which appears eight times, it is judged by the police that the name is fictitious, and as Kytka says, the writing resembles Rice's writing, the police think they need not go far to find the man who signed that and other fictitious names when receipting for bail money. Clerk Rice was not on duty yesterday nor the day before.

This is not the first time that Rice has been under suspicion. Not long ago, less than four months in fact, he was accused by women of the tenderloin who had been before Judge Conlan on [illegible]

YDA ADDIS FREE OF ONE SERIOUS CHARGE.

Action for Assault to Murder Attorney Jackson Dismissed on the Suggestion of the Grand Jury.

SANTA BARBARA, December 9.—The charge of attempt to murder against Yda Addis Storke Jackson, which has been so fiercely contested for three months by her attorney, Clara Foltz, was to-day dismissed at the request of the District Attorney, at the suggestion of the Grand Jury which recently closed its session. District Attorney Squier gave the ground that there was insufficient evidence to show that the defendant intended to take the life of Attorney Grant Jackson. The case had been submitted to the Grand Jury, which failed to find an indictment.

To-day was the time set for the hearing of her motion for a change of venue from this county to Los Angeles, but the motion to dismiss stopped further proceedings. Yda Addis was too ill to appear in court to-day, and the dismissal was as much a surprise to her as it was to the community. She stated to-night that bail of $100 would be secured to-morrow and she would be at liberty pending the appeal on the anonymous letter case conviction.

Yda Addis, on the morning of July 9th, entered Attorney Grant Jackson's room about 3 o'clock through a window and was in the act of administering chloroform when Jackson awoke. She leveled a pistol at him and threatened his life. After waiting for an hour for an opportunity Jackson sprang upon her and overpowered her. During the tussle the pistol was discharged and neighbors were attracted. She claims to have entered into a contract marriage with him and maintained she was in his room only as her right as his wife. She calls herself Mrs. Jackson.

Chronicle feb 4. 19[illegible]

INDICTMENT AGAINST BARTLETT DISMISSED.

The Last of the Perjury Charges Which Have Arisen Out of Mrs. Craven's Suit Has Been Dropped.

Judge Lawlor yesterday dismissed the indictment against Charles S. M. Bartlett for perjury. Bartlett was a witness for Mrs. Nettie R. Craven in the suit in which the two deeds which she claimed that James G. Fair gave her were declared spurious. Bartlett testified that on September 21, 1894, he saw Fair at the office of J. J. Cooney, the notary, at 11 Montgomery street. Mrs. Craven claimed that Fair acknowledged the deeds before Notary Cooney, and Cooney was indicted for swearing that the acknowledgments on the deeds were genuine. The case against him has been dropped. Bartlett was a glib witness, but broke down on cross-examination. Judge Lawlor said that he dismissed the indictment only because the record against Bartlett was lacking, the transcript of the testimony taken before the Grand Jury not being on file. Without the evidence there would be no hope of securing a conviction. The persons who secured the indictment were not desirous of proceeding further against Bartlett, since the suit in which he was a witness is at an end; but, notwithstanding this fact, Judge Lawlor said that he would insist on a trial if it were not clear that the expense would be useless.

TELLTALE MARKS ON THE POLICY.

JUDGE HUNT IGNORES DOUBTFUL WITNESSES.

CASHIER OF THE TALLANT BANK CONTRADICTS MRS. KOZMINSKY.

Testimony of the Widow and Her Son Not Believed and Decision Given Against Them.

Flat contradictions under oath were the distinguishing feature of the case of the Mutual Life Insurance Company against Fred E. Kroeger, Mrs. Emma Kozminsky, her son, H. S. Kominsky, and A. H. Buhne, in which Judge Hunt gave his decision yesterday. Mrs. Kozminsky's son borrowed $3000 from the Tallant Banking Company on February 16, 1896, and gave as collateral security an insurance policy for $5000 on the life of his father, Herman Kozminsky, in which Mrs. Kozminsky was named as beneficiary. On May 1, 1896, A. H. Buhne, who was associated with the younger Kozminsky in business, secured the policy from the bank and gave it to Kozminsky, who returned it to his mother, and she refused to give it back. The bank temporarily parted with it because Kozminsky told Buhne that he could secure a loan on it from a money lender named Solomon and settle with the bank. On December 9, 1896, the bank assigned Kozminsky's promissory note to Kroeger. When her husband died Mrs. Kozminsky applied for the insurance money, and on account of the conflict over it the insurance company brought the suit.

John D. McKee, the cashier of the Tallant bank, testified that the policy had been assigned by Mrs. Kozminsky so that money could be borrowed on it, but when the policy was produced the assignment alleged to have been written on it had disappeared. Traces of writing remained and handwriting experts were called to testify concerning them. Judge Hunt said:

The real point in issue was whether an assignment of the policy was ever made to the Tallant Banking Company. It was claimed by defendants that such an assignment was made and was written on the folded and indorsed portion of the policy. Mrs. Kozminsky and her son swore that such an assignment was never made. Mr. McKee and Mr. Buhne swore that they had seen such an assignment. Mrs. Kozminsky and her son and Mr. Buhne were interested parties, but Mr. McKee was a wholly disinterested party, and therefore great weight is to be attached to his testimony. His testimony is corroborated by the appearance of the paper. Aside from the testimony of the experts introduced on behalf of plaintiff, it appears from an inspection of the photographs, enlarged exemplars of the writing in question, made by Mr. Backus, a witness on behalf of the Kozminskys, that certain letters were originally written upon the paper, which letters were not entirely effaced by the acid or knife used in the obliteration. One of these letters, which I was enabled to see quite distinctly, was the letter "K," and this letter bore a remarkable resemblance to the "K" in the name of the defendant, Emma Kozminsky, as written by her upon her affidavit to an answer on file in this court. Besides this letter the letter "g" was also distinctly evident, and there were shadowy outlines of other letters, so indistinct, however, that I could make nothing of them; but all the counsel interested in the case, including counsel for the Kozminskys admitted that the letters "h-e-r-r" appeared beneath the erasure in question. In addition the witness Buhne testified that young Mr. Kozminsky promised that he would procure his mother's assignment to the policy, and this testimony is nowhere contradicted. Young Kozminsky took the policy with the avowed purpose of borrowing money on it of one Solomon. It would have been farcical for him to have made such an attempt if the policy had not been assigned by the beneficiary, Emma Kozminsky.

Judge Hunt ordered that the amount due on the note, $3358, be paid to Kroeger, and that the balance of the insurance money, $1646, go to Mrs. Kozminsky. At the time that Mrs. Kozminsky testified in this case she was also a witness in the suit of A. C. Rulofson to secure the estate of Captain Winslow G. Hall, which has been on trial before Judge Belcher for months. The testimony in the Rulofson case abounds in contradictions.

WHO IS AT FAULT?

A Scandal in Police Court No. 2 Regarding the Disposition of Bail Money.

The periodical scandal in Police Court No. 2 has cropped up again. For some time that court has been the scene of unsavory scandals, and now the police are determined to probe the matter to the bottom. Yesterday Chief of Police Lees gave instructions to Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, and Detective Dillon to make a careful examination of the book known as "Record of Bail Money Deposited in Police Court No. 2."

They were ordered to compare the signatures therein with the signature of the order held by the treasurer.

The suggestion was also made to compare the signature with the handwriting of Clerk John Rice of that department.

The investigation was occasioned by the discovery that $100 bail money deposited by Charley Too, a Chinese, had been collected by some one with no right to receive it. The money was deposited by Loo on November 1th for the release of Lee Wah, who was charged with aiding and abetting a lottery. A receipt was given him, which he claims was afterwards stolen from him at a party given in Waverly place. When he attempted to regain possession of the $100 bail money, less the $10 fine imposed, he found that the money had already been drawn by somebody, who had signed the name of "Al O'Neil" on the book.

Expert Kytka declares that the signature is in the handwriting of Clerk Rice. The latter denies, and says that he does not know O'Neil.

Detective Dillon and the handwriting expert today made a further examination of the books in department No. 2. Besides the case of Charley Loo, the following cases were found where, according to Kytka, the signature of the person receipting for bail money had all been written by the same person.

L. de Benedalli, charged with violating a health ordinance, deposited $10 to insure his appearance in court. The case was dismissed and the money was drawn by G. D. Caswell. The name does not appear in the directory.

Paul Raymond, charged with drunk, deposited $5. The money was paid to A. Campbell, his attorney, who acknowledges having received the money.

Ah Lee, charged with aiding and abetting a lottery, deposited cash to the amount of $100. He was fined $10 and the remaining $90 was paid to T. J. O'Neil.

Ah Sing was charged with the same offense, and the same disposition was made of his case. The money was also paid to T. J. O'Neil.

John Coleman deposited $10 cash as bail, and according to the books, the money was paid to him.

Harley Kai left $40 as an evidence of good faith. The case was dismissed and N. Kai receipted for the $40.

A. O. Ekman was arrested and charged with failure to provide. He left behind $10 as bail. Later his signature appears on the book as having received the money. Several other persons' names appear on the "Record of Bail Money" which, according to Expert Kytka, are all signed by the same person. One peculiar circumstance about the matter, and which will in a great measure acquit Clerk Rice of the charge of having received the bail money is the fact that in no other case than that of Charley Loo has there been any complaint from the rightful owners of the bail money. Had the money been paid to any unauthorized person surely, says Rice, there would have been complaints made to the police. No complaints of this nature other than the single case cited above have been made.

T. J. O'Neil, whose name appears on several occasions as having receipted for bail money deposited by Chinese offenders, is a special officer in Chinatown and frequently acts as their agent in cases of this kind.

Rice denies having on any occasion drawn bail money deposited, and claims that he is willing to court the fullest investigation.

CLERK RICE'S BOOKS.

Expert Williams Has Them in His Custody.

Stories of Irregularities In Police Court No. 2.

Chief Lees has commenced an investigation into the bail books of Police Court No. 2. The inquiry was brought about by the cashing of the receipt of Charles Foo, who went bail for Seo Wah in the sum of $100 on a charge of aiding and abetting a lottery.

On the night of the day that the case was disposed of in the Police Court Foo was robbed of the receipt while attending a party on Waverley Place.

He hurried to the treasurer's office next day, but was surprised to find that Clerk Rice of Court No. 2 had issued an order for the payment of the money which had been receipted for by a man who signed his name Al O'Neill.

Expert Kytka was called in and after making a hasty examination reported that in his opinion the names of Paul Raymond, Al O'Neill, George T. Caswell, A. Campbell, T. J. O'Neil, H. Spencer, E. Joy, A. O. Eckman, N. Ike, Long Kum, K. Wolbeck and A. O. Eckman had all been signed by Clerk Rice.

Rice ridiculed the story this morning and stated that it was peculiar that if wholesale robbery had been carried on in the repayment of bail nobody had appeared to make a protest. He claimed that the system now in vogue protects the department of bail against all chances of fraud.

Expert Williams of the Board of Supervisors this morning took possession of the books of Court No. 2 for the purpose of investigating them.

NOVEMBER 16, 1899.

NETTIE CRAVEN SAYS THE WILL IS INVALIDATED

Sues to Set Aside the Fair Testament.

GROUNDS OF THE PETITION

CONTESTS FILED BY CHILDREN HAVE THIS RESULT.

If Even the Theory of the Suit Prevails the Millionnire's Estate Must Be Distributed to the Heirs.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven, as the alleged widow of the late James G. Fair, has filed another action in the Superior Court for the purpose of gaining possession of one-third of the estate of the deceased millionaire. The action is in the nature of an application for partial distribution to her of a widow's portion of the estate and if even the theory upon which the motion is made is approved by the court the entire estate of the deceased will be distributed according to law without reference to the will which has been admitted to probate.

The motion contests the right of Charles L. Fair, Virginia Vanderbilt and Theresa A. Oelrichs to the interests bequeathed them by Senator Fair on the ground that they have violated the provisions of the will, and hence are not legally entitled to take advantage of its provisions.

After setting forth the fact that the income from decedent's estate exceeds $500,000 a year, and that since Senator Fair's death the income has amounted to over $4,631,454, Mrs. Craven quotes a section of the will as follows: "I now expressly provide that if any one or more of the legatees or devisees in this will named or provided shall at any time commence any proceeding to contest this will the legacy, devise and provision therein bequeathed, devised and provided for shall from that time become void."

Mrs. Craven cites the fact that on May 7, 1895, Charles L. Fair, and on March 23, 1897, Virginia Vanderbilt and Theresa A. Oelrichs commenced contests against the will, and in consequence the provisions of the will bequeathing them interests in the estate are void and the properties and accumulated income are only subject to distribution to the heirs-at-law of the deceased. In keeping with this theory Mrs. Craven prays for the distribution to her of one-third of the properties, the widow's portion.

Pence & Pence, W. W. Foote, Denson, Oatman & Denson, A. Ruef and John H. Dickinson appear as petitioner's counsel.

The Morning Press

Published Continuously Since 1863.

Member of the Associated Press

Fithian Building, 636 State Street.

EASTERN BRANCH OFFICE:
60 Tribune Building, New York. T. B. Elber, Manager.
CHICAGO OFFICE:
317 Chamber of Commerce. A. Frank Richardson, Manager.
WASHINGTON OFFICE:
516 Fourteenth Street, Near Pennsylvania Avenue.
SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE:
L. P. Fisher, Merchants' Exchange Building.
LONDON OFFICE:
L. H. Johnston, 13 and 14 Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, London, England.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Daily, per year, in advance........	$8.00
Daily, delivered by carrier, per month	.75
Weekly, one year, in advance....	2.00

TELEPHONE NO. 73.

The Press Publishing and Printing Company
CLIO L. LLOYD, Manager.

The Official County Paper

A WHOLESOME SENTENCE.

Judge Oster fittingly closed the trial of Yda Addis Storke yesterday, when he sentenced the defendant to imprisonment for the maximum term provided by the law. He expresses the regret of the community when he said he was sorry the penalty was not greater, for a year in the county jail was not sufficient punishment for the crime committed.

But the sentence will be welcomed with feelings of relief by the people of the county. They know that a dangerous and desperate woman is where she can do no harm for a few months at least. The county is to be congratulated upon the result of the trial; and congratulations from the county are due those who conducted the case so successfully. District Attorney Squier made a state record by the manner in which he handled the prosecution.

Much credit, too, should be given one whose good work has possibly been partially overlooked in the excitement of succeeding events; but who, by his scientific and painstaking analysis of the writings involved did much to strengthen the case against Mrs. Storke. It is Theodore Kytka to whom reference is made. Mr. Kytka is an ideal witness; he was on the stand longer than any one handwriting expert in any other single trial in the United States. He underwent a severe cross-examination for four days. But not a flaw could be found in the mass of convincing testimony presented by him; so admirably was his evidence presented, that it was only strengthened by the attacks upon it. Kytka impressed all who heard him as fully qualified as an expert, and conscientious and truthful as a witness.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION IN 1899.

SAN FRANCISCO, NOVEMBER 18, 1899.

HALLO, Theodore Kytka!

Hello, Angus!

A.—What do you think of the way business is done in the clerk's office of the police court?

K.—Vile. Perjury, forgery, grafting and robbery appears strongly in evidence, but it is hard to get the lead pipe cinch on any of the evil doers. That corruption exists has long been known. As writing expert for the city I know what I am talking about.

POLICE ACCUSE CLERK RICE OF FORGERY.

Charge, However, Is Not Easy of Explanation.

Claim to Have Discovered Glaring Irregularities in Payment of Bail Money.

SOME THINK IT IS ONLY A MARE'S NEST.

The Man Himself Submits His Books to the City's Expert for Examination.

Detective Thomas Dillon, acting under the instructions of Chief of Police Lees, is deep in the investigation of the official acts and affairs of John Rice, clerk of Department 2 of the Police Court, and claims to have brought to light glaring irregularities in connection with the payment of money deposited with him for bail. In fact, Dillon and Kytka, the writing expert, say unhesitatingly that Rice is guilty of forgery. According to them a comparison of the handwriting of the clerk and the signatures appearing in the "Record of Bail Money Deposited" and those on the orders in the Treasury are one and the same.

The discovery that $100 deposited by Charles Foo, a Chinese, for the release of See Wah, arrested on November 1, for aiding and abetting a lottery, had been collected by some person not entitled to receive it, precipitated the investigation. The receipt was given to Foo by Rice. The following Thursday, while the Chinese was attending a party in Waverley place his pockets were picked and a purse containing the receipt and $5 stolen. He reported the matter to a patrolman of the Chinatown squad, who accompanied him to the treasury in order to stop the payment of the receipt if it were presented. They were too late. An order for the money, less $10, the amount of the fine imposed on Wah, had been paid on the indorsement of one H. Meyer. In Rice's record book the name of Al O'Neil appears in receipt for the order from the court.

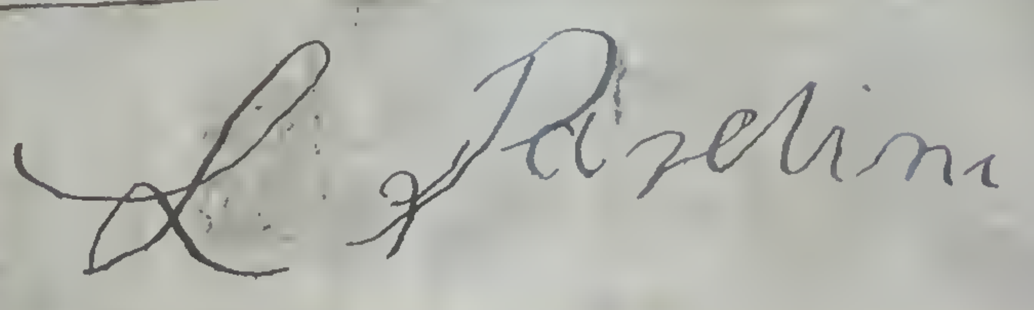
Rice says that he does not know O'Neil. The man presented the receipt and he gave him the order. Police Court methods of doing business are lax, at the best, and Rice filled out the order without demanding the indorsement of the Chinese who had deposited the money. It has been the custom for three years past, in order to obviate the necessity of a prisoner or one depositing money for bail being identified by the arresting policeman, or the station-keeper to make the orders "payable to bearer." Following this practice Rice made out the order in that way, and gave it to O'Neil.

The startling discovery that Dillon says he has made is that the names of O'Neil and Meyer, the indorsers, are all in Rice's handwriting.

Rice denies this and asks how it would be possible for him to have secured the receipt from the Chinese, for it is presumed that it was one who robbed Foo at the party. This morning he turned his books over to Expert Williams to be examined. Another point that the police do not explain is why more persons have not come forward and asked for the return of their bail money. Dillon cites ten specific cases in which he alleges the same crookedness obtains as in the Foo case.

A great many who are arrested and give bail, later give the receipts for it to their attorneys, who accept them as fees. Some of the court clerks demand that the name of the depositor be indorsed on the back, but others are not quite so exacting. Another thing that would explain the different signatures is that in many cases a friend or relative gives bail for a prisoner and, of course, their names would not be the same.

Why persons in the cases mentioned have not asked return for their money is a mystery that the police say they will try to solve by making a personal canvass. There are many acquainted with the method obtaining at present in the Police Court, who believe they have stirred up a mare's nest.



DECLARE IT A FORGERY.

Representatives of L. Pardini's Estate Decline to Pay a Note.

In the suit of John Pasleno against the estate of L. Pardini, deceased, for $2,500, argument is to be heard by Judge Hunt to-morrow.

The foundation of the claim is a note which the representatives of the estate declare to be a forgery. Several witnesses who examined the paper said they believed the signature to be spurious. In support of this theory, those acting on behalf of the Pardini estate introduced in evidence documents showing that Pardini was doing business on a cash basis; that he had a large amount of money in bank subject to his demand, and that he owned property which yielded him over $200 a month. In addition to this a due bill for $500, signed by John Paslene and his brother, Andrew Paslene, which was found in Pardini's safe after his death, was introduced in evidence, together with a contract, by the terms of which Pardini agreed to advance money to Paslene brothers, they to buy potatoes with the money and divide the profits with him.

Attorney Magee explained that the purpose of this evidence was to show that Pardini would not be likely to make a note for $2,500 to one member of the firm when he held the firm's due bill for $500 and was under contract to advance money to be used in their business as dealers in produce.

According to Pardini's books, the firm of Paslene Bros. was indebted to him for five years before and at the date of his death for work and materials furnished.

On behalf of the plaintiff it was stated that the $2,500 transaction represented by the note was a private matter between Pardini and John Paslene and had nothing to do with the partnership affairs of Paslene Bros. Andrew Paslene testified that he saw Pardini sign the note, but knew nothing of the business with which it was concerned. J. J. Joseph, who is employed by Paslene Brothers, corroborated Andrew Paslene in regard to the signature.

COURT AND EXPERT COULD NOT AGREE.

Points in a Disputed Signature That Judge Hunt Failed to See.

In the suit of John Paslene against the estate of L. Pardini, deceased, to collect $2,500 on a note for that amount, purporting to have been signed by the decedent, John F. Holland, and J. J. Joseph testified before Judge Hunt yesterday that they saw Pardini sign the note.

Theodore Kytka was called as an expert in handwriting and declared the signature of Pardini to be a forgery. He exhibited an enlarged photograph of the signature and pointed out what he declared to be pin points that had been used as guides by the person who wrote the signature.

"You may be right, but I must confess that my eyes do not detect the signs you mention," said Judge Hunt.

Attorney J. C. Campbell asked Mr. Kytka if experts Ames and Carvalho did not disagree with him in regard to the genuineness of testator's signature in the Davis will contest. Mr. Kytka admitted that to be true, but said those gentlemen received $2,500 each for their services.

Mr. Campbell offered to be sworn in order that he might dispute Mr. Kytka's statement, but Judge Hunt said it was immaterial and closed the incident. Additional testimony will be taken to-day.

Handwriting Experts Not Believed.

Judge Hunt has little faith in experts who give theoretical testimony. He announced his judgment yesterday in favor of the plaintiff in the suit of John Pastine against F. Pardini, administrator of Luigi Pardini's estate, for $2500 on a promissory note. Positive testimony that the deceased Pardini had signed the note was given, but T. Kytka, a handwriting expert, and a bank cashier declared the signature a forgery.

ALLEGED FORGERY OF A NOTE.

Handwriting Question to Be Solved by Judge Hunt.

The suit of John Paslene against F. Pardini, administrator of Luigi Pardini's estate, on a promissory note for $2500, dated June 1, 1898, was on trial yesterday before Judge Hunt. The genuineness of the signature on the note was disputed. John F. Holland and J. J. Joseph, who had been in Paslene's employ, testified that they saw Pardini sign the note. F. Brigeano, cashier of the Columbus Savings and Loan Society, testified that in his opinion the signature had not been written by Pardini.

Theodore Kytka was called as an expert, and he asserted that the writing on the note was a forgery, and that the name had been copied from a genuine signature. Judge Hunt seemed to be skeptical as to some of Kytka's theoretical points. Attorney J. P. Campbell maintained that the testimony of the handwriting experts was worthless, as they were paid to testify, and in every important case in which experts were called to give opinions on one side other experts made equally positive declarations for the other side. The testimony for the plaintiff was to the effect that Pardini was standing up when he wrote his name on the note, but Kytka said that no difference in the character of the handwriting was caused by the position of the writer. The trial was not finished.

SUIT ON A NOTE

John Pastine is suing the estate of L. Pardini before Judge Hunt to collect $2500 on a note which bears the alleged signature of Pardini. Pastine declares the signature on the note to be a forgery, and refuses to make payment. Theodore Kytka, as an expert, declared that the signature was a forgery. The Court, however, does not seem inclined to take Mr. Kytka's testimony as final.

JUDGE TROUTT IS NOW IN DOUBT.

Attorney Wheeler's Argument Has Effect—Important Ruling in Favor of Mrs. Craven May Be Changed.

By an argument that began in the morning and ended in the afternoon yesterday, Attorney Charles S. Wheeler, speaking in behalf of the children of James G. Fair, succeeded in causing Judge Troutt to doubt whether a ruling which he made lately in favor of Mrs. Nettie R. Craven was correct. The ruling was to the effect that the decree of partial distribution of the real property of the Fair estate, which was made in 1897, and which cannot now be changed or appealed from, does not forever debar Mrs. Craven from claiming that she is Fair's widow and that she can petition for a share of the remaining property as widow and heir. The decree stated that the only heirs of Fair were the three children, and declared as a fact that he left no widow. Mrs. Craven has applied for an allowance of $5000 per month as Fair's widow. In their answer to her petition the Fair children say that she was a party of the proceedings for partial distribution, and was represented by her attorney in court when they took place, that she presented no claim then as a widow and that it is now too late to urge such a claim.

The demurrer to the first answer filed was sustained by Judge Troutt on the ground that while the decree of partial distribution stopped her from claiming any of the property described in that decree, it could not keep her from demanding a widow's share of the other property. An amended answer was then filed, and the demurrer to it was argued yesterday.

Wheeler said that an application for partial distribution is not an insignificant proceeding. A whole estate may be distributed by it, as was done in the Jessup case. It would be an anomaly to have the court's decree on one day that certain persons are the heirs and on another that others are the heirs. He remarked that if Mrs. Craven were allowed to pose as an heir now, later on there might be another claimant in the person of a child of James G. Fair's deceased son. The anomaly was to be avoided, if that could be done, by a certain construction of the law.

Judge Troutt said that he felt that he should give further thought to the matter, notwithstanding his ruling, as it was important and he wanted to be right. He will notify Attorney Pique by next Monday as to whether he desires to hear further argument from him on Mrs. Craven's behalf.

FAIR EXECUTORS ARE MUCH VEXED.

2, 1902

May Soon Disturb the Plans of Rich Man's Children.

The attorneys for the Fair children, the executors and trustees, and Mrs. Nettie R. Craven gathered in Judge Troutt's court yesterday to discuss a motion with reference to one of Mrs. Craven's numerous petitions which was on the calendar, but the matter went over for a week. An opportunity was afforded the lawyers to do some talking out of court, and it appeared that, while the Fair children and the executors named in the trust will have been standing together against Mrs. Craven, they have differences of their own, which may become more manifest before long. The executors are Messrs. Goodfellow, Angus and Crothers. Garret McEnerney is attorney for Goodfellow and Pierson & Crothers are the lawyers for the other two. These attorneys have allowed Charles L. Fair's contest against the trust will to slumber in court at the request of Attorney Heggerty, representing Charles L. Fair, but they are now disposed to force it to trial without further delay. This will disarrange the children's plans.

On behalf of the Fair children complaints have been made that they have received none of the income of their father's estate since his death, while the attorneys for the executors and other parties have been paid hundreds of thousands of dollars. Attorney McEnerney, speaking on this point yesterday, explained that the estate had been so tied up by the proceedings instituted by the children that the executors had no authority to pay them anything at present.

The dissatisfaction on the part of the children has already developed a mild spirit of resentment on the part of the executors, who have been the target of the children's criticism. It is said on behalf of the executors that it was the children who first joined hands with Mrs. Craven and got her into the estate matter as a disturbing element. They wanted to use the pencil will which she brought forward in order to knock out the trust will.

"They sowed the wind and are reaping the whirlwind," remarked one of the attorneys for the executors yesterday. He ventured the prediction that if the Fair trust will should be declared void by the Supreme Court the children would compromise with Mrs. Craven and give her part of the estate.

OBJECT TO HER CLAIM AS THEIR STEPMOTHER.

Children of the Late James G. Fair Seek to Estop Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair.

Feb 1, 1900

Judge Troutt of the Superior Court heard argument by Charles S. Wheeler yesterday on behalf of the children of the late James G. Fair who oppose the application for family allowance made by Mrs. Nettie R. Craven-Fair, who claims recognition as the widow of the deceased.

Mrs. Theresa Oelrichs, Charles L. Fair and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt set up in answer to Mrs. Craven-Fair's petition for family allowance that she is estopped by reason of previous proceedings in the case. They say that when they petitioned for partial distribution of the real estate to them on the ground that they were the sole heirs at law, Mrs. Craven-Fair was present and made herself a party to the proceeding, that she presented no objections to their claim that they were the sole heirs at law, that the only objection offered by Attorney D. M. Delmas, speaking for Mrs. Craven-Fair and in her presence, was that an attempt was being made to deprive her of two pieces of property to which she alleged that she held valid deeds, that thereupon their petition, so far as it related to those pieces of property, was dismissed and abandoned by the children of Fair, that Mrs. Craven-Fair laid no claim to being the surviving wife or widow of James G. Fair and claimed no interest or heirship to the estate by reason of alleged widowhood.

On behalf of the children of Fair, it is contended that the order of court made at that time, declaring them the only heirs at law, determined the succession to the estate of James G. Fair and acts as an estoppel to claims now set up by Mrs. Craven-Fair.

Judge Troutt took the matter under advisement until next Monday, at which time he will announce whether he desires to hear argument from the attorneys representing Mrs. Craven-Fair.

A NEW ATTACK BY MRS. CRAVEN

FORFEITURE CLAUSE IS AMMUNITION FOR HER.

FAIR'S WILL PROVIDED THAT A CONTESTANT SHOULD GET NOTHING.

Her Attorneys Maintain That the Millionaire's Children Have Lost All Right to Inherit.

Lafe Pence, who was a Populist Congressman in Colorado, has busied himself since he came here to reside in preparing petitions of all sorts on behalf of Mrs. Nettie R. Craven, he being the latest addition to her list of attorneys. In the last few months numerous applications for the purpose of securing for her a share of James G. Fair's estate have been filed in the Superior Court. The names of all of her counsel have been signed to them, but Pence has been the active man in the new campaign against the Fair children. The lawyers on the other side say that this is the only local case that he has as yet, and that he is consequently devoting all of his time to devising pleas to advance Mrs. Craven's claims. Mrs. Craven, who calls herself Mrs. Fair, and the barristers supporting her manifest a determination to keep the litigation over the estate alive for years, and Pence has suggested that it can be carried into the Federal courts when the processes of the State courts are exhausted. The last petition presented for Mrs. Craven attacks the right of the Fair children to take any of the estate on account of this provision in James G. Fair's trust will, dated September 21, 1894, which was admitted to probate:

I expressly declare and provide that if any one or more of the legatees or devisees in this will named or provided for shall at any time commence any proceeding to contest this will, the legacy, devise and provision therein bequeathed, devised and provided for shall from that time become void and I hereby revoke the same, and neither the court having jurisdiction of my estate nor my said executors or trustees shall have any authority to distribute, pay or deliver to such legatee or devisee any portion of the legacy or devise to which they would otherwise be entitled under the provisions hereof.

The petition states that on March 15, 1895, Charles L. Fair, Mrs. Theresa A. Oelrichs and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt, the children of Fair, offered for probate a will dated September 24, 1894, claiming that it was the last will of their father and proceeded to contest the trust will; that on May 7, 1895, Charles L. Fair commenced proceedings to contest the trust will by filing in court his written grounds of opposition; that on March 23, 1897, Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt commenced proceedings to contest the will by filing a petition relating to real property belonging to the estate, the defendants being the executors named in the will; that Charles L. Fair commenced proceedings, in which his sisters joined, against the will, by suing the executors to have the provisions in the will for the disposal of the real estate declared unlawful; that on March 23, 1897, the three children took further steps to oppose the will by petitioning for the distribution to them of the real property belonging to the estate, alleging that the trust provided for in the will was void; that on April 28, 1897, they filed a similar petition in relation to the personal property of the estate; and that on November 15, 1897, Charles L. Fair began other proceedings against the will by petitioning that its probate be revoked. It is contended that the right of the children to take under the trust will has thus been forfeited.

Charles J. Heggerty, attorney for Charles L. Fair, said yesterday that Pence had not been here long enough to get acquainted with the case fully. He stated that the proceeding in which the three children joined was a petition to have the will construed. Such a proceeding was not a contest, he remarked. Charles Fair began a contest, which was still pending in the Superior Court. It could be dropped if deemed advisable, and then Fair would not be a contestant. Mrs. Craven endeavored lately to intervene in this contest so that she might have some authority in directing it, but she was shut out by Judge Troutt. The course of the proceedings on behalf of the children will depend on the Supreme Court decision with reference to the trust. Judge Slack decided against the trust in relation to the real estate. Heggerty said that if the Supreme Court sustained that decision the whole trust would be invalidated, since the court could not give the trustees the right to hold the personal property alone, as that would amount to making a new will for Fair. The children will, therefore, take as heirs all of the property set apart for the trust, and that will end their objections to the will. Even if the contest should fail, Heggerty observed, none of the children will lose as provided in the forfeiture clause, for where there is reasonable cause for a contest courts will not enforce such a provision against a contestant. As an authority on this point Heggerty read "Schouler on Wills," published in 1892, as follows:

No arbitrary rule meets well the cases likely to arise under this head, but circumstances ought to influence the construction. The English rule applied to legacies seems the true one, namely, to treat a condition, not to dispute the will as in terrorem and void against sound policy wherever it appears that the legatee had probable cause for contesting the validity or effect of the will, though not otherwise. In this country the question appears still an open one, though a few decisions bearing upon the point may be found.

Heggerty admitted that Mrs. Craven could begin a proceeding to prevent the children from getting their share of the estate, but he said that she would have to prove first that she was Fair's widow before she could become a party in interest and get a standing in court to press the proceeding.

EXECUTORS AND LAWYERS GET ALL

Children of Late Senator Fair Are Longing for Dividends.

Nov. 11 '99

ACCOUNT STATED.

Received from the estate of James G. Fair, deceased.

Theresa Fair Oelrichs, daughter	100,000
Charles L. Fair, son	100,000
Virginia Fair Vanderbilt, daughter	100,000
Pierson & Mitchell, attorneys	105,000
Garret W. McEnerney, attorney	62,500
Houston, Hamilton & Bechell, attorneys	20,505
G. M. Spier, attorney	2,500
Van R. Paterson, attorney	10,000
A. J. Treat, attorney	1,500
W. S. Goodfellow, executor	62,249
T. G. Crothers, executor	62,249
J. S. Angus, executor	62,249
L. C. Breese, executor (dead)	15,000
Total paid to lawyers	$192,005
Total paid to executors	201,747
	$392,762
Total paid to children of deceased	$300,000

An additional $50,000 is in the hands of the executors as a special fund provided by testator to pay expenses of administration.

JAMES G. FAIR has been dead for nearly five years—it will be five years on the 28th of next month—and as yet not a cent of his estate has passed into the hands of his children, though the income of the estate in that time has been over $4,000,000, and nearly $400,000 has been paid out as fees to the executors and their lawyers," said Charles J. Heggerty.

Mr. Heggerty is a member of the firm of Knight & Heggerty, who represent Charles L. Fair in his struggle to obtain possession of part of his father's estate.

"It is safe to say that no more allowances will be made to executors or lawyers if Senator Fair's children can prevent it, until after the affairs of the estate are settled and the property is ready for distribution," Mr. Heggerty added. He spoke for Charles L. Fair, client of his firm, but said it was well understood that Mrs. Theresa Oelrichs and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt were also opposed to any more payments to outsiders until they are placed in a position to handle some of their father's millions.

"Of course no one questions the sincerity of the gentlemen on the other side, but Senator Fair's children realize as well as any one else that so long as a cow is producing cream it is not to be expected that the persons whose buckets are being filled will voluntarily turn her out to grass," said Mr. Heggerty. "In the past years it has been the regular custom for the executors and their lawyers to go into court and obtain allowances 'on account of services performed,' and there is nothing to show that the estate is any nearer settlement now than it was six months after Senator Fair's death. If this were allowed to go on without protest there would be no incentive to make the executors and their lawyers hasten the winding up of the estate. It is not in human nature to expect them to do that so long as they may reap such a harvest by prolonging the proceedings."

Mr. Heggerty said that the Fair heirs do not protest against the expenditure of money by the executors in pushing the improvements at North Beach, but that they favor completion of that work, by proper outlay of funds, at the earliest possible moment. The management of the executors has not been attacked in any manner. On the contrary, the administration of the estate's affairs has been satisfactory to the heirs, with the exception of the frequent allowances of fees to the executors and their attorneys.

"Nor do the heirs of Senator Fair object to liberal compensation to all these gentlemen," Mr. Heggerty said. "On the contrary, they are quite willing for all of them to get every dollar they are entitled to, but the children do think it a hardship that others should enjoy their father's fortune while they, who ought to have the first preference, get nothing, but must await the convenience and pleasure of those who have charge of the property."

Fair Estate Claimants to Appear.

Judge Troutt yesterday made an order in accordance with the petition of Mrs. Nettie R. Craven that all persons interested in the estate of James G. Fair set forth their claims under section 1861 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Monday, March 5, 1900, is the day fixed for the appearance of these persons in court. The hearing of Mrs. Craven's application for an allowance of $500 a month as Fair's widow will be taken up by Judge Troutt as soon as he disposes of a few matters ahead of it on the calendar.

RECLAMATION ON THE SAN JOAQUIN.

The principality won for California during the past few years in the lower stretches of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers equals, both in size and promise, more than one of the European states, a work, the importance of which is not realized, perhaps, by many not directly interested.

The great productiveness of the vast reaches of "tule lands," in the valley "bottoms" of these rivers, was early appreciated and attempts made to reclaim these lands. Hand levees were thrown up at great expense and other improvements made, the San Francisco banks loaning large sums for the carrying out of this work. The first season of high water, however, would sweep these slight obstructions away resistlessly, and the result was, in every case, loss and destruction to all concerned. After years of an unequal struggle, the attempt to win these lands from the waters was abandoned, except in special instances where the conditions were favorable. The result was severe depreciation in the value of the property, the ruling price even to day for unreclaimed land being only from $6 to $10 an acre. The difficulty of the situation may be better realized when it is understood that the larger proportion of the tule lands average a foot or more below the level of mean high tide at the edges, or borders, of the rivers and sloughs, while the centers of the islands are perhaps 18 inches lower. When it is also remembered that the rivers frequently rise 10 or, in places, 20 feet during high water, the necessity for strong and substantial levees will be apparent.

AN IMMENSE DREDGER BUCKET.

Californian energy has, however, in this, as in so many other cases, risen superior to the occasion, and, as in gold saving machinery she leads the world, so she does in dredging, the work of reclamation being now carried out more cheaply in California than in any other country. This has been accomplished by the large size and perfection of detail of the dredgers employed.

The one chosen for illustration is Golden Gate Dredger No. 1, the property of the Golden Gate Dredging and Reclamation Company of San Francisco, Willis G. Witter, president, and Marshall C. Harris, manager, which, we believe, bears the reputation of being the largest bucket dredging machine ever constructed. It is the product of the shops of the Golden State and Miners Iron Works of San Francisco, built according to the plans of the owners, and represents the latest advance in that line to the date of its construction, two years ago. The enormous capacity of this machine may be imagined from the illustration of the bucket, in which a man almost disappears from view. The bucket is 7 feet across, and its cubical capacity is 4 yards even full, while the weight of its load may be 16 or 20 tons, according to the material. This load is lifted at the end of a boom 135 feet long, which swings with a radius of 270 feet, grasping its burden, raising it, swinging to the opposite side and depositing it, in the average record time of 52 seconds.

The exhilaration of standing in the pilot house of this great machine, while in operation, where one man controls every movement of the immense crane, is very fine, especially at night, when the surrounding blackness is accentuated by the sharp outlines of the electric lights with which the dredger is supplied. The triumphant thrill of feeling man's power over the forces of nature is intense.

When visited by the writer this dredger was working on the grade of the San Joaquin Valley railroad, directly west across the tule lands. This work was completed in April last, and the dredger is now engaged in deepening the Stockton channel, under contract with the United States government.

With such great machines, levees are constructed as high as desired, of the solid material raised from the bottom of the river, the base of the levee being usually made 100 feet, and the top from 15 to 25 feet wide. With such an embankment, there is almost absolute security, and the immediate result is seen in the enhanced values of the lands, which bring from $60 to $100 an acre. That such prices are not extravagant, however, is shown by the value of similar lands in Holland, which, not a whit superior, but even inferior in not possessing the virgin richness of this new reclamation, are held at hundreds and even thousands of dollars to the acre. That a like valuation lies in the near future for the California lands is indicated by the eagerness with which moneyed men are investing in large tracts, one of the latest purchases being the 4000 acres cut off the upper, or southern end of Bacon Island by the grade of the valley railroad, just mentioned. O. Y. Woodward, one of the men made rich by the fertility of other reclaimed lands, well known on the rivers for his enterprise, was the buyer of this tract.

The justification for such purchases is found in the exuberant fertility of the reclaimed sections. Two crops a year of potatoes is usual, and the yield is often as high as 300 sacks per acre. Potato fields of 1000 acres have averaged as high as 200

SERIOUS CHARGE OF FORGERY IS MADE

Supervisors Asked to Investigate a Contract Held by Street Contractors Flynn & Treacy.

Herman A. Druhe, trustee of the estate of the late John H. Druhe, in a communication to the Board of Supervisors this morning, makes statements that reflect upon the firm of Flinn & Treacy, contractors for streets work.

Druhe claims that the Board recently passed a resolution of intention to lay curbing and pave Lafayette street, between Union and Green streets. A few days later, he alleges, Flinn & Tracy filed a petition to the effect that they had received the signatures of the majority of the property owners favoring the work and employing the firm to do the work. The Druhe estate owns a frontage of eighty feet on Lafayette street. In the letter the trustee says:

"I did not sign the contract with Flinn & Treacy nor was my name placed there by me, nor did I authorize any agent to sign for me, and I emphatically state that my signature which appears on said contract of Flinn & Treacy was placed there without my consent, authorization or knowledge."

Druhe also complains that the signatures of other property owners appear upon the contracts of the firm, although the parties concerned have not affixed them. When the matter goes to the Board it is likely that an investigation will be instituted in an endeavor to glean information as to who did forge signatures on the contracts, as averred by Druhe.

"INDIAN LUCY" THE LEGAL WIFE OF MILLIONAIRE JOHN R. HITE.

LUCY HITE, THE INDIAN PLAINTIFF IN THE MARIPOSA DIVORCE CASE FROM A PHOTO TAKEN FOR THE BULLETIN.

John Hite Wrote His Name and That of His Wife.

If the Hotel Record Stands He Has Himself Proved Indian Lucy's Case.

MARIPOSA, Sept. 25.—This morning both sides in the Hite divorce case introduced testimony, but it was a field day for the plaintiff.

William Stanley was the first witness called by the defense, but he knew nothing.

John Matthews, a [illegible], knew Hite twenty-seven years and always heard Lucy referred to as Lucy Hite, "Hite's woman" and "Hite's squaw."

Then the plaintiff called Sherman C. Reynolds, and Attorney Hanlon produced the hotel register from a sack, causing a profound sensation. Attorneys and reporters gathered about the book and witness.

Reynolds lives in San Francisco and identified the book. On line 12, under date of October 30, 1877, the witness identified entry.

"J. R. Hite and wife."

The Court examined the page with a glass. The witness denied changing anything in the book.

On cross-examination by Foote the witness admitted having been on both sides of the case. He admitted taking money from both sides. Foote asked the witness if he had made an affidavit in the case.

"Yes."

"Is that it?"

The witness looked at the affidavit and answered that it was.

While Foote was proceeding with the cross-examination plaintiff's attorneys examined the affidavit.

"Hold on, there," shouted Hanlon. "This is not the right affidavit."

Then he said to the witness:

"Is your name James E. Wilson?"

"Of course not."

"That's all right," said Foote, calmly. "I gave him the wrong affidavit purposely."

"Now, then," to the witness, "is this the affidavit?" giving him another document.

The witness was very nervous.

"What's the matter with your hand?" asked Foote. "Hold it up and let the court see how it trembles."

Foote asked the witness repeatedly if he did not know who rubbed out the entry, now blank, but the witness denied knowing.

Foote asked the witness if he did not know that John A. Wall rubbed it out.

Answer—No.

By stipulation Foote then examined Reynolds as a witness for the defense.

"Did not you steal that book?"

Answer—No.

The witness testified that he had known John and Lucy Hite a long time. He didn't know them as husband and wife. Reynolds made a pitiful figure throughout his examination.

Hanlon, Church and Wall were sworn and corroborated Reynolds' testimony regarding the hotel register of the El Capitan Hotel. Attorney Patterson's statement to the same effect was accepted.

In the cross-examination of Church by Foote, the witness said that Lucy boarded with the witness' wife in San Francisco for several months.

J. W. Congdon, attorney for the defense, was called by the plaintiff. Congdon testified that he had never heard Lucy referred to as Lucy Hite. Hanlon then produced records of a criminal case of ten years ago, in which Lucy Hite was a witness, and was called Lucy Hite by Congdon. The witness did not remember calling her Lucy Hite.

Lorenzo Alcard, who yesterday swore he had never heard Lucy called Lucy Hite, was recalled by plaintiff. He admitted being a juror in the same case, but did not remember that Lucy Hite was a witness.

Thomas Gibbs, called by plaintiff, was familiar with Hite's handwriting. He looked long and earnestly at the entry in the hotel register and finally said the inscription was dim and was not positive.

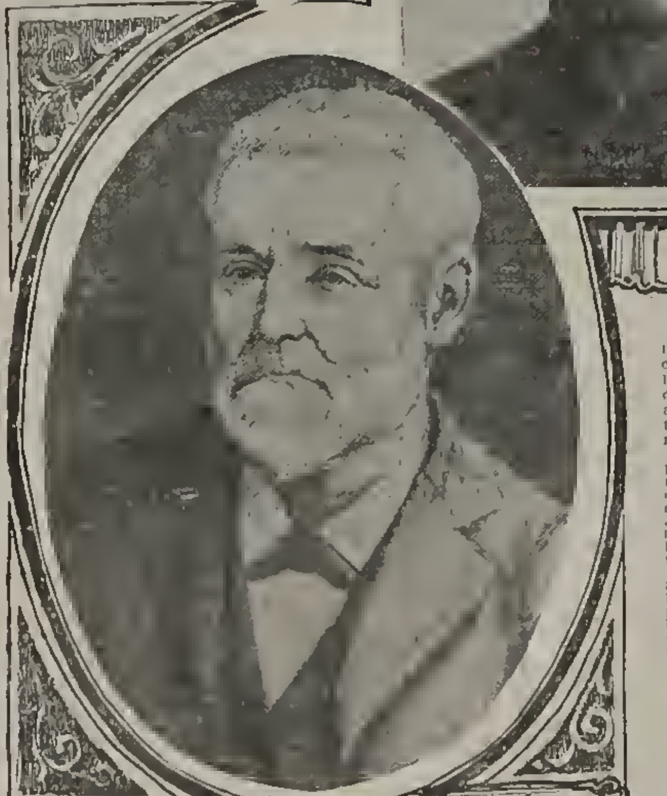
(Continued on Second Page.)

Judge Jones Decides Suit in Her Favor.

Also Grants Her Prayer for Annulment of Tie

INDIAN LUCY, who, as a dusky-hued maiden, sat upon the knee of John R. Hite twenty-eight years ago and solemnly declared "Conna me ohn," while Hite, with equal gravity, replied, "Meenee conna longa," has been declared by law the legal wife of the millionaire mine-owner, though with the declaration comes the annulment of the marital tie, for which she prayed. Thus has been decided one of the most unique cases ever tried in a California court and one which has attracted attention throughout the United States. An Indian marriage under the old Statute has been declared valid, and as a consequence John R. Hite will be called upon to share his millions with the woman, who, in times of adversity, occupied his humble miner's cabin and administered to his wants, but who, when wealth lay at his feet, was thrown aside, as a cast-off garment, to have her place usurped by a white woman.

Lucy Hite.



John R Hite

Yesterday Judge Joseph P. Jones, before whom the celebrated case was tried, handed down the long-looked for decision. It not only makes "Lucy" Mrs. Hite in the eyes of the world, but allows her $50 monthly alimony, pending further action for a division of community property and gives to her attorneys $1000 in fees. Though the decision does not so mention, it is obvious that Hite's subsequent marriage to Celia Nouignes, who nursed him through a critical illness, is invalid.

Next will come a suit for the wife's share of the wealth the millionaire has amassed, and doubtless long delays and stubbornly-contested appeals, which may drag along for years in court. The history of this unusually interesting case, at points, is as dramatic as the early life of John Hite and "Lucy" was romantic.

In 1855 Hite, a tall, muscular and handsome Southerner, came to California and drifted into Mariposa county. He was a favorite in the mining camps, and when he took a pretty young Indian woman into his cabin, after the irresponsible fashion of the early days, there were none to question his right. She followed him about on his prospecting tours, and it was her keenness which located the spot, which, from Hite's first prospecting, developed into the great Hite mine and made the owner a millionaire.

This pretty Indian woman died, but a younger sister, "Lucy," survived, and though she was then the mistress of another's cabin, Hite induced her to come to him, and he gloried in the personality of the prettiest squaw in the county. Then, after a time, those Indian words were spoken to which meant to Hite "I am your wife" and to the girl "I am your husband."

Lucy grew old and Hite tired of her as his wealth increased. Finally, in October, two years ago the millionaire married a former nurse, casting off "Lucy." Then came the suit for [illegible]

Attorney W. W. Foote of Hite's counsel, who had charged, in a stinging speech, that blackmail was being attempted. The scene at the time was one of excitement, heightened by talk of "guns," "assassination" and other similar expressions. Finally the case was ended and Judge Jones retired to Mariposa county to prepare his decision.

Prior to this time the Supreme Court was appealed to to make an order allowing "Lucy" alimony and sufficient funds out of Hite's hoard with which to prosecute her case. This motion was denied, on the ground that the plaintiff must first prove her legal title to wifehood.

In his decision Judge Jones goes at length into the descriptive and quotes much of the testimony introduced. After recalling the cause of action and the defendant's answer it reads:

The plaintiff is an Indian woman, about 50 years of age, but has a white, otherwise her age is not so apparent [illegible] in her action and of modest demeanor. Some time in the latter sixties she lived and cohabited with one Jerry Gibbs, and by him had a child, now a man in years and who has testified in this case and whose father is now dead. In the years 1867 or [illegible] she lived and cohabited for a time with one Hutchinson, otherwise known here as "Yankee Jim." Part of the year [illegible] and 1871 she lived and cohabited with John R. Hite, the defendant in this action. She left him in the latter part of 1871 and went to live near a place called Schroeder's Mill. In the early part of 1872 she again returned to live with defendant at Hite's Cove, and remained with him there until 1880, when she went with him to Indian Peak, about sixteen miles from Hite's Cove, in Mariposa county, which place is also known as the Alta ranch and the Hunt ranch, and remained with him until the latter part of 1886, during which period they occupied the same house, same room and same bed together, Hite paying her and some [illegible] with credit and paying board, furnishing her with food and paying her bills, both at Hite's Cove and the Alta ranch, where he built a small house, a barn, some fencing and other improvements, making a home. There they remained and lived together until the time when he left Mariposa county for a trip through Mexico, New Mexico and Arizona, making some investments. He returned to Fresno county and there purchased some lands, which he managed and worked until 1891, when he came to the city of San Francisco. The plaintiff has remained at the [illegible] of that ranch since Hite left Mariposa county, being supported by him till the latter part of the year 1896, he visiting the Hunt ranch occasionally after 1886.

Hite, the defendant, as he appears here, is a man of 70 years of age, with white hair and whiskers somewhat on the decline. From the date of the discovery of the Hite mine he has been an industrious, hard-working, active and energetic man and continued so up to the time of his [illegible] in San Francisco in 1891. [illegible] unions in this State. All of the cases cited are construed to bear directly on the point at issue and over which many days were spent by the attorneys in arguments and presentation of authorities. Then the Court continues by summing up Lucy's testimony as follows:

I know John Hite. I was married to him a long time ago. I never was married to any one but John Hite. I lived with Jerry Gibbs, not married to him. I also lived with "Yankee Jim." Most time John Hite want to take me home. First time John Hite came for me I went with him. I left John Hite, he no talk to me that time marry me. Next time he send Bill Stanley; said if I come back he would marry me. John Hite say make me wife, he no want me to go away. As soon as I get there he want to marry me. I was sitting in his lap. He said to me "Conna me ohn, meenee conna longa" in Indian language. All means, "You my wife I your husband." I repeated the words "Conna me ohn," "I your wife." Hite said "Meenee conna longa," "I your husband." After that I lived with him as his wife.

After an extended summary of Hite's testimony, in which he declares he first met Lucy in 1862, lived with her, but never acknowledged her as his wife, the Judge expresses it as his view from the testimony that Hite presumed a formal Christian or civil ceremony was necessary to constitute marriage. Several pages of testimony from various witnesses, tending to show that Hite introduced the Indian woman as his wife, precede this conclusion:

All the witnesses who knew the parties during the period practically agree that from the early part of 1872 to the latter part of 1886, a period of nearly fifteen years, the plaintiff was living with the defendant, and other witnesses who knew the parties for a shorter period testified to the same effect.

The testimony of the defendant shows that he associated with the Indians before he lived with Mary, Lucy's sister. That during this time he was acquainted with Lucy from the time she was a child with her Indian parents in 1858 to 1872. He must have known her reputation, the fact of her having lived with Jerry Gibbs, by whom she had a child, and who has been a witness in this case. He knew she was living with "Yankee Jim," otherwise Hutchinson, that he, Hite, took her from or persuaded her to leave "Yankee Jim" and live with him, the defendant, in meretricious cohabitation for several months, during which time he did not talk of marriage. After which both plaintiff and defendant testify that their relations for several months were [illegible].

The plaintiff also knew defendant from her childhood, that he had lived with her sister, that another sister was living with Hogan as his wife. And from the testimony she desired to be the wife of the defendant. She testified that he sent for her to come and he would make her his wife. She went to his house. At Hite's Cove there followed such an agreement and understanding between them that she lived with him from 1872 to 1880 at Hite's Cove, when he moved to Indian Peak and established a home, taking her with him, remaining there continuously until the latter part of 1886, making a continuous period of more than fourteen years that he lived with her before he became tired of her and went away, returning thereafter only occasionally, but furnishing her support and paying her bills, even though his affection for the plaintiff had waned, until he became infatuated with Cecelia Nouignes he recognized his obligation to the plaintiff. And this was the first time that he made himself believe that the plaintiff had no further claims on him or for support. After having recognized and so acknowledged her to many people, some of whom have testified here, as his wife for a period of twenty-five years, it would be against good conscience, good morals and against the interest of society for the court to fail to recognize the obligations the testimony shows he assumed for that long period.

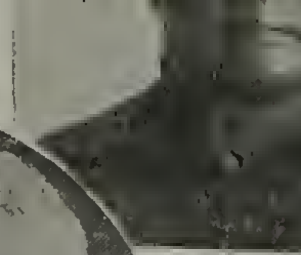
The marriage, to my mind, is established from the evidence, under the laws of this State as it existed prior to the adoption of the codes.

John R. Hite, the defendant, should be held to provide a support for the plaintiff [illegible] and alimony.

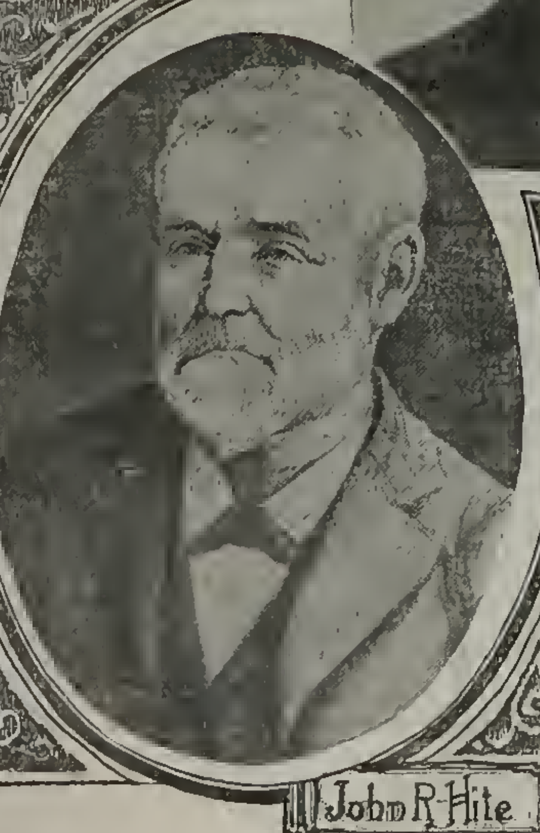
In the matter of alimony and [illegible] in this case [illegible] of the State [illegible] the Supreme Court of this State [illegible] only question determined [illegible] from the headnote of the [illegible]

"In an action for divorce brought by the wife where the marriage is denied [illegible] [illegible] a preponderance of the [illegible] A mere prima facie showing [illegible] is not sufficient."

[illegible]



Lucy Hite.



John R. Hite.

of the millionaire mine-owner, though with the declaration comes the annulment of the marital tie, for which she prayed. Thus has been decided one of the most unique cases ever tried in a California court and one which has attracted attention throughout the United States. An Indian marriage under the old Statute has been declared valid, and as a consequence John R. Hite will be called upon to share his millions with the woman, who, in times of adversity, occupied his humble miner's cabin and administered to his wants, but who, when wealth lay at his feet, was thrown aside, as a cast-off garment, to have her place usurped by a white woman.

Yesterday Judge Joseph P. Jones, before whom the celebrated case was tried, handed down the long-looked for decision. It not only makes "Lucy" Mrs. Hite in the eyes of the world, but allows her $50 monthly alimony, pending further action for a division of community property and gives to her attorneys $1000 in fees. Though the decision does not so mention, it is obvious that Hite's subsequent marriage to Celia Nougues, who nursed him through a critical illness, is invalid.

Next will come a suit for the wife's share of the wealth the millionaire has amassed, and doubtless long delays and stubbornly contested appeals, which may drag along for years in court. The history of this unusually interesting case, at points, is as dramatic as the early life of John Hite and "Lucy" was romantic.

In 1855 Hite, a tall, muscular and handsome Southerner, came to California and drifted into Mariposa county. He was a favorite in the mining camps, and when he took a pretty young Indian woman into his cabin, after the irresponsible fashion of the early days, there were none to question his right. She followed him about on his prospecting tours, and it was her keenness which located the spot, which, from Hite's first prospecting, developed into the great Hite mine and made its owner a millionaire.

This pretty Indian woman died, but a younger sister, "Lucy," survived, and though she was then the mistress of another's cabin, Hite induced her to come to him, and he gloried in the ownership of the prettiest squaw in the county. Then, after a time, those Indian words were spoken in which she said to Hite "I am your wife" and to the girl "I am your husband."

Lucy grew old and Hite tired of her as his wealth increased. Finally, in October, two years ago, the millionaire married a former nurse, casting off "Lucy." Then came the suit for acknowledgment and wealth, the decision of which has just been handed down.

The action was for divorce on the ground of infidelity, naming Cecilia Nougues as co-respondent, though she had come through the marriage ceremony with Hite, for alimony and a division of community property. In answer Hite denied he had ever married "Lucy," denied her title to "wife," declaring that Cecilia Hite was his lawful wife and denying the existence of any community property. The divorce action was begun in Mariposa, September [illegible] of this year, but subsequently was transferred to this city, where Judge Jones held court in the offices of Bogess & Paterson, attorneys for the plaintiff.

A bitter legal struggle ensued. So intense did the conflict wage that it engendered hard feelings among the attorneys, and at one time the "lie" was bandied in the courtroom, directed at Attorney W. W. Foote of Hite's counsel, who had charged, in a stinging speech, that blackmail was being attempted. The scene at the time was one of excitement, heightened by talk of "guns," "assassination" and other similar expressions. Finally the case was ended and Judge Jones retired to Mariposa county to prepare his decision.

Prior to this time the Supreme Court was appealed to to make an order allowing "Lucy" alimony and sufficient funds out of Hite's hoard with which to prosecute her case. This motion was denied, on the ground that the plaintiff must first prove her legal title to wifehood.

In his decision Judge Jones goes at length into the description and quotes much of the testimony introduced. After reciting the cause of action and the defendant's answer it reads:

The plaintiff is an Indian woman, about 50 years of age—her hair white, otherwise her age is not so apparent; sprightly in her action and of modest demeanor. Some time in the latter sixties she lived and cohabited with one Jerry Gibbs, and by him had a child, now a man in years and who has testified in this case, and whose father is now dead. In the years 1870 or 1871 she lived and cohabited for a time with one Hutchinson, otherwise known here as "Yankee Jim." Part of the years of 1870 and 1871 she lived and cohabited with John R. Hite, the defendant in this action. She left him in the latter part of 1871 and went to live near a place called Schneider's Mill. In the early part of 1872 she again returned to live with defendant at Hite's Cove, and remained with him there until 1880, when she went with him to Indian peak, about sixteen miles from Hite's Cove, in Mariposa county, which place is also known as the Alta ranch and the Goat ranch, and remained with him until the latter part of 1886, during which period they occupied the same house, same room and same bed together, Hite paying her board, furnishing her with credit and paying her bills, both at Hite's Cove and the Alta ranch, where he built a small house, a barn, some fencing and other improvements, making a home. There they remained and lived together until the time when he left Mariposa county for a trip through Mexico, New Mexico and Arizona, making some investments. He returned to Fresno county and there purchased some lands, which he managed and worked until 1891, when he came to the city of San Francisco. The plaintiff has remained at the Alta or Goat ranch since Hite left Mariposa county, being supported by him till the latter part of the year [illegible], he visiting the Goat ranch occasionally after 1886.

Hite, the defendant, as he appears here, is a man of [illegible] years of age, with white hair and evidently somewhat on the decline. From the time of the discovery of the Hite mine he has been an industrious, hard working, active and energetic man, and continued so up to the time of his appearance in San Francisco in 1891, though he now claims he is a resident of the county of Fresno. From the [illegible] of him offered in evidence he must have been, in his early manhood, a tall, handsome man. During which period, [illegible] the choice of [illegible] environment, it is not now necessary to determine, [illegible] the Indian [illegible] Indian [illegible], and took Mary, a sister of the plaintiff, to live with him until the time of her death, which seems to have occurred in the late sixties.

After Mary's death, and in the year 1870 or 1871, he took Lucy, the plaintiff, to live with him at his abode at Hite's Cove. At this time his relations with her were meretricious, and so continued up to the time she left him in the latter part of 1871. After an absence of some months she again returned to live with him at Hite's Cove, and on this return plaintiff claims that their relations were changed and they became man and wife. And this raises the principal issue in this case, that of marriage.

At this point the opinion quotes many sections of the law and interpretations of it in various cases relative to common law marriages before the revision of the statutes, which prohibited such unions in this State. All of the cases cited are construed to bear directly on the point at issue and over which many days were spent by the attorneys in arguments and presentation of authorities. Then the Court continues by summing up Lucy's testimony as follows:

I know John Hite. I was married to him a long time ago. I never was married to any one but John Hite. I lived with Jerry Gibbs, not married to him. I also lived with "Yankee Jim." Most time John Hite want to take me home. First time John Hite come for me I went with him. I left John Hite, he no talk to me that time marry me. Next time he sent Bill Stanley; said if I come back he would marry me. John Hite say make me wife; he no want me to go away. As soon as I get there he want to marry me. I was sitting in his lap. He said to me "Conna me cha; meenee conna longa" in Indian language. All means, "You my wife, I your husband." I repeated the words "Conna me cha," "I your wife." Hite said: "Meenee conna longa," "I your husband." After that I lived with him as his wife.

After an extended summary of Hite's testimony, in which he declares he first met Lucy in 1862, lived with her, but never acknowledged her as his wife, the Judge expresses it as his view from the testimony that Hite presumed a formal Christian or civil ceremony was necessary to constitute marriage. Several pages of testimony from various witnesses, tending to show that Hite introduced the Indian woman as his wife, precede this conclusion:

All the witnesses who knew the parties during the period practically agree that from the early part of 1872 to the latter part of 1886, a period of nearly fifteen years, the plaintiff was living with the defendant, and other witnesses who knew the parties for a shorter period testified to the same effect.

The testimony of the defendant shows that he associated with the Indians before he lived with Mary, Lucy's sister. That during this time he was acquainted with Lucy from the time she was a child with her Indian parents in 1855 to 1862. He must have known her reputation, the fact of her having lived with Jerry Gibbs, by whom she had a child, and who has been a witness in this case. He knew she was living with "Yankee Jim," otherwise — Hutchinson, that he, Hite, took her from or persuaded her to leave "Yankee Jim" and live with him, the defendant, in meretricious cohabitation for several months, during which time he did not talk of marriage. After which both plaintiff and defendant testify that their relations for several months were severed.

The plaintiff also knew defendant from her childhood, that he had lived with her sister, that another sister was living with Hagan as his wife. And from the testimony she desired to be the wife of the defendant. She testified that he sent for her to come and he would make her his wife. She went to his house. At Hite's Cove there followed such an agreement and understanding between them that she lived with him from 1872 to 1880 at Hite's Cove, when he moved to Indian Peak and established a home, taking her with him, remaining there continuously until the latter part of 1886, making a continuous period of more than fourteen years that he lived with her before he became restless and went away, returning thereafter only occasionally, but furnishing her support and paying her bills, even though his affection for the plaintiff had waned. Until he became infatuated with Cecelia Nougues he recognized his obligation to the plaintiff. And this was the first time that he made himself believe that the plaintiff had no further claims on him or for support. After having recognized and acknowledged her to many people, some of whom have testified here, as his wife for a period of twenty-five years, it would be against good conscience, good morals and against the interest of society for the Court to fail to recognize the obligations the testimony shows he assumed for that long period.

The marriage, to my mind, is established from the evidence, under the laws of this State as it existed prior to the adoption of the code.

John R. Hite, the defendant, should be held to provide a support for the plaintiff.

In the matter of alimony and suit money in this case, heretofore determined by the Supreme Court of this State, I take it the only question determined by the decision, citing from the headnote of the opinion, was:

"In an action for divorce brought by the wife, where the marriage is denied, to entitle her to alimony and suit money she must prove it by a preponderance of the evidence. A mere prima facie showing is not sufficient."

Defendant Hite, though in the [illegible] when he first [illegible] the plaintiff, is now an old man, the plaintiff, her hair almost white with age, [illegible] and unable to sustain and provide for herself [illegible] action. And it appears [illegible] should be provided as such support, it seems should be provided, [illegible] in this case, in the sum of $1000, and [illegible] for her support and maintenance the sum of $50 per month during the pendency of this action.

The plaintiff is entitled to a decree of dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between the plaintiff and defendant.

Permanent support to her [illegible] all property rights of the parties [illegible] determined and tried after the court had determined the question of marriage and [illegible] alimony and expenses of suit.

JOSEPH P. JONES, Judge.

The transcribed evidence, depositions and other documents in the case, it is said, compose [illegible] volumes [illegible]. The [illegible] Indian action tried [illegible]. The counsel for the plaintiff were Attorneys Wall, Paterson, Hanlon, [illegible] and Castelhun, while Attorneys Foote and [illegible] represented Hite.

HANLON'S BIG CARD.

Close to Sensation.

Evidence Erased.

Hite Registered Indian Woman as His Wife in 1873.

Bulletin — Sept 28-99

The Register Was to Be Used as Evidence, But Some One Has Erased the Names.

MARIPOSA, Sept. 28.—A big sensation was due this morning in the Hite divorce case, but for obvious reasons it did not take place.

Mrs. Hite had a great card up her sleeve, and it was upon the playing of this card that she expected to win her case. On the register of the El Capitan Hotel, Merced, under the date of Tuesday, October 30, 1877, was this entry: "John R. Hite and wife." Attorney Hanlon had brought to Mariposa with him this register and had intended this morning to spring it with great lime light effect. But when the attorneys opened the register this morning they found that the name had been erased and there was nothing but a blank space there. Of course it was not introduced, but the attorneys hope to be able with the use of a glass and chemicals to bring the name out so it can be seen by the court and jury.

This bit of evidence was practically the whole case for the plaintiff, and it would have been strong testimony.

THE PLAINTIFF IN THE CASE ILL TO-DAY.

MARIPOSA, Cal., Sept. 28.—The Indian plaintiff in the Hite divorce case was not in court this morning, and it is said she is ill. John Visher was the first witness. On his direct examination by Hanlon, he said that, as to the repute of John Hite and Lucy Hite, he knew nothing except that she was called "Mrs. Hite."

On cross-examination by Foote, he said that Luther Grove first spoke to him about testifying in this case. He met Mr. Grove between the sawmill and Wawona. He was hauling lumber to Raymond. Asked as to who he had heard call Lucy "Mrs. Hite," the witness gave the names of several parties. The witness personally called her Mrs. Hite, and his wife visited the Hites and called Lucy "Mrs. Hite." He had also heard Mrs. Hite referred to as "Mrs. Gibbs."

On redirect examination by Van R. Paterson, he said that Luther Grove was looking up witnesses and testimony for the defense.

Judge Paterson asked: "How much were you offered by Grove to testify in this case that Lucy, the squaw, was not the wife of John R. Hite?"

"Not a cent. I told Grove that for ten years I had known her, and that she bore the reputation of a lady. Grove asked me, 'How much are you getting hauling lumber?' and said: 'If you knew anything that would be advantageous to Mrs. Hite, you could be a witness in this case. You are not making anything hauling lumber.'"

Thomas Gibbs was recalled for the plaintiff, and Hanlon showed him letters and asked him to identify the signatures and handwriting. The witness said it was the writing of John R. Hite. Gibbs was then withdrawn temporarily.

Judge Paterson rose to his feet and said: "I understand a continuance will be demanded by our opponents in this case, and visited Hite's Cove several times and worked there. Hite was not there at the time.

Gibbs was recalled for the plaintiff and Attorney Hanlon showed him letters addressed to him and introduced for the purpose of showing the confidential family relations which existed between the defendant and the witness. The first letter refers to the prospective sale of Hite's mine to a New York syndicate. Witness identified each letter from Hite.

Foote objected to the several letters and excepted to the ruling of the Court admitting them.

William Cathey was then called for the defense, his direct examination being conducted by W. W. Foote. He knew the plaintiff and the defendant when living at Hite's Cove. After a legal fight the witness was permitted to answer the following question:

"What was the general repute as to their personal relations?"

"They were not supposed to be man and wife."

On cross-examination by Paterson the witness could not remember any one who had referred to Lucy as Mrs. Hite. She was called "Hite's squaw." The witness never heard Hite call her his wife.

Asked by Paterson if he would dare to refer, in Hite's presence, to Lucy as "your squaw," the witness replied: "No."

The witness was then asked by Paterson if he remembered the case in which John R. Hite was the defendant in a prosecution for cutting timber on Government land, and that Hite and Snyder, defendant's partner in the lumber business, both testified that Hite was a married man and claimed timber rights as a married man. He answered "No."

Asked if he was paid anything by the defense, the witness said, "Ten cents per mile."

The case was then continued until 1:45 P. M.

The most interesting evidence given yesterday afternoon was that of John W. Wilcox, "the Mariposa blacksmith," once a prominent politician. He said:

"I got acquainted with John Hite in 1860. From 1865 we were confidential friends up to two years ago, when Mrs. Nougues, whom Hite has since married, broke up our friendship. John Hite commenced living with the Indian woman in 1871. I often visited him. He treated her as his wife. Common repute in the neighborhood regarded her as his wife. I have seen him take her in his lap and address her with endearing names. He called her Mrs. Hite and Mrs. Lucy, and at times he called her 'my dear.' In 1873, in San Francisco, I advised him to cut loose from the Indian woman and marry some decent white girl. He replied: 'The advice is good, but it is too late. I am as much married to my wife Lucy as you are to your wife.' In 1894 he told me he was going to take Lucy to New Mexico and live with her there, because the people of Mariposa did not think she was good enough to associate with, but that in New Mexico race lines were not drawn that way.

"I saw Hite and his white wife on their wedding day in San Francisco. Both were pretty full. Before Mrs. Nougues married Hite I told her that in her attentions to Hite she was barking up the wrong tree; that Hite wouldn't marry, and would not give up any money. She replied, 'He never had one of my kind after him before.' I told Hite of this conversation, and he repeated it to her. Since then we have been unfriendly."

In the cross-examination Mr. Foote attempted to show the prejudice and animosity of the witness, and the fact was developed that in 1875, during the session of the Legislature, when Wilcox struck a reporter over the head with a cane at Sacramento, Hite went there and loaned Wilcox $500 with which to pay his fine. Wilcox testified that he repaid that money.

BONO FORGERY CASE.

Thomas A. Kelly on Trial for His Acts as Police Court Clerk.

Edward Reilly testified before Judge Lawlor and a jury yesterday that he did not sign the bail bond on which a negro named Wilson was released several months ago.

Thomas A. Kelly, formerly a Police Court clerk, is on trial on a charge of forgery. He is accused of having assisted in the preparation of the forged bond on account of which Wilson was released.

Reilly told of his whereabouts on the evening when the bond was given and gave an account of his movements until 11 o'clock that night, which was long after the time at which the bond was said to have been executed. He said he was visiting John T. Hogan on the evening in question and in this he was corroborated by Hogan and John Marshall.

INDIAN LUCY ON THE STAND

Hite Divorce Case Is Transferred to This City.

JUDGE JONES HOLDS COURT IN AN OFFICE.

MARIPOSA MILLIONAIRE IS NOT PRESENT TO HEAR THE STORY.

Plaintiff Is Denied an Interpreter, but Is Able to Strike Back at Attorney Foote in Broken English.

Lucy Hite, the Indian woman with whom John R. Hite lived for years, and whom he afterward repudiated, is in San Francisco, and the court which is to decide her claims in the first instance is at present sitting in Judge Van R. Paterson's office, with Judge Jones of the Superior Court of Mariposa county presiding. It was easier for the Judge and his reporter to come to San Francisco and continue the divorce trial than for the crowd of San Francisco witnesses and the numerous attorneys to go to the mountains, and, besides, there is a possibility of local prejudice at Mariposa.

Mrs. Hite was under fire almost all day yesterday, but the Mariposa millionaire was not present. The attorneys for Hite refused to allow the woman an interpreter. She speaks English lamely, and understands only the simplest words and construction. Consequently W. W. Foote, who was cross-questioning her, brushed up all the long Latin words in his vocabulary, asked her if she "announced" her marriage and insisted upon knowing other things which the uncomprehending eyes of the woman showed clearly she did not understand.

Once or twice the keen wit of the daughter of the soil got back at the redoubtable Mr. Foote. When he had thundered at the little dark woman huddled up in her American clothes and smelling a contradiction, had shouted, "Didn't you say in your deposition——" the little aborigine answered brokenly but quickly, "Yes, but you scare me to death that day." Lucy Hite is used to the loud talk of the mining camps, but she finds the big voice and terrible manner of Foote much more distressing.

The Indian woman, who is the plaintiff in one of the most remarkable divorce cases ever filed in this State, is interesting to look at. She is small and slender and straight as she was in the days when John Hite was glad to have her in his cabin. Her features are not heavy. Her coarse hair has turned white, but it is still abundant, and her eyes are almost as bright as when she was called a beauty in the Tumalea tribe. On chin and forehead she bears the blue mark of Indian tattooing, but her skin is bronzed and glossy and her face is neither stolid nor wooden.

The plaintiff was dressed simply in black, with an old-fashioned gold buckle in her belt, such as Hite might have given her in the days when he cared for her. Sometimes she smiled, but in the main she was serious as a sphinx. The important parts of her testimony were when she told how she had left Hite twice because of his infidelity and how she had returned to him only upon his promise to marry her. She came down the valley at nightfall, she said, and found Hite waiting for her in the door of his cabin. Then and there, she swore, he took her in his arms and said to her in the Indian tongue the words which made them man and wife, according to the custom of her tribe. Judge Jones had his doubts as to whether this informal ceremony would amount to a marriage according to the Indian ideas, and he was not sure whether the marriage, even if followed by a public assumption of the marital relation, would constitute a valid marriage in this State. However, he admitted the testimony over the objection of the defense. Later Mrs. Hite showed, on cross-examination, that such an Indian marriage was regarded as permanent, though Attorney Foote tried hard to induce her to say that when the parties to such a ceremony tired of each other they were free to separate and contract other alliances without divorce. The plaintiff gave a long list of persons to whom she said Hite had introduced her as his wife.

Another important bit of testimony came out when the woman referred to Father Williams, a German Catholic priest, who had devoted his life to the Indians. It was one of Father Williams' aims to induce white men to marry the Indian women with whom they had lived, and on one occasion, when the priest had stayed over night at the Hite cabin, he told Hite that he ought to marry Lucy. Upon this, according to Mrs. Hite, the miner said to the priest: "How many times do you want me to marry her? I am married to her just as much as I ever can be."

Much of the day was taken up by the introduction in evidence of the Hite family photograph album. In this book are the pictures of many residents of Mariposa county, their children and their wives. Mrs. Hite identified most of the pictures, stated that either the subjects of the pictures or Hite had given them to her, and that the head of the household had requested that the photographs be placed in this album, which was then put upon the parlor table as an ornament. Among the pictures were those of Hite's Eastern relatives. According to the witness Hite's sister and his niece, Mrs. Hutchings, visited the Hite house, and the sister thought enough of the Indian woman to sleep with her during most of her visit, and the niece was very affectionate and called the witness "aunt."

One of the points made by the plaintiff was that Hite would not allow her to eat at the boarding-house because there were too many men hanging about the saloon and store which she must pass in going to her meals. Foote had a curiosity to know of the earlier love affairs of the Indian woman. He questioned her about the other white men whom she had known, but was not highly successful in his search for dates, as the woman professed herself utterly unable to remember dates of that kind. Everything with her was "long time ago." She told of the child she had borne to Hite and of his indifference to its death. Once when Foote was jubilating over a discrepancy which he had found between the witness' testimony and her affidavit the witness said with a sly twinkle: "Oh, I fun," and when Foote took her to task for jesting with an oath she said: "You begin it." Lucy Hite is cleverer than she looks. Foote asked innumerable questions about the time in 1877 when Hite and the woman took a trip to Merced by moonlight in a buggy. This part of the testimony was enlivened by a row between Attorneys Charles Hanlon and Foote, but after some calling of names matters settled down, and the case went over until this morning at 9:30 o'clock.

HOW PRINTING BILLS ARE PAID

Supervisor Byington Says the City is Charged Double Rates.

AUDITOR PASSED THE BILL

County Clerk Signed the Account and Judge Cook Held the City Liable for It.

A bill presented by P. O. Fall, which has been paid by the Treasurer, charges the city $1 50 a page for printing the transcript of the Botkin case. When Supervisor Byington heard that the bill, which is for $1,470, had been paid, he asserted that the city had been robbed, as the work could have been done for 75 cents a page.

"The rate charged," said Byington, "which was $1 50 a page, is just double what the best work can be done for. Transcripts can be printed for 50c a page, but the standard price for first-class work is but 75 cents. It seems to me that the city ought to get this kind of work done at a reasonable price instead of at double rates. This is an illustration of how the various funds are depleted."

Fall's bill had come up before the Printing Committee of the Board of Supervisors, where it lay for weeks. A few days ago it disappeared from the Printing Committee box, and Supervisor Byington found that it had been taken from the jurisdiction of the Supervisors and paid after it had been O K'd by the County Clerk and passed by the Auditor. The Auditor obtained a certificate from Judge Carroll Cook saying that the work had been done, and that a decision of the Supreme Court held the County Clerk liable for it. Judge Cook did not look at the amount of the bill, and the certificate he issued was not intended as an order for the money.

"The payment of the bill had been delayed for weeks," said Mr. Fall, the printer, last night. "I finally took it to the County Clerk and he O K'd it. The price is not excessive. I printed double the usual amount of copies. The regular price for such work is $1 a page. I only charged 50 cents a page for the extra twenty-five copies. County Clerk Deane's Chief Assistant, Mr. Goddard, passed the bill and I took it to the Auditor. He said he would pass it if I would get a paper from Judge Cook, saying that the work had been done and that the county must pay it. Judge Cook gave me such a certificate. I took it to the Auditor and the bill went through. There was nothing wrong in the transaction."

NO CLEW TO THE BAIL MONEY THIEF

The investigation by the police to discover the man who presented the stolen receipt for $100 bail money deposited by Charlie Foo for the release of his friend See With has not so far resulted in developing a clew. Clerk Conway of Judge Mogan's court told Detective Dillon yesterday that a man showed him the receipt last Friday morning, and he took him to Clerk Rice of Judge Conlan's court. Conway also said that he happened to be in the Treasurer's office when the man was paid the money. He did not know the man, but thought he had seen him hanging around the Police Courts.

Expert Kytka examined Rice's books and reported to Chief Lees that the signature "Al O'Neil" resembled the handwriting of about a dozen other names in the bail book, and he was of the opinion that they were all written by Rice. Several were signed "T. J. O'Neil," a Chinatown guide, and he was asked to look at the signatures. He admitted they were in his handwriting, as Chinese often gave him the receipts for bail money so as to save them the trouble of going to the City Hall themselves. Another was the signature "A. Campbell," which turned out to be that of Attorney Archie Campbell. Expert Kytka was at fault in regard to these signatures, and Clerk Rice declares that he is equally at fault regarding the others. Rice handed his books over to Expert Williams of the Board of Supervisors yesterday and demanded a full investigation.

Judge Conlan announced from the bench yesterday that in future he would initial all receipts for bail money, and would personally see that the presenter was identified. He did not propose to have any scandal attached to his court.

The police do not explain why no complaints have been made to them if Rice has been doing a wholesale business in securing bail moneys for himself. The present expose will have the effect of putting an end to the existing lax system.

Beware of Substitutes or Imitations
Hostetter's Stomach Bitters
Private Revenue Stamp

Fierce Opposition Developed to Judge Coffey's Schedule for Probate Litigation.

JUDGE J. V. COFFEY, WHO SAYS THAT SOME ATTORNEYS OBJECT TO HIS SCHEDULE FOR HONEST FEES IN PROBATE CASES.

JUDGE COFFEY'S SCHEDULE FOR FEES IN PROBATE

In the Matter of Compensation of Attorneys.

From and after this date the following maximum standard of compensation is established in estates in which the Public Administrator is appointed and qualified to act as administrator. This is to be taken as a guide in all cases where the conditions are analogous:

Amount of Estate.	Maximum Att'y Fee.
$ 1,000	$ 25
2,000	45
3,000	65
4,000	85
5,000	105
6,000	125
7,000	145
8,000	165
9,000	185
10,000	205
20,000	365
50,000	655
100,000	1105
1,000,000	3,155

In all estates of a valuation intermediate and above these figures the same ratio shall obtain.

October 12, 1898.

Probate business was diverted from this department in the first place on a false pretext by a previous presiding judge, who had thought to monopolize and usurp it all, but who had not the courage of his intentions.—Judge Coffey in an Interview.

SWARMING bees never made such a buzzing as did the lawyers and litigants in the corridors and courtroom of the New City Hall yesterday anent the expressions of indignation by Judge J. V. Coffey because important probate cases have been diverted from his department of the Superior Court recently, leaving him what he designated as "the ragtime litigation of the calendar."

The most important event of the day, from a judicial point of view, was a "consultation" between Judge Coffey and Presiding Judge Daingerfield in Judge Coffey's chambers. The seance lasted over an hour, while anxious attorneys and their clients awaited the close of the conference.

"I have no censure for any individual because of the notable change that has come about in regard to the distribution of probate litigation, and have not spoken concerning it from pique or malice, and this I told Judge Daingerfield, but the fact remains that there has been a departure from the well-established rule," said Judge Coffey.

"There is no [illegible] among the local lawyers of San Francisco in [illegible] [illegible] were assigned to this department?" the Judge continued, "that there are some attorneys who object to appearing in this department for reasons that cause me regret. They object to placing their cases before me because of my schedule for the compensation of attorneys.

"That is all there is to it. This opposition does not come from the leading members of the bar. They are satisfied with that schedule and are content to abide by it, for it is an honest schedule for honest men and they know it. The fees allowed in that list are fair alike to attorney and client.

"They are as high as an honest lawyer ought to demand, and as high as an honest estate can rightfully afford to pay."

Judge Coffey referred to a printed notice on his desk showing what he has long considered proper as a maximum standard of compensation for attorneys in settling estates in probate. It provides for the payment of $25 for winding up the affairs of a man who dies, leaving property valued at $1,000, and increasing progressively to $3,155 for attending to a $1,000,000 estate, with the proviso that in all estates intermediate and above these figures the same ratio shall obtain.

Returning to a consideration of the causes that led up to the present discussion of the changed method of distributing probate cases, Judge Coffey said:

"My attention was first attracted to this matter by the infrequent appearance of Attorney Keane, who usually represents Public Administrator Drinkhouse, and Attorney Burt in the litigation from the Public Administrator's office. When he came in a fortnight or so ago with a few applications, I remarked that he had become something of a stranger, and inquired what had kept him away. He replied that he had been busy in Department 10, before Judge Troutt. I naturally supposed that the office had not been idle, as business in the Public Administrator's office is constant. His reply suggested a casual inspection of the record, and it was soon seen that the bulk of the Public Administrator's cases had been deflected from his department.

"I was informed that since the beginning of the year only sixteen per cent of these cases had been sent here.

"Now, I didn't particularly object to that, and would have enjoyed the let up of the pressure on the calendar if I could likewise have been relieved from the pestiferous unclean cases, and the vexatious guardianship matters that fill a court room with antagonistic family parties with all their domestic squabbles and disturbances. The most natural thing for me to do was to ask the officer of this court who has charge of this branch of the business why such a state of affairs had come about. When Mr. Northrup told me that the disposition of probate litigation was subject to the personal requests of members of the bar I was astounded, and said so, for such a thing was probably never heard of before.

"Probate business was diverted from this department in the first place on a false pretext by a previous presiding judge, who had thought to monopolize and usurp it all, but who had not the courage of his intentions."

Reverting to the time when he was Presiding Judge of the Superior Court, Judge Coffey said that before he took the place there were several culprits at large who had been given assurance of immunity from punishment; that he took pleasure in assigning Judge John Hunt and former Judge J. F. Sullivan to the trial of criminal cases, which caused consternation among the "push" as well as those who prided themselves on having a pull; that while one of these gentry was patrolling Market street an officer touched him on the shoulder and said, "You are wanted," whereupon the indignant member of the "push" cried out: "What have you to do with me? I 'squared' that case." Nevertheless he was taken into custody and just about as he was to be sent to jail for misdemeanor and he was threatening to "squeal" somebody paid his fine.

(Continued on Page Two.)

"It required backbone then to resist the suggestions that persons were eager to offer to the presiding Judge of the court, and backbone is still needed to keep aloof from volunteer advisers who have no more right to interfere with the court's affairs."

Presiding Judge Daingerfield called on Deputy County Clerk V. F. Northrup yesterday, saying that he wished to make an investigation and ascertain for himself whether there was any cause for complaint on account of the distribution of cases on the probate calendar. Mr. Northrup is the registry clerk in the Probate Department and exercises his official functions, under the immediate supervision and direction of the Presiding Judge of the Superior Court.

"The general rule laid down by me at the beginning of the year was that the probate cases should be assigned alternately to Department 9 and Department 10," said Judge Daingerfield.

"That is so, and the rule has been adhered to, unless ordered otherwise for special reasons by your Honor," said Mr. Northrup.

Presiding Judge Daingerfield explained that he had never intentionally interfered with the operation of this general rule, except for good cause.

"If it was made to appear that a matter just filed involved points of law that had been threshed out in one department, and that it would be advantageous to have the new case go to that department, I have usually assented to such disposition of the case," said Presiding Judge Daingerfield. "I have taken into consideration the disposition of public business, and when two suits involving cognate principles have been filed anywhere near together I have sent them both to the same department, regardless of whether it gave one Judge more cases than some other Judge."

"But Mr. Samuels did ask to have the Van den Bergh case assigned to Department 10, didn't he?" was asked of Presiding Judge Daingerfield.

"All cases look alike to me, and so many applications of that kind have been presented that I can't remember whether Mr. Samuels personally made that request or not," answered Presiding Judge Daingerfield jocularly.

Mr. Northrup said he had been misunderstood, that he did not tell Judge Coffey that Mr. Samuels almost went down on his knees to Presiding Judge Daingerfield in order to get the Van den Bergh case kept out of Department 9. What he did say, Mr. Northrup explained, was that some of the lawyers almost went on their knees to the Presiding Judge in their eagerness to have their cases assigned to some other department than Department 9. Mr. Northrup made the statement that Mr. Samuels requested Presiding Judge Daingerfield to send the Van den Bergh case to Department 10, instead of to Department 9.

Judge Troutt, who is collaterally interested in this discussion, because of the fact that his department has received the cases diverted from Judge Coffey's department, said he had nothing to say in regard to the matter, that he accepted such business as was assigned to him without question, and had no knowledge of the general probate calendar, that he did not know whether any preference had been shown to any Judge or not.

The present controversy recalls a lot of gossip that was heard about the corridors of the New City Hall several years ago, when the James G. Fair estate case was assigned to Judge Coffey's court one day and transferred to former Judge C. W. Slack's department the next day, on the ground that an error had been detected in the preliminary papers, which gave the Presiding Judge jurisdiction to make and enforce the second order.

CHIEF LEES TO RETAIN OFFICE.

Commissioners Leave the Appointment to the New Board.

At the meeting of the Police Commissioners held last evening it was decided that no action should be taken by the present Board toward the election of a Chief of Police, inasmuch as a new Board is to be appointed, under the provisions of the charter, on the first of the year. When the matter came up for consideration Commissioner Alvord declared that he was not ready to vote. After a consultation Chairman Tobin announced that there would be no action taken, and that Chief Lees would hold office until his successor was appointed by the new Board. This disposed of the chief interest in the meeting, for it had been rumored that, as Chief Lees' term of two years had expired, he was either to be re-elected or a successor named.

The charges made against Special Policeman [illegible] by [illegible], who alleged that the officer threatened him with a pistol and had kicked him from a quarry in which he was interested, resulted in a prolonged trial, at the termination of which the charges were dismissed. The testimony rehearsed the war waged by rival stone contractors some time ago.

Patrolman W. H. Harrison, who admitted having been three blocks off his beat, where he was discovered drinking coffee in a restaurant, paid dearly for his breakfast. It cost him a fine of $20.

Sergeant T. H. Hutchinson and Patrolman Thomas J. Thorpe were retired upon pensions by the Commissioners, under the clause exempting from duty officers over 60 years of age. Patrick Mahoney and Annie Williams were retired for disability.

The following appointments were made: George Fischel, Philip Hefley, W. H. Frost, Harry P. Healy and Robert Wall. Kennel [illegible] has for years been a driver of one of the patrol wagons at the Seventeenth-street Station, and is now made a regular patrolman. At the next meeting of the Board several additional appointments will be made.

THE FINISH OF LEES AS CHIEF OF POLICE

I. W. LEES, ACTING CHIEF OF POLICE.

His Term Expires, and the Commissioners Refuse To Re-appoint Him---The New Board Will Act.

LAST night marked the beginning of the end of Isaiah W. Lees as Chief of Police.

The Police Commissioners announced that they would not fill the vacancy caused by the expiration last Monday of Lees' term as Chief, as they did not think it proper to interfere in any manner with the action of their successors who will come in under the new charter. Meanwhile, Lees will continue to act as Chief until his successor is chosen by the new Board. As he has no possibility of appointment by that body, his days of service with the Police Department are now practically ended.

The most important business before the Police Commissioners at their meeting last night was the election of a Chief of Police. The term of office of I. W. Lees expired on December 4th, the first Monday in the month. He was appointed for two years.

Since his appointment Chief Lees has worked hard to succeed himself. His friends have confidently announced that he would be reappointed. There was also some general talk that he claimed to be entitled to a four-year term, and that he would institute litigation to continue himself in office if the Board did not reappoint him. Lees, however, made no public threats of litigation, although he was happy in his declaration that he would continue in office.

More than usual interest attached to any action the Police Commissioners might take in the premises, as their terms will expire, by operation of the new charter, on January 8th, on which day the new Commissioners, to be appointed by Mayor Phelan, will assume their duties. The friends of Lees asserted that the present Board would reappoint him for two years, and that the incoming of the new Board would not disturb the tenure of his office. It was thought, however, by many acquainted with the disposition of the Police Commissioners, that they would not attempt to interfere in any way with the exercise by their successors of the free choice of a head for the Department, and, therefore, that they would not reappoint Lees. It was even suggested that upon the expiration of his term he might be pensioned, and an acting Chief detailed until the new Board took action. This action was not considered very probable as it might have been construed as unnecessarily affronting an old officer who was about to go out of service in a few weeks anyway.

After the Commissioners had transacted [illegible] Gunst suggested to the President that some definite action should be taken about the vacancy in the office of Chief.

"The public know the office is vacant," said Mr. Gunst, "and they look to us to do something about it. Something definite should be announced."

Mr. Gunst also spoke to Commissioner Alvord. All the members of the Board were in accord on the wisdom of allowing their successors to choose their own Chief. President Tobin expressed the opinion of the Board as follows:

"The term of office of the Chief of Police having expired, the Board has unanimously decided not to fill the vacancy, as the Commissioners do not think it proper to interfere with the appointments to be made by the new Commissioners who will come into office in a very few weeks. Chief Lees will continue to perform the duties of Chief until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified. I think that is all that it is necessary to say or do in the matter."

Commissioners Alvord and Gunst gave their assent, the clerk, Captain Wright, was instructed to make a record in his minutes of the announcement of the President, and the Board then adjourned.

After the meeting Commissioner Tobin again expressed his opinion on the position assumed by the Board much as he had done at the meeting.

"The new Commissioners, to be appointed by the Mayor, will come into office in a few weeks," he said. "We did not think it proper to foist upon them as Chief of Police a man with whom they may not be in accord. Therefore we decided not to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Lees. He will continue to serve as Chief until his successor shall be appointed by the new Board. The law provides that the Chief serves until his successor qualifies. So we simply allowed the matter of filling the vacancy to stand over. We will not elect a new Chief, as we think the new Commissioners should do that. On this matter the members of the Board are unanimous."

The failure to secure his reappointment last night is a blow to Lees. His friends still he had hoped to induce Messrs. Tobin and Alvord to support him. Their refusal to fill the vacancy and the announcement that they will not do so means that Lees may now count the days that remain of his reign over the Police Department. He may make an endeavor to secure his appointment under the new board, but it is generally understood that the new Commissioners will be men of modern ideas who will enter upon their duties with the resolution to end the old regime of which Lees has been the animating figure for years and to revolutionize the department.

HONEST PATRICK CROWLEY BRANDS THE INFAMOUS FALSEHOOD OF LEES

Lieutenant Esola Was Not Removed From Chinatown for Cause---Rotation Applied to All Officers on That Detail---Discredits the Statements Attributed to Lees.

Former Chief of Police P. Crowley.

"Sergeant Esola was never removed from Chinatown for cause. There was no suspicion in my mind in 1894, when Captain Dunleavy was ordered to place a new squad of police in Chinatown, that Esola was corrupt. It had been my practice to relieve policemen in the district as I saw fit. I have always had great confidence in Esola. I believe him to be an honest man. I considered him an excellent officer all during my administration.

"The order of 1894, making the change, speaks for itself. Had Esola been under a cloud he would not have been instructed to point out the location of lottery and faro games to his successor. I am averse to entering into newspaper controversy so far as my successor as Chief of Police is concerned. I cannot believe that Chief Lees, in the presence of the Police Commission, made the charges ascribed to him. He may have talked that way outside, but it is hard for me to believe that he said to the Commissioners that Esola was removed because of rumors of corruption. I was Chief in 1894 and should certainly have heard about the charges of corruption at the time if such had been reported. Esola was never discussed by the Commissioners as a subject."—Statement made by former Chief of Police Crowley in an interview yesterday.

CHIEF of POLICE LEES is increasing his efforts to keep Lieutenant Price and his squad on duty in Chinatown. When Lees appears before the Police Commissioners Monday night he will present more documents, which have no bearing on the question of corruption in gambling cases, but which he thinks will tend to show that Price and his men have faithfully performed their duty. The object of the Chief is evidently to prolong the inquiry by the presentation of long extraneous statements, in the hope that under the mass of matter he thus accumulates the main issue will be forgotten.

At the last meeting of the Commission his request that Price should not be disturbed pending the investigation was granted. Lees had not finished half his statement when the board adjourned. Next Monday night he will probably try to repeat his performance, and then ask for a second adjournment. It is known that Com- ... superiors. But the Chinese Consul-General has not been restricted in the Price matter by the ordinary rules of diplomacy. After the Commissioners had ordered the Chief to withdraw Price from Chinatown, the Consul-General had an interview with Lees in which he spoke in behalf of Price, and asked that he be kept in the Chinese district. The representative of the Chinese Government then sent his private attorney to the Police Commissioners to request them not to withdraw Price. As the Commissioners had already concluded that the Chinatown squad should be removed, and this fact was known by its publication in "The Examiner," the endeavor of the Consul-General to save a policeman suspected of corruption in the Chinese quarter, seems extraordinary. It has caused considerable comment, not all of which is favorable to Ho Yow.

Lieutenant Price admitted yesterday that many of the gambling games whose addresses were published in yesterday's "Examiner" are doing business. He said his men visited these places daily, but he excused their continual existence on the ground that since the exposure of the condition of affairs in his district, his assist- ... know Ching Bach Gi, the other alleged agent, though not by that name.

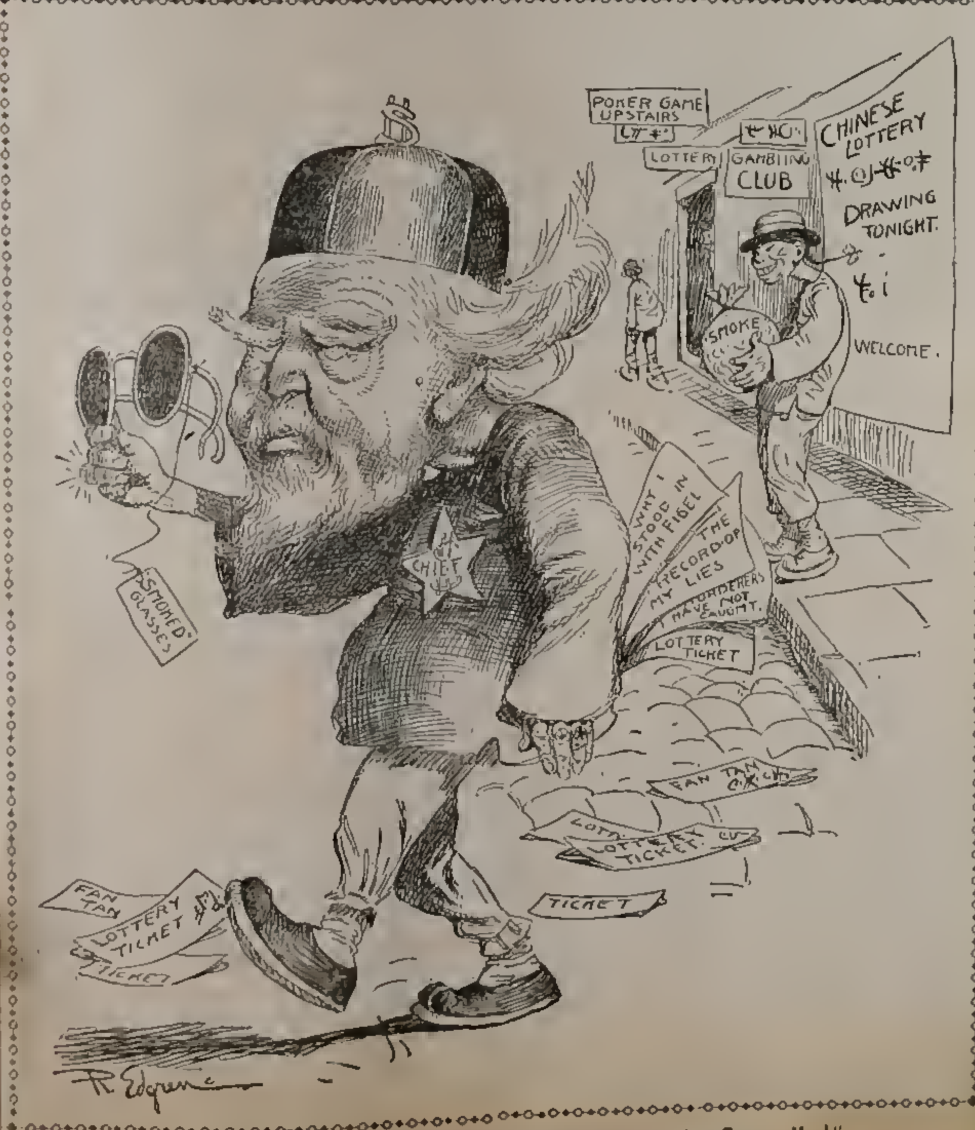
"Of course I know Quong Wuy," said Price. "It would be strange if I did not. That's what I am here for—to know people. I may know the other man, but not by that name."

Quong Wuy was a cousin of "Little Pete," the notorious gambler and race-course plunger, who was murdered in Chinatown some time ago, as a result of one of the long feuds. Wuy gained much of his knowledge of corruption from his shrewder relative, who was one of the keenest Celestials that ever did business with a "sack." It was not long ago that Quong Wuy was a general target for the kicks and cuffs of the Chinatown squad. He seems to have regained a position of grace, for his apparel is of better material than of yore, and his person no longer bears the marks of police clubs.

The Price investigation has been so fruitful in results that it may bring about a general investigation of the Police Department by the Commissioners. The force has deteriorated greatly under Lees. The discipline is poor, the service is not what it should be, and the morale of the entire force has been reduced. The Police Department to-

EXAMINER, SAN FRANCISCO: SATURDAY MORNING, APRIL 15.

IS THIS OFFICIAL REALLY BLIND?



"Gambling Games? Why, I Can't Find One to Save Me!"

LINDHEIMER WANTS TO SHOULDER BLAME

CAPTAIN SEYMOUR.
(Photo by Bushnell.)

SERGEANT WOLF.
(Photo by Elite.)

SERGEANT LINDHEIMER.
(Photo by Bushnell.)

"SERGEANTS LINDHEIMER and Wolf are a pair of grafters. They are incompetent and unfit for duty in the City Prison."

So said Police Captain Seymour, when he learned all the facts surrounding the treatment of James D. Grant, the homeless and unfortunate old man who was forgotten in a prison cell and left to die among felons because he was found on the street, hungry and friendless.

Captain Seymour is in immediate charge of the City Prison. Lindheimer and Wolf are detailed to duty under him. They have immediate charge of the prisoners in the daytime between 8 o'clock in the morning and 4 in the afternoon. They receive all prisoners arrested in that time and dispose of those in the prison according to the judgment of the courts. Practically all the prisoners liberated are given their discharges during the watch of the two sergeants.

Grant, the unfortunate old man, was found on Third street, near Harrison, on the night of November 20th, by a policeman, who took compassion on him. He sent him to the prison, where he would be given something to eat, and the next day he was to be taken to the Almshouse, where he could rest and enjoy the homely comforts the place affords. Records were properly made of the arrival of Grant at the prison by the officer then in charge.

It was the duty of Lindheimer and Wolf to see that Grant was sent to the Almshouse. The records were plain, but a mistake was made. Carelessness and incompetency was the cause of it, says Captain Seymour, and Grant remained forgotten in the prison. For nearly two weeks the old man sat among criminals in a damp, dark and cold cell. All that time he was uncomplaining of his treatment and waiting patiently for the end. It came at last. His exhausted constitution could stand it no longer, and on the morning of December 6th he was found by a prison trusty unconscious in his cell. None knew who he was. The Court bailiffs were sent for, but none had seen him in the courts. Sergeants Lindheimer and Wolf were asked to search the prison records to establish the identity of the old man, but they were unable to tell how the old man came to be in the prison.

Finally Lindheimer declared that the man was a "drunken old bum," and ordered that he be sent to the Receiving Hospital, and the Sergeant sent instructions to the surgeons to let the old man go when they saw fit, as he was not wanted in the prison any longer.

For two days the old man occupied a cot in the hospital, and then death came to his relief.

It was not until then that inquiry began to ascertain the old man's identity. He had died as an unknown, but the prison records should have told who he was. During the time he had been in jail he had been lost, and his death probably can be traced to the carelessness of the prison officials.

Captain Seymour, when he heard of the man's death, demanded the old man's name of Lindheimer and Wolf, but neither could answer him. Then commenced an investigation, and Captain Seymour charges the two Sergeants, and particularly Lindheimer, of trying to cover up the truth to shield himself from his blunder.

A prisoner, who had occupied the same cell with the dead man, volunteered the information that he thought the name of the old man was Grant. Lindheimer was sent to find when Grant was arrested. The Sergeant reported that James D. Grant had been arrested on November 11th and charged with drunkenness, and that he had been discharged the following day. The policeman who made the arrest was sent for, and he identified the body of the man as that of the person whom he had sent to the prison.

Lindheimer declared up to that time that Grant, who was charged with drunkenness, had not been brought back to the prison. Also that the old man who had died was one of a number of drunks that had been gathered in the day before he was sent to the hospital, and that the man had forgotten the name he gave.

Captain Seymour made a search of the prison records himself and plainly found how Lindheimer had tried to deceive him. The records of Grant's two arrests were plainly set forth and the Captain is firmly of the belief that Lindheimer knew of the time Grant was brought to the prison en route to the Almshouse when he reported and maintained that the man had only once been arrested and was discharged a month before he died.

The prison trusty who found the old man unconscious in his cell reported to Captain Seymour that Lindheimer had cautioned him to know nothing of the affair if he should be asked concerning it when an investigation was commenced.

Confronted with his carelessness as an official, Lindheimer tried to shift the blame for his part of it on some of the minor officials of the prison, and even on the trusties. Sergeant Wolf, who also tried to hamper the investigations of the Captain, declared Lindheimer was solely to blame.

Wolf's position in the City Prison is not clearly defined. He has practically nothing to do but help the others, and the others do not need his help. He is a nephew of the acting chief and draws a salary as a sergeant. Captain Seymour is determined to sift the conduct of the two sergeants to the bottom.

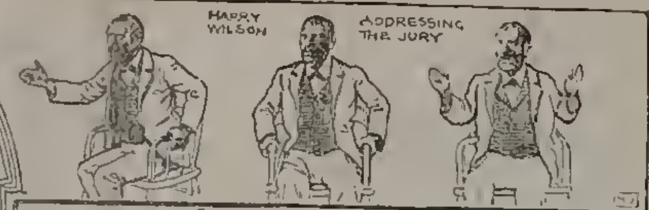
"I have said the two sergeants are incompetent for duty in the prison, and I will tell the Commissioners so," said the Captain. "They are a pair of grafters. Ever since I have been captain of the prison they have been grafting for a gang of police court shysters. They have neglected their duty time and time again and I have repeatedly called their attention to it, but they gave no heed to my warnings. The time has come when I will stand it no longer, and they will either leave the prison and let others who will attend to their duties take their places or I will ask that some other man take the responsibility of conducting the prison."

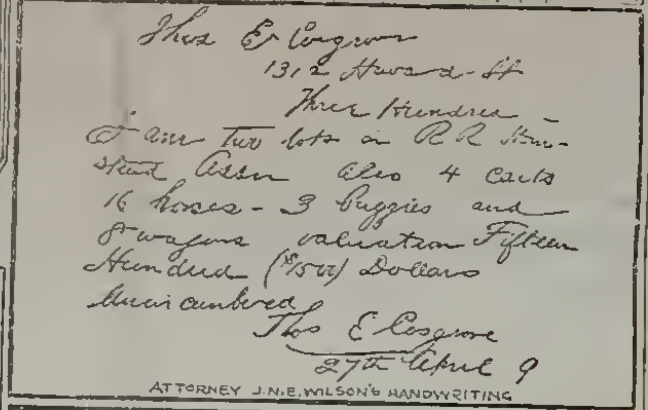
"It was a case of oversight on my part," said Sergeant Lindheimer last evening at his home, 222 Van Ness avenue. "I remember now that Grant's name was on the book, but I overlooked it at the time when he should have been sent to the Almshouse. When I learned of his condition later I had him sent to the hospital as 'John Doe.'

"On the morning of December 7th one of the 'trusties' told me a prisoner was sick. He thought the man's name was Grant. I looked over the book and the only Grant I could find was arrested for drunkenness on November 11th. I concluded that the sick man couldn't be Grant and so I marked him 'John Doe.' You see, I knew that this fellow Grant was not in the prison all that time and I didn't stop to consider that he was arrested on two occasions. It was simply a mistake on my part and I hadn't any purpose in making it.

"If Captain Seymour says that I have been 'grafting,' as they call it, he is telling a falsehood. There isn't the slightest bit of truth in it. No man in that department or anywhere else can say truthfully that I have tried to get a cent out of prisoners. I have attended to my business honestly.

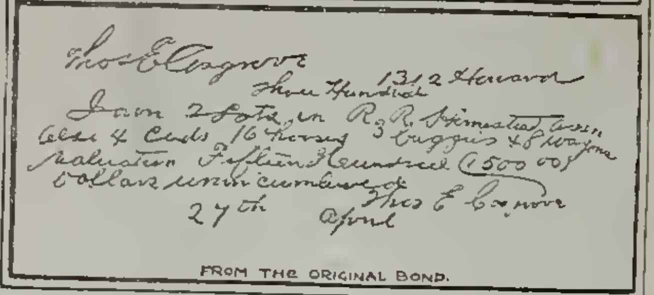
HANDWRITING ON THE WILSON STRAW BOND UNDER SCRUTINY.





Thos E Cosgrove
1312 Howard St
Three Hundred –
I own two lots in R R Homestead Assn Also 4 Carts 16 horses – 3 Buggies and 8 wagons valuation Fifteen Hundred ($1500) Dollars unincumbered
Thos E Cosgrove
27th April 9

ATTORNEY J.N.E. WILSON'S HANDWRITING



Thos E Cosgrove
Three Hundred 1312 Howard
I own 2 lots in R R Homestead Assn Also 4 Carts 16 horses 3 buggies & 8 wagons valuation Fifteen Hundred (1500 00) Dollars unincumbered
Thos E Cosgrove
27th April

FROM THE ORIGINAL BOND.

Much Evidence of a Contradictory Nature.

THE HANDWRITING of Attorney John N. E. Wilson will be a subject of testimony to-day at the trial of Thomas A. Kelly in Superior Judge Lawlor's court. When Wilson was on the witness stand for the purpose of exculpating himself as well as Kelly from suspicion, he wrote from dictation, at Assistant District Attorney Black's request, the words with which the straw bonds in the case had been filled in, the filling in having been done, according to Wilson, by a man named Thomas E. Cosgrove, whom nobody knew and whom the police cannot find. As Black said yesterday, he was amazed at the similarity, on comparing Wilson's writing and that on the bonds. Carl Eisenschimmel, the handwriting expert, took a look at them yesterday, and was surprised at the resemblance. Though a kind of pen different from that used by Wilson on the stand was employed for writing on the bonds, the resemblance in every line of the document is apparent. Eisenschimmel will be questioned on this subject as a witness to-day. Wilson asked yesterday that his writing be submitted to three experts.

Kelly, who was a Police Court clerk, is accused of felony for accepting the bonds for the release of a colored man named Harry Wilson without having either E. Riley or Thomas E. Cosgrove, the men named as sureties, before him to be sworn. Harry Wilson has testified that he gave Attorney Wilson $300 to get him out of prison, and that the attorney told him after he was released that his case was "squared." In every detail the two Wilsons flatly contradicted each other under oath. Attorney Wilson asserts that Edward Reilly was the man who was mentioned as E. Riley in the bonds, and Edward Reilly has sworn that he knew nothing about the bonds. The bonds were made out on the night of April 27, 1899, and on that night Harry Wilson fled from the city. Attorney Wilson testified that when his client failed to appear next morning in the Police Court he did not ask for a continuance, but moved that the bonds be declared forfeited.

Christopher E. Newman, bond expert for the Board of Supervisors, testified yesterday that Attorney Wilson did ask for a continuance on April 25th, and that the Prosecuting Attorney made the motion for the forfeiture of the bonds. Attorney Wilson declared that he never received a cent from Harry Wilson, directly or indirectly.

The colored man, who was recalled to the stand yesterday, repeated his assertion that he gave Attorney Wilson three $100 bills, which he got in his room at Fourth and Howard streets after leaving the City Prison. He took occasion to turn to the jury and say, "Mr. Wilson is a very smart man, and he wants to clear his skirts, gentlemen of the jury." He was aggrieved because, as he averred, he had parted with his money, and is still in jail with bad prospects ahead. The colored man was earnest in his manner. He seemed especially hurt because Attorney Wilson had mentioned that he was in jail as a suspected strangler of women and had testified that he ran away when Attorney Wilson's back was turned after his release on the bonds.

Attorney Dibble for the defense asked Harry Wilson if he had not told William S. Barnes that he and a white woman with whom he was living, were robbing people, and Wilson denied that he ever made such a statement. Attorney Black had brought out testimony that no one was sufficiently interested in Wilson to procure his release on bonds unless he paid money to secure his liberation. Dibble said that this woman was interested. The house in which she and Wilson roomed, was said to be on the south side of Market street, near Sixth. Wilson has testified that the only room in town which he had was on Fourth and Howard streets. W. S. Barnes will be called to-day to testify.

Attorney Black said yesterday that he never had a case in which there were so many contradictions. Edward Reilly and two friends have sworn that he was at John T. Hogan's room at 1206 Market street at the time on the night of April 27th when Attorney Wilson and Kelly said that Reilly was with them on Grant avenue. Mrs. Catherine Serres, who keeps the house at Fourth and Howard streets, where Harry Wilson said that he had a room, produced her books yesterday to show that she was right in saying that Wilson did not room there. One of her clerks, James Mclenne, corroborated her. James Bowlan, a politician, and Samuel Salomon, a tailor, testified yesterday that they saw Reilly, Kelly, Attorney Wilson and another man together on Grant avenue on the night of April 27th. The fourth man, according to Attorney Wilson and Kelly, was the phantom Cosgrove, whom neither of them saw before or since. Attorney Wilson's story, in opposition to Harry Wilson's, that he and his colored client went to Collins' saloon on Montgomery and California streets on that night after the bonds were filed, was corroborated by the barkeeper there, Charles J. Walsh.

A private detective named Henry Hartling, who was doing some work for Attorney Wilson, corroborated the latter's statement that the colored man ran away. Henry H. Adams and Edwin M. Sweeney, attorneys, testified that Edward Reilly had offered himself to them as a surety on a bond in which his name was given as E. Riley and the property described was the same as that mentioned in the bonds involved in this case. The recorded deed, conveying the property to E. Riley in 1885, was offered in evidence. Reilly admits that the deed was to him, though he said that he never spelled his name Riley.

for the Board of Supervisors, testified | Attorney Black said yesterday that | deed was to him, though he said that he never spelled his name Riley.

EXAMINER, SAN FRANCISCO: FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 14, 1899.

GOOD CITIZENS, LOOK ON THIS!

JUST ONE MORE BRAND.

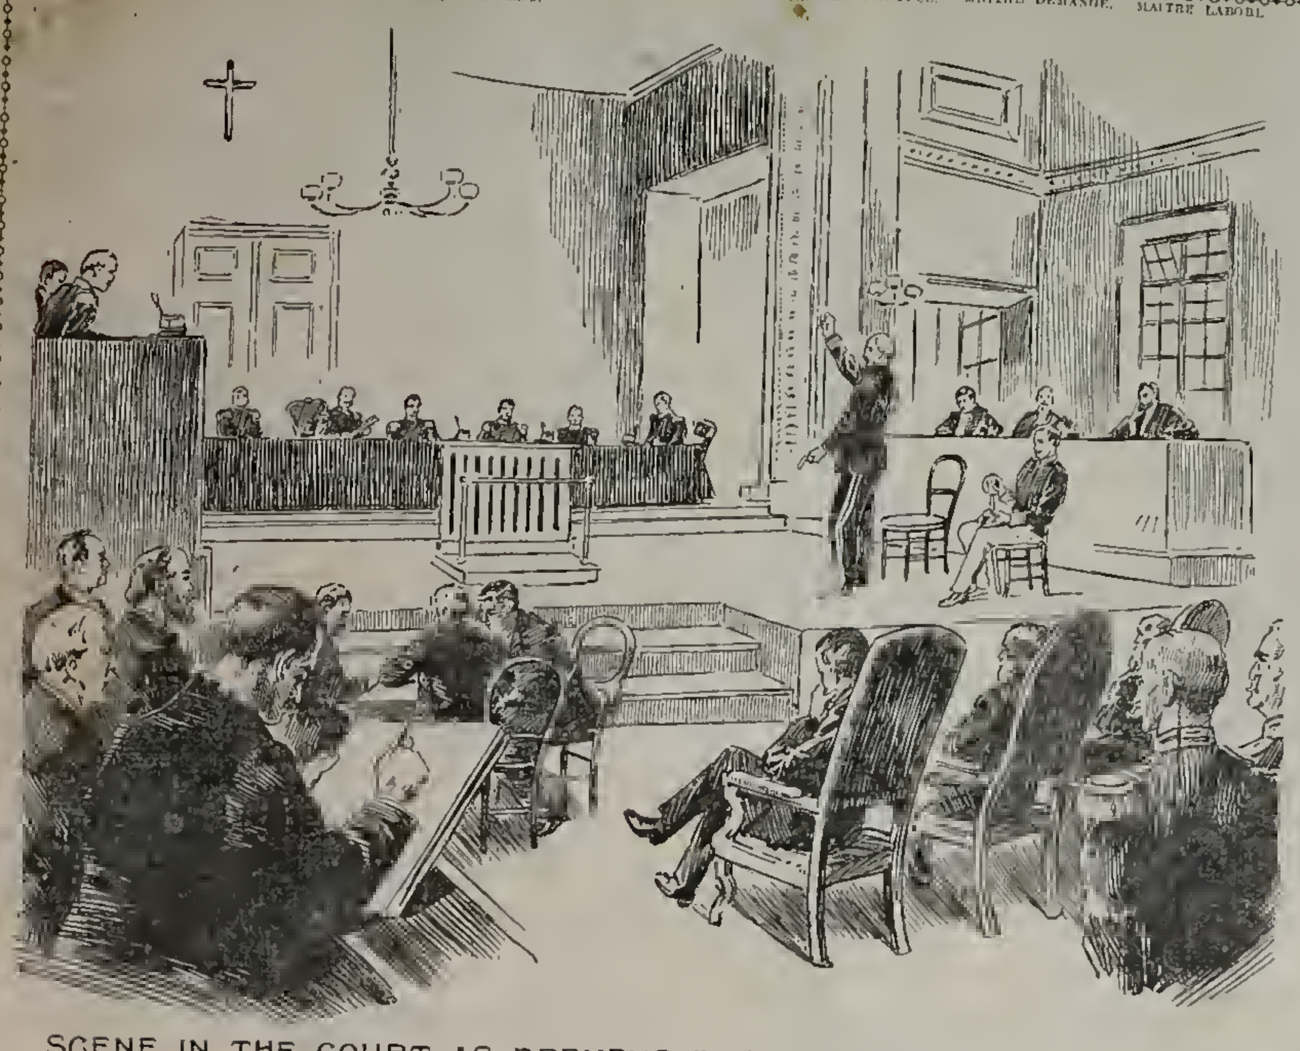
The Examiner.

SAN FRANCISCO: SUNDAY MORNING, APRIL 16, 1899.

PREPARING TO FACE THE COMMISSION.

"I Wonder if a Little LYE Wouldn't Clean This?"

BERTILLON GIVES HIS QUEER REASONS FOR BELIEVING CAPTAIN DREYFUS GUILTY



SCENE IN THE COURT AS DREYFUS DECLARED HIMSELF INNOCENT.

"I can bear everything, my Colonel, but once more, for honor of my name and my children, I am innocent."

RENNES, August 25.—After M. Bertillon, the handwriting expert, who is at the head of the anthropometric department of the Prefecture of Police of Paris, had concluded the first installment of his so-called demonstration of the guilt of Captain Dreyfus, a prominent Dreyfusard referred to him as the fin de siecle Cagliostro.

The Dreyfusards refuse to regard him as anything but the prince of quacks. They cover his remarks with ridicule and protest that the admission of his fantastic theories as evidence before the court-martial is a disgrace to France.

Nevertheless, even the Dreyfusards do not deceive themselves as to the effect M. Bertillon's testimony, or "demonstration," may have upon the Judges, who, they fear, will be gulled by what the Dreyfusards consider spurious. All the Judges have passed through the Ecole Polytechnique, the highest school of science in France, and they are thus peculiarly interested in such "evidence" as that of Bertillon. Moreover, with the aid of innumerable diagrams and specimens of writing which he submits to them they may be able to follow his reasoning intelligibly, which is more than any member of the audience could do to-day. If the Judges accept Bertillon's premises—that Dreyfus, as an expert spy, did not write in ordinary handwriting, but in close imitation, even contriving to give letters the appearance of having been traced, in order to be able to repudiate them as forgery if detected—then the structure built upon this groundwork may be scientifically correct. Even Dreyfus, when shown Bertillon's demonstration, admitted the ingenuity and plausibility of the system, though he naturally declared that it was built upon a false basis.

A remarkable feature of Bertillon's deposition was the heat and excitement he put into what was expected to be a calm, dispassionate exposition of his theory. He thundered, shouted and waved his arms as though engaged in some terrible dispute. Once he literally shrieked, and numbers of the usual audience, who had been unable to follow him and were taking the air in the courtyard, rushed back into the hall, breathlessly inquiring what had happened and imagining that he was fulminating some dreadful denunciation of the accused.

Their excitement was turned into hilarity when they found he was momentarily impressing upon the Judges the significance of the exact space, measured in centimeters, between two words in the bordereau.

The military witnesses, all of whom sit in a bunch, leaving Colonel Picquart and M. Hartuhs severely isolated, followed M. Bertillon's statement with a grave and wise expression of countenance, upon which never a suspicion of a smile appeared, as though they understood every word. Evidently they had received a "mot d'ordre" to preserve this attitude, for, without seeing the diagrams, they could not have understood any better than did the general public.

The "Echo de Paris" announced to-day that the counsel for Dreyfus had obtained possession of certain documents mentioned in the bordereau, in Esterhazy's writing, which they would produce in court next week, as a coup de theatre. Your correspondent inquired as to this in competent Dreyfusard quarters this afternoon. He was assured that the statement was erroneous, but was also told that the defense intended, in the event of Captain Dreyfus being condemned, to ask the German Government to communicate these documents proving his innocence, and that they had reason to believe such a request would be granted.

At the opening of the court this morning the clerk read a medical certificate, signed by two doctors, declaring it was impossible for Du Paty de Clam to leave his bed to come to Rennes and testify.

M. Labori, leading counsel for the defense, asked the President of the court, Colonel Jouaust, to instruct two well-known medical men to examine Du Paty de Clam, but Colonel Jouaust refused.

Rowland Strong, an English newspaper man, was then called to the witness stand, and he deposed to the fact that Major Count Esterhazy confessed to him that he wrote the famous bordereau.

The next witness was M. Gobert, an expert of the Bank of France, who can claim the honor of being the first man in France to have declared in favor of Dreyfus. He reported, on examining the documents in the case, that Esterhazy, not Dreyfus, wrote the bordereau. The witness opened his deposition with a brief, personal statement, protesting against being characterized as a "doubtful expert" by the military party.

"But," he added, in tones of profound pity and turning towards Dreyfus, "I have no right to complain and am silent when I see before me the unfortunate man who sits there."

A murmur of approval from the audience greeted these words of sympathy.

M. Gobert then repeated the evidence he had given before the Court of Cassation. He gave his testimony in a clear, convincing manner, and was most emphatic in attributing the bordereau to Esterhazy.

Answering questions of the Judges, M. Gobert declared his conviction that the bordereau was written in a running, natural hand, and said there was no tracing or other trickery.

General Gonse asked to be confronted with M. Gobert and put a number of questions, over one or two of which the witness stumbled, to the infinite satisfaction of the military witnesses, who smiled and exchanged joyful glances.

M. Bertillon, the noted anthropometer, was called as the next witness. He wore a dark blue frock coat and carried a high hat in his hand. M. Bertillon requested permission to bring in his diagrams and papers. The request was granted and M. Bertillon retired for a moment, returning at the head of a squad composed of an infantry Sergeant and four privates, all staggering under the weight of immense leather satchels, bulging with documents, charts, etc., which they deposited on the stage as a roar of laughter echoed throughout the court. Even the Judges were unable to suppress a smile as they gazed on M. Bertillon's stage properties strewn over half the platform.

M. Bertillon commenced his deposition at 8:30 a. m. It occupied the whole of this session and will perhaps occupy a good part of to-morrow's session.

The courtroom presented a curious scene while M. Bertillon, whom the Dreyfusards in their most indulgent moments describe as a "dangerous maniac," spent the three remaining hours of the session in explaining, in unintelligible terms, his "infallible system" of proving Dreyfus the author of the bordereau. The majority of the public, however, utterly unable to comprehend M. Bertillon's theories, had left the courtroom. Even "la Dame Blanche" abandoned her post. In the meanwhile M. Bertillon, with gestures and in the shrill, pitched voice of a quack at a country fair, continued his monologue, producing every minute some fresh paper covered with wonderful hieroglyphics, copies of which he presented to the Judges, who, with an expression of owl-like wisdom, carefully examined them, their heads clustered together, their eyes gazing on the long, wide strips of paper, while M. Bertillon leaned over their table, trying to explain his mystifying diagrams, which were afterwards passed to MM. Labori and Demange, who, however, apparently did not derive much profit from their perusal.

Dreyfus gazed at the scene with a look of stupefaction.

The clearest utterance of M. Bertillon during the course of his demonstration was that the handwriting of the bordereau "obeys a geometrical rhythm, of which I discovered the equation in the prisoner's blotting paper."

The witness finally announced that he would give a practical demonstration of the writing of the bordereau, according to his system. Then he theatrically cleared the desk attached to the witness bar, drew his chair nearer, deposited his high hat on the floor, and, sitting down, began copying the bordereau. The audience watched him, bent over the desk, busily drawing letters, the Judges gazing at him until, at the end of ten minutes, the people and the Judges became restlessly impatient and Colonel Jouaust remarked that it was not necessary to copy the whole bordereau and that a few lines would suffice. A few minutes later M. Bertillon rose, strode to the Judges' table and laid before them his copy. The Judges, counsel, Government Commissary, Major Carriere, and the clerk of the court clustered around in one group, eager to see the result. The audience watched this strange spectacle until Colonel Jouaust shrugged his shoulders, and then the spectators knew that M. Bertillon had failed to satisfy them.

M. Bertillon noticed this and said apologetically, "I was so badly placed."

M. Demange, in response to a look of inquiry from Dreyfus, whispered a few words to the prisoner, with a shrug of his shoulders and a smile on his face. Dreyfus appeared perfectly satisfied.

Colonel Jouaust then, at 11:45 o'clock adjourned the court, and M. Bertillon packed up his belongings and the soldiers carried them out.

The newspaper men who crowded around M. Labori asked him for his impressions. He said there was a certain resemblance to the bordereau, adding, "But that is all. M. Bertillon only did what dozens could do. It only proves that he is a clever forger. That is all."

The Taverniere Inquiry.

PARIS, August 25.—The Minister of War, General Marquis de Galliffet, has transmitted the dossier of the Taverniere inquiry into the conduct of Colonel Du Paty de Clam to the court-martial at Rennes, as requested by Maitre Labori, leading counsel for the defense, on Wednesday last.

MULLER'S STORY A LIE.

Emperor William Did Not Annotate the "Libre Parole."

BERLIN, August 25.—Your correspondent was informed to-day at the War Office that the statement made on the stand at Rennes yesterday by M. Morilan de Muller that he had seen a newspaper, the "Libre Parole," bearing a postage stamp, in Emperor William's bedroom at Potsdam, and that on the paper were certain words in German, meaning "Dreyfus has been arrested," could not possibly be true. It was pointed out that his Majesty invariably puts his desk in order before leaving his room, and that nothing is left lying around or open, but, if he should fail to do so, it is the duty of his valet to put things away. Besides, it was also said, the Emperor does not read whole newspapers, but only marked clippings which later are incorporated in scrap books.

TO EXPOSE THE TREASON.

Italy Willing to Disclose the Documents in the Bordereau.

RENNES, August 25.—One interesting report comes from Paris to-night to the effect that the Italian and German Governments have been consulting on the question of whether they will send to France all documents alluded to in the bordereau and others received from that same source, with a clear and indisputable statement as to the identity of the French traitors. Italy, it is said, is quite willing to do so, but Emperor William takes the ground that Germany, having definitely announced that she never had any dealings with Dreyfus, does not feel called upon further to interfere in a purely French matter.

The anti-Dreyfus press here is becoming more bitter and incendiary in its attacks on Jews and the foreign correspondents here. Its language is a scarcely disguised incitement to violence. A soldier who had been sentenced to prison for some offense spent the last two days of his confinement in a cell next to Dreyfus. His time expired at 2 o'clock this afternoon. When he left the prison he was closely guarded and taken to the barracks, whence, under escort, he was sent to the railway station and placed aboard a train. Every precaution was taken up to the last moment to prevent him from communicating with journalists and others.

ITALY AND GERMANY COMPLAIN.

Allege That Their Diplomatic Correspondence Is Opened in Paris.

LONDON, August 26.—The Rome correspondent of the "Daily Mail" says Italy and Germany have obtained proofs that diplomatic correspondence passing between Paris and other places is systematically opened. This has been the case, particularly since the campaign against Dreyfus began, the French War Office having sought proofs to strengthen the accusation against him. Questions on this subject will be asked in the Italian Parliament.

THE EXAMINER SAN FRANC

PROMINENT HOLLISTER WOMEN WHO FIGURE IN A BIG SCANDAL.

Mrs. B. B. Mansfield, Accused of Writing the Scandalous Letters.

Mrs. E. C. Conrad, Who Received the Anonymous Notes.

HOLLISTER HAS A BIG SENSATION

Attempt to Blacken a Prominent Woman's Character.

ANONYMOUS LETTERS OF SLANDEROUS IMPORT.

COPIES SENT TO FRIENDS OF THE INTENDED VICTIM OF THE PLOT.

Well-Known Farmer's Wife Accused and the Grand Jury Investigating—Envy Declared the Motive.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

HOLLISTER, December 3.—A dark cloud hangs over Hollister's most exclusive circle of society, which threatens to break at any moment despite the most strenuous efforts that have been made to preserve secrecy. An anonymous letter writer has stirred up a scandal which is now being aired before the Grand Jury of San Benito county, and in which two women, one of social prominence and the other of excellent reputation are the principals in the social drama which is being enacted before the county's inquisitorial body. Mrs. E. C. Conrad, the wife of a prominent farmer, and Noble Grand of the local Rebekah Lodge, has accused her neighbor, Mrs. B. B. Mansfield of being the author of the defamatory epistles which have not only been received by herself, but by prominent society women of Hollister. These letters with exemplars of the handwriting of Mrs. Mansfield have been submitted to three chirographic experts in San Francisco, and acting independently of each other, they have given opinion that the scurrilous letters and the exemplars were written by the same person. It was upon the strength of this expert opinion that the facts were recently laid before the Grand Jury. The accused and the accuser were recently interrogated by that body as well as six other witnesses, and more evidence will be submitted when the Grand Jury convenes again on December 12th.

The scandalous letters first commenced to appear a year ago. They were received by Mrs. Conrad and a number of her most intimate friends in Hollister, among whom were Mrs. A. Tunn, wife of the cashier of the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank; Mrs. B. F. Scott, Mrs. Dr. Porter and Justice of the Peace Agnew. All were warned against associating with Mrs. Conrad, charges in this connection being made that seriously reflected upon her character at an early period of her life. The letters were couched in terms most slanderous and were of a nature so vilifying as to drive any innocent person almost to the verge of insanity.

In accusing Mrs. Mansfield of being the author of the slanderous letters, Mrs. Conrad does not hesitate to attribute envy as being the motive that caused their circulation. Both women live about two and one-half miles east of town in the Enterprise school district. For thirteen years they have been neighbors, living only a quarter of a mile apart, and have been on close terms of intimacy.

Their friendship continued even for six months after the anonymous letters made their appearance, and not until last October were their relations severed, when Mrs. Conrad reached the conclusion that her erstwhile friend was the enemy that was seeking to blight her reputation and destroy the happiness of her home. Then she made a trip to San Francisco and submitted a number of letters together with samples of Mrs. Mansfield's handwriting to Expert Kytka. The decision that he gave influenced her to lay the matter before District Attorney John L. Hudner with the object of securing an investigation at the hands of the Grand Jury. The matter was of such grave import and of so delicate a nature, that Hudner declined to act until he had secured corroborative expert evidence. He sent the letters and the exemplars to Expert Eisenschimel of San Francisco, and his judgment tallied with that of Kytka's. Far yet from being convinced he submitted the documents to Expert Ames of the metropolis, and again the same opinion was rendered. It was then that he felt justified to bring the matter before the Grand Jury, and that body consumed two days last week in sifting the charges. Owing to the prominence of the parties involved, Superior Judge Dooling admonished the jurors in administering the oath not to allow the slightest detail of the testimony given in the jury-room to become public. They were forbidden to mention even the ...

She associates with the members of Hollister's upper-tendom, in which Mrs. Mansfield has thus far failed to gain a foothold. Then, again, Mrs. Conrad has been "taking all the chairs" in the Rebekah lodge, and when she reached the rank of vice-grand, the chair preceding that of noble grand, another batch of anonymous letters made their appearance. Some of these were received by the members of the lodge, and Mrs. Conrad believes that their object was to poison the minds of her lodge sisters in order that they would prevent her election to the chair of noble grand, for which position she was then in line. Were that the object of the calumniating letters, they failed of their mission, for in due time the highest honor in the gift of the lodge was bestowed upon Mrs. Conrad.

The green-eyed monster was later on aroused when the Conrad family appeared resplendent in a new surrey, the finest of its kind that could be purchased of the metropolitan dealer from whom it was obtained. To the Hollister mind, the possession of such an equipage is a conceded mark of social distinction. The Conrads then moved a peg higher in the esteem of Hollister's exclusive set, and their social elevation was quickly followed by another outburst from the unknown writer.

Then came the determination of Mrs. Conrad to bring the guilty party to justice. She had frequently communicated to friends her suspicion as to who was the author, and, acting under advice, she secured a number of the letters, and with those received by herself, submitted them to the expert. Some of the letters which were received by her Hollister friends have been suppressed, their contents being of such a shockingly scandalous nature that it was deemed prudent not to permit their inspection by the Grand Jury. With that body the matter now temporarily rests. The San Francisco experts have yet to give their testimony, and upon this evidence will largely depend the actions of the Grand Jury when it resumes its labors next week. There is a grave element of doubt as to whether the accused woman wrote the defamatory letters that have caused the sensation that is now agitating the upper crust of Hollister society. There is no marked similarity between the handwriting of the mischief-breeding epistles and that known to have been penned by Mrs. Mansfield. The experts, however, profess to find the same peculiarities of chirography in the hooks and curves, and declare from the depths of their experience that they cannot be mistaken. But to the untutored layman there is no suspicious resemblance.

Mrs. Conrad, however, does not wholly rely upon the judgment of the experts to make out a case against her quondam friend. With a woman's intuitive knowledge she sees the hand of Mrs. Mansfield in the affair by reason of many incidents of the past which now appear to her to be circumstantial support to her opinion. Her mind goes back five years ago, when the devilish work of an anonymous letter writer led to the shooting of a man named Kalinowski by Antone Schill and subsequently the suicide of the latter. The Conrads were also involved in this tragedy. Their children and those of Schill, who was a near-by neighbor, had a quarrel at the district school over a trifling matter. The respective parents took up the matter and between the two families there reigned a bitter feud that was increased by the receipt by Schill of anonymous letters assailing the character of himself and wife. Schill supposed that the Conrads were the authors, and the enmity then reached such a pitch that threats of murder were freely made by both parties. In the early summer of 1894 Schill and Conrad met in the road, the latter being accompanied by Kalinowski. The quarrel was renewed and ended in Schill picking up a shotgun that lay in his wagon and emptying its contents at Conrad. Kalinowski received the charge, the man for whom it was intended being unharmed. Schill was arrested and charged with assault to murder, but before the day fixed for his trial was reached Kalinowski recovered, after an illness of several months, and brought suit against Schill in the United States Circuit Court for $5000 damages. These troubles weighed heavily upon the mind of Schill. Shortly before the time set for his arraignment he was found dead one morning behind his woodshed. He had ended his mental misery by taking strychnine.

It is said that the Conrads never indited the letters that harassed the nervous-minded German, and they now intimate freely around Hollister that they were written by the same person who is the author of the documents that are at present in the hands of the Grand Jury.

Mrs. Conrad is a woman of petite figure and refined manner and although about 35 years old her features still retain evidences of beauty which existed before her troubles deepened the lines of her face.

"I have only taken up this matter," said she to a "Chronicle" representative, "in justice to my three children. I value my character above all things in life and am determined to protect it. I would be greatly pleased if Mrs. Mansfield should be able to vindicate herself. My suspicions were first directed against her because of the handwriting in the letters. I know it as well as I do my own."

The accused woman is older by some ten years than her accuser. She treats the affair with a coolness that is surprising and the investigation has not alarmed her to the extent of forcing her to engage an attorney. She denies the authorship of the letters and expresses the opinion that they were written by some member of the lodge who was jealous of the continued advancement of Mrs. Conrad in that order. Against her accuser she displays not the slightest animosity and, if guilty, possesses a phenomenal faculty for not betraying any evidences of it. She freely and unhesitatingly answered every question of her interviewer, and furthermore stated that letters received by herself from the anonymous scribe had been voluntarily turned over by her to the District ...

DEAD MAN'S LETTERS OFFERED FOR SALE.

Charles L. Fair Was Told They Could Be Used Against Mrs. Craven, but He Declined to Purchase.

The trial on the question as to whether Mrs. Nettie R. Craven and James G. Fair were married by contract as she alleges may be begun soon, her application being on Judge Troutt's calendar. She calls herself Mrs. Fair and had that name painted on the door of a room in the Parrott building that she recently rented. The offices of Charles L. Fair and his attorneys, Knight & Heggerty, being on the same floor, they objected to her sign, and the manager of the Parrott building compelled her to remove it.

Charles L. Fair and his attorneys are constantly in receipt of letters referring to the contest over his father's estate. Among them are missives offering evidence on payment of money. A recent epistle of this sort stated that the writer had in his possession letters which were taken from a man who was found dead on a trail in the Klondike. These letters, it was said, could be used against Mrs. Craven. Fair declined to buy them.

He lately received an anonymous letter from Los Angeles, the writer saying that she was the wife of Charles L. Fair's deceased brother, James G. Fair Jr. She set forth a claim for a share of the estate. Who the woman is Fair and his attorneys do not know.

MAY KNOW HER FATE ON MONDAY

San Benito Grand Jury Will Then Report on the Mansfield Case.

THE ENERGY OF MRS. CONRAD

Victim of an Anonymous Letter-Writer Discourses Upon Her Duty.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

HOLLISTER, December 4.—The Grand Jury for nearly two weeks has been investigating a libel charge which has been made by Mrs. E. C. Conrad, and on Monday will make its report. Mrs. B. B. Mansfield is the woman accused. The trouble is over scandalous, anonymous letters.

About a year ago E. C. Conrad, husband of Mrs. Conrad, received two letters, written in a coarse hand, slandering his wife. Then Mrs. Conrad herself received a letter, written in a fine, running hand, warning her that "a certain fact in her life was known." As long as no one else received the letters the Conrad family ignored the missives. But certain ladies in town received letters written in the same fine, running hand, in which the writer began thus: "My Dear Mrs. ——. As a friend I warn you against associating with such a creature as Mrs. Ed Conrad," etc. Then a specific charge was made. The writer deplored that such was the fact and stated that others who knew of the matter were also sorry, but it was the writer's duty to warn unsuspecting people against such a woman.

In one letter Mrs. Conrad's rise in the local Rebekah Lodge was regretted. In another it was hinted that she made use of a new surrey to obtain friends. Among those who received letters was Judge G. Agnew, a citizen who stands high in political and fraternal circles. But his letter was written in a coarse hand, the same as those sent to Mr. Conrad. The Judge handed the letter to Mrs. Conrad.

There are in all nine letters known to have been written. Seven letters were laid before the District Attorney. Among those was one received by Mrs. Mansfield. Mrs. Mansfield says she received two letters warning her against cultivating Mrs. Conrad's acquaintance. Another letter, known to have been written, was not handed over owing to the vile phrases used.

Some years ago a man named Schill received some anonymous letters reflecting upon himself and family, and owing to a quarrel, arising from trouble among the children at school he accused the Conrads of writing the letters. Schill committed suicide. Those letters have been kept, however, and it is now thought the same party wrote the Schill and Conrad letters. The Conrads say they can now fully sympathize with Schill's bitter feeling, although he labored under a mistaken suspicion.

Mrs. Conrad and Mrs. Mansfield talked over the letters, and at last certain little things occurred which made Mrs. Conrad suspicious. Then as a matter of justice to her children, her husband and herself she determined to discover the writer of the screeds. She obtained opinions of an expert in San Francisco and then submitted her case to District Attorney Hudner. Many women have testified before the Grand Jury on the case.

The accused Mrs. Mansfield is a woman of education and an excellent conversationalist. She denies emphatically having written the letters, and asserts that she cannot understand the reason for the attempt to injure Mrs. Conrad. Both ladies have resided here for a long time and are well known. Mrs. Conrad has been advanced to office in the local Rebekah Lodge, which contains several of Hollister's leading society ladies.

MRS. CRAVEN'S MARRIAGE CLAIM.

Attorneys for Fair's Daughters Demand the Particulars.

Lloyd & Wood, attorneys for Mrs. Theresa A. Oelrichs and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt, daughters of James G. Fair, yesterday filed a motion in Judge Troutt's court that Mrs. Nettie R. Craven, "falsely styling herself Nettie R. Fair," be required to make her petition for partial distribution of Fair's estate certain as to the time and place at which she was married to Fair, as she alleges. They want to know whether the marriage was ever licensed, solemnized, authenticated or recorded, and when, where and by whom the ceremony was performed if any took place. If the marriage was by contract they ask that she be required to set forth the terms of the contract, and to state with certainty and definiteness the time and place at which it was made, and whether or not it was ever authenticated or recorded.

Mrs. Craven and her daughter, Mrs. Henry Koehler Jr., formerly known as Margaret Craven, the actress, arrived from St. Louis Friday and secured apartments at the Palace. Mrs. Craven, who registered as Mrs. N. R. Fair, has been visiting her daughter in St. Louis and the two returned to attend the contest over the Fair millions, which will again come up in court next Wednesday. Mrs. Koehler will remain in this city during the trial. Rumors that the young lady would again go on the stage are laughed at by her. She asserts that her home in St. Louis and her domestic happiness are all that she could desire and that she would not again appear before the footlights for any consideration.

Bulletin Sept. 21, 16

MILLIONAIRES GO IN FOR MICROSCOPY.

Interesting Exhibits Made at the Meeting of the Society.

The meeting of the San Francisco Microscopical Society, held at its rooms, 132 Montgomery street, Wednesday, was not lacking in interest. In the absence of the president, the meeting was called to order by Dr. Gustav Eisen, the vice-president. After the usual routine business, the members were called to vote on nine names submitted at the last meeting for life membership, and the following were declared duly elected: J. B. Stetson, Alvinza Hayward, Charles N. Felton, Claus Spreckels, George Crocker, Russel J. Wilson, Timothy Hopkins, Charles G. Lathrop and William H. Crocker. As the fees for life membership are entirely devoted to the purchase of books, the accession of so large a number at this time means much to the library.

The public are probably not aware that the San Francisco Microscopical Society is the oldest society of microscopists in the world, having been organized in 1870 and incorporated in 1872, fully four years before the organization of the Royal Microscopical Society of London. By the earnest endeavors of its members in its early career, the foundation was laid for the accumulation of a library of books on subjects connected with the study and use of the microscope. The chief pride has been in its library, which is now recognized as the largest and best in its special field in the United States. The fact is patent to the two universities that this collection of books is one of the most valuable consulting libraries accessible to its faculty and special students. The trustees will now add a number of sets not in any other library on the Coast, and thus further enhance its usefulness.

The meeting had as its special feature the informal exhibition of microscopical preparations, about which the exhibitor in each case gave a few minutes' talk. W. J. V. Osterhout, Ph.D., of the botanical department of the University of California, exhibited a cross section of leaf and also the outer cuticle of the same, showing a very curious and effective method of storing and retaining moisture in the leaf. D. C. Booth had a slide of diatoms of his own preparation from a deposit on the Island of Fur, Denmark, showing some of the most curious and rarest forms of these interesting objects. Dr. Gustav Eisen exhibited a section of muscle of an anthropod, showing the striations very perfectly. F. T. Bioletti of the University of California exhibited a chromogenic bacterium, showing a decidedly dark brown (almost black) coloring matter in its composition, not the result of stains. It was believed, however, that this accumulation of chlorophyl was the result of association in the growth and development of the bacteria.

THE FULLER CASE STILL CONTINUES

Daily Register Oroville

Number of Witnesses Examined Friday

Dec 2nd 1899

Mrs Houseworth Refused to Testify on the Ground that She Might Incriminate Herself

The arena in the court room yesterday was an interesting one. The room was crowded the entire day, during the afternoon nearly sixty ladies were present. All seemed deeply interested in the outcome of the suit and all paid close and careful attention to the statement of the witnesses. The interest of all was held closely from the shrewd and careful manner in which the case was managed. Mr. Geo. Knight, the managing attorney for the heirs of Alfred Fuller was cool, careful, collected, cautious and keeping well within his ground but he was dramatic in action, emphatic in tones and striking in gestures. He impressed all as a safe, shrewd, keen and able lawyer who managed his case with great tact and ability. He was assisted by attorneys Richard White and Carleton Gray.

Messrs Schooler and Yell were alert and watchful. They kept an eye constantly on Mr. Knight, lest he get in a question that might damage their side and it would be safe to assume that every other question asked by Mr. Knight, was objected to. Ninety-eight out of every hundred were overruled.

When Mrs Houseworth was called there was a dramatic scene for a few moments. She refused to testify. Was asked to take the stand and then when asked a question she stated her grounds for refusing to answer was that she was now under indictment for two crimes and if she answered the questions it might incriminate her.

Her attorneys have been watchful, careful and cautious. Perhaps too eager and determined in their objections, for they served only to hold back and delay the trial in many instances, but her case is being well managed and they doubtless feel that they have enough solid objections to cause a reversal of the case when they appeal it.

Mr. Carmac testified that he received the purported will of Alfred Fuller through the mail. Then he went to see Mr. Rexford who was ill, spoke to Mrs. Rexford about Mrs. Houseworth, and said he had some information that would be of value to Mrs. Houseworth and requested her, Mrs Rexford, to write to Mrs. Houseworth and tell her so. The will, he carried for a short time, but then placed it in a tool chest in his buggy house, the chest being locked. That when he spoke to Mrs. Rexford, the latter wrote to Mrs. Houseworth and asked him, Carmac, to take the letter to Mrs. Daniels, or to Justice of the Peace Collins, as one or the other would probably know the address of Mrs. Houseworth. He did take the letter to Mr. Collins and gave it to him and supposed that he mailed it. Some days later a party told him that Mrs. Houseworth was home and he went to the residence of Mrs Rexford to ascertain where she, Mrs. Houseworth was. She happened to be there and at that time he handed her the letter, saying he supposed that was the will he had heard her talk about in the past. Mrs. Houseworth thanked him, said she never could repay him for what he had done and that had he been like some, he would have perhaps kept the letter or will. He stated that he knew nothing about the will until he got it through the mail. It was addressed to him and postmarked Chico.

His cross examination by Mr. Schooler was long and severe but he did not deviate from his general statement. Some one told him later that Mrs. Houseworth stated that he demanded from her $2,000. He asked her if this was true and she said she had never stated anything of the kind.

In reply to question he stated that he did not get the letter from the papers of the late R R Frimple, and absolutely knew nothing about it until it came to him through the mail.

Mrs Montgomery stated that she was residing in Washington at present but had lived for several years in Chico and knew Mr Fuller well. She had rented a house from him and had received a number of letters about rent and other general matters. She knew his handwriting from these letters and from the fact that they had talked about the contents of the letters afterwards and that he spoke of having sent them to her.

She could not swear positively that he wrote them because she never saw him write anything. He did write a line or two in her daughter's album and that writing was like the letters. As she did not see him write in the album this testimony was ruled out. She had received receipts from him but had never seen him write one. Was asked regarding her education, her years of schooling, where she attended school, how many months in the year she attended, etc.

Was asked who paid her expenses for coming to this trial as a witness and said Mr R White did. Asked if he wrote to her and she replied that she came on a telegram stating that her expenses would be paid.

Major A F Jones was then sworn. Mrs Houseworth objected to any testimony from the Major because he at one time was her attorney and because what she had written him was a privileged communication.

The Major stated that he had acted as her attorney and must refuse to answer unless ordered to do so by the court. He was shown a public record which purported to bear the signature of the lady and asked if she signed it. The Court held he must answer the question and the Major stated that so far as he could recall she did sign it.

Repeated objections were made to his answer.

When court adjourned for the evening Kytka, the famous handwriting expert, occupied the witness stand.

Landis Note Case

Nearly every person in Butte county capable of reading the daily papers are familiar with the suit of A J Landis vs E M Woodman, as administrator of the estate of Alfred Fuller, deceased, and the recent opinion of the Supreme Court in this matter is therefore of general interest. It will be recalled that the administrator rejected the claim of $15,000 presented in the form of a promissory note by Landis against the estate. Landis instituted suit, a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and later one to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend.

In commenting upon the ground taken by the lower court that the complaint was fatally defective because the claim was defective, the Supreme Court says:

"Among other matters Sec. 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares: 'Every claim which is due when presented to the executor or administrator must be supported by the affidavit of the claimant, or some one in his behalf, that the amount is justly due, that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited, and that there are no offsets to the same to the knowledge of the affiant. If the claim be not due when presented, or be contingent, the particulars of such claim must be stated.' It was held by the trial court that 'the particulars' required to be stated in a claim that is not due were not set out in this claim. The single question involved by this appeal is: Does the claim presented substantially comply with the requirements of this statute?

"Respondent rests the case upon the proposition that the 'particulars' of this claim are not stated, and in seeking for the meaning of the word 'particulars,' he declares that if it refers to the four essentials of a valid contract, namely: parties capable of contracting, consent, a lawful object and a sufficient consideration. He then admits that it shows three of these essentials, but declares it fails to show a sufficient consideration. Even if it be admitted that this construction of the statute is the sound one, we would be loath to hold this claim too weak to form the basis of a cause of action. We would consider long before declaring such a claim no claim. Especially is this so in view of a statute that is so general and indefinite as the one here under consideration. If respondent rejected this claim for the reason that it contained no statement as to the true consideration actuating these parties in making the contract, it would seem but just and right to the claimant that he should have been so informed by the administrator, in order that an amended claim could have been presented to meet that objection.

CEMBER 5, 1899.

"The 'particulars' of this claim are sufficiently stated. The date of the contract is shown. The parties are named. The amount to be paid is stated. When it is to be paid and kind of coin is also stated. This must be held to be a substantial compliance with the statute. Especially are we inclined to such conclusion when we find in Sec. 1494 and 1499 of the Code of Civil Procedure ample power vested in the court and the administrator or executor, to investigate to the lowest dregs the validity and honesty of all claims which may be presented to them. We are also disposed to this conclusion in view of the fact that the business would be badly handicapped in dealing with commercial paper if a history of such paper is to be required to accompany it from its inception throughout its long and devious travels. To obtain such a history would be impossible in numberless cases.

"A promissory note past due requires no statement of particulars other than that found upon its face, yet there is no good reason why the law should make any different rule in the two cases. 'Particulars' are as necessary in the one case as in the other. Of course in the case of contingent claims the propriety of the rule is readily apparent, and very possibly in many other cases where claims are not due. But in a simple, plain, ordinary promissory note, we see no necessity for stating any other particulars than those appearing upon its face.

"The Indiana Statute requires a 'succinct and definite statement of the claims.' Under such a requirement a copy of a promissory note has been repeatedly held to constitute a compliance of the law. Wolfe vs. Wilsey, 28 N. E. Rep., 1004. So, it would seem that the language of the Indiana statute is fully as broad and explicit as the word 'particulars' found in the aforesaid provision of the Code of Civil Procedure. We conclude that this note upon its face gives the 'particulars' called for by the statute.

"For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

GAROUTTE, J.

"We concur: Harrison, J; Van Dyke, J.

MRS. HOUSEWORTH WANTS MORE TIME

Asks a Continuance Until Next March.

Chico Record

PRESENTED TWO AFFIDAVITS

In Which She Asserts that Her Attorney Deserted Her Without Any Warning—Intimates That Rodley and Garner Will Refuse to Testify in the Case.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Dec. 5.—When the Fuller will case was called this morning, quite a ripple of excitement was occasioned by the introduction of two affidavits from Mrs. Minnie Houseworth, John Guidery, Attorney Wm. H. Schooler and Attorney Knight taking leading parts in the performance.

Attorneys White, Knight and Gray appeared as attorneys for the contestants of the will, and when John Guidery offered to read the affidavits of Mrs. Houseworth, Attorney Knight objected to Mr. Guidery reading them as he was a Deputy Sheriff and not an attorney.

Guidery stated that he merely appeared as an act of friendship to Mrs. Houseworth, as she had no attorney.

After considerable discussion Guidery decided not to read the affidavits, when Mrs. Houseworth arose, and presenting the affidavits, requested that Deputy Clerk C. F. Belding read them. Belding then read the two affidavits.

The first affidavit asked that the trial of the case be postponed to March, 1900. It says that Mrs. Houseworth had employed F. C. Lusk to act as her attorney and that Lusk had taken entire charge and management of her defense; that he had agreed to attend to the full preparation for and trial of her case without expense to herself; that she need give neither time nor money in preparation for her defense; that Lusk has not at any time requested her to make any preparation or spend any money in preparation for the trial; that she believed Lusk had employed other attorneys for her, viz: Jo D. Sproul, A. F. Jones and John Gale, to assist him in the contest; that she is informed and believes that on November 27, 1899, without any cause or notice to the Court, Lusk had withdrawn as attorney in violation of his duty to petitioner.

The affidavit further states that she was informed and believed that Sproul, Jones and Gale had also withdrawn from the case, stating that their arrangements were with Lusk and not with her. She is therefore left without any attorney in the contest. She sets forth the indictments of Rodley and Garner; also states that she is unable to give bail and cannot personally attend to the preparation of her case, and it would be unfair to her and to the interest she has in the estate to permit the trial to go on prior to the trial of the criminal action. Should the trial proceed at once, she would be deprived of an opportunity to properly prepare her case; that the motion for a continuance was not made for a delay but by the continuance prayed for she would have an opportunity to make arrangements with her attorneys to go on with the case.

The second affidavit states that she had relied entirely upon the attorneys mentioned in the first affidavit to attend to arranging for the contest; that this matter was published in the various papers and was commented upon in an unfavorable manner, and she believed all the time that Lusk and Jones would appear for her; that when she found that they would not do so she was prostrated, both mentally and physically; that no notice was given her and she has been informed and believes that Rodley and Garner, who are both in jail, will refuse to testify in the matter, and that it is unreasonable to expect them to appear as witnesses, owing to the charges on which they are confined in jail; that she has been unable to employ counsel, and that the attorneys above mentioned had given her to understand that she had a good and meritorious case.

After the reading of the affidavits, Knight asked Judge Gaddis if he would hear testimony regarding the case, and upon receiving an affirmative reply, called Guidery to the stand.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

Q. Whom did you get those affidavits?

A. I drew them.

Q. Are they now in the form in which you drew them?

A. I had been given an outline and filled them in.

Q. Where did you get them?

A. Out of a letter addressed to Col. Henshaw, who had requested me to open the letter.

Q. Where did they come from?

A. From Sacramento.

Q. From whom did they come?

A. Grove L. Johnson.

Further questioning brought out the fact that a letter was also contained in the envelope with the affidavits and Knight asked that the letter be produced.

On the order being given, Guidery left the court-room to procure the letter, and W. H. Schooler, who had been an attentive listener, and who is associated with Grove L. Johnson in the defense of J. E. Rodley, departed also in quest of Guidery. Schooler met Guidery as he came out of the Sheriff's office with the letter, and advised him (Guidery) that as the letter was a personal one from Johnson to Henshaw, not to show it, except under protest.

On returning to the court-room, Guidery was asked by Attorney Knight if he had been interviewed by an officer of the court, to which Guidery replied that he had been warned by Attorney Schooler to not read the letter except under protest.

The court ordered the letter to be read, which was done under protest.

Knight then made much ado about Schooler attempting to advise Guidery while the latter was a witness on the stand, and those in attendance began to believe that Schooler was to be charged with contempt, but no such thing occurred.

At the conclusion of Knight's remarks, the court ordered a continuance until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Dec 7-99

MRS HOUSEWORTH FILES AFFIDAVITS

Oroville Register

In Which She Severely Scores Lusk.

Attorney W H Schooler Alive to His Client's Interests, Narrowly Escapes Contempt.

As usual the court room was crowded yesterday morning to listen to the proceedings in the much talked of Fuller will contest. Attorneys Knight, Gray and White appeared as counsel in behalf of contestants and the defendant, Mrs Houseworth, was again unrepresented by counsel. Under-Sheriff Guidery attempted to read two affidavits presented by Mrs Houseworth, asking for a continuance of the trial until March, 1899, and which it afterward developed he had been requested to do by Col. Park Henshaw.

Attorney Knight vigorously objected, claiming that Guidery as Under Sheriff had no legal right to represent anyone in court; finally in the face of this objection the attorney desisted from the attempt to read the affidavits and at the request of Mrs Houseworth Clerk Belding read and filed them.

The burden of the affidavits is a plea for continuance until March by which time defendant will have been able to secure a legal representative and be prepared for trial.

As a reason for not being prepared for trial she alleges that she employed F C Lusk to defend her and he agreed to furnish all the necessary expenses incurred in preparing for the trial and make all necessary preparations until he notified her to the contrary. She received no notification and believed that everything was satisfactory, until the day first set for trial, when it was announced that Lusk had withdrew from the case, without any apparent reason therefor, and without giving notice to her or to the court beforehand, that in the meantime Lusk had engaged A F Jones, John Gale and Jo D Sproul to assist him but when he withdrew they dropped out also, on the ground that all arrangements had been made with him.

She further affirms that when the date of the first hearing was set she was an inmate of a hospital in San Francisco where where she underwent a dangerous operation, leaving her for weeks afterward unable to perform any work, that the county papers contained so much misleading matter regarding the finding of the indictments, etc., that a dangerous feeling existed and still continues to exist, regarding the principals, that she is not guilty of the crimes she is charged with; that she believes neither Rodley or Garner was guilty, and if she is forced to a trial now she will be deprived of their testimony, as she has been informed that they will refuse to testify under the circumstances; further that she has no money with which to hire an attorney and being in jail is unable to attend to her interests individually, therefore she believes it would be a gross injustice to compel her to go to trial at this time.

When the reading of the affidavits was finished attorney Knight requested that Mr Guidery be placed upon the witness stand, when it was soon disclosed that the affidavits had been forwarded by Grove L Johnson of Sacramento and the fact that he also had in his possession a letter from Johnson to Henshaw and the witness was ordered to procure it. When the witness returned Knight asked him if he had not been approached by an officer of the court during his absence from the room, and instructed not to allow the letter to be read, and he admitted that he had been accosted by Attorney W H Schooler, who was present looking after the welfare of his client, Dr Rodley.

For a moment things looked squally for Schooler, but the contempt phase was overlooked, and the letter read, it proving to be merely a brief business communication.

Judge Gaddis then continued the case until this morning at 10 o'clock, when it is generally believed it will be gone ahead with.

CONTINUANCE WAS DENIED

The Fuller Will Case Must Proceed.

Chico D. Enterprise

MRS. HOUSEWORTH HAS ATTORNEYS

But they Were Only Employed Yesterday Afternoon and Will Have to Get Ready to Try the Case Before Ten O'clock To-morrow.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 6.—The Fuller will case will proceed to trial to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, even though Mrs. Housworth, who claims that the document bequeathing to herself almost the entire estate of Alfred Fuller is genuine, had only secured counsel yesterday afternoon.

When the motion for continuance was called at 10 o'clock this morning W. H. Schooler arose and stated that last night he had been called into the case by J. P. West, son of Mrs. Housworth, and that he simply appeared at this time to make a motion for a continuance of the case.

Judge Gaddis then ordered a continuance until 1 o'clock to allow Attorney Schooler time to consult with his client.

On reconvening at 1 o'clock Mr. Schooler stated that he had two affidavits to read in connection with his motion for a continuance. With Attorney Schooler appeared Ex-Senator Yell, of Sacramento, who also appeared as attorney for Mrs. Housworth.

The affidavits of Mrs. Housworth were very similar to those of yesterday, but added as another ground for the continuance asked for (to March, 1900), that she had had no time to consult with her attorneys, Arom & Yell of Sacramento and W. A. Schooler of Chico; that there were a number of persons who she desired as witnesses and whose testimony was of great importance to her, which witnesses could not possibly be present should the case proceed to trial at this time. One of these witnesses is Carrie West-Powers of Alaska, who could not possibly appear before March next; that the testimony of Mrs. Powers is material, and the facts to which she will testify cannot be gotten from any other person; further that she had had absolutely no time to consult with her attorneys.

Attorney Yell also presented an affidavit in which it is stated that he was only called into the case yesterday afternoon and had arrived in Oroville at a late hour last night; that he knows nothing of the case, and has had no time to consult with his client. He asked that the case be postponed until he could have sufficient time to look into the case.

After hearing the arguments Judge Gaddis denied the motion for a continuance and ordered that a continuance be had until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning when the trial will proceed.

Attorney George A. Knight of San Francisco is registered at the Union. He is one of the Attorney for the Fuller heirs in the will case which comes up for hearing tomorrow. The attorneys for the heirs are Knight and Heggerty of San Francisco, Richard White of Chico and Carleton Gray of Oroville.

Theodore Kytka the handwriting expert has been in Oroville several day's preparing his exhibit for the Fuller will case.

NEW FULLER HEIR A HALF-BREED

And Reported to Be 28 Years of Age.

Chico Daily Enterprise

WAS BORN IN TUOLUMNE COUNTY

It Is Asserted That the Deceased Lover of Coin Was, In His Early Days, Also a Lover of a Certain Maiden With Black Hair and Dark Skin.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 6.—The mysterious heir to Alfred Fuller has been discovered, and if the claims made to his legal right to a share in the Alfred Fuller estate are good, it would appear that the deceased Fuller had, in early days, a liking for the dusky maidens of the wild west.

Attorney Carter is here, and though he has, so far, taken no hand in the proceedings, he is a quiet, but very attentive listener during all of the arguments by attorneys.

The story has leaked out that the mysterious heir is a resident of Tuolumne county, where he was born some 28 years ago, and it is stated that the mother is an Indian woman.

It is asserted that during the latter '60's and early '70's Alfred Fuller was a great deal in Tuolumne county and while there became intimate with an Indian woman of that section. It is further claimed that as a result of this intimacy a baby boy was born, and that this boy has grown to manhood bearing the Christian name of Fuller, and that at the proper time his claim for a share of the $35,000 or more left by Alfred Fuller will be presented.

This will, of course, place the Eastern heirs in a position to enter another long fight for the possession of Alfred Fuller's much coveted wealth.

JURY TO TRY THE WILL CASE

Twelve Men Must Decide Its Value.

A HARD TIME TO SECURE THEM

Chico Daily Enterprise

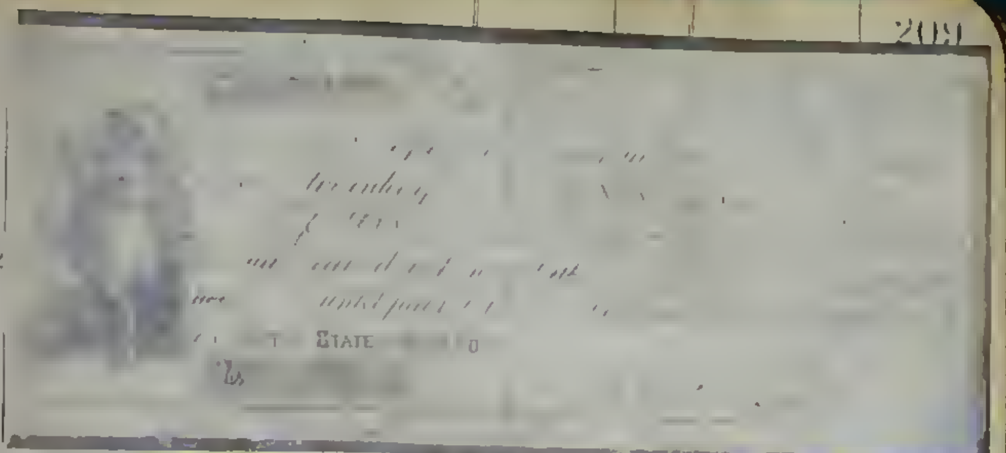
Mrs. Housworth's Attorneys Believe This Is a Case Where Twelve Men Are Better Than One—Crowds Flocking to the Court House.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 7.—Never in the history of the Butte County Court House has the Superior Court room been so thoroughly packed as it has to-day.

Contrary to all previous cases, the crowd did not diminish as the day wore along, but all who were so fortunate as to secure a seat or even standing room, have stayed right there up to the present time, 4:45

When the case was called this morning the attorneys for Mrs. Housworth stated that they would demand a jury trial, and the work of securing the twelve men was commenced. It required all the forenoon and until late this afternoon to secure a jury acceptable to both sides.



The jury is as follows:

Chas. Simpson, T. J. Forman, E. H. Noel, W. A. McElroy, Geo. Taber, Jno. Watkins, A. Sweetzer, Jas. Williams, L. N. Boswell, Wm. Campbell, T. D. Wheeler, A. J. Corwin,

At this time (4:50) the opening statement is being made to the jury.

As to whether or not Dr. Rodley and John Garner will appear as witnesses in the case is a question that no

SECRET ARREST BY THE POLICE.

G. H. MAYER LOCKED UP ON A SERIOUS CHARGE.

HIS STEPMOTHER SAYS THAT HE IS ACCUSED OF THE CRIME OF FORGERY.

Prisoner Declares That His Father Caused His Incarceration, but the Elder Mayer Denies All Knowledge.

G. H. Mayer, son of Henry Mayer, the tailor of 40 Montgomery street, was taken into custody by the Central Station police yesterday and his name placed on the detention book pending developments. The boy claimed that his father had caused his arrest and Mrs. Mayer, the stepmother, was authority for the statement that young Mayer was charged with having forged notes. The elder Mayer strenuously denied both of these statements, however.

According to the elder Mayer and Mrs. Mayer, the boy has been wayward for several years. In fact, he voluntarily deserted their home at 233 Oak street three years ago and has been constantly in trouble and the associate of dissolute people. Although but 19 years of age he served in the Philippines with the Fourteenth Infantry. After his return from the islands his father, it is said, gave the military authorities information to the effect that the boy had deserted from the Army, so the arrest of young Mayer followed. The boy was able to show his discharge papers, however, and was released. The elder Mayer states that although he had sent many articles of medicine and dainties to his son the young man never showed the slightest appreciation of this kindness and never came to see him.

When Mayer was taken to the prison yesterday it was found that he was ill so he was transferred to the Receiving Hospital, where he will be detained for several days. An officer has been specially detailed to guard the young man and prevent any one from interviewing him. Mayer informed a reporter, however, that his father had caused his arrest, but refused to discuss his incarceration any further. The boy claimed to others that when his mother died he had been left several thousand dollars, out of which his father was trying to defraud him. This is denied by persons acquainted with the case, who assert that the property left by the first Mrs. Mayer was entirely community and as such the son has no interest in it.

The present Mrs. Mayer said her husband had told her that the boy had been arrested for forgery. She added that if her husband were seen later in the evening he would supply the necessary details of the arrest. When Mayer was interviewed he declared that he knew nothing of the case. He had not caused the arrest of his son, he declared, and had not heard until then that the young man had committed any forgeries. When it was suggested that his wife was the authority for the report of his son's alleged crime Mayer declared that somebody had come to the house in the afternoon and told her of the arrest. He maintained that the woman did not know the identity of her informant and subsequently stated that she had heard of it in Oakland.

When Mrs. Mayer was interviewed her husband prevented her divulging any information which might have contradicted his own statements, for he immediately proceeded to frame all of her replies. In the meanwhile young Mayer will be detained as a "small book" case until further developments. His father stated positively that he would not try to get the young man out of the present scrape and would allow the law to take its course. The police are reticent regarding the details or exact nature of the case against the young prisoner.

"FOR JUSTICE SAKE"

Dec 8-99 Daily Register — Oroville —

GARNER CONFESSED

An Impressive Scene When He Testified in the Fuller Will Contest

As was expected, the prosecution in the Fuller will contest case, when court convened yesterday morning, waived a jury trial. Mrs Housworth's attorneys objected strongly to the motion being made at that time, asserting that they were not ready for trial. Judge Gaddis said he did not care to hear any more on that subject and asked the defense if they demanded a jury. They answered that they did. From this time forward the burden of depositing $24 every morning in advance for jury fees, will fall upon them. The $21 heretofore deposited by the prosecution, the jury having been summoned originally at their request.

At this time Schooler requested that it be placed on record that Mrs Housworth was not ready to go to trial.

The examination of the jurors was then commenced, Schooler on the part of the defence giving each juror a searching examination touching his qualifications as a trial juror. One of the principal questions was regarding the amount of credence that would be given expert testimony.

About 3:30 this afternoon the jury was completed and a 10 minute recess was taken. Quite a little squabble ensued when Court convened again, regarding the manner in which Clerk Bolding administered the oath to the jurors. Judge Gaddis said the oath was not correct as administered and the jurors were again sworn.

Knight thought it was a good plan for the Clerk to read the oath from the code and as the Court coincided the Clerk did so. Schooler interposing an objection which was overruled.

The following talesmen were empanelled to try the case:

G D Wheeler, Chas Simpson, L W Boswell, A Sweetzer, A J Corwin, Geo Taber, T J Farnan, Farnan. W A McElroy, Wm Campbell, Jas Williams, S E Noel, Joo Watkins.

Knight's opening statement to the jury was very impressive and created quite an impression on the large crowd present. He said they would prove that Garner had been offered $5000 for the use of his signature to the will; that at first he refused to entertain the idea, having always borne a spotless reputation previous to that time, but misfortune overtook him, reverses came and the alluring bait so temptingly displayed to him was at last accepted. They would also prove that Col. Batch I. ue had been approached in Biggs with an offer to sell his signature, and the offer was again made in the form of a letter. That the will was made several months after the death of Alfred Fuller they would prove by testimony that was unimpeachable, and that a triple conspiracy existed. He drew a word picture of the late Alfred Fuller, whom he termed a lonely recluse, possibly a miser, hoarding his earnings, who of a reserved distant nature, made but few intimate friends, and denounced the will as a forgery and a base counterfeit.

All eyes were centered on John Garner, the self-confessed perjurer, who was the first witness called, as he took the stand. A few minor questions were asked and answered when in answer to a question regarding the length of his acquaintance with Mrs Housworth, he replied that he first met her for the first time during the proceedings when the will was admitted to probate.

Sternly was the following question put to him: "Did Alfred Fuller in your presence and Rodley's presence sign any will?" "He did not," was the prompt answer.

At this juncture Knight handed the will to him and after he had examined it asked, "Is that your signature?" "Yes" was the reply, "that is my signature."

He was then requested to make a statement to the jury, embodying a full account of the affair. He said: "In the spring or summer of 1898 I came to Chico one morning and met Dr. Rodley on the corner of 2nd and Main streets, who said he had something to tell me, and he took me to the old Wood's building, and we went up stairs two or three steps and sat down. He said Fuller had left a signed will, leaving the bulk of his property to a lady in Chico. No names were mentioned and he said the will was not witnessed. He then said, there is $5000 in it for each of us if you sign it. I refused, and time and time again in the future he approached me and asked me if "I did not think better" of the proposition. About two months after the first proposition I accepted and we went to his office, he took the will out of his safe and we signed it. This was in August, 1898, six or seven months after Fuller's death. There was not anything further said, except he would produce it in three or four months, and that it had been found among the papers of R R Fimple, deceased.

He cautioned me to keep quiet about the matter. Regarding his testimony given at the time of probate proceedings witness said, "The hardest work I ever done in my life was when I testified on probate."

The defense strenuously objected to nearly every question asked Garner and finally Knight sarcastically remarked that he presumed that he was dealing with full fledged attorneys, men of experience, and not with attorneys yet undergoing the incubatory process; that he was merely attempting to expedite the trial.

Attorney Yell responded by thanking Knight, said he was sorry to put the gentleman to any trouble but being their duty to be on the alert in their client's interests, they would certainly object when they deemed it proper.

Continuing Garner declared that the testimony given by him on probate of will was untrue. In answer to the question "did you ever receive any of the $5,000 promised you?" he replied no, he understood he would not receive it until the estate was distributed.

The scene was intensely dramatic while Garner was testifying to his downfall. The spectacle of an aged, gray haired man who for years had been an honored citizen of the county, his voice trembling with the deep emotion no effort could repress and his faithful little wife dressed in deep black, striving to hide her grief, as her life companion related his participation in the shameful conspiracy, for which acts the gates of a penitentiary are even now, swinging open to receive him, all combined to make an impressive picture, and one not easily forgotten, and when in reply to the query, "How did you come to confess," the climax was reached, the old man could control his emotions no longer, and tears streamed from his eyes as he impressively declared, "For Justice sake I first told the story; I found it was a conspiracy, that there were lawful heirs; I went much longer than I ought to. No, no inducements were offered to me. I expect to go to San Quentin.

COLONEL BATCHELDER ON THE STAND.

Mercury

He Tells of Rodley's Attempt to Secure His Signature to the Will.

A NEW CLAIMANT.

Petition Filed by an Alleged Son of Alfred Fuller, and Case Set for Hearing in March.

The Jury to try the Fuller will case was completed yesterday afternoon, and, after a brief opening statement by Attorney George Knight for the defense, John Garner was placed on the stand. His testimony was on the same lines as his confession published in full in the MERCURY on the day following that on which it was made in District Attorney Sproul's office at Chico. Garner's voice trembled with emotion as he told the story of his downfall. He declared that he told the story that justice might be done, that no inducements were offered him and that he perjured himself at the probate of the will and expects to go to States Prison for his crime.

When court convened this morning, a large crowd was present to hear the evidence and watch the developments of the case. Mrs. Houseworth was in court, accompanied by both her attorneys, Schooler of Chico and Yell of Sacramento. Wm. Fuller of Dakota, one of the heirs-at-law, and Attorneys Knight, White and Gray were on hand, and the big legal battle over Alfred Fuller's money was resumed.

The first witness called was Col. H. T. Batchelder, County Clerk of Butte county. It has been known that Mr. Batchelder was an important witness before the Grand Jury which indicted Mrs. Houseworth, the respondent, and there was considerable interest in what his testimony would be, though the main points leaked out some months ago.

As stated at the time, Col. Bachelder's testimony was to the effect that he had been offered a large sum of money by Dr. Rodley, to affix his signature to the will some months after Fuller's death, and the letter in the case, as stated by the MERCURY at the time, was simply a request for a meeting.

When placed upon the stand Mr Batchelder was asked the usual questions and stated that he had resided in the county for thirty-four years, had known Dr. Rodley for ten or twenty years and was intimately acquainted with him; that he knew Fuller, and was friendly with him; had seen him write and thought he knew his writing, though he had never paid especial attention to his writing. He was shown the will and asked if he thought any any part of it was written by Alfred Fuller, and he said he thought not. When asked if he had had any conversation with Dr. Rodley in relation to the proposed will he repeated the conversations which occurred between himself and Rodley. The first of these took place at the Hamilton hotel in Biggs about February 1, 1898, and was in effect as follows:

"Dr. Rodley drove up to the Hamilton early in the evening and said, 'Bach—I want to see you' I said "all right, Doctor, go ahead." He said 'no, I want to see you privately' I said "all right, lets go to my room." We went up to my room and closed the door and Dr. Rodley said: 'Alfred Fuller has left a will, do you think you would recognize Fuller's writing.' I said "I think so." 'If you were certain it was Fuller's signature would you be willing to sign it? Theres three thousand dollars if you could certify that will.'" I replied, "he never invited me to sign his will, Doctor, I always sign a will when invited. I signed General Bidwell's will that he invited me to do so."

This closed the conversation at Biggs, and Dr. Rodley left.

Some time after this, Mr. Bachelder testified, he received a letter from Dr. Rodley asking him to come to Chico, without fail, on a certain date (the letter was afterward introduced in evidence and marked, plaintiff's exhibit A.) He went to Chico and visited Dr. Rodley at his office, when he was again asked to sign the will. Dr. Rodley placed it before him and said: "Is that Fuller's signature, Bach?" "I don't think so, Doctor." "You don't think that is his signature?" "No Sir." "You wouldn't sign it?" "Mr. Fuller never asked me to sign it Doctor. I wish I could earn the money for I need it, but I can't sign it."

On cross examination Bachelder was asked who he first told of having received the letter from Rodley, and he replied, the Grand Jury. He had no idea how that body learned of it, as he had not told of it to a living being.

The next witness was John Swearington, who testified that Mrs. Houseworth offered him $5000 to affix his signature to the will. The offer was made at the Hallam house in Chico and was repeated subsequently. He testified that she told him Rodley would sign if some other good man would do do so, and later told him that she had secured Garner's signature. He said that previous to his being called by the Grand Jury, Mrs. Houseworth saw him and tried to persuade him not to tell what he knew, but he told her that he would not swear to a lie. She threatened to kill herself if he divulged the conversation. Mr. Swearington created some amusement by stating that immediately after he testified before the Grand Jury he deeded his property to his wife that the lawyers might not be able to get it on his death.

Swearington was followed on the stand by H. Carmack of Chico. He was giving testimony regarding the will, which he received by mail and afterward delivered to Mrs. Houseworth.

For some time an attorney named Carter has been in Oroville and it has been known that he represented a new claimant to the Fuller wealth. This morning Mr. Carter filed a petition for his client who claims to be a son of Alfred Fuller. The petitioner is said to be a half breed Indian of Tuolumne county, son of a squaw with whom Fuller lived more than 30 years ago. The case was set for hearing March 13th, and in all probability the winner of the present contest will have another fight to make.

TWO JURIES

Nov. 20 — 1899

Becker-Creegan Case.

Prosecution Is Suspicious of That Disagreement.

A suspicion that the jury in the Becker-Creegan forgery case was tampered with has taken firm root in the minds of the lawyers and detectives who conducted the prosecution against the forgers. Many circumstances in connection with the action of the three jurors who voted for acquittal are considered sufficiently strange by Chief of Police Lees and Detective Pinkerton to warrant a thorough investigation.

The police probe is now being used to discover, if possible, why Jurors David Brooks, Edwin Lang and E. H. Seaman obstinately refused to discuss the evidence against the defendants and held the other nine jurors out for forty-eight hours and finally forced a disagreement.

The nine members of the jury who believed the defendants were guilty of forging a draft for $22,000 on the Nevada Bank are at a loss to understand the position of the three who held out for acquittal, especially when the latter absolutely refused to debate the question in the jury room.

Details of the proceedings in the jury chamber have been given to Detective Pinkerton and the Police Department. When the jury retired, after being charged by Judge Wallace, Messrs. Brooks, Lang and Seaman immediately separated from the other members and held a whispered consultation in the corner of the room. They were asked by the foreman to participate in a review of the testimony presented, but flatly refused. They informed their fellow-jurors that they had made up their minds to vote to acquit the defendants and would not recede from that determination if the deliberation continued until doomsday. The foreman, hoping to bring about an agreement of some sort, took the jury into court twice for additional instructions from the Judge. In both instances his efforts were ridiculed by the three obdurate jurymen.

An inexplicable incident is found in the presence of one member on the jury. A short time ago he was drawn as a talesman in a railroad case in Judge Dainger-

FATE BEARS HEAVILY ON MRS. HOUSEWORTH

Chico Semi-Weekly Record

Attorneys Secured at Last But Their Pleadings for Continuance Fail

Dec 8 - 1899

YELL HINTS AT AN IMMENSE PLOT

Suggests That the Criminal Proceedings May Be a Scheme Concocted to Defeat the Will

Special to the RECORD.

OROVILLE, Dec. 6.—The sensation in the Fuller will contest came today when one of the newly acquired attorneys for Mrs. Minnie Houseworth, in an address to the Court hinted in strong language that it was possible that the criminal proceedings growing out of the will were parts of an immense plot to deprive her of enjoying the benefits prescribed for her by the will. Such a suggestion was prompted by the attitude of Judge Gaddis, who seemed immovable in his determination to bring the contest to trial previous to the trials of Dr. Rodley and Mrs. Houseworth on the criminal charges. Hints at great plots to break the will, long arguments showing that the contestant has not had an opportunity to prepare for presenting her case, having been deserted at the last moment by the attorney who had advised her to leave it all to him; also showing that she had been in jail and unable to secure counsel until a few hours previous to the time when she would be called to prosecute her claim, all this was in vain, for Judge Gaddis ordered that the trial shall be begun tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

When the Court convened this morning Attorney Schooler appeared on behalf of Mrs. Houseworth and asked for a continuance. In response to a question from Judge Gaddis, he stated that he had been retained by J. P. West, a son of Mrs. Houseworth, for the sole purpose of presenting the motion for a continuance, though he, with another attorney present, would probably be retained to defend her interests. He referred to Attorney Yell.

Judge Gaddis continued the hearing to 1 p. m. that the attorneys could confer with their client.

Archibald Yell made his debut in the case at the afternoon session as attorney for Mrs. Houseworth, who had retained him and his partner, Mr. Arnim of Sacramento and Wm. H. Schooler.

Schooler presented two affidavits by Mrs. Houseworth. In these she made the same showing as yesterday for a continuance. She said that she had endeavored to secure the services of Grove L. Johnson, but he could not take her case for the reason that he will be otherwise engaged, and she had diligently sought other attorneys until the present when she has secured Yell & Arnim. She asked a reasonable time in which to familiarize her attorneys with the case, and to secure witnesses, one of whom is her daughter, Mrs. Carrie West Powers, at present in Alaska. She also urged that Dr. Rodley is an important witness for her, and he cannot be induced to testify until after his trial on a criminal charge. She urged that there are insurmountable circumstances which render it impossible for her to go to trial at present, and fate seems to be against her in that she is in jail and has had no opportunity to secure counsel or her important witnesses.

Attorney Yell stated that F. C. Lusk had declared that her cause was a meritorious one, and this should be a recommendation to the Court, as no one would suffer by a continuance.

Attorney Knight called Yell to the stand and asked him if he had not held himself in readiness for a week past to enter the case, and if he did not know that the policy of the contestant was to get a continuance until after the criminal trial. Yell responded in the negative.

Attorney Schooler was called and denied that he had any knowledge in detail of Mrs. Houseworth's case.

Yell then made a long and spirited speech in which he insinuated that the criminal indictments and the great anxiety on the part of the respondent's attorneys might be a huge plot, as such plots had been planned before and they could well be planned again. He declared that he took the case because he believed that it was a meritorious one, and he insisted that it would only be fair to grant a continuance until March.

Knight responded, saying that the motion for continuance was not based upon any legal grounds, and he asked that the trial proceed at once. He said that he would admit, if the contestant would outline what she expects to prove by witnesses whom she cannot secure for the trial now, the testimony thus desired, but Yell would not accept this offer.

Knight believes that he has fully as good a chance to break the will by having the Court decide the case, and he will therefore not have a jury tomorrow, unless Mrs. Houseworth desires to pay the costs, and it is not likely that she will be able to find the money in jail for that purpose.

Judge Gaddis made an order that the case be continued until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

OROVILLE, December 5.—The expectant throng that gathered in the court room this morning on the alert for any sensational features that might arise during the Fuller will contest, were treated to an unlooked for sensation in the spectacle of the complete discomfiture of Under Sheriff Guldery, who ran up against a snag, so to speak, in the shape of a forcible objection from George Knight, and before Knight got through with him he was completely at sea. When the case was called, Mr. Guldery attempted to represent the defendant, Mrs. Houseworth, in the matter of reading two affidavits presented by her, seeking a continuance of the trial, as she was unrepresented by counsel.

Knight was on his feet in an instant. He declared that it was a most unheard of proceeding, the Under-Sheriff attempting to represent a client in Court; that he had no legal right to do so; the act was ridiculous, and never in his career as an attorney before the bar had he met with such effrontery. The objection was promptly sustained and Guldery was placed on the witness stand to relate how he came into possession of the documents and who prepared them, considering that the defendant claimed she had no attorney. It soon developed that the affidavits were prepared by Grove L. Johnson in Sacramento, and the further fact that the witness had a letter in his possession from Johnson to Col. Park Henshaw.

Knight asked that the letter be produced and Judge Gaddis ordered Guldery to bring it into court.

Guldery thereupon retired and secured the letter, and no sooner had he taken the witness chair again than Knight sternly asked: "Did not an officer of this court follow you out, accost you on the stairway and instruct you not to produce that letter, on the ground that it is a privileged communication?"

The witness admitted that Attorney Schooler had accosted him regarding the matter, and it looked for a moment as if Schooler would be up for contempt, but it was passed over.

The letter was offered in evidence by Knight and turned out to be merely a business communication from Johnson to Henshaw, which Mr. Guldery had received at the latter's request, and the witness stated that he would comply with Col. Henshaw's wishes.

Regarding the affidavits, Mr. Guldery related that they were forwarded to him by Col. Henshaw, with the request that he file and read them when the case was called.

Defendant requested that the trial of the case be continued until March of next year, but Judge Gaddis curtly continued the case until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

In the meantime Mrs. Houseworth requested that Clerk Behling file the affidavits and read them, which he did. The reading of the documents provoked the profoundest sensation in the courtroom, evoking the sympathy of many for the defendant as her tale of woe was unfolded regarding the alleged "shameful and unprofessional" manner in which she had been treated by F. C. Lusk. Defendant alleges that she employed Lusk to defend her and he informed her she had a "good and substantial" defense; that he took entire charge of the case and agreed that he would pay all the expenses, would make all preparations for the trial and try the trial without expense to her, and that she need give no time nor expend any money in said preparations, except when requested by Lusk; that he has never made any such request; and she is informed and believes that Lusk employed A. F. Jones, John Gale and Jo O. Sproul to assist him; that on Nov. 27th, without any cause, or notice to deponent or court, withdrew from the case, and thereupon the associate counsel withdrew, on the ground that all arrangements had been made with Lusk, leaving her unrepresented. Deponent further avers that she is innocent of the charges preferred against her and believes that Rodley and Garner are also innocent; that she is without means, and being in jail is unable to prepare for trial, and therefore believes it would be unfair to compel her to go to trial, that the interests of the estate would not suffer by delay as the Public Administrator has charge of it and is managing it carefully. Should the trial not be postponed until March, she avers she will not be able to secure an attorney.

In the second affidavit deponent affirms that at the time the hearing on the will contest was first set she was an inmate of the McLean Hospital, San Francisco, where she underwent a dangerous surgical operation, and being in feeble health for a long time thereafter, relied entirely upon her attorneys neglecting to attend to any business herself. The newspapers came in for a scoring also, affiant asserting that the unfavorable comments of the county papers on the contest caused much excitement and the same state of that Rodley [illegible] testify on [illegible] their [illegible] the will, and [illegible] cannot [illegible] Court. She [illegible] circumstances [illegible] to expect [illegible] she will [illegible] testimony through [illegible] The document [illegible] peal stating that the trial at this [illegible] will work an irreparable injury [illegible] which would be beyond [illegible] and that putting off the trial would [illegible] no injury to anyone; that under the circumstances common justice and fair dealing which should be [illegible] to the poorest [illegible] as desired [illegible] if she is forced to trial at present

ADDITIONAL COURT NEWS

SAYS THE WILL IS A FORGERY

Expert Kytka Emphatic In His Declarations.

FRANKLIN FULLER'S TESTIMONY

J. B. Swearingen Recalled, and the Plaintiffs Close Their Case—The Trial Will Probably Occupy Two Days More.

Chico Daily Enterprise

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 9.—When court opened at 10 o'clock this morning, the court-room was already crowded to its utmost capacity. The contestants again put Expert Kytka upon the stand, and he concluded his testimony, which he commenced yesterday afternoon. Kytka is very positive and abrupt in his statements, and his manner of testifying would lead one to infer that he knows what he is talking about. He says that the will was not written or signed by the person who wrote the letters which are known to be Alfred Fuller's and in which his signature is admitted to be genuine. He had several large photographs of the will and gave a very lucid demonstration from his charts of why the signature to the will could not be genuine.

Franklin Fuller, who is a nephew and one of the heirs of Alfred Fuller, then took the stand, and stated that he knew Emillien Fuller and Alfred Fuller in Ohio, and that they were his uncles. He last heard of Emillien Fuller living in California.

Alfred Fuller first lived in Ohio, then emigrated to Illinois, and later moved to California and settled in Tuolumne county. Witness heard, by means of a paper sent to him by a friend, of Emillien Fuller's death. He afterwards received a letter, stating that his mother was an heir of Emillien Fuller. The money was sent to Attorney-in-fact Seails in Ohio. Witness received part of the money from the Emillien Fuller estate while Alfred Fuller was administrator of the estate. He also received some of the money from Richard White, after the death of Alfred Fuller.

Witness stated that he (witness) was born out of lawful wedlock and never knew his father. He was born in the State of Ohio. During the early part of her life his mother was an incompetent person.

The defense then re-called J. B. Swearingen for re-cross-examination and questioned him regarding his previous testimony given to the Grand Jury. When asked why he offered his testimony in the matter, he said that he would be damned if he would allow them to send Carmack to prison when he knew that he was innocent. He had heard that Carmack was about to get into trouble and that Mrs. Housworth had charged him with having demanded $2000 to produce the will which he had received through the mails, and that rather than to see him in trouble over the matter, he concluded that he would tell what he knew about the will and did testify before the Grand Jury.

The plaintiffs then closed their case, and the defense made their opening statement.

On the part of the defendant, the first witness was T. J. Hindman, who first saw Fuller in 1896, when he (Hindman) came back from a trip. He had a conversation with Fuller on the street and Fuller said that he had been sick and would have starved to death had it not been for Mrs. Housworth; that she brought him food when he was sick, and some day he would remember her. The first time he ever mentioned this was to Louis Schwein.

The next witness was Jas. Chubbuck. He had been in Chico 24 or 25 years and knew Fuller in his lifetime and had known Mrs. Housworth for 10 or 12 years. He had a conversation with Fuller at one time when he served some papers upon him regarding his brother's estate. Fuller got rather angry and threw the papers at him (Chubbuck) and said they were trying to get all his brother's property but said that they would not get his money to spend. He cursed his relatives and said the s—— o—— b—— would not get any of his money. Chubbuck was then cross examined in a jocular way. He said it was well Fuller had left $1000 to his heirs. He was asked if he would discredit the will, but the question was withdrawn.

C. L. Stilson and three ladies from Chico will testify Monday.

Defendant said it would take about 30 minutes to put in their case, and that it would go to the jury on Tuesday.

The Court then adjourned to 9 a. m. Monday morning.

THE FULLER WILL CASE.

Prosecution Close Their Case at Noon Today.

FULLER AND HIS KIN.

Respondents Introduce Testimony to Show That He Loved Not His Relations.

After our report of the Fuller will case closed yesterday, H. Carmack of Chico completed the story of receiving the will by mail, the details of which are known to our readers.

Mrs. E. I. Montgomery, formerly of Chico, but now residing in Washington, stated that she had received a number of letters from Fuller and was familiar with his handwriting. The letters which she received were introduced in evidence. W. L. Bradley and Mr. Channon were placed upon the stand and testified that they were familiar with the handwriting of Fuller, and to the genuineness of the letters introduced, and Attorney A. F. Jones was placed upon the stand and testified that he had acted as Mrs. Housworth's attorney when the will was offered for probate, and afterwards acting at the request of F. L. Lush, who drew the answer of Mrs. Housworth and E. M. Woodman, and filed the same. He acted no further as her attorney. He was asked if Mrs. Housworth signed the petition for probate, and if she signed it in his office. This question was objected to on the ground that having been her attorney it was a privileged communication between them. The objection was overruled and Jones refused to testify until ordered to do so by the court, when he stated that Mrs. Housworth had signed the petition in his presence.

Mrs. Housworth was then placed on the stand. She refused to testify on the ground that there were two felony indictments pending against her, and that her testimony might tend to incriminate her.

The last witness yesterday was Writing Expert Theodore Kytka. A photographic copy of the will was introduced and the expert entered into a long, technical analysis of the same and attempted to show by diagrams in comparison with the handwriting of Fuller that the body and signature of the will were forgeries. He declared the comparisons showed the falsity of the will. Contrary to expectations, Mr. Kytka was not cross examined by attorneys for respondent, and when his direct testimony was concluded today, John Guidery was called to the stand.

Mr. Guidery was called for the purpose of identifying the signature of Mrs. Minnie Housworth attached to affidavits made before him as court commissioner, the object being to use the signature to show similarity of her writing and the writing of the alleged will. Mr. Guidery testified that the signature was not affixed in his presence, but he believed it to be her signature. He had taken the paper to her and returned to his office, telling her not to sign until his return, but the lady did not wait and when he returned the signature was affixed.

Franklin Fuller, the contestant, was then placed upon the stand. From his testimony, amid a constant fire of objections from respondents testimony, it developed that he was an illegitimate son of a sister of Alfred and Emillien Fuller, but had always been recognized as a member of the family, had gone by his mothers maiden name. He told about different members of the family in their travels. He said, they once heard of Alfred Fuller being in Tuolumne county, California. As one of the heirs of his mother's estate he had inherited a portion of the wealth of Emillien Fuller, his mother having died previous to its distribution. The money was received through Richard White of Chico and Mr. White who was called to the stand, testified to having done business with him in connection with that estate. Mr. White also stated that it was he who gave to the Grand Jury names of some of the witnesses examined in connection with the will matter.

Mr. Swearington was recalled to testify as to the Fuller family and to her matters. He was asked about the proposals made to him and whether he had told of them. He said that when it looked as though Mr. Cormack was to be made to suffer, he gave a hint of the matter to Mr. Roper. He said he thought there was something wrong with the will.

The contestants concluded their case at noon and Attorney Knight asked that court adjourn until Monday, as he would like to leave on the noon train and spend Sunday at home. Judge Gaddis, however, thought the case should be hurried through and declined to grant a continuance. It transferred later, however, that the respondent had few witnesses on hand, and about 2 p. m. court was adjourned until Monday, after the evidence at hand had been offered.

Papers filed in connection with the probate of the will, including a transcript of the testimony taken on probate, were filed. Attorney Knight objected to the introduction of the testimony, but after the objection was overruled, he withdrew it, saying he wanted to try the case without making an objection. This created a laugh, for the attorneys for respondent have been exceedingly liberal in the use of objections and exceptions.

Two witnesses, only, were placed upon the stand by the respondant's counsel. J. G. Henderson of Chico testified that Fuller had told him of Mrs. Housworths kind treatment once when he was sick. He said she had brought him food and broth, but for which he would have died and that she would "be remembered for it some day."

Marshall Chubbuck of Chico testified to hearing A. Fuller curse his relatives, apply vile epithets to them and say they should never spend his money.

FULLER CASE IN A TANGLE

Ex Dec 10-99

Eastern Heirs Now Send Forward a Son to Complicate Things.

CHARGES OF FORGERY MADE

Interesting Developments in the Legal Affair That Has Engaged the Oroville Court.

Alfred Fuller lived in penury all his days, accumulated $40,000 and died in Chico. The lawyers are now fighting over the money that the miser pinched himself to put together. Three persons are under arrest for forging a will devising the property to Mrs Minnie Housworth of Chico, and a contest of the will is on trial at Oroville.

The most recent development in this strange and complicated business is the appearance of an illegitimate son, William Fuller, on whose behalf Henry E. Carter claims the estate. The present contest of the will is made by Eastern heirs of Fuller, who died unmarried.

Another feature of complication arises from a claim for $15,000 made by A. J. Laodis, who, in support of his demand, presents a note signed with Fuller's name and dated about six months before his death, in October, 1897. Fuller's administrator has rejected this claim.

Fuller was a money lender whose miserly habits were notorious. It was his habit, for instance, never to buy fresh bread, because he could get two stale loaves for a nickel.

John Garner, one of the witnesses to the alleged will, and Dr. Rodley, a Chico physician, are charged with being concerned in forging the testament.

AN INDIAN DEMANDS A MISANTHROPE'S FORTUNE

Sensational Development in the Fuller Will Case.

Dec 10-99

Strange Story of a Mystery of Crime and Conspiracy Involving People Prominent in the State.

THE great fight of lawyers and litigants to obtain possession of the fortune left by old Alfred Fuller of Chico has assumed a new phase and another chapter has been added to the story of mysterious crime with which the courts of the State have been concerned for over two years. This strange will contest and struggle for a dead misanthrope's money has already wrecked reputations, ruined lives and landed people in jail on serious accusations. Men and women, prominent in Oroville and Chico, have been deeply involved in plots and counter plots, and some of the best known attorneys in the State have been engaged. Absent heirs have sprung from out of the shadows, a will, found and fathered under circumstances of suspicion, has been produced, and now, to add to the confusion, an alleged illegitimate son of the miser has come forward to claim everything that belonged to the dead man.

The story of Alfred Fuller's life and death has occupied much space in the newspapers. Fuller was an old resident of Chico, having won a fortune of at least $40,000 in the mines. He never married and in his later years lived in bitterness toward men and women. He was particularly opposed to women and his acquaintances suspected that some early disappointment had turned love for one woman into hatred for all. Fuller was miserly in the extreme and was proud that his fellows knew it.

He died suddenly in October, 1897, and every effort to find a will proved in vain. If the old man had disposed of his property he took good care to conceal his wishes. After waiting a reasonable time for the discovery of a will or the appearance of heirs the Public Administrator took charge of the estate. Then a batch of collateral heirs, nephews and nieces, appeared on the scene, employing Knight & Heggerty and laying claim to the estate. By a singular coincidence it began to be whispered about the streets that old Fuller had left an olographic will and stranger still had left practically all of his property to one of his natural enemies—a woman. People were incredulous, but the rumors were insistent although Fuller had been thirteen months dead and ample time had been given for the discovery of a will.

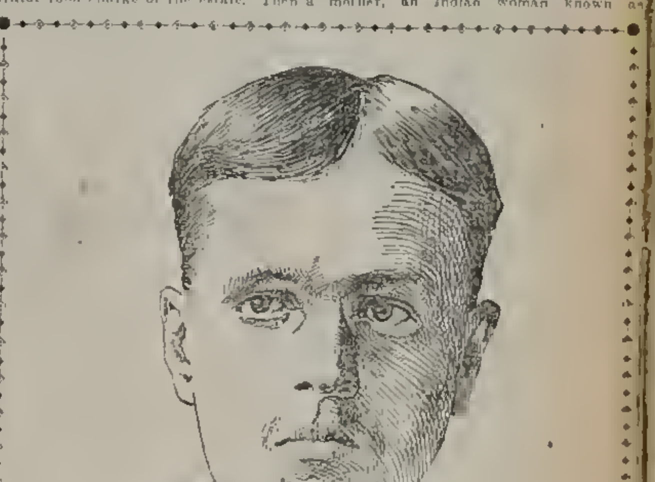
To add to the sensational developments it was said that Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, who was then Mayor of Chico, and John M. Garner, a reputable and respected citizen, had signed the document as witnesses. During his later years old Fuller had a deep-seated hatred for these two men and even ordinary observers began to be confused at the complications. Dr. Rodley was interviewed and corroborated all of the rumors. He said that Fuller had left a will bequeathing his property to a woman and that Garner and the physician had attached their signatures as witnesses to the testament. The people of Oroville and Chico were dumfounded but the assertion of the Mayor, who was above reproach, could not be repudiated. To add to the mystery the will was not produced and Mayor Rodley refused to disclose the identity of the woman, saying simply that she was one of the most prominent residents of Chico.

It was not long, however, before startling developments followed. The missing will dropped from nowhere into the [illegible] to a prominent citizen [illegible] gery were now floating in the air, and the absent heirs took up the cry with energy. The Grand Jury began an investigation and the whole northern part of the State was startled when indictments were found against Garner, Rodley and Housworth for perjury and forgery. Mrs Housworth was arrested in this city and taken to Oroville a month ago to await her trial.

Another explosion quickly followed when Garner pleaded guilty, invited sentence, turned State's evidence and made what he swore was a complete confession of a plot hatched by Dr. Rodley, Mrs. Housworth and himself to secure possession of the entire estate. Garner declared that the will had not been made until a year after the death of Fuller and that for his part in the affair he was to receive $500. The contest of the will by the absent heirs has been postponed until Dr. Rodley and Mrs. Housworth can be tried for the offense of which they are accused.

It was thought that the last development had come in the remarkable case, but day before yesterday a new sensation, and probably the greatest in the case, was sprung. It is the introduction of an alleged illegitimate son of Fuller, a half-breed Indian, who is known now, if he was not before, as William Fuller. The Indian claimant to all that Fuller owned is a mystery like many others in the case. But he insists that he can establish his relationship to Fuller and prove that the old man publicly acknowledged him as his son. His claim has been taken up by Attorney Henry E. Carter, who was a deputy Attorney General under ex-Attorney General Fitzgerald.

In order to establish the Indian's claim the man Fuller's history is reviewed from the time when the old miser was toll-keeper on the Sonora and Mono road. The Indian declares that his father while acting as tollkeeper wooed and won his mother, an Indian woman known as Jenlin. He claims that he was born in 1572 and he says in a petition which his attorney has filed with the trial court that he has ample proof of his acknowledgment by his father. For that reason he wants the alleged fraudulent will set aside, the absent heirs sent about their business and the entire estate given to him. For most of his life he has lived in Tuolumne County, where he expects to gather the evidence to support his claim. His petition will not be heard until the early spring, and meanwhile the other claimants will try to keep out of the State penitentiary or prevent themselves from leaving the contest profitless.



WILLIAM FULLER, INDIAN CLAIMANT OF A FORTUNE

that court adjourn until Monday, as he would like to leave on the noon train and spend Sunday at home. Judge Gaddis, however, thought the case should be hurried through and declined to grant a continuance. It transferred later, however, that the respondent had few witnesses on hand, and about 2 p. m. court was adjourned until Monday, after the evidence at hand had been offered.

Papers filed in connection with the probate of the will, including a transcript of the testimony taken on probate, were filed. Attorney Knight objected to the introduction of the testimony, but after the objection was overruled, he withdrew it, saying he wanted to try the case without making an objection. This created a laugh, for the attorneys for respondent have been exceedingly liberal in the use of objections and exceptions.

Two witnesses, only, were placed upon the stand by the respondent's counsel.

J. G. Henderson of Chico testified that Fuller had told him of Mrs. Houseworth's kind treatment once when he was sick. He said she had brought him food and broth, but for which he would have died and that she would "be remembered for it some day."

Marshall Chubbuck of Chico testified to hearing A. Fuller curse his relatives, apply vile epithets to them and say they should never spend his money.

FULLER CASE IN A TANGLE

Ex Dec 10 - 99

Eastern Heirs Now Send Forward a Son to Complicate Things.

CHARGES OF FORGERY MADE

Interesting Developments in the Legal Affair That Has Engaged the Oroville Court.

Alfred Fuller lived in penury all his days, accumulated $40,000 and died in Chico. The lawyers are now fighting over the money that the miser pinched himself to put together. Three persons are under arrest for forging a will devising the property to Mrs. Minnie Houseworth of Chico, and a contest of the will is on trial at Oroville.

The most recent development in this strange and complicated business is the appearance of an illegitimate son, William Fuller, on whose behalf Henry E. Carter claims the estate. The present contest of the will is made by Eastern heirs of Fuller, who died unmarried.

Another feature of complication arises from a claim for $15,000 made by A. J. Landis, who, in support of his demand, presents a note signed with Fuller's name and dated about six months before his death, in October, 1897. Fuller's administrator has rejected this claim.

Fuller was a money lender whose miserly habits were notorious. It was his habit, for instance, never to buy fresh bread, because he could get five stale loaves for a nickel.

John Garner, one of the witnesses to the alleged will, and Dr. Rodley, a Chico physician, are charged with being concerned in forging the testament.

...g People Prominent in the State.

THE great fight of lawyers and litigants to obtain possession of the fortune left by old Alfred Fuller of Chico has assumed a new phase and another chapter has been added to the story of mysterious crime with which the courts of the State have been concerned for over two years. This strange will contest and struggle for a dead misanthrope's money has already wrecked reputations, ruined lives and landed people in jail on serious accusations. Men and women, prominent in Oroville and Chico, have been deeply involved in plots and counter plots, and some of the best known attorneys in the State have been engaged. Absent heirs have sprung from out of the shadows, a will, found and fathered under circumstances of suspicion, has been produced, and now, to add to the confusion, an alleged illegitimate son of the miser has come forward to claim everything that belonged to the dead man.

The story of Alfred Fuller's life and death has occupied much space in the newspapers. Fuller was an old resident of Chico, having won a fortune of at least $40,000 in the mines. He never married and in his later years lived in bitterness toward men and women. He was particularly opposed to women and his acquaintances suspected that some early disappointment had turned love for one woman into hatred for all. Fuller was miserly in the extreme and was proud that his fellows knew it.

He died suddenly in October, 1897, and every effort to find a will proved in vain. If the old man had disposed of his property he took good care to conceal his wishes. After waiting a reasonable time for the discovery of a will or the appearance of heirs the Public Administrator took charge of the estate. Then a batch of collateral heirs, nephews and nieces, appeared on the scene, employing Knight & Heggerty and laying claim to the estate. By a singular coincidence it began to be whispered about the streets that old Fuller had left an olographic will and stranger still had left practically all of his property to one of his natural enemies—a woman. People were incredulous, but the rumors were insistent although Fuller had been thirteen months dead and ample time had been given for the discovery of a will.

To add to the sensational developments it was said that Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, who was then Mayor of Chico, and John M. Garner, a reputable and respected citizen, had signed the document as witnesses. During his later years old Fuller had a deep-seated hatred for these two men and even ordinary observers began to be confused at the complications. Dr. Rodley was interviewed and corroborated all of the rumors. He said that Fuller had left a will bequeathing his property to a woman and that Garner and the physician had attached their signatures as witnesses to the testament. The people of Oroville and Chico were dumfounded, but the assertion of the Mayor, who was above reproach, could not be repudiated. To add to the mystery the will was not produced and Mayor Rodley refused to disclose the identity of the woman, saying simply that she was one of the most prominent residents of Chico.

It was not long, however, before startling developments followed. The missing will dropped from nowhere into the mails addressed to a prominent citizen of Chico. He found that it was made in favor of Mrs. Minnie Houseworth of Chico and he accordingly turned it over to her. The instrument purported to be in the handwriting of Fuller, who left his entire fortune, with the exception of $100 to other heirs, to Mrs. Houseworth. To make the matter still more notorious it was shown that Fuller had, during his life no more than a passing acquaintance with Mrs. Houseworth. She filed the will for probate, however, and then the row commenced.

Meanwhile, to make the controversy more interesting, A. J. Landis filed a claim for $15,000 against the estate for [illegible] services alleged to have been [illegible] by Fuller and said to have been [illegible] by him in a note. Rumors [illegible] conspiracy, perjury and forgery were now floating in the air, and the absent heirs took up the cry with energy. The Grand Jury began an investigation and the whole northern part of the State was startled when indictments were found against Garner, Rodley and Houseworth for perjury and forgery. Mrs. Houseworth was arrested in this city and taken to Oroville a month ago to await her trial.

Another explosion quickly followed when Garner pleaded guilty, invited sentence, turned State's evidence and made what he swore was a complete confession of a plot hatched by Dr. Rodley, Mrs. Houseworth and himself to secure possession of the entire estate. Garner declared that the will had not been made until a year after the death of Fuller and that for his part in the affair he was to receive $500. The contest of the will by the absent heirs has been postponed until Dr. Rodley and Mrs. Houseworth can be tried for the offense of which they are accused.

It was thought that the last development had come in the remarkable case, but day before yesterday a new sensation, and probably the greatest in the case, was sprung. It is the introduction of an alleged illegitimate son of Fuller, a half-breed Indian, who is known now, if he was not before, as William Fuller. The Indian claimant to all that Fuller owned is a mystery like many others in the case. But he insists that he can establish his relationship to Fuller and prove that the old man publicly acknowledged him as his son. His claim has been taken up by Attorney Henry E. Carter, who was a deputy Attorney General under ex-Attorney General Fitzgerald.

In order to establish the Indian's claim old man Fuller's history is reviewed from the time when the old miser was tollkeeper on the Sonora and Mono road. The Indian declares that his father while acting as tollkeeper wooed and won his mother, an Indian woman known as Jenita. He claims that he was born in 1871 and he says in a petition which his attorney has filed with the trial court that he has ample proof of his acknowledgment by his father. For that reason he wants the alleged fraudulent will set aside, the absent heirs sent about their business and the entire estate given to him. For most of his life he has lived in Tuolumne County, where he expects to gather the evidence to support his claim. His petition will not be heard until the early spring, and meanwhile the other claimants will try to keep out of the State penitentiary or prevent themselves from leaving the contest penniless.

WILLIAM FULLER, INDIAN CLAIMANT OF A FORTUNE

ALLEGED HEIR TO THE FULLER ESTATE.

ON FRIDAY former Assistant Attorney-General Henry E. Carter, now of Los Angeles, filed a petition on behalf of William Fuller, alleged to be the natural son of Alfred Fuller, deceased, by an Indian woman called Genlia. The new claimant has always gone by the name of Fuller and has been recognized in the vicinity as the son of Alfred. Years ago the deceased was tollgate keeper on the Sonora and Mono toll road, running between Sonora in Tuolumne county and Bridgeport in Mono county, at which time he and Genlia were living together.

The halfbreed petitioner claims to be the heir of the dead man by public acknowledgment of Alfred Fuller, and as such will make a fight for the estate which is valued at $40,000. The new claimant is now working on a ranch in Tuolumne county.

SAY THE WILL IS A FORGERY

Testimony in the Fuller Estate Contest at Oroville.

DR. RODLEY PLACED IN A BAD LIGHT.

WITNESSES WHO WERE OFFERED THOUSANDS TO SIGN THE DOCUMENT.

Evidence Showing a Conspiracy Between the Physician and Mrs. Houseworth to Get the Property.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

OROVILLE, December 9.—The Fuller will contest trial was continued to-day until Monday morning at 9 o'clock. The prosecution this week has endeavored to show that some months after the death of Alfred Fuller, Dr. J. E. Rodley, a prominent physician and ex-Mayor of Chico, requested several persons to sign a will which he said was the last will of Alfred Fuller. He claimed to have found the will in the papers of the deceased. The will was admitted to probate in due time, was signed by Dr Rodley and J. M. Garner as witnesses and on the stand they testified that they signed the will in Dr. Rodley's office and in the presence of Alfred Fuller, who stated to them that it was his will. While the will was being probated remarks in court by the beneficiary of the will, Mrs. S. M. Houseworth, led the Superior Judge to believe all was not straight, and he instructed the foreman of the Grand Jury, that body being in session, to investigate the matter.

The will was examined and found to be forged, and Dr. Rodley, J. M. Garner and Mrs. Houseworth were arrested and placed in jail here, where they now are. The present case is to show that the will is genuine. W. H. Schooler of Chico and Archibald Yell of Sacramento represent Mrs. Houseworth. George Knight of San Francisco, Richard White of Chico and Carleton Gray of Oroville represent the heirs of the Fuller estate. Judge Gaddis of Yolo county is presiding on the bench.

County Clerk H. T. Batchelder testified that Dr. Rodley offered him $3000 to sign the will as a witness, and stated that he had found the will among the papers of the deceased. Batchelder refused. Dr. Rodley later wrote to him to come to Chico on important business and again pressed him to sign the will, but again he refused. Rodley tried to induce J. M. Garner to sign the will, with Rodley as a witness, but Garner testified that he refused a number of times and then finally consented. A. B. Swearingen testified that prior to the time Garner signed the will Mrs. Houseworth had repeatedly asked him to sign it and offered him $5000 to do so. Garner was to be paid $5000 from the estate for his signature.

Garner, after his arrest, told the whole plot and on the witness stand this week he repeated it under oath. He did not know Mrs. Houseworth in the matter, but Dr. Rodley offered him the money and he signed the will. This, he testified, was several months after the death of Fuller. It was shown by a number of witnesses and especially by Expert Kytka that Fuller did not write the will and did not sign it. The words of the will one by one were taken and comparisons made with the genuine writing of Alfred Fuller. Kytka showed it was clearly apparent that the will was forged and the signature also. Enlarged copies of the writing were shown by Kytka and the form of each letter and the difference between the forged and the genuine penmanship was shown.

Yesterday papers were filed showing that Alfred Fuller had lived for years in Tuolumne county, where he had an Indian woman for a wife. She bore him two children. One died, but the other, a son, is living and he now claims the whole estate, valued at $40,000.

Gregory Will Contest.

The hearing of the contest of the will of the late Catherine F. Gregory was continued before Judge Troutt yesterday. Carl Eisenschimel, the handwriting expert, was called on behalf of the contestant, Attorney Robert Ash, and said that in his opinion the will was a forgery. Theodore Kytka has also testified that in his opinion the will is bogus. Samuel Keesing and James Grany also testified in favor of the contestant, after which an adjournment was taken.

Used a Policeman's Name.

Max Cohn, a messenger boy employed at 912 Market street, was arrested yesterday by Detectives Dillon and Crockett on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. On December 31st Cohn delivered a note to Hugo Fritz at the Orpheum bar purporting to come from Policeman H. A. Sylvester, requesting that $3 be sent him by the boy. When questioned the latter said he knew Sylvester and that he handed him the note in a Market-street saloon. The gold was delivered as requested, but when Sylvester was seen he denied having sent any note or received the money.

HAND-WRITING EXPERT DECLARES IT FORGERY

Kytka Gives His Testimony Regarding the Will in the Fuller Case

Daily Record

WHY SWEARINGEN TOLD A SECRET

Dec. 11

Did Not Propose to See H. Carmack Get in Trouble When He Was Not to Blame

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 10.—Expert Kytka, the handwriting expert in the Fuller will case, finished his testimony before the Superior Court Saturday forenoon. After the conclusion of his technical description of the defects in the will he stated most positively that the instrument was a forgery.

He was followed on the stand by Franklin Fuller, one of the eastern heirs of E. and A. Fuller. They were his uncles and he had received part of the money due him as such an heir to the estate of E. Fuller. A. Fuller moved from Ohio to Illinois, thence to Tuolumne county, California and from there came to Chico. The witness had received part of the money due him as an heir from Alfred Fuller, the administrator of E. Fuller's estate through his attorney-in-fact Searles in Ohio and some through Richard White of Chico. He (the witness) stated that he was born out of lawful wedlock and never knew his father. In the earlier years of his mother's life she was considered an incompetent.

J. B. Swearingen was re-called and asked regarding his testimony given before the Grand Jury and why he offered his testimony. He stated that it was because of his friendship for H. Carmack. He understood that Carmack was about to get into trouble and he would be damned if he would keep still and let an innocent man go to prison on the charge that he had endeavored to secure $2,000 from Mrs. Houseworth for delivering to her the will. This closed the case for the prosecution and the defense placed upon the stand T. J. Hindman. The witness testified that in 1896 he met Fuller and had a conversation with him in which he said that he had been very sick and would have starved to death had it not been for the kindness of Mrs. Houseworth. The first time he mentioned this was to Louis Sebrelin.

James Clubbuck testified that he had lived in Chico for many years and was well acquainted with both Fuller and Mrs Houseworth. On one occasion he served some papers on Fuller when the latter became very angry and threw them back to him stating that the relatives in the east were trying to get all his brother's money. He cursed them and applied vile epithets to them and said that none of them would ever get a cent of money.

At the conclusion of Clubbuck's testimony the court adjourned until 9 o'clock Monday morning. But three or four more witnesses will be put on by the defense and it is expected that the case will go to the jury on Tuesday.

HER FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

The Case of Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair Is to Be Heard Next Wednesday.

Attorney Lafe Pence, representing Mrs Nettie Craven-Fair, informed Judge Troutt yesterday that his client was desirous of an early hearing of her petition for a family allowance from the estate of James G. Fair, deceased, which she claims as the widow of the deceased. Judge Troutt set the hearing to begin next Wednesday.

The claim of Mrs. Craven-Fair for an allowance is opposed by all of Fair's children, who take the position that she was never legally married to their father, and they assert that the document presented by her purporting to be a marriage contract was fabricated by the claimant.

TESTIMONY IS NOW COMPLETED

Chico Daily Enterprise

The Will Case Is Nearing the End.

Dec. 11 — 1899

FULLER HAD NO USE FOR RELATIVES

Told Several People That They Should Not Get His Money—He Also Said Some Very Uncomplimentary Things About Mrs. Minnie Houseworth.

Special to the Enterprise.

OROVILLE, Dec. 11.—The trial of the Fuller will case is at last nearing the end, and will probably get to the jury to-night, the jury and it now rests with them to decide as to whether or not the document presented by Mrs. Minnie Houseworth, and over which there has been much litigation, is good.

When the case was called this morning C. L. Stilson was placed on the stand by the defense. Mr. Stilson stated that in the spring of '97, Alfred Fuller came into his office and wanted him to make out his will. About the same time Dr. Landis came to his (Stilson's) office and asked him what he would charge to make a will, at the same time telling witness that Fuller was up stairs (meaning Landis office) and requesting witness to not say anything about it.

At another time Fuller came to his office, but Mrs. Morehead was there and Fuller left, saying he would call again. Some time in September or October, 1897, Fuller spoke to witness about making a will at the same time saying he did not want any s—— of a b—— of a relative to get his money, but wanted to leave it to his friends. This was a short time before Fuller died.

Mrs. Rexford was next sworn and stated that she had known Alfred Fuller and H. Carmack, also remembered the circumstance when Carmack and Mrs. Houseworth were there in regard to the will; and the time when Mrs. Housworth came back from San Francisco.

Once when Mr. Carmack was at witness' house he told Mrs. Rexford that he had track of the will and wanted her as a witness to his giving it to Mrs. Housewor. Mr. Carmack said; "I don't want you to say anything about it; I don't want to be mixed up in it."

One time Mr. Carmack came to Mrs. Rexford's house, and appeared to be very much excited. He had heard that Mrs. Houseworth had charged him with demanding $2000 for the production of the will. Witness was very much surprised at the report.

She had talked with Fuller, who said that he did not want any of his money to go to his relatives.

Carmack had told her that Mrs Houseworth did not owe him anything and witness did not hear any more from Mrs. Houseworth about the $2000 until Mrs. Houseworth wrote her a letter from Oroville, while there to attend the proceedings for probate of the will.

Mrs. Rexford was subjected to a severe cross examination, but she clung to her testimony regarding her surprise when told by Carmack of the charge Mrs. Houseworth had made against him.

Attorney Knight asked her if she did not know a woman in Chico by the name of Page, and if it was not the original scheme to have Mrs. Page get Fuller's estate. Witness replied a positive no, and stated that she had never heard of any such scheme.

District Attorney Sproul was to have been a witness for the defense, but as he was unavoidably detained, the defendants rested and H. F. Hosler was put on in rebuttal by the prosecution.

Mr. Hosler stated that he knew Alfred Fuller and had known Mrs. Houseworth for many years. He knew the time when Mrs. Houseworth came back from Texas in 1897.

While in town (Chico) one day he and Fuller were holding a conversation when he saw Mrs. Houseworth crossing the street. He said to Fuller, "Hello, Mrs. Houseworth is back," to which Fuller replied, "Yes, the d——d old street trotter had a good time on old Woodman's money. She gave old Houseworth the slip when she left Texas." When Mrs. Houseworth passed Fuller recognized her greeting with a stiff bow, and said to witness, "The d——d old street trotter; hell is full of them. All they want is money and dress."

This ended the taking of testimony, and at this time (2:45) Attorney Knight is addressing the jury. He will be followed by the attorney for the defense, and after the closing argument by the prosecution, the case will be left with the jury.

FULLER WILL A FORGERY.

Chronicle

Jury Places the Seal of Crime on Doctor Rodley.

12-13-1899

ONLY AN HOUR IN REACHING A VERDICT.

CONTESTANT FRANK IS DECLARED THE NEPHEW OF THE DEAD FARMER.

New Indictments Are to Be Brought Against the Physician Who Planned to Secure the Butte Estate.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

OROVILLE, December 12.—All yesterday afternoon the Superior Court was crowded by people interested in the Fuller case to listen to the arguments of George A. Knight, William N. Schooler and Archibald Yell. The people did not leave the room for over five hours, so interested were they in the arguments to the jury. The jurymen have been under the care of the Sheriff for the past week, and have been locked up each night in the rooms of the Courthouse. The instructions of the attorneys and Judge Gaddis of Yolo county, who tried the case, were not given to the jury until this morning, when the courtroom was again filled to overflowing. Mrs. S. M. Houseworth, the person most vitally interested, was apparently as unconcerned as any one present, and she has maintained this appearance during the entire trial.

After the instructions were read this morning, the jury retired and the crowd waited anxiously for the verdict. The jury soon returned to have the various exhibits placed in their hands. After having been out one hour and three minutes they returned with a verdict. The verdict was passed up to Judge Gaddis, who read it and then passed it to the clerk and directed him to enter it upon the records. The attorneys for Mrs. Houseworth desired it read to the jury before this was done, and the verdict was read. It declared the will a forgery. Attorney Schooler desired the jury to be polled, but after three of the sections had been read and each juryman responded that was his verdict, this was dispensed with. The following is the verdict as returned by the jury:

First Issue—Is the contestant, Franklin Fuller, a son of deceased sister of Alfred Fuller? Answer—Yes

Second Issue—Was the document admitted to probate and now contested by Franklin Fuller, entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of Alfred Fuller? Answer—No.

Third Issue—Was the name, Alfred Fuller, written at the end of the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now contested by Franklin Fuller, subscribed to said document by Alfred Fuller himself, or by any other person at request or by direction of Alfred Fuller? Answer—No.

Fourth Issue—Is the name, Alfred Fuller, written at the end of the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller, and now contested by Franklin Fuller, in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller? Answer—No.

Fifth Issue—Did Alfred Fuller ever subscribe his name at the end of the document admitted to probate as his will, and now contested by Franklin Fuller, in the presence of J. Ellis Rodley and J. M. Garner or acknowledge to them that he had subscribed his name thereto or that said document was his will? Answer—No.

Sixth Issue—Did J. Ellis Rodley and J. M. Garner sign their names as witnesses at the request of Alfred Fuller, or in his presence, to the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now contested by Franklin Fuller? Answer—No.

Seventh Issue—Did J. Ellis Rodley and J. M. Garner ever sign their names as witnesses in the presence of Alfred Fuller to the document admitted to probate as Alfred Fuller's will, and now contested by Franklin Fuller? Answer—Yes.

Eighth Issue—Did Alfred Fuller ever subscribe his name to the document admitted to probate as his will and now contested by Franklin Fuller? Answer—No.

We, the Jury, impaneled to try the above entitled cause, do find the foregoing facts and verdict.

A. SWEETZER, Foreman.

After the jurymen had been dismissed the charge of perjury against Dr. J. Ellis Rodley was dismissed at the request of the District Attorney, but the prisoner was remanded to the custody of the Sheriff. The Grand Jury is in session, and the facts of the case were at once laid before the members and they will find a new indictment against Dr. Rodley, drawing up the papers in such a manner that they will stand the closest legal inspection. It was found

When He Was Not to Blame

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, Dec 10.—Expert Kytka, the handwriting expert in the Fuller will case, finished his testimony before the Superior Court Saturday forenoon. After the conclusion of his technical description of the defects in the will he stated most positively that the instrument was a forgery.

He was followed on the stand by Franklin Fuller, one of the eastern heirs of E. and A. Fuller. They were his uncles and he had received part of the money due him as such an heir in the estate of E. Fuller. A. Fuller moved from Ohio to Illinois, thence to Tuolumne county, California and from there came to Chico. The witness had received part of the money due him as an heir from Alfred Fuller, the administrator of E. Fuller's estate through his attorney-in-fact Searles in Ohio and some through Richard White of Chico. He (the witness) stated that he was born out of lawful wedlock and never knew his father. In the earlier years of his mother's life she was considered an incompetent.

J. B. Swearingen was recalled and asked regarding his testimony given before the Grand Jury and why he offered his testimony. He stated that it was because of his friendship for B. Carmack. He understood that Carmack was about to get into trouble and he would be damned if he would keep still and let an innocent man go to prison on the charge that he had endeavored to secure $2,000 from Mrs. Housworth for delivering to her the will. This closed the case for the prosecution and the defense placed upon the stand T. J. Hindman. The witness testified that in 1896 he met Fuller and had a conversation with him in which he said that he had been very sick and would have starved to death had it not been for the kindness of Mrs. Housworth. The first time he mentioned this was to Louis Schwein.

James Chubbuck testified that he had lived in Chico for many years and was well acquainted with both Fuller and Mrs Housworth. On one occasion he served some papers on Fuller when the latter became very angry and threw them back to him stating that the relatives in the east were trying to get all his brother's money. He cursed them and applied vile epithets to them and said that none of them would ever get a cent of money.

At the conclusion of Chubbuck's testimony the court adjourned until 9 o'clock Monday morning. But three or four more witnesses will be put on by the defense and it is expected that the case will go to the jury on Tuesday.

HER FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

The Case of Mrs. Nellie Craven-Fair Is to Be Heard Next Wednesday.

Attorney Lole Pence, representing Mrs Nellie Craven-Fair, informed Judge Troutt yesterday that his client was desirous of an early hearing of her petition for a family allowance from the estate of James G. Fair, deceased, which she claims as the widow of the deceased.

Judge Troutt set the hearing to begin next Wednesday.

The claim of Mrs Craven-Fair for an allowance is opposed by all of Fair's children, who take the position that she was never legally married to their father, and they assert that the document presented by her purporting to be a marriage contract was fabricated by the claimant.

Housworth.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 11.—The trial of the Fuller will case is at last nearing the end, and will probably got to the jury to-night.

The jury and it now rests with them to decide as to whether or not the document presented by Mrs. Minnie Housworth, and over which there has been much litigation, is good.

When the case was called this morning C. L. Stilson was placed on the stand by the defense. Mr. Stilson stated that in the spring of '97, Alfred Fuller came into his office and wanted him to make out his will. About the same time Dr. Landis came to his (Stilson's) office and asked him what he would charge to make a will, at the same time telling witness that Fuller was up stairs (meaning Landis office) and requesting witness to not say anything about it.

At another time Fuller came to his office, but Mrs. Morehead was there and Fuller left, saying he would call again. Some time in September or October, 1897, Fuller spoke to witness about making a will at the same time saying he did not want any s—— of a b—— of a relative to get his money, but wanted to leave it to his friends. This was a short time before Fuller died.

Mrs. Rexford was next sworn and stated that she had known Alfred Fuller and B. Carmack, also remembered the circumstance when Carmack and Mrs. Housworth were there in regard to the will; and the time when Mrs. Housworth came back from San Francisco.

Once when Mr. Carmack was at witness' house he told Mrs. Rexford that he had track of the will and wanted her as a witness to his giving it to Mrs. Housewor. Mr. Carmack said; "I don't want you to say anything about it; I don't want to be mixed up in it."

One time Mr. Carmack came to Mrs. Rexford's house, and appeared to be very much excited. He had heard that Mrs. Housworth had charged him with demanding $2000 for the production of the will. Witness was very much surprised at the report.

She had talked with Fuller, who said that he did not want any of his money to go to his relatives.

Carmack had told her that Mrs Housworth did not owe him anything and witness did not hear any more from Mrs. Housworth about the $2000 until Mrs. Housworth wrote her a letter from Oroville, while there to attend the proceedings for probate of the will.

Mrs. Rexford was subjected to a severe cross examination, but she clung to her testimony regarding her surprise when told by Carmack of the charge Mrs. Housworth had made against him.

Attorney Knight asked her if she did not know a woman in Chico by the name of Page, and if it was not the original scheme to have Mrs. Page get Fuller's estate. Witness replied a positive no, and stated that she had never heard of any such scheme.

District Attorney Sproul was to have been a witness for the defense, but as he was unavoidably detained, the defendants rested and H. F. Hosier was put on in rebuttal by the prosecution.

Mr. Hosier stated that he knew Alfred Fuller and had known Mrs. Housworth for many years. He knew the time when Mrs. Housworth came back from Texas in 1897.

While in town (Chico) one day he and Fuller were holding a conversation when he saw Mrs. Housworth crossing the street. He said to Fuller, "Hello, Mrs. Housworth is back," to which Fuller replied, "Yes, the d——d old street trotter had a good time on old Woodman's money. She gave old

Jury Places the Seal of Crime on Doctor Rodley.

ONLY AN HOUR IN REACHING A VERDICT.

CONTESTANT FRANK IS DECLARED THE NEPHEW OF THE DEAD FARMER.

New Indictments Are to Be Brought Against the Physician Who Planned to Secure the Butte Estate.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

OROVILLE, December 12.—All yesterday afternoon the Superior Court was crowded by people interested in the Fuller case to listen to the arguments of George A. Knight, William N. Schuder and Archibald Yell. The people did not leave the room for over five hours, so interested were they in the arguments to the jury. The jurymen have been under the care of the Sheriff for the past week, and have been locked up each night in the rooms of the Courthouse. The instructions of the attorneys and Judge Gaddis of Yolo county, who tried the case, were not given to the jury until this morning, when the courtroom was again filled to overflowing. Mrs S M Housworth, the person most vitally interested, was apparently as unconcerned as any one present, and she has maintained this appearance during the entire trial.

After the instructions were read this morning, the jury retired and the crowd waited anxiously for the verdict. The jury soon returned to have the various exhibits placed in their hands. After having been out one hour and three minutes they returned with a verdict. The verdict was passed up to Judge Gaddis, who read it and then passed it to the clerk and directed him to enter it upon the records. The attorneys for Mrs Housworth desired it read to the jury before this was done, and the verdict was read. It declared the will a forgery. Attorney Schuder desired the jury to be polled, but after three of the sections had been read and each juryman responded that was his verdict, this was dispensed with. The following is the verdict as returned by the jury:

First issue—Is the contestant, Franklin Fuller, a son of deceased sister of Alfred Fuller? Answer—Yes.

Second issue—Was the document admitted to probate and now contested by Franklin Fuller, entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of Alfred Fuller? Answer—No.

Third issue—Was the name, Alfred Fuller, written at the end of the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now contested by Franklin Fuller, subscribed to said document by Alfred Fuller himself, or by any other person at request or by direction of Alfred Fuller? Answer—No.

Fourth issue—Is the name, Alfred Fuller, written at the end of the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller, and now contested by Franklin Fuller, in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller? Answer—No.

Fifth issue—Did Alfred Fuller ever subscribe his name at the end of the document admitted to probate as his will, and now contested by Franklin Fuller, in the presence of J. Ellis Rodley and J. M. Garner or acknowledged to them that he had subscribed his name thereto or that said document was his will? Answer—No.

Sixth issue—Did J. Ellis Rodley and J. M. Garner sign their names as witnesses at the request of Alfred Fuller, or in his presence, to the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now contested by Franklin Fuller? Answer—No.

Seventh issue—Did J. Ellis Rodley and J. M. Garner ever sign their names as witnesses in the presence of Alfred Fuller to the document admitted to probate as Alfred Fuller's will, and now contested by Franklin Fuller? Answer—Yes.

Eighth issue—Did Alfred Fuller ever subscribe his name to the document admitted to probate as his will and now contested by Franklin Fuller? Answer—No.

We, the jury, impaneled to try the above entitled cause, do find the foregoing facts and verdict.

A. SWEETZER, Foreman.

After the jurymen had been dismissed the charge of perjury against Dr. J. Ellis Rodley was dismissed at the request of the District Attorney, but the prisoner was remanded to the custody of the Sheriff. The Grand Jury is in session, and the facts of the case were at once laid before the inquisitors and they will find a new indictment against Dr. Rodley, drawing up the papers in such a manner that they will stand the closest legal inspection. It was feared there was a technical flaw in the former papers drawn, and, to make the matter certain, the charge of perjury was dismissed and the matter returned at once into the hands of the Grand Jury.

It is stated that the case will be appealed to the Supreme Court on the grounds that Mrs. Housworth was forced to go to trial without time enough being allowed her attorneys to make themselves familiar with the case.

June 9 1897

I desire that Mrs Minnie Houseworth have all of my property at my death except I reserve one thousand dollars to be equally divided between all legal heirs to my estate.

A. Fuller

Signed as witnesses after being requested to do so by Alfred Fuller He declaring this to be his will and that he had signed it—we therefore in his presence and in the presence of each other signed our names as witnesses

August 3rd 1897. J. Ellis Rodley
J. M. Garner

Alleged Will of Alfred Fuller, Which Has Been Legally Declared a Forgery.

WILLIAM FULLER IN THE CELEBRATED CASE

Alleged Half-breed Son of the Late Alfred, Has Presented His Petition

LAYS CLAIM TO ENTIRE ESTATE

Story Regarding the Tuolumne County Heir Confirmed—Hearing on His Petition Set for March

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 8.—The much-talked of and mysterious heir who has been hinted at in the Fuller estate contest has at last materialized, Attorney Carter, of the firm of Dockweiler & Carter of Los Angeles, having filed a petition this morning "to determine the heirship and title to estate" of the late Alfred Fuller, of one William Fuller, who claims he is a son of Alfred Fuller by an Indian woman named Janita, and was born in Tuolumne county in 1871. Petitioner declares that Alfred Fuller in his lifetime, publicly acknowledged him as his child and otherwise treated him as if he were a legitimate child, and thereby did adopt him from the time of his birth; that he is the only surviving child of the deceased and is entitled to all of the estate left by said Alfred Fuller, deceased, and is entitled to have the same distributed to him. Upon the prayer of the petition having been looked into by the court, Judge Gadills ordered that Tuesday, March 13th, 1900, at 10 o'clock a. m., be fixed as the time for all interested parties to appear and show cause why the estate should not be distributed to him in whole or in part, and further notice was ordered given to all persons claiming an interest in said estate to appear and exhibit claims of their respective heirship. Default of all parties not appearing at that time will be entered, and notice is also given that upon the issues raised by the complaint and answers of the parties appearing the court will determine the heirship, the ownership of estate and the interest of each respective claimant thereto, and the persons entitled to distribution thereof.

CONTESTANTS WIN ON EVERY ISSUE RAISED

Twelve Jurors Quickly Agree That the Fuller Will Was a Forgery

HE NEVER SIGNED THE DOCUMENT

Nor Did Dr. Rodley and Garner Sign It In His Presence—the Issues and Answers

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 12.—So far as the Superior Court is concerned, the Fuller will case is at an end, a verdict being agreed upon by the jury this morning at 11 o'clock. The jurors were of one mind in favor of the contestants of the Houseworth will. They deliberated only about one hour. Several issues were presented to the jury which were answered as follows:

First issue—Is the contestant, Franklin Fuller, a son of the deceased sister of Alfred Fuller?

Answer—Yes.

Second issue—Was the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now contested by Franklin Fuller, entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of Alfred Fuller?

Answer—No.

Third issue—Was the name of Alfred Fuller written at the end of the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now contested by Franklin Fuller, subscribed to said document by Alfred Fuller himself, or by any other person at the request or by the direction of Alfred Fuller?

Answer—No.

Fourth issue—Is the name of Alfred Fuller written at the end of the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller and now being contested by Franklin Fuller, in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller?

Answer—No.

Fifth issue—Did Alfred Fuller ever subscribe his name to the end of the document admitted to probate as his will, and now contested by Franklin Fuller, in the presence of J. E. Rodley and J. M. Garner and acknowledge to them that he had subscribed his name thereto, or that said document was his will?

Answer—No.

Sixth issue—Did J. E. Rodley and J. M. Garner sign their names as witnesses at the request of Alfred Fuller, or in his presence, to the document admitted to probate as the will of Alfred Fuller, and now contested by Franklin Fuller?

Answer—No.

Seventh issue—Did J. E. Rodley and J. M. Garner sign their names as witnesses in the presence of Alfred Fuller to the document admitted to probate as Alfred Fuller's will and now contested by Franklin Fuller.

Answer—No.

Eighth issue—Did Alfred Fuller ever subscribe his name to the document admitted to the probate as his will and now contested by Franklin Fuller?

Answer—No.

We the jury empaneled to try the above entitled cause, do find the foregoing facts and verdict.

A. SWEETSER, Foreman.

Wm. H. Schooler, leading attorney for Mrs. Houseworth, said this evening that the case would be taken up to the Supreme Court on appeal.

Dismissed the Indictment.

The indictment charging Dr. Rodley with perjury has been dismissed, the motion being made by District Attorney Sproul, and the defendant remanded to the custody of the sheriff, pending the finding of another indictment by the Grand Jury which is now in session. District Attorney Sproul has been studying over the matter carefully, knowing that every effort will be made to find a flaw in the indictment, and having discovered one or more himself, he decided to move for a dismissal. The order setting the case for trial in February was set aside, but the trial may be reset for the same date.

HARVEST FOR THE ATTORNEYS

Many Profiting by the Troubles Over the Fuller Estate

Twenty-three Legal Lights Have Earned Fees to Date Whether Paid or Not

Aside from the ordinary news features of the daily proceedings had in connection with the Alfred Fuller estate, it is interesting to note that the scramble to secure the earnings of the deceased miser is certain to result in benefit for one class of workers—the attorneys—and of this class there is an astonishingly large number expecting to make a harvest. Interested in the proceedings there have been no less than twenty-three attorneys, and all of them are expecting first-class returns for their services, and the most of them exercised enough business judgment to guard against loss, though several are not to be paid out of the estate.

At the opening of the proceedings regarding this estate John Gale prepared the petition for letters of special administration. Then Jo D. Sproul and A. F. Jones appeared as attorneys for Mrs. Houseworth when the famous will was presented for probate. Carleton Gray, Richard White, Knight & Haggerty and F. C. Searl came in next as attorneys for the heirs. Lusk and Jones next appear as attorneys for Mrs. Houseworth. Dr. A. J. Loodis held a note against the estate for $15,000, and to protect his interests he secured the services of C. A. March, John C. March, Hiram Johnson, Peter J. Shields and Jo D. Sproul.

Warren Sexton next appeared as the special prosecutor before the Grand Jury, and then the criminal cases demanded more attorneys. Wm. H. Schooler was secured by Dr. Rodley, and later Grove L. Johnson and Geo. D. Collins were called in. Park Henshaw became attorney for Mrs. Houseworth in the criminal case, and John Guldery appeared for her as special counsel at one hearing. Later Schooler and Aram & Yell were called in to defend the will for Mrs. Houseworth, and lastly Dockweiler & Carter got in by means of a half-breed Indian who claims to be the illegitimate son of Alfred Fuller.

As the contest of the will proceeds each day its complications increase and it has become the subject of general discussion. Franklin Fuller, the alleged nephew of Alfred Fuller, has given his testimony which was to the effect that he was born out of wedlock but that he knows from others, as all people do know their relationship, that he is a nephew of Alfred Fuller. The question now arises as to whether or no the testimony of Franklin Fuller is sufficient to substantiate his claim to a share of the estate, and if not, whether the lack of proof of the contestants' claims will in any way affect the case at hand.

Numerous questions will arise during the criminal cases which will at least cause much mental speculation.

HAS HER EYE ON FAIR'S BIG PILES OF GOLD

Nov. 14/98.

Mrs. Craven Renews Her Battle.

SEEKS A FAMILY ALLOWANCE

AS DECEDENT'S WIDOW SHE MAKES HER DEMAND.

Prays the Court for $5000 Monthly Beginning From the Date of Her Alleged Husband's Death.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven has made her second appearance in her battle for a portion of the millions of the late James G. Fair. A petition was presented to Judge Belcher late yesterday afternoon on behalf of the claimant for a monthly family allowance of $500, an amount, it is aver-red, legally due the petitioner by reason of the fact that she was the legal wife and is now the legal widow of James G. Fair, deceased.

MRS. NETTIE R. CRAVEN-FAIR Who Has Petitioned the Superior Court for an Allowance for Support and Maintenance From the Estate of the Late James G. Fair.

When the petition was presented to Judge Belcher yesterday afternoon that jurist was requested to make an order for service on all parties interested and to set a date upon which those parties could show cause, if so they could legally do, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. This Judge Belcher refused to do, stating that inasmuch as the Craven-Fair contest had occupied the attention of Department 10 of the Superior Court since its filing he did not feel justified in making the order. In consequence the petition cannot be placed on file until the 28th inst. Judge Troutt, who presides in Department 10, will return from a visit in the country on that date and the case will be formally opened before him. W. W. Foote and Denson, Oatman & Denson, of counsel for Mrs. Craven, are unable to explain the action of Judge Belcher in refusing to grant the order requested. It was simply a formal matter, they say, and Judge Belcher had no more authority, considering the absence of Judge Troutt, to refuse to issue the order than his clerk would to refuse to file the petition if presented to him with the proper fee.

The petition of Mrs. Craven for a family allowance from the estate of her alleged deceased husband is made under certain sections of the code providing for an allowance to a surviving widow for her support and maintenance during the progress of the settlement of the estate of her husband. The petitioner first sets forth that James G. Fair died in this city and county on the 28th day of December, 1894, leaving an alleged last will and testament. Such alleged will was duly admitted to probate on November 16, 1896. By the provisions of the will W. S. Goodfellow, Jos. S. Angus and Thomas G. Crothers were named executors thereof. Letters testamentary in the matter of the estate of the deceased were duly issued them and they ever since have been and now are the duly appointed, qualified and acting executors of the alleged will and testament of the deceased.

Mrs. Craven then avers that she is the surviving wife and widow of James G. Fair, and continues by stating "that the estate of James G. Fair, as she is informed and believes, is of the value of $12,225,993.07, or thereabouts; that the annual rents, issues and profits of the said estate are, as she is informed and believes, over and above the sum of $500,000."

"No allowance whatever of said estate has been made to her as the surviving wife and widow for her support and maintenance during the progress of the settlement of said estate, that the sum of $500 a month would be and is a reasonable allowance out of the estate to be made to her as such surviving wife and widow for her support and maintenance during the progress of the settlement of said estate."

The petitioner further represents that any allowance that may be made by the court or Judge thereof, in accordance with the prayer of the petition, should be made to take effect from the 28th day of December, 1894, the date of the death of her alleged husband.

The document is signed Nettie R. Fair and she is referred to by that name all through.

The filing of the petition for an allowance for maintenance from the estate of James G. Fair, as stated by Mr. Foote, is a method taken advantage of to expedite the settlement of Mrs. Craven's claims against the estate. When the petition is heard Mrs. Craven's opponents—those interested in the estate left by the millionaire—will doubtless vigorously oppose the granting of the allowance. This will give the petitioner an opportunity to present her proofs that she is, as she claims to be, the legal widow of the deceased, by virtue of a contract marriage. This Mrs. Craven is confident she can establish, and an interesting [illegible] contest is expected [illegible] well as [illegible].

The lengthy legal battle waged over the so-called pencil deeds, conveying [illegible] to the claimant, which was [illegible] against Mrs. Craven in the Superior [illegible] is now under consideration by the [illegible]. An appeal was taken [illegible] preme Court [illegible] of the lower court [illegible] reversed [illegible]

KYTKA'S FEES

For Work in the Botkin Case Are Finally Paid.

Auditor Wells, acting upon the advice of his attorney, General Dickinson, this morning audited the demand of Theodore Kytka, handwriting expert, for $225. Kytka was the expert on handwriting in the Cordelia Botkin poisoning case and photographed the exhibits which were printed on the transcript on appeal. There was some doubt as to the validity of the claim, as unfavorable discussion had been prompted several weeks ago by the passage of the printer's bill in the matter and the Auditor decided to have the law on his side.

The money was paid to Kytka this afternoon by the Treasurer.

A. SWEETSER, Foreman.

Wm. H. Schooler, leading attorney for Mrs. Houseworth, said this evening that the case would be taken up to the Supreme Court on appeal.

... every effort will be made to find a flaw in the indictment, and having discovered one or more himself, he decided to move for a dismissal. The order setting the case for trial in February was set aside, but the trial may be reset for the same date.

HARVEST FOR THE ATTORNEYS

Many Profiting by the Troubles Over the Fuller Estate

Twenty-three Legal Lights Have Earned Fees to Date Whether Paid or Not

Aside from the ordinary news features of the daily proceedings had in connection with the Alfred Fuller estate, it is interesting to note that the scramble to secure the earnings of the deceased miser is certain to result in benefit for one class of workers—the attorneys—and of this class there is an astonishingly large number expecting to make a harvest. Interested in the proceedings there have been no less than twenty-three attorneys, and all of them are expecting first-class returns for their services, and the most of them exercised enough business judgment to guard against loss, though several are not to be paid out of the estate.

At the opening of the proceedings regarding this estate John Gale prepared the petition for letters of special administration. Then Jo D. Sproul and A. F. Jones appeared as attorneys for Mrs. Houseworth when the famous will was presented for probate. Carleton Gray, Richard White, Knight & Haggerty and F. C. Searl came in next as attorneys for the heirs. Lusk and Jones next appear as attorneys for Mrs. Houseworth. Dr. A. J. Landis held a note against the estate for $15,000, and to protect his interests he secured the services of C. A. March, John C. March, Hiram Johnson, Peter J. Shields and Jo D. Sproul.

Warren Saxton next appeared as the special prosecutor before the Grand Jury, and then the criminal cases demanded more attorneys. Wm. H. Schooler was secured by Dr. Rodley, and later Grove L. Johnson and Geo. D. Collins were called in. Park Henshaw became attorney for Mrs. Houseworth in the criminal case, and John Guldery appeared for her as special counsel at one hearing. Later Schooler and Aram & Yell were called in to defend the will for Mrs. Houseworth, and lastly Dockweiler & Carter got in by means of a half-breed Indian who claims to be the illegitimate son of Alfred Fuller.

As the contest of the will proceeds each day its complications increase and it has become the subject of general discussion. Franklin Fuller, the alleged nephew of Alfred Fuller, has given his testimony which was to the effect that he was born out of wedlock but that he knows from others, as all people do know their relationship, that he is a nephew of Alfred Fuller. The question now arises as to whether or no the testimony of Franklin Fuller is sufficient to substantiate his claim to a share of the estate, and if not, whether this lack of proof of the contestants' claims will in any way affect the case at hand.

Numerous questions will arise during the criminal cases which will at least cause much mental speculation.

HAS HER EYE ON FAIR'S BIG PILES OF GOLD

Nov. 19/98.

Mrs. Craven Renews Her Battle.

SEEKS A FAMILY ALLOWANCE

AS DECEDENT'S WIDOW SHE MAKES HER DEMAND.

Prays the Court for $5000 Monthly Beginning From the Date of Her Alleged Husband's Death.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven has made her second appearance in her battle for a portion of the millions of the late James G. Fair. A petition was presented to Judge Belcher late yesterday afternoon on behalf of the claimant for a monthly family allowance of $5000, an amount, it is averred, legally due the petitioner by reason of the fact that she was the legal wife and is now the legal widow of James G. Fair, deceased.

When the petition was presented to Judge Belcher yesterday afternoon that jurist was requested to make an order for service on all parties interested and to set a date upon which those parties could show cause, if so they could legally do, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. This Judge Belcher refused to do, stating that inasmuch as the Craven-Fair contest had occupied the attention of Department 10 of the Superior Court since its filing he did not feel justified in making the order. In consequence the petition cannot be placed on file until the 29th inst. Judge Troutt, who presides in Department 10, will return from a visit to the country on that date and the case will be formally opened before him. W. W. Foote and Denson, Oatman & Denson, of counsel for Mrs. Craven, are unable to explain the action of Judge Belcher in refusing to grant the order requested. It was simply a formal matter, they say, and Judge Belcher had no more authority, considering the absence of Judge Troutt, to refuse to issue the order than his clerk would to refuse to file the petition if presented to him with the proper fee.

The petition of Mrs. Craven for a family allowance from the estate of her alleged deceased husband is made under certain sections of the code providing for an allowance to a surviving widow for her support and maintenance during the progress of the settlement of the estate of her husband. The petitioner first sets forth that James G. Fair died in this city and county on the 28th day of December, 1894, leaving an alleged last will and testament. Such alleged will was duly admitted to probate on November 16, 1896. By the provisions of the will W. S. Goodfellow, Jas. S. Angus and Thomas G. Crothers were named executors thereof. Letters testamentary in the matter of the estate of the deceased were duly issued them and they ever since have been and now are the duly appointed, qualified and acting executors of the alleged will and testament of the deceased.

MRS. NETTIE R. CRAVEN-FAIR Who Has Petitioned the Superior Court for an Allowance for Support and Maintenance From the Estate of the Late James G. Fair.

Mrs. Craven then avers that she is the surviving wife and widow of James G. Fair, and continues by stating "that the estate of James G. Fair, as she is informed and believes, is of the value of $12,228,298 07, or thereabouts; that the annual rents, issues and profits of the said estate are, as she is informed and believes, over and above the sum of $500,000."

"No allowance whatever of said estate has been made to her as the surviving wife and widow for her support and maintenance during the progress of the settlement of said estate; that the sum of $5000 a month would be and is a reasonable allowance out of the estate to be made to her as such surviving wife and widow for her support and maintenance during the progress of the settlement of said estate."

The petitioner further represents that any allowance that may be made by the court or Judge thereof, in accordance with the prayer of the petition, should be made to take effect from the 28th day of December, 1894, the date of the death of her alleged husband.

The document is signed Nettie R. Fair, and she is referred to by that name all through.

The filing of the petition for an allowance for maintenance from the estate of James G. Fair, as stated by Mr. Foote, is a method taken advantage of to expedite the settlement of Mrs. Craven's claims against the estate. When the petition is heard Mrs. Craven's opponents—those interested in the estate left by the millionaire — will doubtless vigorously oppose the granting of the allowance. This will give the petitioner an opportunity to present her proofs that she is, as she claims to be, the legal widow of the deceased, by virtue of a contract marriage. While Mrs. Craven is confident she can establish, and an interesting as well as bitter contest is expected.

The lengthy legal battle waged over the so-called pencil deeds, conveying property to the claimant, which was decided against Mrs. Craven in the Superior Court, is now under consideration by the Supreme Court. An appeal was taken from the judgment of the lower court and in event the judgment is reversed Mrs. Craven's attorneys wish to be in a position to press all claims without delay. Mrs. Craven was in St. Louis when her attorneys concluded to take this last step in her behalf. She was sent for and came immediately to this city, where, in all probability, she will remain until she has conquered or all hopes of victory have vanished.

KYTKA'S FEES

For Work in the Botkin Case Are Finally Paid.

Auditor Wells, acting upon the advice of his attorney, General Dickinson, this morning audited the demand of Theodore Kytka, handwriting expert, for $225. Kytka was the expert on handwriting in the Cordelia Botkin poisoning case and photographed the exhibits which were printed on the transcript on appeal. There was some doubt as to the validity of the claim, as unfavorable discussion had been prompted several weeks ago by the passage of the printer's bill in the matter and the Auditor decided to have the law on his side.

The money was paid to Kytka this afternoon by the Treasurer.

CHICO SEMI-WEEKLY

VOL. XLV. CHICO, BUTTE COUNTY, CAL., TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1899.

FULLER WILL CASE IS READY FOR THE JURY

Respondent's Witnesses Told of the Deceased's Antipathy For Relatives

TESTIMONY OF MRS. E. REXFORD

Sets at Rest the Story of Two Thousand Dollars for H. Carmack—Instructions This Morning

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 11.—The evidence in the Fuller will contest was all in at 11:30 a. m. today, and at the request of Attorney Knight an adjournment was taken until 1:30 o'clock when the arguments commenced. Attorney Knight opened and closed the arguments for the prosecution with Yell and Schooler for the defense.

Judge Gadills allowed the attorneys two hours for the presentation of each side of the case, and when the arguments began the court room was crowded with interested spectators. At least two hundred ladies occupied seats in the courtroom. All of the chairs in the court house were brought into the court room to accommodate the spectators. Even the Grand Jury room was robbed of chairs and that august body was forced to defer its session until tomorrow on account of having no convenient place for seating themselves. Attorney Knight made the opening and closing arguments for the prosecution, and in the course of his argument he made a strong plea for John Garner, who, when caught in crime, told on himself and the others who were implicated with him. He declared that he would plead with the court to grant him leniency and if necessary he would go to the Governor. He blamed Mrs. Houseworth and Dr. Rodley for all the trouble.

Attorneys Schooler and Yell made the arguments for Mrs. Houseworth. Attorney Schooler is attorney also for Dr. Rodley, while Yell was only interested on Mrs. Houseworth's behalf. The result was they crossed each other considerably.

Judge Gadills will give his instructions to the jury this morning at 9:30 o'clock. It is thought that a verdict will be agreed upon before noon.

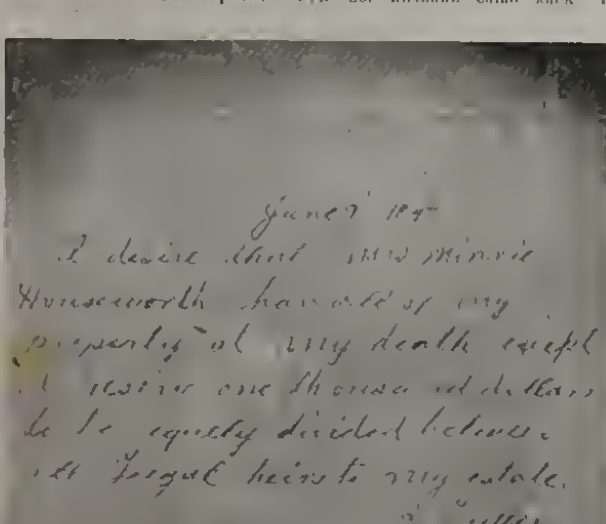
The first witness called this morning was C. L. Stilson. He said he knew Fuller well and had a conversation with him during his lifetime regarding the drawing of his will. It was during the latter part of September, 1897, Dr. Landis called at his office and asked him what he charged for drawing up a will. He said the reason I ask is that Fuller is here talking about making a will and he requested me not to say anything about it to Fuller, as he had an idea that lawyers charged too much for such things. In about an hour Fuller came into the office and asked the price of drawing a will, and remarked that there were too many people around, and that he would come again some day early. About two weeks afterward, early in the morning, he came again and made the remark: "I don't want any of my — — — of relatives to have any of my money. I want to give it to my friends." Mrs. Morehead came in at this time, and he left, saying he wanted no one around when he made the will. 'Twas afterward he came and spoke regarding it. Witness then said he moved into another office and Fuller came up there remarking, "this will give me a better chance to make my will, there is more room here. Fuller spoke about the will several times afterward. Attorney Knight on cross-examination of witness attempted to have him testify as to the genuineness of the signature on the alleged will, but did not succeed, owing to the objection of respondent's counsel.

Mrs. E. Rexford testified as to her many year's acquaintance with Mrs. Houseworth and H. Carmack, and also with the deceased Fuller. Carmack asked her to write to Mrs. Houseworth and tell her that he had traces of the will. She did so, and when Mrs. Houseworth returned and he had given her the will at Mrs. Rexford's house, Carmack said: "Don't tell how you got this; tell her you got it through the mails, because I do not care to get mixed up in it." On the 11th or 12th of November he came to her house again and Mrs. Houseworth was there, although he did not know it until his arrival. He was very much excited, and when he saw her he exclaimed: "What have you done to me? What did you tell in Oroville?" She replied: "I have not been to Oroville;" and further she declared that she had never said anything about him asking her for $2000. Witness said she first heard about the $2000 from Mrs. Houseworth by letter, in which she stated that Carmack had not demanded $2000 from her, but merely remarked if she wanted to give him $2000 he would accept it. Witness said Fuller came to her house very frequently, and would invariably talk about his relatives, about the trouble he was having with the settlement of his brother's estate, and that he did not want any of them to have his money. The cross-examination of this witness was very rigid, but she adhered strictly to her previous testimony. Knight sharply put the question to her: "Did you know Mrs. Page in Chico?" Witness admitted that she had known of her. Following up this line of inquiry the attorney questioned: "Mrs Rexford, haven't you heard that the original will was made out in Mrs. Page's name and that she died before Dr. Rodley could engineer the scheme?" "Most emphatically no!" declared the witness.

Jo D. Sproul was the next witness for the defense, but he was not present, and had not arrived at 11 o'clock, so his testimony was dispensed with.

In rebuttal, Theo. Rinehart was called for the prosecution, but the court sustained the objection of respondent and he was not allowed to testify. It is understood he was put on for the purpose of proving declarations made by Fuller regarding his contempt for Mrs. Houseworth.

H. S. Hostler was next called to testify to a conversation between Fuller and himself regarding Mrs. Houseworth, which took place after she came back from Texas. It was near the Hallam House, and noticing Mrs. Houseworth crossing the street, witness remarked: "Hello! Madam Houseworth is back." "Yes," said Fuller, "the damn street trotter is back. She went back East and had a good time on old Woodman's money." Hostler asked if her husband came back. Fuller responded: "No, she gave him the slip in Texas. Now she is looking for another sucker. The damn street trotter, hell is full of such women as her; all they want is money and good clothes."



June [illegible] 189[illegible]

I desire that Mrs Minnie Houseworth have all of my property at my death except [illegible] one thousand dollars to be equally divided between all legal heirs to my estate.

[illegible] Fuller

FACSIMILE OF THE ALLEGED WILL OF ALFRED FULLER.

OROVILLE, Dec. 10.—Expert Kytka, the handwriting expert in the Fuller will case, finished his testimony before the Superior Court Saturday forenoon. After the conclusion of his technical description of the defects in the will he stated most positively that the instrument was a forgery.

He was followed on the stand by Franklin Fuller, one of the eastern heirs of E. and A. Fuller. They were his uncles and he had received part of the money due him as such an heir in the estate of E. Fuller. A. Fuller moved from Ohio to Illinois, thence to Tuolumne county, California and from there came to Chico. The witness had received part of the money due him as an heir from Alfred Fuller, the administrator of E. Fuller's estate through his attorney-in-fact Searles in Ohio and some through Richard White of Chico. He (the witness) stated that he was born out of lawful wedlock and never knew his father. In the earlier years of his mother's life she was considered an incompetent.

J. B. Swearingen was re-called and asked regarding his testimony given before the Grand Jury and why he offered his testimony. He stated that it was because of his friendship for H. Carmack. He understood that Carmack was about to get into trouble and he would be damned if he would keep still and let an innocent man go to prison on the charge that he had endeavored to secure $2,000 from Mrs. Houseworth for delivering to her the will. This closed the case for the prosecution and the defense placed upon the stand T. J. Hindman. The witness testified that in 1896 he met Fuller and had a conversation with him in which he said that he had been very sick and would have starved to death had it not been for the kindness of Mrs. Houseworth. The first time he mentioned this was to Louis Schwein.

James Chubbuck testified that he had lived in Chico for many years and was well acquainted with both Fuller and Mrs Houseworth. On one occasion he served some papers on Fuller when the latter became very angry and threw them back to him stating that the relatives in the east were trying to get all his brother's money. He cursed them and applied vile epithets to them and said that none of them would ever get a cent of money.

At the conclusion of Chubbuck's testimony the court adjourned until 9 o'clock Monday morning. But three or four more witnesses will be put on by the defense and it is expected that the case will go to the jury on Tuesday.

OROVILLE, Dec. 8.—H. T. Batchelder was the first witness on the stand this morning in the Fuller will contest, and there was not a person in the crowded court room but what sympathized sincerely with him as he gave his testimony against his bosom friend of many years, Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, and the effort was extremely painful to him as was attested by his absolute failure to speak at times, his emotion being so great. He declared that the signature shown him upon what purported to be the Fuller will was not the handwriting of the deceased. He testified that Dr. Rodley approached him at Biggs first about Feb. 18, 1898, and asked if he knew Alfred Fuller's signature. They went up to a room in the hotel and Rodley said: "Batch, Fuller left a will; can you recognize his signature? If you were certain would you be willing to sign it?" saying, "there is $3000 in it for you." I answered, "No, I can not do it, Doctor; he never invited me; I never sign a will without being invited," said witness. About a week later he received a letter from Rodley asking him to come to Chico without fail and he would pay all expenses. Batchelder went up in answer to the letter, met the Doctor in his office, when the document was produced and Rodley said: "Is that his signature, Batch?" "I don't think it is, Doctor," was the reply.

"You won't sign it, then?"

"No. Fuller never invited me, although I wish I could earn that money."

The much talked of letter is as follows:

CHICO, Feb 18, 1898.

Dear Friend Batch:—Come up on Friday evening. I will pay all expenses. Let nothing stand in your way.

J. ELLIS RODLEY.

Upon cross-examination witness declared that he did not know how the Grand Jury came into possession of knowledge regarding the matter, as he never divulged it to any human being.

John Swearingen, who followed Col Batchelder on the stand gave testimony of somewhat sensational character and the large audience was keyed up to the highest pitch of expectancy. The witness stated that he had been acquainted with Mrs. Houseworth for over twenty years. In May 1898, he had a conversation with her at the Hallam House in which she told him that she had been informed that there was a will of Fuller in existence and that he had been seen to deliver the same to the late R. R. Fimple. Also that her attorney Park Henshaw had told her that the only thing necessary to make the will valid was to secure the signatures of two persons as witnesses; that Dr. Rodley had agreed to become one of the witnesses and there was $5,000 in it for him if he would also agree to sign. Swearingen stated that he told her that he could not sign the will. Some time later he again met her and she told him that she did not need him as she had got John Garner to sign with Rodley. She also told him that she had sent the will to H. Carmack and related the circumstances of so doing. She said that while in San Francisco she had stepped into a grocery store one day, procured a blank envelope and had the clerk direct it to Carmack at Chico. When she returned she dropped it into the postoffice. She begged the witness to say nothing about it and threatened in the event of his giving testimony against her before the Grand Jury to kill herself. All these conversations took place after the death of Fuller.

The witness was asked upon cross-examination if he did not address Mrs. Houseworth in endearing terms, ask her to sit on his lap and to kiss him, and make the suggestion that if she would leave her door unlocked at night it might be an inducement for him to sign the will. To these questions the witness gave a positive negative reply. He was further asked if he had not been intimate with Mrs. Houseworth and he admitted that he had but not in connection with the will case.

H. Carmack was the next witness and retold the story of how the will came into his hands. His statements were a reiteration of the testimony already published, and convinced everyone of the honorable part he had played in the transaction. He related how he got the will out of the postoffice and delivered it to Mrs. Houseworth. Where it came from he had no knowledge, and he only did what he considered the proper thing in delivering it to the named beneficiary. Mr Carmack's testimony consumed the time up to the noon recess.

Mrs. E. I. Montgomery, formerly of Chico, but now residing in Washington, was the first witness in the afternoon. She had received a number of letters from Fuller and was familiar with his handwriting. The letters which she received will be introduced in evidence in order to show the peculiarities of his penmanship.

Attorney A. F. Jones testified that he had prepared the petition for probate of the will and acted as her attorney at the time the will was offered for probate. He afterwards acted at the request of F. C. Lusk, who drew the answer of Mrs. Houseworth and E. Woodman, and filed the same, acted no further as her attorney.

(Continued on 4th Page.)

Banner Brand Waists and Wrappers

Are guaranteed to fit perfectly.

Ladies' Vests and Drawers

Ribbed and Fleeced—

We Can Please You

ADDITIONAL COURT NEWS

was asked if Mrs. Housworth signed the petition for probate, and if she signed it in his office. This question was objected to on the ground that having been her attorney it was a privileged communication between them. The objection was overruled and Jones refused to testify upon the same grounds until ordered to do so by the court, when he stated that Mrs. Housworth had signed the petition in his presence. The evident object of this testimony is for laying the foundation for attempting to prove the similarity between Mrs. Housworth's signature and the handwriting in the will.

Mrs. Housworth was then placed upon the stand. She refused to testify upon the ground that there were two felony indictments pending against her, and that her testimony might tend to incriminate her.

W. L. Bradley and Mr. Chanoon, who were both familiar with the handwriting of Fuller, were placed upon the stand to prove the genuineness of letters and documents which were introduced in evidence as tending to show the difference between his true handwriting and that alleged to be his in the will.

The last witness of the day was writing expert Theodore Kytka. A photographic copy of the will was introduced and the expert entered into a long technical analysis of the same and attempted to show by diagrams in comparison with acknowledged handwriting of Fuller that the body and signature of the will were forgeries. He declared the comparisons showed the falsity of the will. His testimony was purely one of technicality, and dealt with books and curves and all that goes to make up an expert's testimony. He will again resume the stand this morning.

MORE TROUBLE FOR DR. RODLEY

Now Mixed Up in a Civil Suit.

ACTION TO SET ASIDE DEEDS

The Transferring of Real Estate to His Wife Leads to the Belief that the Doctor Intends to Beat Certain Creditors Out of the Amounts Due.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 23.—Dr. Rodley is again in a fair way to appear as defendant, but this time it is a civil suit, whereby certain creditors desire to set aside deeds, which, they believe, were made in an effort to defraud them out of moneys long overdue.

Two complaints were filed to-day, both being identical only as to the amounts set forth. The first is entitled E. Meyborn vs. J. Ellis Rodley and Mary E. Rodley, his wife, and the other is by Geo F. C. Peterson vs. Rodley and wife.

The complaint of E. Meyborn alleges that on the 20th day of December, 1899, the defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, was, ever since has been, and now is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $299.60, upon an account for merchandise and assigned accounts, all of which said account had been so owing by said defendant for a long time prior to said date, and he, the said defendant, had failed, refused and neglected to pay the same, or any part thereof, and still does so refuse, neglect and fail to pay any part of said account or demand, though requested so to do before the commencement of this action.

That, upon his information and belief, plaintiff avers that upon said day and for a long time prior thereto said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, was, ever since has been and still is indebted to other divers and various persons in amounts aggregating $300 and more, and the said defendant had and still neglects to pay the same.

That on the said 20th day of December, 1899, the said plaintiff was the owner of and in the possession of the following described real property, lands and premises, situated in the County of Butte, State of California: Lot numbered Twelve of the First Subdivision of the Bay Tract, containing about ten acres of land; lots one and two of block 45 in the village of Chico Vecino, and lots 7 and 8 of block 82 of the Town of Chico; that the probable value of said premises was and is about $6000; that on the 20th day of December, 1899, plaintiff commenced an action in the Justice court of Chico Township to recover the said sum of $299.60 due and owing to him from said defendant, and on said day caused an attachment to be issued out of said court, directed against the said defendant, and placed said attachment in the hands of M. H. Gee, a Constable of Chico Township, for service and levy; that said officer, on the 21st day of December, 1899, levied upon the above described lot 12 of first subdivision of the Bay tract by filing a copy of said writ of attachment, to which was attached a notice that the said premises were attached and held by him, in the office of the County Recorder, which notice contained a description of said premises, and by also serving a similar copy of the writ and notice upon persons found in the possession of said premises a similar copy of said writ and notice that said premises were attached.

That on the said 21st day of December, 1899, the said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, fraudulently and with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud plaintiff and his other creditors, and to prevent them from recovering and collecting the sums of money so due from him to them respectively, and with the intent and for the purpose of preventing the operation of said levy of attachment against his said property, wrongfully and fraudulently by deed bearing date the said 21st day of December, 1899, conveyed, to his wife, the said defendant, Mary E. Rodley, all of the above real property and above described lands and premises, and caused the said deed of conveyance to be immediately placed upon record and filed and recorded in the office of the County Recorder of Butte county on said day just prior to the record of the notice of said attachment as aforesaid.

That the said deed of conveyance was given, made and executed without any consideration therefor whatever; and was so given, made and executed with the fraudulent intent of hindering, delaying and defrauding plaintiff and his other creditors; and was so recorded with the fraudulent intent of so hindering and delaying and defrauding plaintiff and his other creditors, and of preventing the operation of the levy of said writ of attachment, and to prevent plaintiff and his other creditors from recovering and obtaining the respective sums due them from the said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, as aforesaid; and the said defendant, Mary E. Rodley, the wife of the said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, without having paid or given any consideration therefor received and accepted said deed of conveyance with the intent and for the purpose of aid, abetting and assisting her said husband, the said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, in hindering, delaying and defrauding plaintiff and his other creditors, and preventing them from obtaining the sums of money due them respectively from the said J. Ellis Rodley, and for the purpose of, and with the intention of defeating the operation of the said levy of said writ of attachment.

That plaintiff is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief avers that said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, does not own any or any sufficient property not exempt from execution outside of and excepting the above described property out of which plaintiff is able to recover and collect the amount of said sum due him as aforesaid.

That unless the said fraudulent deed is cancelled and set aside and said property made subject to the payment of said demand of plaintiff he will be unable to recover any payment of his said demand or any part thereof, and the plaintiff and other creditors will be thereby defrauded out of the respective sums due them from said defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, and that by reason of said fraudulent and wrongful act of defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, in so conveying away all of his property as aforesaid, plaintiff and the other creditors of said J. Ellis Rodley, has been defrauded out of their respective demands against him, and will continue to be and remain so defrauded unless said conveyance is cancelled and set aside.

Wherefore plaintiff prays for judgment against the defendant.

1. That it may be adjudged by this court that the said deed of conveyance was and is fraudulent and void as against plaintiff.

2. That by a decree of this court the said deed may be set aside and the property therein described rendered subject to the payment of plaintiff's demand.

3. That plaintiff recover his costs of suit herein, and for such other further special or general relief as to this court may seem just and agreeable to equity.

The complaint of Peterson is worded the same as above, only the amount is $283.

Rich'd White is the attorney for plaintiff in each case.

In the matter of the estate of Kate Jaeckel the inventory and appraisement filed, fixing the value of the estate at $750.

The following claims have been filed against the estate of Emma Lee: W. E. Murphy, $56; Chico Gas & Water Co., $11 75; Wall Bros., $148.60; H. D. Ferson, $2083.33; O. Stansbury, $85.

In the case of Morehead vs. the estate of V. David, W. J. O'Connor has filed his bond, taken the oath and entered upon his duties as receiver.

RODLEY AGAIN PLEADS TO A PERJURY CHARGE

Declares He Is Innocent and Attorneys Seek For Him an Early Trial

Dec. 22-1899

CONFINEMENT TELLS ON HEALTH

Mental Strain and Lack of Exercise Are Leaving Their Marks—Judge Gray Will Preside

Special to the RECORD

OROVILLE, December 20.—Dr. J. Ellis Rodley was again escorted from his cell in the county jail to the court room where he was arraigned before Judge Gray on the indictment recently found by the Grand Jury charging him with perjury. The defendant was attended by two of his attorneys, Geo. D. Collins of San Francisco and Wm. H. Schooler of Chico. Rodley entered a plea of not guilty.

The attorneys for the defendant appealed to the court to set the dates of his trial as early as possible, and Judge Gray thereupon set the trial on the perjury charge for January 23 at 1:30 p.m. and that on the forgery charge for Jaunary 30th at the same hour.

It is well for Dr. Rodley that his trials are to be had without much delay, for the close confinement is telling severely upon him. In the county jail he has only the freedom of a small, poorly lighted tank, while he is one who has been accustomed to spend much of his time in the open air and taking moderate exercise. Those who have visited him frequently in the jail say that they notice that he is showing signs of breaking health due to the confinement and mental strain.

Mrs. Housworth is not much more conveniently located than Rodley, for she occupies a dismal room adjoining the jailor's office. This is so poorly lighted that during the cloudy weather she cannot read and is forced to pass her unhappy hours in meditation.

John Garner is privileged to occupy the main department of the jail where the misdemeanor prisoners are confined. This, though better lighted than the other quarters, is cold and damp, and he has been for two weeks a sufferer from a severe cold. Garner's mental suffering is quite severe and he will be more contented when his punishment has been fixed.

In some manner the impression has gone abroad that Judge Gray will not be the presiding judge at the trials of Dr. Rodley and Mrs. Housworth, but that is a false impression. There is no doubt that Judge Gray intends to preside at these trials unless some strenuous objections are made by the attorneys for the defendants based upon grounds sufficient to warrant a change.

It is also quite certain that the defendants will endeavor to have the cases heard by another Judge, as they will claim that Judge Gray is disqualified by reason of the fact that his son was an attorney in the Fuller will case.

The Grand Jury.

The Grand Jury was in session yesterday but none of them dropped a word on the outside regarding what had been transpiring on the inside. A part of their time is now being given to inspection of the various offices, and the remainder to winding up their investigations of criminal matters. It is believed that another sensation in the way of an indictment, will be sprung, as it is known that considerable testimony has been taken in the case.

It is probable that the new indictment charging Dr. Rodley with perjury will be returned this week.

BUTKIN CASE AGAIN DELAYED

12-22-1899

Dispute About the Payment of a Bill for Photographs.

OBJECTION BY THE AUDITOR

Expert Kytka Will Withhold His Signature Until His Account Has Been Settled.

There is a hitch in the Botkin murder case because of complications in the city's monetary system. No provision has been made by law for the payment of claims for taking and reproducing photographic facsimiles of documents and exhibits offered in criminal trials. Until the photographic reproductions are paid for the complete transcript on appeal cannot be presented to the Supreme Court.

Expert Theodore Kytka took a great number of photographs of the exhibits offered in the trial of Mrs. Cordelia Botkin, convicted of the murder of Mrs. John P. Dunning. The volume of his work, he says, is measured by avoirdupois. He declares that three able-bodied policemen could not lift the negatives of the photographs taken by him, yet, he says, he has charged the city only $325 for all the work performed. Notwithstanding what he considers to be a very reasonable charge the bill has not been paid, and, he says, that Auditor Wells is responsible for holding up the claim.

Deputy Auditor W. W. Wells was asked in regard to the matter yesterday. He said that so much discussion arose over the payment of the bill for the printing of the transcript on appeal that the Auditor's office determined not to pass any bill until it had been in the office at least a week. He said that the Supreme Court decision with regard to the printing of transcript on appeal papers appears to be sufficient to authorize the Auditor in passing such accounts, yet the Auditor, to be on the safe side, seeks to obtain advice from his attorney before acting on the demand for the photographing of exhibits.

General John H. Dickinson, attorney for the Auditor, is absent from the city and will not return before the first of the year, therefore the Auditor will not be able to obtain a statement of his opinion until some time in January. This will consequently put off the hearing of the Botkin case in the Supreme Court for at least half a year. The calendar of the Supreme Court for the ensuing term is being made up, and the Botkin case might be placed thereon if the record from the Superior Court were in proper form to be incorporated.

Mr. Wells says that under the decisions of the Supreme Court a claim for this kind of work may be collected without reference to the Auditor's office, but that as a matter of official courtesy the matter has been referred to the Auditor. This course having been taken, the Auditor has determined to make a thorough investigation of the legality of the claim.

If the demand for printing photographs could have been passed upon in a summary manner that was adopted in paying the printer's bill for the publication of the transcript on appeal in the Botkin case, no postponement would have occurred. Auditor Wells seems to be in doubt concerning the law touching the supplying of photographs to a record of this kind. Expert Kytka has suggested to the Auditor that these photographic reproductions of the exhibits in the case are essential parts of the record. Before they can be used in the Supreme Court they must be accompanied by his certificate of their genuineness, and before he will certify to the correctness of the photographs he asks payment of his bill.

PARENTAGE OF THE GREGORY CHILD.

Rippy Said That Young Fair Was Her Father—She Was Adopted by a Woman Whose Will Is Being Contested.

The little girl who was in Judge Troutt's court yesterday was said to be the daughter of James G. Fair Jr. Her name is Charlotte B. Gregory, she having been adopted by Mrs. Catherine Gregory, over whose will a contest is waging. The notion that young Fair was her father was entertained by W. C. Rippy, and Robert Ash, who is contesting the will, testified yesterday that Rippy told him that he could prove that she was Fair's child. It had been stated that the little girl, who is not pretty, but is bright, was taken by Mrs. Gregory from an asylum for children. Rippy was well acquainted with Mrs. Gregory, and was often at her house. Ash charges that Rippy, who is dead, forged the will in order that he might prevent Ash from obtaining half of Mrs. Gregory's estate. In a will, which was made several years before her death, Mrs. Gregory gave Ash half of her property, and half of it was to go to the girl, of whom Ash was to be the guardian. Ash was Mrs. Gregory's attorney. He testified that he and Rippy had a quarrel, and Rippy threatened him. He watched Rippy closely after that, thinking Rippy might shoot him as he did John Mackay. Mrs. Gregory knew many mining men, as with her deceased husband, John P. Gregory, she resided at Virginia, Nev., before coming here.

Ash testified that Mrs. Gregory told him that Rippy was pestering her to make a will in which Mrs. Martha Munson was to be named as the guardian of the child, and that she was unwilling to give the custody of the girl to a woman of Mrs. Munson's age. She objected to making such a will. Ash then protested to Rippy, and the quarrel between them began. Ash stated that Mrs. Gregory, who died in 1898, had become addicted to the excessive use of liquor, and it was averred that she was unable to know what she was doing at the time the contested will was made.

Mrs. Munson, who now has charge of the little girl, was called to testify in support of the will. She admitted that she had been told that Rippy wrote the body of the will, but she did not see him write it. She did not see Mrs. Gregory sign it, but Mrs. Gregory told her that she had made such a will, and directed her where to find it after Mrs. Gregory's death. The will was in Mrs. Gregory's apartment. Mrs. Munson did not see it until after Mrs. Gregory died, though the latter spoke about it several times and said that in it she had provided well for Mrs. Munson as well as for the child. Mrs. Munson testified that Mrs. Gregory cautioned her to be sure to get the will in the closet after her death, as "Ash would come around and tear things all to pieces." Mrs. Munson contradicted Ash on many points. The hearing will be resumed to-day.

MRS. GREGORY'S WILL SAID TO BE A FORGERY.

Expert Kytka Supports Robert Ash's Allegation That the Writer of the Document Was W. C. Rippy.

The trial of the contest over the will of Mrs. Catherine Gregory, which Robert Ash alleges was forged, was begun yesterday in Judge Troutt's court. The will was dated December 10, 1896, and was filed last year. Mrs. Gregory resided at 913 Bush street and owned the property there. She had previously made a will in favor of Robert Ash, an attorney, who was her friend. In the contested will Ash was not mentioned. He claimed that this will had been forged by W. C. Rippy, who shot John Mackay, the millionaire. Mrs. Gregory was the widow of John P. Gregory, who was known among the mining men of Virginia, Nev.

W. S. Wood appeared in court yesterday as counsel for Ash, Attorneys Chojnski and Morgan for the administrator of the estate, Adams & Adams for Mrs. Gregory's adopted daughter, Charlotte B. Gregory, to whom most of the estate is to go under the second will, and Mrs. Clara Foltz as attorney for Mrs. Martha Munson, who was named in the will as the daughter's guardian. On the will were the names of Alfred Bowen and John Schulken as witnesses. These two men were called to the stand by Attorney Wood. Neither of them remembered having witnessed the will. In fact, Bowen did not recognize his signature on the will. Schulken said that his signature appeared to be in his own handwriting and that he had signed many papers for Mrs. Gregory. He had been her grocer. Theodore Kytka, the expert, testified that the will was written by Rippy, he having studied some of Rippy's admitted writing.

"What would you say if a witness should testify that he saw Mrs. Gregory write this will?" asked Attorney Chojnski.

"I would say that he was mistaken," was Kytka's reply. Kytka's testimony will be contradicted by expert evidence on the other side. The jury chosen consists of J. C. Mourmann, Robert Currie, Frederick Hellwig, Sanford H. Andrew, Jacob Deutsch, M. Hamburger, John K. Bell, Frederick Itteling, F. Deutsch, Henry Behrens, S. Radinovich and Patrick D. Dunn. The trial will be resumed to-day.

918

THE JURY FOUNO THAT THE WILL WAS FORGEO.

Dec. 4-2-1899

Robert Ash Will Now Get Half of Mrs. Gregory's Estate—A Clergyman's Last Testament Is Told.

The jury in the contest over the will of Catherine Gregory rendered a verdict yesterday that the will was forged by Wesley C. Rippy, as charged by Robert Ash. Rippy is dead. Another will, which gives Ash half of the estate, will now be admitted to probate. The other half of the property goes to Mrs. Gregory's adopted daughter.

The olographic will of Rev. Alexander N. Carson, who was pastor of the Trinity Presbyterian Church, has been filed for probate, but his widow's attorneys say that it is of no legal effect, as it was not dated entirely by him. In it he figured the value of his estate at $900. He referred several times in it to the love that he bore his wife, Ida L. Carson, and his son, Charles H. Carson, for whom he said he wished he could have done more. He spoke of his wife as "the idol of his heart." He stated that he had struggled all his life to make those dependent on him happy and comfortable, and to do his duty as a Christian minister.

Hannah K. Clapp of Reno, Nev., to whom Miss Elizabeth C. Babcock bequeathed all of her estate, has filed here a copy of the will which was admitted to probate in Nevada, the deceased having left a bank deposit, Spring Valley stock and real estate in California, which were worth about $900.

The heirs of Charles Goodall have petitioned for a partial distribution of his estate, and have filed a waiver of their right to contest the will.

Frederick Elliot's contest of the will of George Hudson was dismissed by Judge Troutt yesterday.

Say the Will Was Forged.

Carl Eisenschimmel, expert in handwriting, testified before Judge Troutt and a jury yesterday that the document presented in court as the will of the late Mrs. Catherine E. Gregory is, in his opinion, a forgery. He said he believed the will was written by the late W. C. Rippy, the man who shot John W. Mackay several years ago. The will is contested by Robert Ashe, who was named as a legatee under a former will. W. S. Wood is attorney for Mr. Ashe. Herbert Choynski and H. F. Mogan are attorneys for former Public Administrator Freese, proponent of the will. Attorneys Adams & Adams appear for Charlotte Gregory, adopted daughter of the decedent, and Clara Foltz is the attorney for Mrs. Martha Munson, legatee under the disputed instrument. Theodore Kytka, expert in handwriting, also gave it as his opinion that the paper was fabricated. The proponent of the will expects to produce a witness who will swear that Mrs. Gregory wrote the will.

The Gregory Will Contest.

In the contest over the will of Mrs. Catherine E. Gregory, in Judge Troutt's court yesterday, Carl Eisenschimmel, a handwriting expert, testified in support of the allegation that the will was forged by W. C. Rippy, who is dead. Alfred P. Goss testified on behalf of the proponents of the will that Mrs. Gregory had said that she wanted Mrs. Munson to take charge of her daughter, Charlotte Gregory, after her death and desired that they remain together. It was charged by Robert Ash, the contestant, that Mrs. Munson assisted Rippy to forge the will, in which she was appointed as the girl's guardian. Ash began his testimony before adjournment. He said that he was Mrs. Gregory's attorney, and that she urged him to be the girl's guardian. He finally consented, and in a will, which he wishes to have admitted to probate, she bequeathed him half of her estate.

WILL BE TRIED FOR MURDER.

Dr. Samuel Newman Is Held to Answer by Judge Mogan.

Dr. Samuel Newman, accused of murder in having caused the death of Miss Su-Ella Tyson by a criminal operation, was held to answer yesterday by Police Judge Mogan on a charge of murder.

Judge Mogan in rendering his decision expressed his belief that Newman was guilty of the act charged. According to the statutes as construed by the Court it was held that the offense was not manslaughter, but murder in the second degree. It was therefore ordered that Newman be held for trial in the Superior Court. At the request of the defense an order was made fixing bail at $7500.

Stephen Varcoll is jointly charged with Dr. Newman of having caused the death of Miss Tyson, and a decision in his case will be rendered to-day.

Newman Case Partly Heard.

Testimony was taken yesterday by Police Judge Mogan in the case of Dr. A. S. Newman, accused of the murder of Su-Ella Tyson. Dr. Mallory testified that Miss Tyson died from the effects of a criminal operation. A prescription which was presented at a drug store on the corner of Sutter street and Grant avenue by a young man who gave his name as Varcoll was obtained in evidence after Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, had testified that the writing on the prescription was identical with that of the entries in Dr. Newman's record book. Varcoll, who is alleged to have presented the prescription, is the young man who is jointly charged with Newman with having caused the woman's death. The prosecution closed, and Attorney Robert Ferral, representing the defendant, made a motion for dismissal.

ARGUED FOR DISMISSAL.—The dismissal of the charge against Dr. A. S. Newman for performing a criminal operation on Miss Su-Ella Tyson, which caused her death, was argued before Police Judge Mogan last evening and a decision will be rendered on Thursday.

SIGN ON DOOR COMES DOWN OR RENT GOES UP

"Mrs. Nettie R. Fair" in Paint Causes Row at Parrott Building.

INSCRIPTION ON A DOOR THAT CAUSED A RAISE IN RENT

Messrs. Pence & Pence—You are hereby notified that your rent after January 1, 1900, will be $500 a month instead of $60 a month, as heretofore paid by you.
(Signed) ABBY M. PARROTT,
By Charles de Guigne, her attorney in fact, owner and landlord, P. J. Sullivan, her agent.

THIS is the notice that was served on Pence & Pence, attorneys-at-law, yesterday.

"They probably think they have a legal right to enforce such a demand as that, but they will find out their mistake," said ex-Congressman Lafe Pence, a member of the firm addressed. Mr. Pence seemed to consider the matter a joke on the other side. He said he had been informed by Mr. Sullivan, agent for the owner of the building, that Charles L. Fair objected to having the name of their client, Mrs. Nettie R. Fair, painted on the door of one of their rooms; that Mr. Sullivan first suggested that it was Mrs. Parrott's idea to prohibit the names of women from all the doors, or, if they were used on signs in the buildings, they should have no distinguishing designations to indicate the sex of the occupants of the offices—thus the sign "Smith & Jones, typewriters," might be permitted, but not "Miss Smith and Mrs. Jones," nor even "Sarah Smith & Jennie Jones." Because one of Pence & Pence's clients had secured the use of one room rented by them and had caused to be inscribed on the window, "Mrs. Nettie R. Fair," the attorneys mentioned were requested to have the name removed, and, failing to do so, the notification of raise of rent was given.

"We didn't paint that name on the door, nor did Mrs. Fair, but it was painted there by the painter hired by Mrs. Parrott, who does all the painting about the building. No objection was made at that time and no reasonable objection can be made now. Mrs. Fair has as much right to have her name on her office door adjoining our office as Charles L. Fair has to have his on the door of his office adjoining the office of Knight & Heggerty, his attorneys."

Mr. Sullivan, agent for the renting of the offices in the Parrott building, refused to tell why the rent had been raised. He would not say whether the obliteration of the objectionable sign would result in a restoration of the original rate of rent, replying that it was a matter between landlord and tenant that concerned none except the persons immediately interested. When asked if Mr. Fair or Knight & Heggerty had requested the sending of the notice to Pence & Pence, Mr. Sullivan replied that he was not on the witness stand and declined to explain.

Charles J. Heggerty of the firm of Knight & Heggerty spoke more freely. He said: "We have protested against Mrs. Craven flaunting the name 'Mrs. Fair' by having it painted on an office door on the same floor of the same building in which we and our client, Mr. Fair, have offices. We have made this protest acting as attorneys for Mr. Fair, and have let the owners of the building know that if that sign remains we shall move to some other place. We simply don't propose to stand it. We were here first, and that was long before Mrs. Craven laid any pretensions to the name 'Mrs. Fair,' by which she may seek to call herself. Her friends come trooping up the elevator and ask for 'Mrs. Fair's' office, and some of them even drift in here, pretending to be looking for 'Mrs. Fair of the Fair estate.' Besides, we don't want to be so close that there would be any danger of our letters getting mixed. It would be an easy thing for a mistake to be made, and for a letter intended for Mr. Fair to get into 'Mrs. Fair's' hands, or he might [illegible] the [illegible] of a charge that we had got hold of some of her papers, as she did regarding the numerous alleged wills of James G. Fair that she said she had, but which she declares our agents have obtained from her possession by following her all over the world. The sign was put up simply as an insult to our client, Mr. Fair. Those are some of the reasons for our objections. We don't want to be too near her, and so if that name stays on the door we will go."

The name "Mrs. Nettie R. Fair" still remains on the door and Pence & Pence are not making any preparations to move.

Dispute Over Mrs. Craven's Name.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven has rented a room in the Parrott building, next to the office of her attorneys, Pence & Pence, and on the door has put a sign, her name being printed as Mrs. Nettie R. Fair. She says that as she was married to James G. Fair she is entitled to use his name. His son, Charles L. Fair, and the latter's attorneys, Knight & Heggerty, have offices not far from Mrs. Craven's room and on the same floor. They have protested to the manager of the building against the placing the name of Mrs. Fair on the door, and Attorney Heggerty said yesterday that Mrs. Craven would be required to remove it.

DON'T LIKE THE NAME.—Charles Fair has issued a demurrer to Mrs. Craven-Fair's petition for family allowance. He takes the aggressive by asking that the plaintiff be restrained from using his father's name, as she has not proved her right to it.

OBJECTS TO THE NAME SHE PUTS ON THE OOOR.

Mrs. Nellie R. Craven-Fair Rents Offices Near Those of Charles L. Fair.

Even outside of the courts there are interesting phases of the Fair estate dispute. Mention has already been made that whenever Charles L. Fair has occasion to mention the woman who claims to be his step-mother, he refers to her as "Mrs. Nettie R. Craven, falsely styling herself Mrs. Nettie R. Fair."

On her part Mrs. Craven-Fair is equally self-assertive, and noting that Mr. Fair had established for himself an office, with his name lettered on the window, next to and adjoining the office of Knight & Heggerty, his attorneys, on the fifth floor of the Parrott building, she rented an apartment adjoining the offices of Pence & Pence, her attorneys, on the same floor of the same building, and caused to be inscribed in similar letters the sign:

592
MRS. NETTIE R. FAIR,
Private,
Inquire at Room 590

Room 590 is the ante-chamber to the offices of Pence & Pence, her attorneys, and an unsuccessful effort has been made to induce them to remove the name of their client.

Mr. Fair expressed indignation because the name of his would-be stepmother appeared on the door as "Fair" when he considered that it ought to remain "Craven."

"I have been informed that Mr. Fair entered a protest with the proprietors of the Parrott building against Mrs. Fair's name appearing on her office door," said Attorney Lafe Pence, laughingly, "but I presume that was merely his way of having a joke. Of course Mrs. Fair couldn't pay any attention to a thing of that [illegible]."

MRS. CRAVEN IS NOT ESTOPPED.

MAY SHOW THAT SHE IS JAMES G. FAIR'S WIDOW

JUDGE TROUTT AGAIN RULES IN HER FAVOR ON A DEMURRER.

Former Decree Naming the Children as Sole Heirs Cannot Affect Her Petition for an Allowance.

Judge Troutt again decided yesterday that Mrs. Nettie R. Craven was entitled to prove if she could that she was married to James G. Fair and that she should have a monthly allowance out of his estate as his widow. She petitioned for $5000 a month for her support. In the answers of the Fair children to her application it was contended that it was too late for her to make the claim that she was married to Fair, as Judge Slack in a decree of partial distribution signed on April 13, 1895, declared that the only heirs of Fair were his three children, to whom the real estate described in the decree was awarded. This decree, which was not appealed from in the time allowed by law, and which stands, stated in effect that Fair had no wife living. Demurrers to the answers were filed by Mrs. Craven's attorneys, Pence & Pence, and the decision of Judge Troutt yesterday was on these demurrers, which were sustained.

Judge Troutt held that the question as to whether Mrs. Craven could now make any claim as an heir for a widow's share of the estate did not affect her right to ask for a family allowance. He said:

The statutory allowance for a widow's maintenance during the administration of the estate is unquestionably independent of any interest she may have in the distribution of the estate. It is conceivable that a decedent's estate might consist entirely of separate property and be entirely disposed of by will to some person other than the wife, nevertheless the widow should be entitled to a reasonable allowance out of the estate for her maintenance during the settlement of the estate. If a widow waives her right to share in the partial distribution of her deceased husband's estate and even fails to resist another's claim on an application for partial distribution that he is the sole heir, yet she may apply to the Court for the statutory allowance of a reasonable amount for her temporary maintenance.

Pence & Pence and the other attorneys for Mrs. Craven intend to urge her claim for an allowance at once, so as to get, if they can, funds out of the estate for further legal warfare.

MRS. OELRICHS ILL AT THE OPERA.

While Attending a Performance of "Carmen" She Is Overcome.

NEW YORK, December 30.—While the second act of "Carmen" was rushing toward its close to-night in the Metropolitan Opera-house the attention of the audience was distracted from the stage by a commotion in Mrs. Joseph Stickney's box. Something unusual had occurred, that was sure, but after a few moments of craning of necks the audience returned once more to watch "Carmen."

Something had occurred, true enough. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs had been taken ill suddenly. She tried to fight down her weakness, but just before the third act she had to give in. A cab was called hurriedly and she was taken to her home by Mrs. Charles Childs.

FINE SPORT FOR HUNTERS.

Weather Conditions Have Been Favorable and the Birds Plenty.

DUCK SHOOTERS have found the weather during the past week all that could be desired. The birds have worked into the marshes in increased numbers and big bags have been common. Canvasbacks are in evidence on all the principal preserves and have yielded good sport.

The best bags of the week were made in the Suisun country. A. M. Shields shot on the Pringle pond last Sunday and decorated his game strap with fifty canvasbacks. Big bags were made on the preserves of the Teal, Cordelia and Tule Belle Clubs. A fair proportion of "cans" fell to the gunners. Members of the Canvasback Club also enjoyed good shooting. They were outside the canvasback flight, but had no end of sport with birds of more modest quality.

Members of the Olympic Gun Club are now enjoying at Cordelia the best sport they have known since the opening of the season. On Christmas day H. E. Rose killed forty-seven birds, nearly all mallard and sprig. L. Titus picked up forty-one birds of equal quality. Dr. A. T. Derby enjoyed less success than his fellow-members, but made a comfortable bag. A big delegation of members is slated to shoot on the preserve to-morrow and Monday. Among those to shoot are W. D. McArthur, J. H. Fritch, R. H. Delafield, J. J. Wieland, H. E. Rose, H. B. Hosmer, L. W. Harpham, George Walker and H. L. Miller.

Canvasbacks figured largely in all the bags made last Wednesday on preserved ground near Suisun. Colonel Richard Eddy killed seventy-eight birds on one of the ponds of the Cordelia Club. Charles L. Fair and T. Kytka made a big killing on the Fair ponds between Teal and Cordelia. The two strings contained upward of eighty birds and of that number one-half were "cans."

During the week big bags have been made on the grounds of the Alameda Sportsmen's Club at McGill's on the Sonoma marsh. A large proportion of the birds killed have been canvasbacks.

Unpreserved ground in the same locality has also yielded good sport. Numerous good shooting points not under club control can be reached by the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad. Unattached shooters have enjoyed their best success on the bay shore. Members of the Empire Gun Club made good bags last Sunday, both on the bay shore and club ponds. The Petaluma and Miramonte Clubs have had fair success on grounds which they control near Burdell's.

Shooting conditions along the south bay shore show a decided improvement. Excellent bags were made last Sunday at Mount Eden and Alvarado. H. Justins was at Willow lodge with Dr. F. J. Lane. A comfortable string of birds fell to the two guns.

A. Roos enjoyed good shooting last Sunday at San Pablo. Roos will spend tomorrow on the famous Pringle pond at Suisun as a guest of [illegible]. [illegible] Roos will shoot on the preserve of the Olympic Gun Club at Cordelia.

Geese are plentiful on the marshes. The duck hunter who longs for geese will do well to carry with him to his blind a few shells loaded with heavy shot.

Quail-shooting conditions remain unchanged. The birds are still reasonably plentiful about Point Reyes and elsewhere in Marin county. No big bags were made last Sunday at Point Reyes, but most of the gunners who tramped the hills returned [illegible].

A letter from Bakersfield states that the cold weather has driven thousands of quail down from the hills to the valley. [illegible] gunners who witness the opening of the season [illegible] birds to [illegible] good shooting [illegible] before or after the [illegible].

Snipe appeared last week in large numbers near [illegible]. [illegible] good sport [illegible].

THE POLICE COMMISSION.

Men Who Will Control the Guardians of the Peace Under the New Charter.

The Police Commission is composed of men whose names have been prominent in the commercial, professional, financial, political and social circles of the State for many years.

William Thomas, one of the Democratic members, is a partner in the celebrated law firm of Chickering, Thomas & Gregory. He is a native of Worcester, Mass., and is a graduate of the Harvard Law School. Mr. Thomas has lived in San Francisco for twenty-three years, and has never held a political office. He has been concerned in some of the most important litigation that has ever claimed the attention of the courts of the State. Mr. Thomas is known among lawyers as a hard worker, a cogent reasoner, and a man of reserved and studious habits.

William J. Biggy, the second Democratic Commissioner, has made an excellent record in public life as State Senator and as Registrar of Voters of San Francisco, to which position he was appointed by Governor Budd. Mr. Biggy has a high reputation for probity in both public and private affairs. He is Vice-President of the San Francisco Laundry Association.

George A. Newhall, a Republican, is a member of a family which has been prominent in the business, financial and social circles of San Francisco for many years. The Newhalls have been for a long time the mainstay of St. John's Presbyterian Church, which was on Post street years ago, and later on California street. One of the biggest ranches in Southern California is maintained by the family, in addition to their varied business and commercial interests here. George A. Newhall is prominently identified with the management of these properties. He has been President of the Olympic Club and of the Mercantile Library. The Chamber of Commerce has bestowed upon him the office of Vice-President. Not many months ago he made a tour of the Orient and delivered addresses before a number of commercial bodies in Japan and China.

Dr. W. F. McNutt, the second Republican Commissioner, has been for many years one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the country. Among his many responsible positions is that of Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine in the University of California. He is a man of broad attainments, and outside of his profession he has identified himself with the growth and progress of the city and State. Dr. McNutt is prominent in the councils of St. Andrews' Society. He was favorably spoken of as a candidate for Governor a number of years ago. This mention of him was made much against his own wishes. He has always been devoted to his profession, and never has felt the least desire to abandon it for other pursuits.

[illegible] as follows:

Public Works—Mendell, N. P.; Mahoney, R.; Manson, D.

Education—Denman, D.; Casserly, D.; Mark, R.; Kincaid, R.

Civil Service—Quinn, N. P.; Freud, R.; McCarthy, D.

Police—Biggy, D.; Thomas, D.; Newhall, R.; McNutt, R.

Fire—Mahoney, D.; Grady, D.; Hecht, R.; Watt, R.

Election—Deasy, D.; Greenblatt, D.; Kellogg, R.; Voorsanger, R.; Everett, Social Labor.

Park—Zeile, D.; Stanton, D.; McDonald, D.; Spreckels, R.; Lloyd, R.

Health—McCarthy, D.; Baum, D.; Hopkins, D.; Bazet, R.; Williamson, R.

In the thirty-three appointments made by the Mayor there are sixteen Democrats, fourteen Republicans, counting Mrs. Kincaid; two Non-Partisans and one member of the Social Labor party.

HOLLISTER GRAND JURY INOICTS MRS. MANSFIELO

She Is Accused of Writing Anonymous Letters to Her Neighbor, Mrs. Edward Conrad.

HOLLISTER, December 30.—The Grand Jury this morning returned three indictments for criminal libel against Mrs. B. F. Mansfield of this place for having sent anonymous letters to E. Vennor, Mrs. B. F. Scott and Mrs. A. Tonn, severely reflecting upon the character and standing of Mrs. Ed Conrad. Bench warrants were immediately ordered issued by Judge Harding and bail was fixed at $1000 on each indictment. Bail was furnished this afternoon by J. A. Schofield, Charles W. Wagner and John Webb. Next [illegible] at [illegible] o'clock the defendant will be arraigned.

Mrs. Mansfield treats the matter with the utmost scorn and indifference, and says she proposes to show her innocence in the affair in a conclusive manner. The scandal has created a great sensation in this community, as both parties are well known and have always been highly respected. The case will be set for trial about the latter part of January, and promises to be one of the most sensational ever known in this section of the State, as a number of prominent people are likely to be involved in the scandal. It is thought by many that a great mistake [illegible] made in indicting Mrs. Mansfield, and that other parties are the guilty [illegible].

POLICE PARADE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

OVER the streets which had echoed the tread of thousands of blue coated warriors marched the blue coated men of peace. It was the day of the annual police review and four hundred "coppers," as neat and shining as dandy guardsmen, were on parade. They handled rifles like veteran soldiers and looked so serious and awe-inspiring that the admiring small boy, keeping pace with the drum corps, promised himself that some day he, too, should be a policeman.

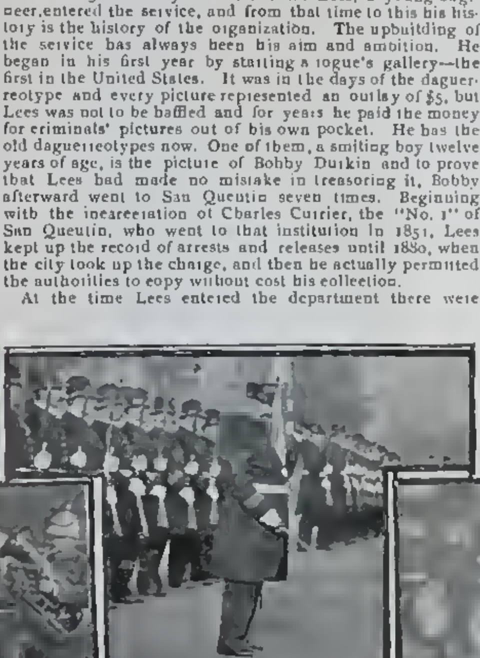
A great day for the Police Department was December 22d, for never have they appeared to better advantage. Every man in line seemed to have a pride in being there; it did not matter whether he was bestriding a steed, carrying a flag or beating a drum. Leading the van came the mounted men of the department, and then the Police Commissioners with their invited guest, Governor Gage. Beside the Executive rode R. J. Tobin, president of the Commission. In the next carriage were Commissioners M. A. Gunst and William Alvord. Then came Chief of Police I. W. Lees, who entered the service when the department was an infant, mounted on a spirited steed which he bestrode with the ease and grace of a dragoon. Beside him cantered his aide, Lieutenant Birdsall, a born policeman, for his father was a San Francisco policeman before him. A band of music, and then came Company A—the men from north of Market street—at the head of which rode Captain Wittman. Next came Company B—the men from the south side and the Potrero—headed by the veteran captain, John Spillane. Company D next—the men of the Mission—their commander, Captain Gillin, striding along with them. Next, Company C—the harbor police—at the head of which marched Captain Dunleavy, the veteran of the water front. The police drum corps and the patrol wagons brought up the rear.

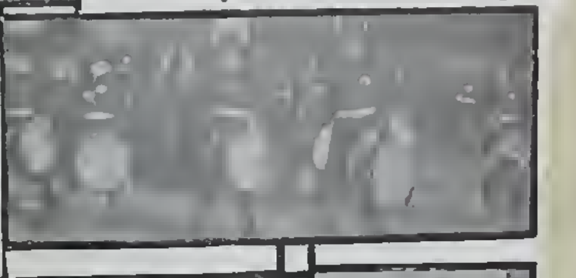
But the big officials were not the only interesting men in line. There were Sergeants Michael Joseph Conboy, policeman and comedian, and first-class in either role; and Sergeant Barney McManus, the two men who have the difficult task of preserving the peace of Tar Flat and adjacent neighborhoods; Sergeant Duncan, bailiff and flag-bearer, and dozens of others whose faces have been familiar to the San Francisco public for years. Nor were all the celebrities of the department in the pageant. Among those who did not take part were Captain Ben Bohen, chief of detectives; Captain John Seymour, guardian of the City Prison and Arnop Bainbridge, the man who remembers every arrested thief for thirty years back.

Among the many thousands who viewed the parade none were more impressed than the few who were pioneers of '49. They turned their minds back to the days when the police department was organized and the brig Euphemia was purchased as a prison ship. The father of Clay Greene, the dramatist, was then president of the Board of Aldermen. That was in 1851. Two years later I. W. Lees, a young engineer, entered the service, and from that time to this his history is the history of the organization. The upbuilding of the service has always been his aim and ambition. He began in his first year by starting a rogue's gallery—the first in the United States. It was in the days of the daguerreotype and every picture represented an outlay of $5, but Lees was not to be baffled and for years he paid the money for criminals' pictures out of his own pocket. He has the old daguerreotypes now. One of them, a smiling boy twelve years of age, is the picture of Bobby Durkin and to prove that Lees had made no mistake in treasoring it, Bobby afterward went to San Quentin seven times. Beginning with the incarceration of Charles Currier, the "No. 1" of San Quentin, who went to that institution in 1851, Lees kept up the record of arrests and releases until 1880, when the city took up the charge, and then he actually permitted the authorities to copy without cost his collection.

At the time Lees entered the department there were eighty-seven men on the police pay-roll, but after the turbulent spirits that disturbed San Francisco in those days had been brought under control, the force was gradually reduced until in 1862 it numbered but fifty four men. That was the low-water mark. Its growth since then can be best shown as follows: 1869, 104 men; 1876, 150; 1878, 329; 1883, 400; 1891, 456; 1895, 557; 1899, 573. The great increase from 1876 to 1878 was due to the sand-lot troubles. During all its years since 1862 there has been a steady, upward progress. With the constant growth in efficiency the police evoluted through various eras of dress reform, including one of gray suits and another of derby hats until they finally reached the sensible and servicable excellence of to-day. As at present instituted the department is one of the best and most efficient police organizations in the world. The credit of its excellence in various lines belongs to various persons. Its records are kept by expert bookkeepers, like Captain C. P. Wright, who as secretary of the Police Commission, has also charge of the pension fund. To Commissioner M. A. Gunst credit is due for some of the most successful innovations. It was Gunst who fought for covered patrol wagons, and went to the expense of purchasing one, presenting it to the city in order to prove that he was right. The gift wagon demonstrated the advantages of covered patrols and the system was adopted. Gunst also championed the helmet against the derby for head covering and after he had won his fight, time and the favor of artistic eyes proved the excellence of his judgment.

The police year begins on July 1st and ends June 30th. The latest records show 27 769 arrests to have been made in that period. Statistics prove that the San Francisco policeman has more work to do than his brothers of the other large cities of the country. San Francisco on June 30th of this year had one policeman to every 533 inhabitants. At the same time New York had one to every 315; Chicago one to 384, Philadelphia one to 399 and Boston one to 400. San Francisco being a seaport city, likely to be visited by the wandering criminals of the world, the lack of men is a serious disadvantage, which thus far has been overcome by constant vigilance and skillful management on the part of the head of the force. Under the new charter the condition is to be changed. Provision has been made for a number of additional officers, but it will require a year's time and the figures of the national census before the reform can be inaugurated. The new basis of allowance wil be one for every 500 inhabitants. Chief Lees believes that the census will show 400.000 residents of San Francisco. This would give 800 policemen, an increase of 228. At present broken hours are the rule—six hours one day and twelve the next. Under the new regime, however, it is expected that a system of eight hours will be adopted. Until then the lot of the policeman in San Francisco is not enviable. Never may he have a full night's sleep. If he is not on duty in the early half of the evening he goes on at midnight, and life is just one long grind of eat, sleep and walk the beat.





Just now the Police Department stands on the threshhold of an uncertain future. Chief of Police Lees, who has seen forty-six years of service, desires to fill out a half century of police work, but the political cards are being dealt out face downward and the trumps may lie in another hand. The composition of the new Police Commission will also have a great bearing on the future of the Department. As soon as procrastinating contractors complete the Hall of Justice the police headquarters will be moved to that building. With the change will be inaugurated the Bertillion system of identifying criminals. Under this system the nose, left foot, left forearm, ear, middle finger, little finger and other organs are measured. The measurements taken never change after a person passes the twentieth year, and because of that fact the system is held to be infallible. After being once established it will also prove economical, as in cases of sending descriptions to other cities it will only be necessary to telegraph a few figures. Chief Lees takes a great interest in this system, and is desirous of holding office long enough to see one of the ambitions of his life—an infallible identification bureau—put in successful operation in San Francisco.

The composition of the police force changes slowly and the next review will probably find nearly all of the men who marched so proudly last week again in uniform, but the question is: Who will be riding the fiery steed that annually caracoles at the head of the procession?

BEST MAN IN THE POLICE DEPARTMENT GOES OUT WITH THE OLD COMMISSION.

Chief Lees Is Retired Upon His Own Motion.

Is Still a Candidate for Honors Under New Charter.

Loyalty to Old Friends the Sole Motive for His Withdrawal.

His Record, His Character and His Ability Such as to Demand That He Be Chosen Once More.

AFTER forty-six years of continuous service, Chief of Police I. W. Lees was retired yesterday at his own request. The retirement, however, does not mean that this veteran official, whose record has never been equaled in the history of organized police the world over, may not again head the magnificent department which he has done so much to build up. On the contrary, he is a candidate for appointment under the new charter to the position which he has just vacated, and his legion of indorsers say that if merit and long years of faithful and brilliant service count for anything the coming week will again find him at the head of the department.

When the Board of Police Commissioners, with President R. J. Tobin presiding, met yesterday shortly before noon as a pension commission, Chief Lees appeared before it and announced that he wished to be retired on a pension. His written application, which was read to the Commission, was worded as follows:

To the Honorable the Board of Police Pension Fund Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco—Gentlemen: I respectfully make this my application to be retired on a pension under the provisions of section 1 of an act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled, "An act to creat a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities and counties, cities and towns of the State," approved March [illegible], as amended by an act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to create a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities and counties, cities and towns of the States, approved March [illegible],'" approved March 2, [illegible].

I am over [illegible] years of age. I was born on the [illegible] day of November, [illegible], in Lancashire, England. I am and have been since the 6th day of April, [illegible], a resident of said city and county of San Francisco, and a citizen of said State of California and of the United States. I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as a member of the regularly constituted Police Department of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, on the [illegible] day of October, [illegible], and I have served for twenty years and more in the aggregate, to-wit: For more than forty-six years as a duly appointed and sworn and qualified member of the regularly constituted Police Department ... as ranking Lieutenant to preside over the Central Station.

Chief Lees attended to the various matters incident to turning over the control of the department to other hands. That duty performed, he made the following statement in response to an inquiry as to whether he was a candidate for reappointment:

"Not having resigned, but having been retired at my own request, I am at all times subject to the orders of the Police Commission. That body can restore me to the position if it sees fit to do so. I had a special reason for retiring at this time. For twenty-two years I have been connected with the present Board of Police Commissioners and I felt that when the men with whom I had so long been associated were not reappointed I, in all manliness, should go down with the ship. The Commission about to retire has made a splendid record. The personnel of the department shows that it has succeeded in getting together as fine a body of men as there is in the world, bar none. Without disparagement to any of the new appointees, I don't think it possible to get a better Board of Police Commissioners than the present one. The devotion to duty, the uniform treatment of the men and the strict enforcement of rules without unjust severity have distinguished the present Board, and it was by such methods that they succeeded in making the police force of to-day one of the most perfect in the world."

The retirement of Chief Lees was ...

... who have been promoted to its ranks by reason of superior conduct or heroic action while on the police force, and therefore it represents on all the most important factor in our Police Department by reason of the capable individuals composing it—a capability sustained by the record of the noble work performed by them.

Whatever may be said of other departments in our municipal government, our city can congratulate itself upon its Police Department, as being well equal to that of any city of the world, and if it were ably backed up by the Police Courts, and heed given to its demands as outlined by the Chief of Police in his annual reports, we could well feel that the suppression of crime and the protection of life and property is as secure here in this city as anywhere in the world. No greater argument in proof of this can be used, than the small percentage of crime as shown by the records of the Police Department of this city. Certainly then we must appreciate the able management of our Chief, I. W. Lees and his staff of officers and subordinates, and to him and them we extend every congratulation and hope that they may long continue to serve us as faithfully and efficiently in the future as they have in the past.

A recital of what Chief Lees has done for the department would fill volumes. He was appointed to the force in 1853, when the department was in its infancy, and from the day when he first put on a star he has devoted his great energy entirely to the work of building up the organization of which he was a member. Not only his energy, but large sums of his own money have been put into the work. When he was put at the head of the detective department forty-five years ago he inaugurated the sys- ... met William Gregg, a notorious robber. Gregg had a gun, but Lees, crippled and unarmed, grappled with him and after a desperate fight of more than half an hour disarmed and arrested the desperate fugitive.

Then there were the cases of Michael Leroy, who killed William Skerritt, Thomas Burns, who killed Charles T. Hill in order to get what proved to be an imitation diamond and the Rees diamond robbery, all worked out by Lees. Through Lees the Morgan-Casey gang of thieving deputies, who collected $10,000 on bogus poll-tax receipts, was broken up and the ringleaders were sent to prison. The scope of Lees' work in that case is made evident by the fact that he went to New York city and to Toronto, Canada, and brought back the plates from which the counterfeit receipts were made. He captured Martin, Patterson and Smith, who robbed the Chico stage of $65,000, he landed Jimmy Hope, the famous safe cracker, in prison for the Sather Bank robbery. It was Lees who caught Marion Hedgepeth, the Missouri train robber, and Joseph C. Duncan, the banker who stole $1,000,000. Duncan was preparing to leave the city and was disguised in woman's clothes at the time of his arrest. Then there is the Becker-Creegan bank forgery case, still familiar in the public mind; the never-to-be forgotten Durrant case, and lastly the Botkin affair, said by eminent criminologists to have been one of the most difficult cases known to modern police ...

PHELAN'S FIRST DEAL HAS BEEN COMPLETED

Chief of Police Lees Retires to Make Way for Esola.

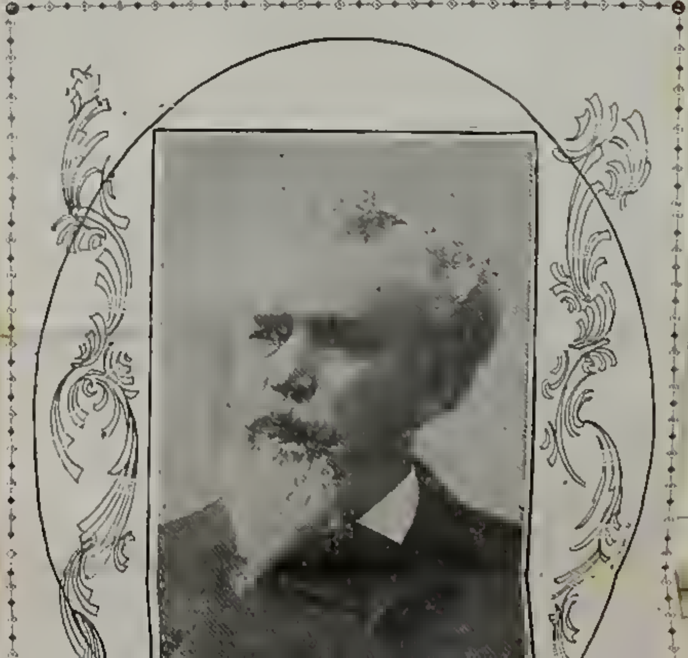
New Commissioners Must Now Carry Out the Contract Through Which They Received Appointment.

THE first sensation in the administration of new San Francisco has been sprung. Isaiah W Lees is no longer Chief of Police. He retired yesterday and his successor will be chosen by the new Police Commission. While the retirement of Chief Lees has the semblance of being voluntary, it is as a matter of fact compulsory. He was forced to give way to Frederick L. Esola, who will be elected at the first meeting of the new commission to take charge of the Police Department. This deal, which affects most materially one of the most important official departments of the city, was predicted by The Call two days ago.

The Police Commission was appointed by Mayor Phelan for the single pur- [illegible] connection with the Police Department was subordinated to this end. Candidates who might have shown some independence of action were sacrificed to those who were willing to pledge them-

The only member of the new commission who did not make an absolute promise to vote for Esola is George Newhall, but his course of action was never a matter of speculation to the friends of Esola. Mr. Newhall's experience in the Olympic Club stood him in good stead. He is an adept at fencing, and while he would give his questioners no definite answer he permitted them to understand that he was ready to obey the wish of the Mayor and knew what that wish was.

Even Mayor Phelan has shown a disposition to deny the deal by which Esola will be made Chief of Police. His denials are, however, as futile as those of the new Commissioners. The Call repeats that Mayor Phelan ap- [illegible] Commission simply would vote as they had been pledged to vote—for Esola. If the Mayor wishes the proof of this assertion he may have it for the asking. He had no alternative in the matter. He was forced to



GEORGE A. NEWHALL, POLICE COMMISSIONER.

W. J. BIGGY, POLICE COMMISSIONER.

ISAIAH W. LEES, RETIRING CHIEF OF POLICE.

selves to elevate Esola to the position he has long sought. The gentlemen who will direct police affairs under the charter were chosen simply because they gave their absolute promise that they would make Esola the successor of Lees.

Even Mayor Phelan gave way to the pressure that was brought upon him and changed the commission as he originally selected it to suit the ideas of those whom he accepted as his dictators. It was his first intention to make Reuben H. Lloyd a Police Commissioner to satisfy the demands of M. H. de Young. When the supporters of Esola learned this fact they voiced a protest and Mayor Phelan scratched the name of Reuben H. Lloyd from his list of eligibles. He had also decided to name D. I. Mahoney as one of the Police Commissioners, but Mr. Mahoney was not satisfactory to the friends of Esola and went the way of Lloyd. D. V. Kelly was also another choice of the Mayor, but fell before the Esola forces.

With one exception every member of the new commission, before he received his commission, gave his solemn, definite pledge to make Esola Chief of Police.

When The Call makes this assertion it knows what it is talking about.

There is now a disposition on the part of two members of the new commission to deny this fact, but the denials are futile. When William Thomas was informed that he might be appointed a Commissioner of Police he was forced to promise that he would make F. L. Esola Chief of Police. William J. Biggy and Dr. McNutt were compelled to make the same promise, and those that know these facts are at a loss to understand why these gentlemen, with the exception of Biggy, who admits his pledge, are now so vehement in their denials of their promises. Their friends have gone so far as to ask them if they have any reason to regret what they have done, or if they know anything that would make their election of Esola an impropriety.

appoint men who would elect Esola and these men must carry out their contract.

Chief Lees was not long in discovering this condition of affairs. He saw that his reign was over and rather than be thrown out by the new commission he determined to accept the privilege of the pension law and go voluntarily upon the retired list. Until ten days ago he believed that at least two members of the present commission would be chosen to serve upon the new board. If this had been done Chief Lees would have been retained in the position from which he has now retired. His friends declare that he believed it his duty to retire with the men with whom he has served so many years.

For nearly a quarter of a century he has served under two of the retiring commissioners. He believes that they have contributed the greatest part of the efficiency which has made the local police department one of the greatest in the nation. Since their services are no longer required he feels that he also should retire. He does not wish it to be understood, however, that he has resigned. He has simply gone upon the retired list and may be asked to return to active duty in the position which he has just left.

His letter to the Commissioners demonstrating this is as follows:

To the Honorable the Board of Police Pension Fund Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco—Gentlemen: I respectfully make this my application to be retired on a pension under the provisions of section three (3) of an act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled "An act to create a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities and counties, cities and towns of the State," approved March 4, 1889, as amended by an act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to create a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund in the several counties, cities and counties, cities and towns of the State, approved March 4, 1889,'" approved March 2, 1897.

I am over 60 years of age. I was born on the 25th day of November, 1830, in Lancashire, England. I am and have been since the 6th day of April, 1849, a resident of said city and county of San Francisco, and a citizen of said State of California and of the United States. I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as a member of the regularly constituted Police Department of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, on the 28th day of October, 1853; and I have served for twenty years and more in the aggregate, to-wit: For more than forty-six years as a duly appointed and sworn and qualified member of the regularly constituted Police Department of the said city and county of San Francisco, that is, I have served continuously as such duly appointed and sworn and qualified member of said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county of San Francisco ever since my said appointment on October 28, 1853. I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as assistant captain of police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county on the 6th day of December, 1854; and I served as such duly appointed and sworn and qualified assistant captain of police from my said appointment as such captain of police until I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as captain of police of and in the regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county, in July, 1857. I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as captain of police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county in July, 1857; and I served as such duly appointed and sworn and qualified captain of police from my said appointment as such captain of police until I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as Chief of Police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department on the 7th day of April, 1897. I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as Chief of Police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county of the 7th day of April, 1897. I was duly appointed and sworn and qualified as Chief of Police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county of San Francisco on the 6th day of December, 1897. Since my said appointment as such Chief of Police on the 7th day of April, 1897, I have served as such Chief of Police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county of San Francisco, and I am now such Chief of Police. I do now hold and have held said rank of Chief of Police of and in said regularly constituted Police Department of said city and county of San Francisco ever since my said appointment as such Chief of Police on the 7th day of April, 1897. That it is fit, just and expedient that I, your applicant, should be so retired on a pension under said section 3, as amended.

With your kind permission I avail myself of this opportunity to tender to your honorable Board my heartfelt thanks for the kindness, esteem and courtesy that your honorable Board has uniformly shown to me.

Hoping that this application will receive your approval I am, with great esteem, your obedient servant. I. W. LEES.

With expressions of regret the Commission granted the Chief's request, President Tobin being visibly affected. The resolution of the retirement carried with it the usual half-pay pension, which in Chief Lees' case means a monthly allowance at the rate of $2000 a year, his salary as head of the department having been $4000.

The pension commission then proceeded to retire fourteen other members of the department, all but two being for disability. In each case an application for a pension had been filed previous to the meeting. Those retired are: Captain Cassius F. Wright, secretary to Chief Lees; Captain James F. Moran, property clerk; Sergeants Thomas Bethel, Thomas Flanders and Hugh Monaghan and Patrolmen Peter Coleman, Thomas H. Dillon, Joseph Doran, Joseph F. Murphy, Levi M. Benjamin, Benjamin F. Rathfon, Thomas Byrne, Maurice Behan and John Connolly.

After the work of the Pension Commission had been concluded the Board of Police Commissioners met in special session and selected R. J. Tobin to act as Chief of Police until the new Police Board elects some one to the vacant position. The first official business of acting Chief of Police Tobin was to send the following letter to Captain G. W. Wittman of the Central Station:

You are hereby detailed to attend at the office of the Chief of Police to act for me and in my name, place and stead during my absence from the office.

R. J. TOBIN, Acting Chief of Police.

A similar notice was sent to the various stations. Captain Wittman detailed Lieutenant John Martin to take command of the First division of Company A and Lieutenant George Birdsall

[...] have distinguished the present Board, and it was by such methods that they succeeded in making the police force of to-day one of the most perfect in the world."

The retirement of Chief Lees was made under the following section of the law creating a police relief, health and life insurance fund in the various counties, cities and towns of the State:

Whenever any person at the taking effect of this act, or thereafter, shall have been duly appointed or selected and sworn and have served for twenty years or more, in the aggregate as a member, in any capacity or any rank whatever, of the regularly constituted Police Department of any such county, city and county, city or town which may hereafter be subject to the provisions of this act, said Board may, if it see fit, order and direct that such person after becoming 60 years of age be retired from further service in such Police Department, and from the date of the making of such order the service of such person in such Police Department shall cease, and such person so retired shall thereafter, during his lifetime, be paid from such a fund a yearly pension equal to one-half of the amount of salary attached to the rank which he may have held in said Police Department for the period of one year next preceding the date of such retirement.

It will be seen from the reading of the law quoted that disability had nothing whatever to do with the retirement of Chief Lees. His mind is quick and keen and he is in full possession of all his faculties. While other men have grown old and feeble in positions without responsibility he, with the burden of protecting the lives and property of the people of a great city resting upon him, has held fast to a strength of mind and body that has been the marvel of the detectives of the age. There were people who said that he had reached the limit of his powers in the Durrant case and that a decline would follow, but when the Botkin case startled the community a little more than a year ago he threw the vigor of a young man and the wisdom of a veteran into the work of tracking and bringing to justice a cunning poisoner. When he had finished the mystery had disappeared and the guilt of the offender had been made clear.

As to the ability of Chief Lees at the present time the Grand Jury which filed its report a few weeks ago has borne witness. In that body were Supervisor-elect R. M. Hotaling, Dr. W. J. Bryan, J. Bennett, W. S. Gage, W. A. Frederick, P. Derydeml, G. F. Gray, A. Jacobs, R. Kahn, J. F. Kennedy, A. Lilienfeld, J. P. McMurray, J. O'Leary, W. J. Ruddick, J. J. Ryan, J. T. Sullivan, W. Wright, J. F. Wulzen and J. C. Wolf. In their report these men had the following to say in relation to Chief Lees' management of the Police Department:

Let us first note the commendable economy that has marked the splendid administration of this department under its present Chief, I. W. Lees. As an assistance we would witness the fact of his having saved within the past year from the contingent fund committed to his care the sum of $2222.75, which balance reverted to the general fund of the treasury of the city. Furthermore, a large number of revolvers and rifles now in use by the Police Department were purchased out of the contingent funds of past years without having extra appropriations for that purpose. There are many minor instances that might be cited, which together with other matters in various branches of the Police Department, make us feel that Chief Lees is indeed the right man in the right place.

The system of keeping the books we found most excellent, all the work being characterized by great neatness and good penmanship. The practice of preserving a carefully indexed set of photographs of criminals was most commendable. The care and management of prison property, the method of keeping a record of all sentences, accounts and whatever else is involved in the criminal records of prisoners; in short, every detail of the management of the Police Department merits unqualified praise, and it is only a source of regret that more of our representative citizens do not look into the work of this department, so that a wider knowledge of its true excellence might be had and our citizens less inclined to try to fix the blame for the unfortunately frequent miscarriage of justice upon this excellent institution when the fault most palpably lies elsewhere.

The detective force is composed of men [...] to the work of building up the organization of which he was a member. Not only his energy, but large sums of his own money have been put into the work. When he was put at the head of the detective department forty-five years ago he inaugurated the system of photographing criminals. There was no fund for that purpose, and he drew on his own resources. That was in the time of daguerreotypes, and for every picture added to the collection $5 went out of the pocket of Captain Lees. Not another police department in the United States had a rogues' gallery, but he saw the great advantage of such a collection and he freely gave his money for the public good. After he had been collecting pictures at his own expense for several years other large cities adopted the system, and to-day every city of any importance has a collection of criminals' pictures.

It was Lees, also, who inaugurated the system of keeping records and descriptions of criminals. His records began with the first man who went to San Quentin. Three great volumes were filled, the work all being done at the expense of Lees. Those three books cost him $2500, and the city had the use of them without price. At last, in 1882, a contingent fund was provided for the use of the Police Department and the city began to pay for the keeping up of the books. The records compiled by Chief Lees run back to the days of the argonauts, yet they cost the city nothing. When the city took up the work of photographing criminals Lees allowed copies to be made of all the pictures of his collection, and the city did not have to pay for that. It was Lees who inaugurated and completed the most perfect system of criminal identification that exists, and though it is soon to be superseded by the Bertillon system, the change was not proposed because of any dissatisfaction, but because all great cities are adopting the Bertillon method, making it advisable for San Francisco to have a criminal identification system uniform with that of other great cities. The result of the work begun and carried on by Lees is that the local Police Department now has a collection of 40,000 pictures of criminals. In addition it has a description of every one of these criminals. Thirty-five hundred of the pictures are of law-breakers of other countries. The keeping of an indexed record of all Police Court cases was also brought about by Lees.

In point of police service no one has ever equaled the record of Lees. His forty-six years of thief-taking stands alone far in advance of the next best record. All over the world police officials look upon him as a master, a man who knew the business when they were but children and who has grown keener and wiser with every passing year. Of all the Chiefs of Police in the United States only one has served over thirty years against Lees' forty-six, and that is Roger O'Meara of Pittsburg, who has about thirty-five years to his credit.

The detective work of Lees would make a story more wonderful and absorbing than any ever told by the masters of criminal fiction. He has solved mystery after mystery. Sometimes the work took years. Dorsey and Patterson, who held up a stage near Nevada City and killed Banker Cummings, were brought to justice nine years afterward. The crime did not take place in Lees' domain, but he wanted those men and he never gave up seeking them. He caught Patterson in St. Louis and Dorsey in Union City, Ind. Dorsey had gained a reputation in Union City as a philanthropist and Lees had to fight off a mob to get his man.

Among the famous cases of early days handled successfully by Lees were the Edward Bonney murder case, the Thomas Chito vitriol-throwing case and the Michael Grant robbery. A few chippings from a burglar's chisel served to bring about Grant's downfall and he admitted his guilt after he had been convicted. In 1859, while arresting Cummings, who took part in the killing of William Lameete, Lees dislocated his ankle and for months had to use crutches. While still crippled he [...]san bank forgery case, still familiar in the public mind; the never-to-be-forgotten Durrant case, and lastly the Botkin affair, said by eminent criminologists to have been one of the most difficult cases known to modern police annals.

There are thousands of cases in which Lees has distinguished himself. It is his work that has caused professional thieves from the East to give San Francisco a wide berth. He has made the city better by keeping the criminal element in check and it is that which has won him the confidence of its people. No class recognizes the merits of Lees more than the business men and they, in common with the great majority of the people of San Francisco, are anxious to have him resume charge of the Police Department. The policemen on the beats, the detectives, the subordinate police officials, all have confidence in Lees and his permanent retirement from the department might mean a lessening of the efficiency of the department. No man has stood more loyally by his men, and it is this more than any other thing that has made the San Francisco force the perfect organization that it is to-day.

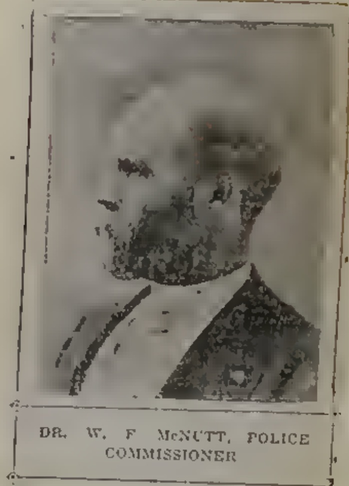
That the esteem in which Lees holds the Police Commissioners is mutual was amply shown last night, when two of the Board, Alvord and Tobin, told what they thought of the retiring Chief:

"I fear," said R. J. Tobin, president of the Board of Police Commissioners, "that the retirement of I. W. Lees from the administration of the Police Department will prove a misfortune to the city of San Francisco. In my opinion it will be many years before his peer is found. The best that can be wished is that the department will be continued under the new administration as efficiently as it is when it is turned over to them. When Lees assumed the duties of Chief of Police he found the department to be one of the best if not the best in the world and he has certainly kept it up to that high standard. He has labored constantly for the betterment of the department, and this, together with his ability as an administrative officer, has contributed to his success. I consider him second to none in the world as an officer, and the city was indeed fortunate in having such a man to administer its police affairs. In fact, his reputation is worldwide. San Francisco has had two men who have given her the best police administrations that she has ever had. They are Crowley and Lees.

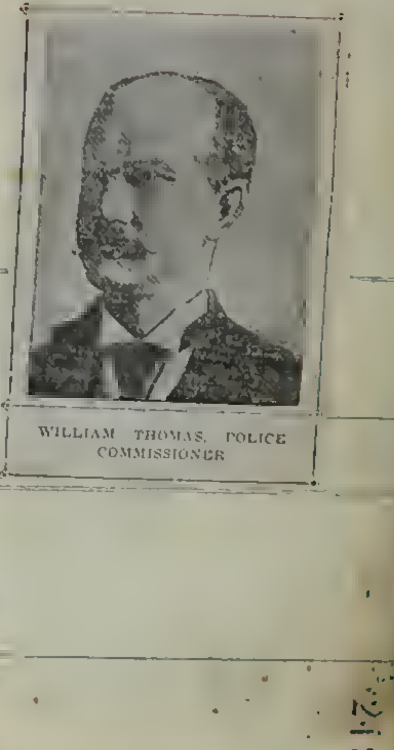
"As to the honesty of Lees there is not the slightest question. His integrity is of the highest and I believe that he was always honest and just in his administration of that department. To me there was something very pathetic about his retirement to-day. It seemed like the breaking up of an old family. Lees is moral, honest, sober and able. What more could be said of any man?"

"I consider Chief Lees the best man in the San Francisco Police Department," said Police Commissioner William Alvord. "We considered him so when we appointed him to succeed Crowley, and he has done nothing to cause us to change that estimate. He has conducted the department in a manner which has been highly satisfactory to myself as a Police Commissioner, and I believe to my colleagues as well. It has often been the case where a man once elected to that office manages one way or another to pull through, but it was not so with Lees. He was thoroughly familiar with the department and he conducted it as he thought right and without the assistance of any power behind the throne.

"There is now no better man on the local Police Department than Chief Lees, and if the new Commission is in search of one they will have to look for him outside of the department. It was his ambition to have served fifty years with the police of this city, and I also had hoped that his wish would be gratified, and I am sorry that he is no longer at the head of the local police."



DR. W. F. McNUTT, POLICE COMMISSIONER



WILLIAM THOMAS, POLICE COMMISSIONER

THAT LEAK

In the Office of "Acting" Chief of Police Biggy.

Serious charges have been filed by "Acting Chief" Biggy against Otto Heyneman, the stenographer in the office of Chief of Police. He is accused of betraying secrets of the "upper office" and will be tried by the Police Commission at a meeting next Tuesday night.

Heyneman denies the charges, and Reuben Lloyd, who stood his sponsor at the time of his appointment to the force, is preparing his defense. Acting Chief Biggy refuses to make public the specific charges, contenting himself with stating that charges of the character mentioned have been made against Heyneman. Biggy also admits that another member of the "upper office" is under suspicion, and that the leaking of State secrets must be stopped. For some time information, important in certain quarters, has leaked out. The "Acting Chief" had the matter called forcibly to his attention by a merchant informing him that a certain employe in his office had offered to "tip off" official secrets for $10 per month.

Friends of Heyneman are convinced that an injustice is being done the young officer, on whom up to the present not a breath of suspicion has ever breathed.

Heyneman denies the charges in toto. "There is not a word of truth in the charges as filed by Mr. Biggy," he said. "I am willing and anxious that the Commissioners shall make the fullest investigation of the charges. I shall insist on an open trial and am confident that I will be fully exonerated."

LEES RETIRES FROM THE POLICE SERVICE

COMMISSIONER ROBERT J. TOBIN, WHO HAS TEMPORARILY ASSUMED COMMAND OF THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

ISAIAH W. LEES was yesterday retired, at his own request, from the office of Chief of Police and was placed on the pension list at $2,000 a year, or half his former salary. The order went into immediate effect.

In the morning Attorney Louderback visited members of the board and asked them if they would vote to retain Lees on half-pay. The answer was that they would and the attorney then stated that the petition would be presented.

With Lees were retired these other members of the department, each on half-pay pension:

NAME.	RANK.	MONTHLY PENSION.
Carolus P. Wright	Clerk to Chief	175 00
James F. Moran	Property Clerk	75 00
Hugh Monaghan	Sergeant	62 50
Thomas Flanders	Sergeant	62 50
Thomas Bethel	Sergeant	62 50
Joseph Dolan	Patrolman	50 00
Joseph F. Murphy	Patrolman	50 00
Levi M. Benjamin	Patrolman	50 00
Benjamin Bathlon	Patrolman	50 00
Thomas Byrne	Patrolman	50 00
Maurice Behan	Patrolman	50 00
John Connolly	Patrolman	50 00
Thomas H. Dillon	Patrolman	50 00
Peter Coleman	Patrolman	50 00

All the retirements were made on voluntary application. Dillon and Coleman had reached the age limit—sixty years—and the others were retired on account of physical disability. Captain Wright, who is secretary to the Police Commission, as well as clerk in the Chief's office, will remain on duty until Friday. The other retirements were dated from December 31, 1899.

The fifteen applications for retirement were presented at 12 o'clock yesterday, when the Police Commissioners held a meeting as a Board of Police Pension Fund Commissioners. No public announcement had been made of the meeting, and even in the department there was nothing known of the retirements until the board had adjourned at 1:30 o'clock.

After meeting as a pension board, the members resolved themselves back into the Police Commission and turned the active management of the department over to Commissioner Robert J. Tobin. An hour later Mr. Tobin deputized Captain George W. Wittman to act for him, sending a copy of the following notice to each of the captains:

SAN FRANCISCO, January 2, 1900.

Office of the Chief of Police.

Captain George W. Wittman—Sir: You are hereby detailed to attend at the office of the Chief of Police and to act for me and in my name, place and stead during my absence from the office.

Respectfully, ROBERT J. TOBIN.

The formal application made by Acting Chief Lees for retirement recites the facts that he was born in Lancashire, England, November 25, 1830, and is therefore over sixty-nine years old; that he has been a resident of San Francisco since April 6, 1849, that he became a policeman on October 28, 1853; that he was appointed assistant captain on December 6, 1854, that he became captain in July, 1857; that he was made Chief on April 7, 1897. In addition he thanked the Commissioners for their courtesy to him in the past.

The Commissioners formally found Lees' statement of facts to be true and then decreed:

Now, therefore, it is, on this 2d day of January, A. D. 1900, ordered and directed, and this, the Board of Police Pension Fund Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco, hereby orders and directs that said I. W. Lees be, and he is hereby, retired on a pension from further service in the police department of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, as provided in Section 3 of said Act of the Legislature of the State of California, approved March 4, 1889, as amended as aforesaid; and that said I. W. Lees, hereafter, and during his lifetime, be paid from the Police Relief and Pension Fund of the police department of the aforesaid City and County of San Francisco, a yearly pension equal to one-half of the amount of salary attached to the rank of Chief of Police which he, the said I. W. Lees, held as aforesaid in the said police department for the period of one year next preceding the date of his retirement.

Lees retires from the Police Department one of the wealthiest men in the city. In a statement that had been prepared for him and which he handed to the press yesterday afternoon the former Chief states that after forty-six years of service to the city, upon which he started with a private capital of $25,000, and during which time he spent for the city of his own funds many thousand dollars more than his entire income from his salary, he retires to private life a rich man. The one item of pictures of criminals Lees says cost him $100,000 out of his private fortune, while the money he has spent in other directions without hope of reimbursement aggregates many thousands of dollars more. The former Chief does not make public the exact amount of his wealth. He does not even approximate it. But real estate men who have placed valuations upon his holdings, and capitalists who are familiar with his investments in other fields of speculation, have stated that he is worth an immense sum.

By way of explaining the seeming inconsistencies in his statement the former Chief says that he has made money in real estate investments, and adds, quoting his language literally, "and all that I ever paid for real estate was $10,080. I have paid more for taxes than I have ever got out of the city." Lees explains, perhaps by way of showing that he was capable of making shrewd investments, that before he became a member of the Police Department he loaned money at a profit to Nicholas Luning and James M. Donahue. The money they paid him was part of the $25,000 he had when he became a policeman. Details of the loans are not given.

Lees, who is now in his seventieth year, has the distinction of the longest unbroken police service on record in the United States. Chief O'Meara of Pittsburgh, who has served thirty-five years, is second.

The former Chief has, of course, been identified with most of the prominent criminal cases in the history of San Francisco. Among these he mentions the Bonney and Buron murder convictions in the early years; the stage robbery near Nevada City and the murder of Banker Cummings, for which Patterson was hanged and Dorsey was sent to prison for life—the offenders having been captured nine years after the murder; the Thomas Chile vitriol case; the famous Casey poll-tax forgeries, and the Joseph C. Duncan bank wrecking.

Well known as a collector of books, Lees has a library that contains a great number of rare books and is in many respects the most remarkable on this Coast. He has been accumulating photographs and historical curios since 1849. Many of these curios were at the City Hall and the veteran policeman was busy yesterday in packing up and removing them. Among the souvenirs found in a desk was a horseshoe, once worn by Occident, which had been presented by Senator Stanford.

The candidates being considered are Captain Spillane, Captain Wittman, Captain Dunleavy and Lieutenant Esola.

The Police Commissioners will hold a meeting at 8 o'clock this evening.

DUST OF A RESTAURANT CLINGS TO HIS ERMINE

Citizens of Oakland Deprecate Police Judge Smith's Act.

Clashing Statements of Principals in the "Crap Game" Scandal May Lead to a Sensational Climax.

"CRAP" GAMESTERS ENTERTAINING JUDGE SMITH.

THERE were eight persons arrested late at night for engaging in an alleged unlawful gambling game, and upon request of one of the attorneys of the persons so charged I left my residence in order to accept bail and bonds for their release. This I considered my duty, and it is not exceptional, but has often been done by me before. After the official duty of releasing the defendants had been accomplished, I was invited by Attorney Harry Pulcifer, a personal friend of mine, to partake of some slight refreshment at the restaurant on Eleventh street.

While there some of the persons charged with gambling came in, without my knowledge or connivance, and, it being a public place, had as much right there as I had.

There was no conversation held of the least impropriety. These persons were jointly charged and demanded separate trials, and each demanded a jury trial. This should be sufficient to show that the persons so charged did not have any abiding faith that if their cases were left to my judgment a judgment of not guilty would be rendered.

I will also add that the defendant Deacon, the first of these persons tried, was found guilty by a jury; that I refused a new trial and fined the defendant $100 with an alternative of fifty days in jail.

I will also add that before I arrived on the night in question to accept bail, the Police Department had fixed the bail at $30, which several defendants gave before I arrived, but upon my arrival I fixed the bail for the defendants still in custody at $100, and they gave bonds in such sum.

While the article found in The Call makes no direct charge of corruption against me, it would seem that the hope is indulged that the public will draw such an inference. This is a great injustice to me, and I make this statement of facts from which every impartial mind will at once see there was no impropriety in my conduct, and that no act or word was spoken inconsistent with the performance of my whole duty. MORTIMER SMITH.

Oakland, January 5, 1900.

POLICE JUDGE MORTIMER SMITH of Oakland evidently looks upon the publication of his act in supping with two "crap" players as a huge joke. Not taking into consideration his Honor's choice of associates, the impropriety of pandering to the whims of the gustatory nerve in the company of men upon whose alleged crimes he was afterward supposed to sit in judgment hardly seems to have struck him with the force of the proverbial ton of brick.

True, as soon as he had read the article in The Call in reference to his midnight meal with Joe Rosenberg, the proprietor of the house in which the gambling occurred, and S. J. Richardson, banker of the game so dear to heart of the street gamin, Judge Smith developed an aggravated case of Weyler fever and pummeled an explanation out of his typewriting machine, finding a market for his output in the local evening papers. Having finished the work of putting himself on record in fin-de-siecle style, his Honor looked upon the finished product and decided that it was good. Then he was ready for a "josh."

"What bothers me most," he said, "was The Call putting a bunch of poppies beside my picture. I am undecided whether they were meant to convey something unfavorable to me or were inserted as a sort of vague explanation that the whole article was a 'pipe dream.'"

This assertion, taken in conjunction with the Judge's remarks about a "steer" in taking him to the restaurant, and his levity in commenting on the "crap" game, shows that as a josher he is undoubtedly a heavy-weight. "If Deacon had gone on the stand and testified that there were no 'bones' thrown," he declared, "I would have caused his arrest for perjury."

Harry Pulcifer, the attorney in the case, is inclined to look upon the situation as serious. He was so exceedingly cautious about being quoted that as he gave forth each sentence for publication he hailed it [...]

Deacon a new trial, though I doubt not we could get a new trial by appealing to the Superior Court on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. Deacon could have been granted a new trial and nothing would have been said except by the police, who made out a bad technical case and feel disgruntled accordingly."

The pulse of public opinion, as felt on the street, shows things in a slightly different light as regards the Deacon affair. Judge Smith himself points to his action in this case with pride, but fails to mention that the $100 fine imposed was the minimum under the statute. Nor is the statement of Attorney Pulcifer that Deacon could have been granted a new trial without causing other than police objection accepted without question—it being maintained that the granting of a new trial in view of the evidence introduced, would have caused a storm of protest and criticism. Judge Smith also contradicts Pulcifer by declaring that Rosenberg sat at another table, the partition being removed between two rooms.

To say that the article in The Call created a sensation in the city of Oakland would be to put it very mildly. Nothing else of any consequence was talked of in the street, the opinion expressed being generally unfavorable to the little party whose gastronomic qualities were so markedly developed just before the time for the herald of a new day to mount the roof fence and sound his clarion note. The feeling is not strongly censorious, but rather of a deprecatory nature, a feeling that Judge Smith's act was improper and tended to lower the dignity of the ermine.

Joe Rosenberg simply keeps still and "saws wood." All efforts to get his version of the affair resulted in failure.

It is likely that developments may arise in a short time which will give the affair a new aspect and everybody is on the alert to see what phase the case will next assume.

ACCUSE TAX COLLECTOR

Two of Sheehan's Former Clerks Make Their Affidavits.

CHARGES MADE AGAINST CHIEF DEPUTY ALSO.

JAMES D. WISEMAN AND HIRAM P. GOLDSTEIN TELL A STORY OF FRAUD.

Warrants Said to Have Been Made Out in Favor of Men Who Never Worked in the Office.

The frequent and persistent rumors of illegal assessments and dummy warrants against the treasury and various other kinds of malfeasance in the Tax Collector's office assumed tangible shape yesterday. Affidavits were sworn to before a notary by two clerks of the Tax Collector's office making specific charges of criminal acts perpetrated by the chief deputy in the office, with the connivance of Tax Collector Sheehan, whose signature was attached to a fraudulent warrant.

It has long been an open secret in the City Hall that the Tax Collector's office was the asylum and dumping ground for petty politicians, who were there merely for the purpose of drawing their salaries, that they hypothecated their demands long before they were due, signed and swore to any demand their superior asked them to. The office was notorious for the numerous and frequent assessments levied upon the employes, upon one pretense or another, for tokens, in the shape of jewels or coin to be presented to the Tax Collector or some favorite of his, without the slightest cause or provocation.

The office became more notorious than had been the case with any other municipal department during corrupt boss rule. It was a well-known fact that men drew salaries who had not worked in the office, and that warrants were drawn for persons who had never been seen on the premises, and some deputy was coerced to impersonate these fictitious people, swear to the correctness of the warrant and allow the chief deputy to draw the money. The business of the office was conducted in a slip-shod way, and the condition of the books was "a disgrace to the city," said Deputy Auditor Don Leary.

When Sheehan assumed office two suits were filed against him for violation of the purity of election law, to deprive him of the office and have a fine imposed upon him. He compromised these suits by giving patronage to his accusers. He had been in office but a short time, when he laid plans for a second term, and the levying of assessments on his clerks and deputies commenced. He failed to secure the nomination at the hands of the Republican Convention, but nothing daunted, he conceived some scheme by which he might hold on to the place a while longer, meanwhile squeezing assessments out of his deputies and collecting demands for people who did not exist, until some of his deputies became exasperated at his rapacity and rebelled. They threatened exposure of the rascally practice in vogue in the office, and were dismissed for their daring. Two of these deputies, who had been employed in the office but since discharged, James D. Wiseman and Hiram P. Goldstein, yesterday told of some of the dubious transactions into which the chief deputy tried to draw them, but which were too shady for even a moment's consideration, and made affidavit to one particular fraud of which both had positive knowledge, this transaction being but a sample of what was the usual practice in the Tax Office.

The following, omitting only the legal verbiage and frequent repetitions, is the affidavit of James D. Wiseman, corroborated by Hiram P. Goldstein and sworn to before Notary W. T. Hess:

James D. Wiseman, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a duly qualified elector, resides at 1655 Howard street, and has been a resident of San Francisco for thirty-eight years; that he is a clerk and accountant, and was employed in the office of Tax Collector Sheehan in April, 1899, that on April 21, 1899, P. J. Hagan, Sheehan's chief deputy, asked Wiseman to go up stairs to the office of the Board of Supervisors and swear to a demand for $100 for services as clerk in the office of the Tax Collector for the month of April, 1899, made out in favor of Edwin Chapman and purporting to be for services rendered by said Edwin Chapman during the month of April, 1899. The demand was signed Edwin Chapman, and the address was given as 318 Twenty-sixth street, San Francisco. Wiseman declined to swear to the warrant or to impersonate Chapman, and told Hagan that he had just been to the rooms of the Supervisors and had sworn to his own demand for services rendered in the Tax Office, and besides that it would not do for him to appear and swear in the name of Edwin Chapman because he (Wiseman) was well known to the employes of the Board of Supervisors and to most persons employed in the City Hall, having been employed in the several offices for a number of years. The demand which Hagan wanted Wiseman to swear to had been approved by and bore the signature of Edward I. Sheehan, Tax Collector, in Sheehan's own handwriting, which is familiar to Wiseman. Hagan said to Wiseman that was all right, and got some one else to swear to the demand.

During the month of April no such person as Chapman, or any such like name worked in the office of the Tax Collector. Wiseman was continuously employed in that office during April and knew all the clerks and employes, and knows personally that no such person as Edwin Chapman worked or was employed in that office during the month nor at any time [in] the month of November or December. After being threatened with dis[...]

"CRAP" GAMESTERS ENTERTAINING JUDGE SMITH.

THERE were eight persons arrested late at night for engaging in an alleged unlawful gambling game, and upon request of one of the attorneys of the persons so charged I left my residence in order to accept bail and bonds for their release. This I considered my duty, and it is not exceptional, but has often been done by me before. After the official duty of releasing the defendants had been accomplished, I was invited by Attorney Harry Pulcifer, a personal friend of mine, to partake of some slight refreshment at the restaurant on Eleventh street.

While there some of the persons charged with gambling came in, without my knowledge or connivance, and, it being a public place, had as much right there as I had.

There was no conversation held of the least impropriety. These persons were jointly charged and demanded separate trials, and each demanded a jury trial. This should be sufficient to show that the persons so charged did not have any abiding faith that if their cases were left to my judgment a judgment of not guilty would be rendered.

I will also add that the defendant Deacon, the first of these persons tried, was found guilty by a jury; that I refused a new trial and fined the defendant $100 with an alternative of fifty days in jail.

I will also add that before I arrived on the night in question to accept bail, the Police Department had fixed the bail at $30, which several defendants gave before I arrived, but upon my arrival I fixed the bail for the defendants still in custody at $100, and they gave bonds in such sum.

While the article found in The Call makes no direct charge of corruption against me, it would seem that the hope is indulged that the public will draw such an inference. This is a great injustice to me, and I make this statement of facts from which every impartial mind will at once see there was no impropriety in my conduct, and that no act or word was spoken inconsistent with the performance of my whole duty. MORTIMER SMITH.

Oakland, January 6, 1900.

POLICE JUDGE MORTIMER SMITH of Oakland evidently looks upon the publication of his act in supping with two "crap" players as a huge joke. Not taking into consideration his Honor's choice of associates, the impropriety of pandering to the whims of the gustatory nerve in the company of men upon whose alleged crimes he was afterward supposed to sit in judgment hardly seems to have struck him with the force of the proverbial ton of brick.

True, as soon as he had read the article in The Call in reference to his midnight meal with Joe Rosenberg, the proprietor of the house in which the gambling occurred, and S. J. Richardson, banker of the game so dear to heart of the street gamin, Judge Smith developed an aggravated case of Weyler fever and pumped an explanation out of his typewriting machine, finding a market for his output in the local evening papers. Having finished the work of putting himself on record in fin-de-siecle style, his Honor looked upon the finished product and decided that it was good. Then he was ready for a "josh."

"What bothers me most," he said, "was The Call putting a bunch of poppies beside my picture. I am undecided whether they were meant to convey something unfavorable to me or were inserted as a sort of vague explanation that the whole article was a 'pipe dream.'"

This assertion, taken in conjunction with the Judge's remarks about a "steer" in taking him to the restaurant, and his versatility in commenting on the "crap" game, shows that as a josher he is undoubtedly a heavy-weight. "If Deacon had gone on the stand and testified that there were no 'bones' thrown," he declared, "I would have caused his arrest for perjury."

Harry Pulcifer, the attorney in the case, is inclined to look upon the situation as serious. He was so exceedingly cautious about being quoted that as he gave forth each sentence for publication he jotted it down in shorthand upon a sheet of paper placed before him, though freely admitting that all had dined at the same table.

"The Judge and I are good friends," he said, "and I have been out to supper with him many times before. The night of the arrest, December 17, Joe Rosenberg and Max Koenig, one of the bondsmen, went out with me to see him. Cash bail had been given for all of the men arrested but two, and our idea was to get Judge Smith to approve the bonds of these two.

"We all went to the courthouse, where the bonds were approved and filed. The other two then departed and the Judge went with me to the restaurant at my suggestion. We did not expect to see either Rosenberg or Big Richardson there and the case had been dismissed from my mind. It seems that the same idea occurred to the other two and we found them at the restaurant when we got there.

"The subject of the arrests did come up at the restaurant, I believe, but the Judge said nothing of a compromising nature. It is natural for a defendant's lawyer to make out as strong a case for his client as possible, and I suppose I did so to the Judge. For this reason it was proper for him to say that if I represented things correctly no case existed and the men would escape conviction. It was a mere innocent remark on his part, and his fairness is shown by his conviction of Deacon, whom he fined $100. He also refused Deacon a new trial, though I doubt not we could get a new trial by appealing to the Superior Court on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. Deacon could have been granted a new trial and nothing would have been said except by the police, who made out a bad technical case and feel disgruntled accordingly."

The pulse of public opinion, as felt on the street, shows things in a slightly different light as regards the Deacon affair. Judge Smith himself points to his action in this case with pride, but fails to mention that the $100 fine imposed was the minimum under the statute. Nor is the statement of Attorney Pulcifer that Deacon could have been granted a new trial without causing other than police objection accepted without question—it being maintained that the granting of a new trial in view of the evidence introduced would have caused a storm of protest and criticism. Judge Smith also contradicts Pulcifer by declaring that Rosenberg ate at another table, the partition being removed between two rooms.

To say that the article in The Call created a sensation in the city of Oakland would be to put it very mildly. Nothing else of any consequence was talked of in the street, the opinion expressed being generally unfavorable to the little party whose gastronomic qualities were so markedly developed just before the time for the herald of a new day to mount the rear fence and sound his clarion note. The feeling is not strongly censorious, but rather of a deprecatory nature, a feeling that Judge Smith's act was improper and tended to lower the dignity of the ermine.

Joe Rosenberg simply keeps still and "saws wood." All efforts to get his version of the affair resulted in failure.

It is likely that developments may arise in a short time which will give the affair a new aspect and everybody is on the alert to see what phase the case will next assume.

Wiseman believes that Sheehan and Hagan hunted up a man who went under the name of E. Chapman and whom they employed during November or December, presumably for the purpose of forestalling the disclosure which Wiseman had threatened Hagan that he was about to make in the month of October.

The warrant which Hagan has asked Wiseman to falsely swear to was sworn to by some other person unknown to Wiseman, on the same day, was duly audited in its course and paid by the City and County Treasurer and bears No. 12,765. It came into the hands of Iller & Hegrosburger, purporting to have been assigned to them by Chapman. Wiseman took pains to investigate the existence of Edwin Chapman and found that no person of that name resided at 318 Twenty-sixth street, but found that a person by the name of John Edward Mayne Young Chapman did, on June 7, 189-, register in the office of the Registrar of Voters from 2318 Twenty-sixth street. The warrant is signed Edwin Chapman; the affidavit in the registration office is signed John Edward Mayne Young Chapman, and the handwriting of the two signatures is dissimilar and not at all alike. The person who registered is described in the affidavit of registration as having three fingers off his right hand, and no person having three fingers off his right hand was ever employed during the month of April, 1899, in the office of the Tax Collector.

About the month of October or November affiant had a conversation with said P. J. Hagan in which reference was made to the matters above stated, and said P. J. Hagan admitted to this affiant that he had asked him to swear falsely to said demand. This was two or three days after a presentation by the deputies and clerks of the Tax Collector's office to the Tax Collector of a bejeweled snuffbox and $25 in cash had been raised by assessment upon deputies and clerks of the office. Affiant believes that investigation will disclose many other transactions of the same character.

Hiram P. Goldstein was sworn and deposed that he was a clerk in the office of Edward J. Sheehan, Tax Collector, during the month of April, 1899, that no person named Edwin Chapman and no person having three fingers off his right hand worked in said office during that month; that J. H. Wiseman told affiant the matters above stated at the time that they occurred and affiant examined the warrant in the office of the Auditor and found the facts to be as stated in said Wiseman, so far as affiant can ascertain.

POLICE SEEK ARMY WOMAN

Warrant for Arrest of Chaplain Swift's Wife.

MANY CITY HOUSES WERE VICTIMIZED.

FORGED REQUESTS FOR MONEY SENT TO ALCATRAZ ISLAND.

Military Authorities Have Cabled to Husband at Manila—Wife is Staying at the Palace Hotel.

A prison cell awaits Mrs. M. A. Swift, wife of Chaplain Swift of the Thirteenth United States Infantry. Yesterday a warrant was sworn out for her arrest on the charge of obtaining goods and money under false pretenses. When apprehended it is possible that a more serious charge may be made, since she stands accused of having uttered a forged check. Moreover, the similarity between her handwriting and that of the name signed to the check is regarded as more than a coincidence.

Investigation has demonstrated to those interested that the person who passed the forged piece of paper upon the firm of Mangrum & Otter was, in reality, the wife of the chaplain. Why she should be guilty of such an act is a mystery to her friends, who declare that she cannot be in her right mind, or else that at the time she was under the influence of a drug which she is known to use.

It was upon the advice of Detective Cody that A. S. Mangrum swore to the warrant yesterday before Police Judge Cabaniss. The accusations relate to the purchase by the woman on January 8th of hardware valued at $14 75, for which she presented a forged check for $30 in payment, receiving $15 25 in change. Now that the matter has been made public there are other merchants who recall similar dealings with the wife of the chaplain. Among the stores where it is said she bought goods and either failed to pay or presented checks signed with her husband's name are mentioned Smith's Cash Store, Goldberg, Bowen & Co., Spreckels' Market, a fur store on Grant avenue and a Market-street wholesale grocery firm.

Mangrum & Otter are the first, however, to make complaint.

The scandal has caused a sensation in Army circles, and efforts are being made to straighten matters out before an arrest is made. Already a cable has been sent to Chaplain Swift and other correspondence has been prepared to be forwarded by mail. At Alcatraz Island, where was stationed for a time the chaplain before his departure to Manila, his wife and her eccentricities are well known. After her return from the Philippines General Shafter issued an order that she be assigned to quarters on the island, as she desired. Mrs. Swift called there once, but did not ask for apartments, and so none were allotted to her. However she had numbers of packages sent to the post addressed to her.

Captain Leeds, Post ... and keeper of the light on the island, is open in his belief that the woman is unbalanced or willfully criminal. On September 30th he received a letter purporting to have been written by Chaplain Swift, from Manila, but which, he believes, was written by Mrs. Swift in San Francisco. This letter urged the Captain to advance to Mrs. Swift a sum between $50 and $150, so that she could go to Manila. The wording and the writing were so different from the chaplain's that Leeds started an investigation. Mrs. Swift called and asked whether the Captain had heard from her husband. Though the letter had been received Leeds answered in the negative, realizing that something was wrong. Mrs. Swift's actions and repeated questioning strengthened Leeds' belief that she had written the letter herself as part of a scheme to get money from him. It is a pertinent fact that the same hand which wrote this letter signed the check which has been pronounced a forgery.

When what seemed to be a plain case of duplicity was made known to some of the officers, they produced letters purporting to have come from the chaplain, all asking for money, worded in the same style and in the same handwriting as the one received by Captain Leeds. Since the discovery the officers say the woman has not been seen on the island.

About this time Mrs. Swift gave it out that she was going to Manila, and instructed the Postmaster to forward her mail to her husband. This was done. Among the letters were a number bearing the names of prominent San Francisco firms, from which, it is supposed, Mrs. Swift obtained goods. A few of the more recent Postmaster Leeds has forwarded to Army headquarters here, among the number being one from Smith's Cash Store.

Since leaving the island Mrs. Swift has lived in a number of places, but of late has been staying at the Palace Hotel. There is nothing in the room but a few necessary articles of wearing apparel, besides the furniture. Yesterday she left early in the morning and remained away all day and until late that night. The condition of the room suggested a hasty departure.

Mrs. Swift returned to her rooms at the Palace at a late hour last evening. She affected surprise at the insinuation that she had signed her husband's name to checks, though later she admitted that she had done so in the past, though with the chaplain's permission.

"The check for $30 which I gave to the hardware firm was sent to me by my husband on the day I reached Manila, as he did not know that I was coming," she asserted in explanation of the fact that the check was dated November 29th, at which time she was in Manila. "I did not get it until I returned here. I did not sign my husband's name to the check, though I have done so in the past and he knew that I did. I have cashed a number of checks in San Francisco which I have received from him. It might be that my son, who is with Chaplain Swift in Manila, signed that particular check, for I do not recall the signature. It might be that I am suspected of signing it because my handwriting is so similar to the chaplain's that few people can tell the writing apart, but I did not write his name. The only thing I can do is to deny that I am guilty of any crime."

Mrs. Swift was extremely nervous. Though she said that her son might have signed the piece of paper, she admitted later that he was prostrated in Manila from sunstroke. With reference to the letter sent to Captain Leeds and others of the Army post, which those who claim to know say were presumably written by her, Mrs. Swift merely states that they were penned by her husband and that he had informed her by letter that he had written.

The amount of the loss sustained by local firms will be made good by Army officers, if not by the chaplain. In Army circles there is a general feeling of sympathy for the chaplain, for he is recognized as a brave and worthy man. During the yellow fever epidemic in Cuba he volunteered for service in the hospitals, and when the Spanish war was ended he was among the first to volunteer for duty in the Philippines.

General Shafter, in speaking of the matter, asserted that as far back as the Cuban campaign he was informed that Mrs. Swift was at times not exactly right mentally and that the chaplain had suffered much mental distress on account of her actions. Of late information of a similar character has been received by officers here.

SAYS THE WILL IS A FORGERY

Expert Kytka Emphatic In His Declarations.

FRANKLIN FULLER'S TESTIMONY

J. B. Swearingen Recalled, and the Plaintiffs Close Their Case—The Trial Will Probably Occupy Two Days More.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

ORVILLE, Dec. 9.—When court opened at 10 o'clock this morning, the court-room was already crowded to its utmost capacity. The contestants again put Expert Kytka upon the stand, and he concluded his testimony, which he commenced yesterday afternoon. Kytka is very positive and abrupt in his statements, and his manner of testifying would lead one to infer that he knows what he is talking about. He says that the will was not written or signed by the person who wrote the letters which are known to be Alfred Fuller's and in which his signature is admitted to be genuine. He had several large photographs of the will and gave a very lucid demonstration from his charts of why the signature to the will could not be genuine.

Franklin Fuller, who is a nephew and one of the heirs of Alfred Fuller, then took the stand, and stated that he knew Emillien Fuller and Alfred Fuller in Ohio, and that they were his uncles. He last heard of Emillien Fuller living in California.

Alfred Fuller first lived in Ohio, then emigrated to Illinois, and later moved to California and settled in Tuolumne county. Witness heard, by means of a paper sent to him by a friend, of Emillien Fuller's death. He afterwards received a letter, stating that his mother was an heir of Emillien Fuller. The money was sent to Attorney-in-fact Searls in Ohio. Witness received part of the money from the Emillien Fuller estate while Alfred Fuller was administrator of the estate. He also received some of the money from Richard White, after the death of Alfred Fuller.

Witness stated that he (witness) was born out of lawful wedlock and never knew his father. He was born in the State of Ohio. During the early part of her life his mother was an incompetent person.

The defense then re-called J. B. Swearingen for re-cross-examination and questioned him regarding his previous testimony given to the Grand Jury. When asked why he offered his testimony to the matter, he said that he would be damned if he would allow them to send Carmack to prison when he knew that he was innocent. He had heard that Carmack was about to get into trouble and that Mrs. Housworth had charged him with having demanded $3000 to produce the will which he had received through the mails, and that rather than to see him in trouble over the matter, he concluded that he would tell what he knew about the will and did testify before the Grand Jury.

The plaintiffs then closed their case, and the defense made their opening statement.

On the part of the defendant, the first witness was T. J. Hindman, who first saw Fuller in 1896, when he (Hindman) came back from a trip. He had a conversation with Fuller on the street and Fuller said that he had been sick and would have starved to death had it not been for Mrs. Housworth; that she brought him food when he was sick, and some day he would remember her. The first time he ever mentioned this was to Louis Schwein.

The next witness was Jas. Chubbuck. He had been in Chico 24 or 25 years and knew Fuller in his lifetime and had known Mrs. Housworth for 10 or 12 years. He had a conversation with Fuller at one time when he served some papers upon him regarding his brother's estate. Fuller got rather angry and threw the papers at him (Chubbuck) and said they were trying to get all his brother's property but said that they would not get his money to spend. He cursed his relatives and said the s—— of a b—— would not get any of his money. Chubbuck was then cross examined in a jocular way. He said it was well Fuller had left $1000 to his heirs. He was asked if he would discredit the will, but the question was withdrawn.

C. L. Stilson and three ladies from Chico will testify Monday.

Defendant said it would take about 30 minutes to put in their case, and that it would go to the jury on Tuesday.

The Court then adjourned to 9 a. m. Monday morning.

WILL CASE GROWS SENSATIONAL

John Swearingen Makes Startling Statements.

CAUSING HIS PROMPT DISMISSAL

Colonel H. T. Batchelder Tells of the Proposal Made to Him By Dr. J. E. Rodley—Says that Rodley Offered Him $3000 if He Would Sign the Will.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Dec. 8.—Late yesterday afternoon the contestants of the alleged will of Alfred Fuller placed John Garner upon the stand, and, despite many objections on the part of Attorneys Schooler and Yell, drew from the witness the story heretofore published in the ENTERPRISE as to how he had been approached by Dr. Rodley in 1898 and how Rodley then suggested to him the possibility of earning $5000 by merely signing his name to the Fuller will.

Continuing he told of how he had refused to sign the document, but after months of thought and much urging on the part of Rodley, he had acceded to his request and placed his name upon what he said he knew to be a forged will.

As this gray-haired man sat upon the witness stand, and with tears streaming down his cheeks, repeated the details of a conspiracy, the divulging of which he knew would send him to the State prison, the scene was touching in the extreme. The witness admitted that he knew his admissions would send him to prison a disgraced forger and perjurer, but he had so long endured the pangs of remorse, that he felt it were better to be in prison with the knowledge that he had assisted justice than to be free with the weight of conscious guilt bearing him down.

Attorney Knight subjected Garner to rigid examination and drew from him all the details of his part in the will case, not overlooking any of the points essential to the case.

Garner was then turned over to Mrs. Housworth's attorney, but the cross examination was brief.

The most dramatic incident of the trial occurred this morning, when H. T. Batchelder was called to the stand by the contestants. Col. Batchelder and Dr. Rodley had for years been on the most intimate terms of friendship, and it was plain to be seen that to testify against his former friend was a painful duty to Mr. Batchelder. Yet, being called, he spurned to tell aught but the truth, regardless of the web his testimony might weave around his friend of days gone by. With that determination to act honorably, which characterized his refusal to sign the alleged will, he recited the details of the conversation he had had with Dr. Rodley regarding the document which has brought out the case, which is daily developing into one of the most sensational of its kind in the history of the State.

Col. Batchelder stated that the first conversation he had with Dr. Rodley regarding the will of Alfred Fuller, occurred at Biggs early in 1898, when Rodley asked witness if he knew Alfred Fuller's signature. On February 17, 1898, Mr. Batchelder received a letter from Rodley asking him to come to Chico. Batchelder came to Chico on the evening train and met Rodley at the latter's office. At that time Rodley told witness that Fuller had left a will, and asked Batchelder if he could recognize Fuller's signature, and if he was certain that it was Fuller's signature if he would be willing to sign the will. Batchelder replied that Fuller had never requested him to sign the will, adding "I never sign unless I am invited." Rodley at that time produced the paper which he believes to be the document now admitted to probate, and asked witness if that was Fuller's signature. Batchelder scrutinized it and replied that he thought not. At that time Rodley told witness that there was $3000 in it for him (Batchelder) if he would sign the will as a witness, but Batchelder replied that he would not do so unless requested to do so by Fuller.

J. B. Swearingen was next called and before he got through with the cross examination, his testimony grew quite sensational.

He stated that he had known Mrs. Housworth for 20 years or more, and that about May, 1898 he had a conversation with her at the Hallam House in Chico; that Mrs. Housworth told him at that time that somebody had told her that Fuller had been seen to give a letter to R. R. Hample (now deceased), and that the letter referred to was Alfred Fuller's will; that Col. Hoosbaw had told her that all that was necessary to make the will valid was to get two witnesses to sign it, and that as Dr. Rodley had agreed to sign it, she wanted him (Swearingen) to sign as the other witness. She offered to give him $5000 as a compensation for his signature. Witness told Mrs. Housworth that he could not sign the will and left her. Some five weeks after this conversation witness met Mrs. Housworth and she told him that it did not require him as a witness as she had gotten John Garner to sign the will with Dr. Rodley. During this last conversation she told witness that she had sent the will to H. Carmack; that while she was in San Francisco she stepped into a grocery store and procured an envelope and got the clerk to address it for her. The envelope was addressed to Mr. Carmack.

After returning to Chico, she put the will into this envelope and dropped it into the postoffice when no one was around.

She begged witness not to say anything about the matter, and told him that if he gave evidence against her before the Grand Jury she would kill herself.

Swearingen stated that it was after Fuller's death that he held these conversations with Mrs. Housworth.

During the cross examination the witness was asked: "Did you not address Mrs. Housworth in endearing terms, ask her to sit upon your lap and kiss you, and did you not suggest to her that if she would leave her room door unlocked at night it might be an inducement to you to sign as a witness to the will?"

To this series of questions Swearingen answered a positive "No."

"Were you not intimate with Mrs. Housworth?" was asked. Witness said that "he had been intimate with Mrs. Housworth, but not in connection with this case."

It became evident that Swearingen was getting ready to tell more than was pleasant to hear and he was excused, much to the chagrin of the highly excited crowd of spectators present.

H. Carmack was next called and up to the noon hour he was being questioned regarding the manner in which the will came into his hands. Mr. Carmack's every utterance carried conviction with it and as he told the story of his receipt and subsequent delivery of the will to Mrs. Housworth, there was no one who would doubt its truth. His testimony was exactly the same as before published in the ENTERPRISE and a severe cross examination failed to shake it in the least.

After the noon recess Mrs. E. J. Montgomery, formerly a resident of Chico, but now of Washington, was called to testify to letters written to her by Alfred Fuller. She did not see him write the letters referred to, nor his name, but she believed the letters to be in handwriting of Fuller. She received four or five letters from him.

A. F. Jones was next called in regard to being Mrs. Housworth's attorney. He testified to preparing the petition for probate of will and acted as her attorney at the time the will was probated in Court. He afterwards acted at the request of F. C. Lusk, who drew the answer of Minnie Housworth and E. M. Woodman, and filed the same in court. He then ceased to be her attorney.

Jones was asked whether Mrs. Housworth signed the petition for probate of will and if she signed it in his office.

Mrs. Housworth objected to Jones testifying on the ground that it was a privileged communication between herself and Jones, he being her attorney. Objection overruled whereupon he refused to testify on the same ground unless compelled by the Court to do so. The Court instructed him to answer whereupon he replied that to the best of his knowledge Mrs. Housworth had signed the petition in his presence.

Attorney Knight for the plaintiff then called Mrs. Housworth to the stand. She was sworn, but refused to testify, on the ground that the Grand Jury had found two felony indictments against her and her evidence might tend to incriminate her. She was excused.

W. L. Bradley was next called and testified to the handwriting of deceased. He was shown several letters written by Fuller, also many other documents, and he testified that they were all in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller.

Expert Theodore Kytka was next called and he will probably be kept on the stand for a long period.

IT IS DECLARED TO BE A FORGERY

Landis Note to Be Fought on These Lines.

EXPERTS WILL BE CALLED UPON

To Prove That Alfred Fuller Never Wrote His Name Upon the Document Upon Which Dr. Landis Desires to Collect the Sum of $15,000.

Special to the Enterprise.

OROVILLE, Dec. 15.—Close upon the decision of the jury in the Fuller will case to the effect that the will was a forgery, comes another legal battle in which an attempt will be made to prove that the $15,000 note held by Dr. A. J. Landis against the estate of Alfred Fuller is also a forged document.

This morning ex-Public Administrator Woodman, by his attorneys, F. C. Lusk and John Gale, filed an answer to the amended complaint of A. J. Landis. The answer sets up that the note presented by Landis is a forgery. It denies all the allegations contained in the complaint; denies that Alfred Fuller ever signed any promissory note; denies that there is due to A. J. Landis the sum of $16,280.35, or any other sum. It states that the purported signature of Alfred Fuller is a forgery, and was not written or signed by Alfred Fuller or by anyone by him authorized to sign said note; that said note and signatures are forgeries, and falsely and fraudulently made for the purpose of defrauding the estate of Alfred Fuller, deceased.

Wherefore defendant prays that Landis take nothing; that the complaint be discussed and that judgment be rendered for costs.

ANSWER IN THE BIG NOTE CASE PRESENTED

Administrator Claims That the Fuller Note to Landis Is a Forgery

MUST BANK ON PAID TESTIMONY

Plaintiff to Depend on Judgment of Men With Whom Fuller Had His Business Dealings

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 15.—Dr A J Landis, who holds a note against the estate of the late Alfred Fuller for $15,000 now knows the grounds upon which the battle is to be waged, as the defendant, E M Woodman, the ex-Public Administrator, has filed his answer to Landis' amended complaint. The answer was filed yesterday and sets forth that the note is a forgery. It specifically denies that Alfred Fuller ever signed the note, also that there is not due the plaintiff the sum of $16,280.35 or any other sum.

Attorney Lusk, who deserted Mrs. Houseworth on the day set for the hearing on the will by which she was mentioned as being entitled to the entire estate, excepting $1000 for the legal heirs, and Attorney John Gale, are the attorneys for the administrator and will defend the estate against the claim of Dr. Landis.

To those familiar with this branch of the Fuller estate troubles, the general character of the battle can be foretold. Dr Landis will undoubtedly depend much upon the testimony of those who had dealings with Fuller during many years and were fully conversant with his signature. It is understood that some, who have seen Fuller's signature many times during his lifetime, will claim that the signature to the Landis note is a forgery, but on the contrary, several will testify that they believe it to be the signature of Fuller. But in all cases of this nature, the expert can be called in for $100 per day, and it is not probable that he will get his $100 per should he declare the signature to be genuine. Attorney Lusk has been an excellent patron of the handwriting experts during the past two or three years, as he was one of the leading attorneys in the famous Murdock will case, and in view of the charges made in the answer in the present case, it is almost certain that the handwriting expert will be banked on as the means of defeating the note.

COST OF THE FAMOUS FULLER WILL CONTEST

Few Dollars Less Than Six Hundred Required to Meet the Expenses

EXPERT KYTKA GETS MONEY EASY

Cleans Up a Couple of Hundred for Eight Days Services—Foreclosure Proceedings Instituted

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 21.—The findings and judgement of Judge Gadds, annulling and revoking probate of the Fuller will presented by Mrs. S. M. Houseworth, have been filed. The verdict of the jury is incorporated in the findings and it is decreed that the fees and expenses of said contestant, Franklin Fuller, be paid out of the property of the deceased.

The cost bill in the case entitled Franklin Fuller vs Mrs M. Houseworth, et al, has been filed by Carleton Gray, one of the attorneys for contestant, giving the total cost of the will contest as $589.30. The Sheriff received $10 fees; Clerk $2; Jury fees, $44; Reporters, $80; the remainder being paid out to witnesses for fees and mileage, Theo. Kytka, the handwriting expert, receiving pay for 8 days at the rate of $25 per day, and mileage of 150 miles, bringing total amount paid to this one witness of $215.

INDICTMENT AGAINST RODLEY IS RETURNED

Bond Fixed at Five Thousand Dollars and Hearing Set For Wednesday

NETTIE DEFENDING HER TONGUE

Mrs. Phillips Formally Denies That She Said Harsh Things to Her Old Rich Husband

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, Dec. 16.—An indictment was returned this morning by the Grand Jury against Mr. Rodley on a charge of perjury, the new indictment containing a little additional matter. The usual formalities were observed of bench warrant, etc., and the party placed under $5000 bonds. Next Wednesday is the date set for pleading.

The Grand Jury will adjourn tomorrow morning.

REPORT OF GRAND JURY.

Political Management of the City Hall Is Denounced.

HIGH COMMENDATION FOR CHIEF LEES.

CONDITION OF TAX COLLECTOR'S OFFICE DECLARED A DISGRACE.

Words of Praise for County Clerk Deane's Department—City and County Hospital Is Not Condemned.

The Grand Jury presented its report to Presiding Judge Daingerfield of the Superior Court yesterday afternoon and was discharged after a life of eighty-seven days, during which fifteen regular and six special meetings were held. The foreman, John Bennett, in his report to the Judge, states the regret of the jurors that they were not given six months in which to sit, as is customary, and that they did not have time to touch some matters that they were "only too desirous of investigating." What the matters are is not mentioned.

The conduct of the Mayor's office is praised, but the report hits the Supervisors hard. It says:

A vicious method of allowing politics and patronage to overshadow the interests of the city and cause waste, extravagance and inefficient service culminating in heavy deficits and a spasmodic effort at the last moment to retrench at the expense of the rights of taxpayers and injury to the city government, appears to be a regular practice of these legislators. For months many departments existed in utter contempt and disregard of the one-twelfth act with the result that there is soon no money. To amend the condition of the crippled treasury a slash is made in the street lighting fund, plunging the city into darkness and exposing citizens to the ravages of the criminal classes. This, too, when large numbers of political favorites are employed at the new City Hall as janitors, at good, fat salaries and with little or nothing to do, as is shown by the filthy condition of that building. This system of political janitors is foisted upon the people so that party workers may be rewarded. Thirty men are on the pay rolls at an aggregate salary of $2,000 per month, and it seems impossible to get these gentry to make an effort to earn their salaries. They are independent of any one—even of the appointing power, the Supervisors, but these party henchmen seem to have no fears for themselves, and hence the unclean condition of the building.

It is recommended that the work be done hereafter by contract to the lowest bidder.

For the Police Department the report has nothing but words of commendation. Chief Lees is described as "the right man in the right place," and his management of the affairs of the department is characterized as excellent. Among the recommendations are the acquisition of a police patrol boat for the use of the harbor police, the installation of more patrol boxes, that the city own all its own jails and that automobile mechanism be applied to the patrol wagons as soon as practicable.

In closing its report the Committee on Police, Jails, etc., says:

Whatever may be said of other departments in our municipal government our city can congratulate itself upon its Police Department, as being well equal to that of any city in the world, and if it were ably backed up by the Police Court and heed given to its demands as outlined by the Chief of Police in his annual reports we could well feel that the suppression of crime and the protection of life and property is as secure here in this city as anywhere in the world. No greater argument in proof of this can be used than the small percentage of crime, as shown by the records of the Police Department of this city. Certainly, then, we must appreciate the able management of our chief, I. W. Lees, and his staff of officers and subordinates; and to him and them we extend every congratulation and hope that they may long continue to serve us as faithfully and efficiently in the future as they have in the past.

The Board of Supervisors is urged to pay more attention to the recommendations of the Auditor relative to fixing the tax levy and thereby avoid the large deficit there has been in the past at the end of each fiscal year.

The use of the merit system of time checks in the Assessor's office is praised. It is claimed to have resulted in one-third more work being accomplished than in former years. By the improved business methods of the office $30,000 is said to have been saved to the city. With regard to the Recorder's office various minor recommendations are made, namely, the renovation of the office; the appointment of a janitor to care for the sidewalks outside the Hall of Records, and the providing of incandescent lights for the Hall of Records.

The Tax Collector's office is characterized as a "disgrace to civilization," but Tax Collector Sheehan is said not to be blameworthy, as no janitor is at his disposal. The committee reports that nearly all the books of the office are in a dilapidated condition and that if extensive repairs are not made in a short time there will be nothing but "rags and scattered leaves" and endless litigation involving land titles will follow.

High commendation is given to County Clerk Deane. The system of choosing jurors adopted and put in force by him has made "jury stuffing" a thing of the past, and his innovation in the justification of sureties on different bonds is said to have stopped the filing of worthless or straw bonds. In conclusion the Grand Jury says:

The County Clerk's office is in perfect working order, with business that has almost doubled within the last year, and is still increasing from day to day, with a working force greatly reduced in number, with all deputies capable and clerks thorough, competent, efficient, obliging and courteous, with Mr. Deane at his post of duty during office hours and the office conducted in all respects in a manner that must be indeed gratifying to our citizens and taxpayers.

The demolition of old, unsanitary school buildings and the building of new, substantial and modern structures is urged. The condition of affairs in Noe Valley, Sunnyside and the Mission district is declared to be a disgrace to the commonwealth. New buildings are recommended for Spring Valley, Washington, Redding, Buena Vista, Burnett, Richmond and Hamilton. The appropriation of $1,200,000 for the present fiscal year is said to be inadequate.

In regard to charges preferred against certain members of the present Board of Education, the Jury, after a thorough examination of many witnesses, found no evidence that would warrant taking further action.

An air of neglect is declared to exist in nearly every department in the City and County Hospital, but Dr. D. A. Hodghead, the present superintendent, is not held responsible, as he has been in office but a few months. The Grand Jury recommends that the main hospital building be not destroyed, but that it be repaired and $50,000 expended on the interior and other buildings.

The jury suggests in regard to corporations that the city purchase gas and water works and that the telephone company be required to substitute flat rates for the nickel-in-the-slot system.

The committee on the social evil recommended isolation. A minority report against that recommendation was also made.

The County Jail buildings are described as in need of immediate and careful overhauling. They are spoken of as in a state of dilapidation, evincing long neglect by the Supervisors. The filthy condition of the Sheriff's office is also described and it is recommended that the entire City Hall be renovated by the authority of the incoming Board of Supervisors, "so that we may feel proud of the condition of our public buildings where now we are forced to blush for shame of it."

Chinatown was visited by a committee of the jury, and it reports that gambling on the percentage system cannot be entirely eradicated in that region owing to the difficulty the police meet with in getting into the barricaded dens. Lotteries and opium smoking are among the evils of that portion of the city that are only partially suppressed.

A statement of the difficulties that have been experienced in the erection of the Hall of Justice is made briefly in the report, and it is stated that the troubles in regard to that structure are about over. The new Morgue is described as entirely too small to meet the needs of the city.

The members of the jury were: J. Bennett, foreman; W. S. Gage, secretary; W. J. Bryan, P. Herydent, W. A. Frederick, G. F. Olar, R. M. Hulaing, J.

JURY INDICTS MRS. MANSFIELD

Arrested on Three Libel Charges.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

HOLLISTER, Dec. 29.—The Grand Jury today returned three indictments for criminal libel against Mrs. Minnie Mansfield, based upon three anonymous letters written during the year attacking the chastity of Mrs. E. F. Conrad, noble grand of Rebekah Lodge of Hollister. One letter was written to Judge Agnew, one to Mrs. H. W. Scott and one to Mrs. A. Tonn. Mrs. Mansfield denied the authorship of the letters, but evidence offered the Experts Kytka and Ames influenced the jury against her. Judge Dooling fixed bonds at $3000, which were furnished, and the arraignment was set for Saturday afternoon.

The trial is bound to be sensational and nasty. The parties have been neighbors for fourteen years. About five years ago the receipt of anonymous letters assailing the chastity of his wife and accusing his children of theft caused another neighbor named Schill to shoot one Kalinowsky, then employed by Conrad, whom he suspected of writing the letters.

Schill then took a dose of poison and ended his troubles.

Since then Mrs. Conrad has been persistently vilified by the anonymous writer, who sent letters to about every prominent lady in Hollister. Some time ago Mrs. Mansfield, it is alleged, commenced to write letters to herself to divert suspicion and these were secured by District Attorney Hudner and by the experts pronounced identical with the others. An insane jealousy at the prosperity of the Conrads seems to be at the bottom of the matter.

Mrs. Mansfield scoffs at her accuser and is cool and indifferent in court. Her husband believes in her innocence and announces that he will spend every dollar he has in her defense. Society in Hollister is much torn up over the scandal that is bound to come to the surface.

WOMAN SHOOTS FOR VENGEANCE

Charles Thomas of Merced Fatally Injured.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

MERCED, Dec. 27.—Charles A. Thomas, who is employed in a local printing office, was shot this afternoon by the woman he claims as his wife. She waited at the office at which he was working, and when he came out she engaged him in conversation. She then drew a revolver and fired, the ball entering the victim's body just below the heart. He rushed back into the office closely followed by her, but she was disarmed before she could fire again.

Some months ago Thomas took Miss Margaret Silver to Fresno and on their return to Merced he claimed her as his wife, stating that they were married while away.

The family of the girl did not credit his assertion and a week ago her mother went to the house where they were living to take her back to her mother and when Thomas attempted to interfere he shot four times at him, none of the shots taking effect. The attending physician cannot yet state just how badly the man is wounded.

SCANDAL IN THE TAX OFFICE

CHAPMAN'S LAME TALE ABOUT HIS SERVICE.

DECLARES AND THEN DENIES THAT HE SIGNED THE WARRANT.

Conflicting Stories Told in an Attempt to Exculpate Collector Sheehan and His Chief Deputy.

The exposé of Tax Collector Sheehan's methods in yesterday's "Chronicle" was much discussed at the City Hall and in political circles. That such conditions obtained in the Tax Office was no secret, but yesterday's publication was the first definite information given to the public. It has been hinted repeatedly that Sheehan, through his chief deputy and other employes in his confidence, assessed his men on various pretexts and at frequent intervals, and that demands for services rendered were audited and collected, being made out in favor of persons who never worked in the office. His former clerks, Wiseman and Goldstein, cling to the original story, as related in their sworn affidavits, fortifying their narrative with circumstance and incident. They assert also that they have many more similar revelations, which they will give to the public in due season.

James D. Wiseman, the ex-clerk, and formerly a close friend of Sheehan, was seen yesterday. He repeated his former assertions concerning Chapman, asserting positively that Chapman never worked in the office during the month of April. During that month Wiseman was on duty from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. each day. His position caused him to have a general review of all that went on in the main office, while he had frequent occasion to be in the private office of Sheehan. He clings to the original statement that Chapman was not in the office at any time during April.

"Had Chapman been employed on the outside," said Wiseman yesterday, "I would have seen him come in to report on or report off, but I am positive that he was not there. Hagan asked me to go up stairs into the Supervisors' office and impersonate Chapman and swear to his warrant, a thing which I could not have done even if I had been so inclined. He got somebody else to sign the warrant, but I am morally certain that he never thought of digging up Chapman until last October, when I refused to be mulcted of another assessment and threatened him with exposure. It was then that he found John E. Chapman, persuaded him to pose as Edwin Chapman and gave him work for the month of November.

"When Hagan showed me the warrant, in which he wanted me to swear, it was signed E. Chapman. The man employed in the office during November never signed his name that way, and never was known as Edwin or E. Chapman. This thing was merely one of many similar frauds in vogue in that office. I took pains to obtain John E. Chapman's signature. I looked it up in the Registration Office and compared both with the signature on the warrants of April and of November. The more I investigated the more I was convinced that John Chapman was an after consideration, dug up for the purpose of concealing the fraud in the April demand, and to forestall the exposure which Sheehan and Hagan feared."

Hiram F. Goldstein tells substantially the same story, saying that Wiseman apprised him of the fraud at the time Hagan asked Wiseman to impersonate Chapman. He is positive also that neither Chapman nor any one of his description worked in the Tax Office during April or reported for duty either in the office or outside.

Chapman called at the "Chronicle" office yesterday and tried to give some explanation of the change in his name from John Edmund Mayne Young Chapman to plain Edwin. Chapman claimed that he was employed during April delivering bills and reported every morning at Sheehan's private office, where he obtained the bills to be carried out. As a matter of fact, bills are given out by clerks in the main office, and such a thing as receiving them in the Tax Collector's private office is unknown to the oldest employes in the office. Concerning the signature on the April demand, Chapman first asserted that he had signed it. When he was shown the signature obtained from him a few days ago, which he recognized as his, and when he was told that it differed materially from the one on the demand, he faltered and at length remembered that he had not signed that warrant, but had induced Charles Trull, the clerk for Burr & Regensburger, to sign it for him. This, Chapman says, was done because he had a finger hurt, and was unable to hold a pen. He also asserts that all this was done in the rooms of the Supervisors and in the presence of John H. Ryan, warrant clerk of the Board of Supervisors. His story does not tally with that of Trull, who admits signing the warrant, but is positive that it was not done in the rooms of the Board of Supervisors nor in the presence of Ryan. Trull says he signed the warrant at the request of Chapman, but did so in some office on the ground floor of the new City Hall. The exact office he does not remember.

The stories conflict in material points, and it is evident that the witnesses for Sheehan and Hagan have not been well coached.

EX-CHIEF LEES CARRIES AWAY ALL THE ROGUES

Leaves Police Department Without a Gallery—He Will Open a Private Agency.

Jan. 4, 1900

EX-CHIEF OF POLICE LEES may not be missed in the San Francisco Police Department, but the rogues' gallery will be. When he left he took it with him, and in the recesses of the big black iron case in the "upper office," where it once was stored, are only aching voids. Lees descended on the office Tuesday night, opened the case and took the gallery with him. He claims it as his own personal property, to do with as he will, and he does not will that it shall be of benefit to the department from which his judgment told him to resign to save dismissal at the hands of the new Commissioners pledged to Lieutenant Esola. The gallery is stored safely under lock and key at his home, where it will remain until he moves it downtown to the private detective agency he intends to open in competition with the Pinkertons and the local police.

This news will come undoubtedly as a painful surprise to the newly appointed Police Commissioners. Although they probably never gave a moment of thought to such an institution as a rogues' gallery, they certainly labored under the impression that a fully equipped Police Department was about to be turned over to them. Even after the retirement of Lees they had no fear that they would be unable to find in Esola a competent successor. Whether or not that is so remains to be seen, but it is certain that the choice of the new Commissioners will be badly handicapped in going into office—the business of which is to prevent and detect crime—without the aid of a rogues' gallery. How the Chief to be appointed will get around this difficulty is a conundrum hard to solve.

Lees' descent upon and capture of the rogues' gallery is based upon his claim that he owns it from cover to cover, with every photo and criminal record in it. There is no question that he started it, years and years ago, when it was not dreamed that San Francisco would grow to its present importance upon the map of the world. At that time—thirty or forty years ago—no financial provision was made for the collection of photographs of criminals, no books were provided for criminal records. He began on his own account to gather and index and classify the "mugs" of notorious crooks that came this way, and he has continued it ever since, without, he claims, a cent's worth of assistance from the city.

The collection is now an enormous one. It contains the photographs, antecedents, criminal records and close descriptions of nearly every crook in the country, white, black and yellow. The ugly "mugs" of 14,744 whites and blacks, men and women, glower from the pages of the gallery, and in black and white their records are under the thumb of the possessor. In addition the faces of 2570 Chinese and Japanese murderers and thieves are inclosed between its covers. And Chief Lees has [illegible] the city's big black iron [illegible]

Whether or not this claim of the ex-Chief will hold in law is a question that depends entirely upon the incoming Police Commissioners. They will undoubtedly make claim that the ex-Chief had no right to remove the gallery. Those who know the white-haired veteran detective may be sure that he will stubbornly contest any such claim and will make as bitter a fight in the court as he knows how—and he can go a little at that, as the history of the department will show.

Pending the probability of any such legal contest ex-Chief Lees has fully made up his mind to open the greatest detective agency on the coast. A case containing the late police rogues' gallery will be its principal bit of furniture. The ex-Chief has not a doubt in his mind that he can take all the business he needs away from the Pinkertons and other private agencies, and, incidentally, "make a monkey" of his gallery-less successor, who will not have a tintype or the scratch of a pen to go on in search for crime. As assistants in his agency Lees will take several of the best men from the present "upper office" force. His first assistant will undoubtedly be John Seymour, for a long time his right hand man, and at present captain of the City Prison. The others are not known.

Almost any day now pedestrians may notice the shingle of the Lees' Detective Agency swinging to every breeze that blows—and it will blow no good to the Pinkertons. He will undoubtedly cut deeply into their business on this coast. Up till a year and a half ago the aged Chief was hand in glove with the Pinkertons—so much so, indeed, that they did not consider it necessary to have an agency here. Finally, with the rush of racetrack business, they were compelled to put in a local force, and since then Lees has not been working with them. No rupture is supposed to have occurred, but all is fair in love and detective work, and the San Francisco veteran is on the trail of the golden goose. With his private rogues' gallery, which the city thought its very own, he should be able to cover the detective business of the coast. That he will leave no stone unturned to do so goes without saying.

Meanwhile the San Francisco Police Department will have to go without a rogues' gallery.

CAPTAIN JOHN SEYMOUR of the City Prison.

THE EXAMINER

W. R. HEARST.

THE MAYOR'S HARD BLOWS.

Mayor Phelan's straightforward and courageous statement in regard to the Police Commission appointments is a knock-down blow to his assailants and caused amazement throughout the city. It is a clean-cut answer to the allegations by which the partisan papers have sought to discredit him, and from a defense it becomes an attack. It turns their weapons upon themselves, and lays bare the motives that have inspired his traducers.

The essence of the charges made by the partisan press is that Mayor Phelan, before the election, contracted to fix the Police Department, in order "to betray the people of the city to its predatory classes."

The reply of the Mayor to this is direct and sharp: "That is a false statement, and I deny it," are his unequivocal words. But he goes further than denial. He proceeds to explain the motives behind the accusation, and these motives prove to be the ambition of his traducers to control the Police Department for their own purposes.

The Mayor gives the community some direct and interesting information. He reveals the fact that Mr. M. H. de Young made personal and strenuous efforts to capture the Police Commission in the interest of I. W. Lees, with whom he has an intimacy running far back into the bloody past, and was especially insistent that one of his friends should be named a member of the commission.

Mr. John D. Spreckels was also energetic in attempting to control the Police Department. Mayor Phelan shows that early in September of last year an intimate friend of Mr. Spreckels asked for the promise that Mr. Spreckels be appointed on the Police Commission. It will be interesting to the Republican organization to know that this request, several times repeated, was accompanied by the promise of a consideration, in the shape of the negative support of the "Call" in the municipal campaign. The offer was, of course, declined, whereupon the following events took place, to quote Mayor Phelan's words:

The general manager of the "Call," a little later, asked that I appoint A. B. Spreckels a Park Commissioner, and I made him the same reply, saying I regarded Mr. Spreckels with favor, but could make no promises, because I would expose myself to accusations, if you please, of "felony." He was persistent, but I stood my ground. This same editor sought an interview in the latter part of September, and asked me this time that I agree to appoint John D. Spreckels Police Commissioner, stating that his selection was more important than that of A. B. Spreckels for Park Commissioner, if I did not see my way clear to appoint both. I took the matter, as before, under advisement. He pressed a decision, exhibiting to me some libelous matter which he said he would suppress.

This is a distinct offense against the law.

Mayor Phelan does not stop with exposing the schemes of the men who are now traducing him. He frankly takes the people into his confidence as to the course he took and the reasons why he took it. "When I came to appoint the Police Commissioners," he says, "I did not mention the question of Chief of Police, nor the name of Mr. Esola to them, nor exact any promise concerning any candidate. All I said was that you shall accept this trust with the complete understanding that the 'upper office' be cleaned out."

Clean out the "Upper Office!" There was the pledge that the Mayor had of necessity to exact if he was to meet the expressed desire of the people for a reform in the city government. The "upper office" in the Police Department has been the center of fraud and corruption. It has for several decades been under the influence or control of I. W. Lees, and the first step in making the department what it should be was to sweep out Lees and his satellites. That step the Mayor has secured by the appointment of the gentlemen who now make up the Police Commission of San Francisco.

The Mayor makes no denial of the statement that he consulted with "The Examiner." It is true that he consulted with "The Examiner" during the campaign and since, and he had the perfect right to do it. It would have been strange if he had taken any other course. "The Examiner" has been the consistent friend of Mayor Phelan ever since he entered politics. It has given him loyal support, because he has represented the same ends of popular rule and opposition to evil government which "The Examiner" has represented. What is more proper than that he should consult this paper, and look to it for the information that it possessed? He could not look to Mr. Spreckels or to Mr. de Young for candid and straightforward advice in regard to the steps necessary to secure good government for the city. Mr. Spreckels and Mr. de Young were then holding too intimate relations with the corporate and personal influences which have brought bad government to the city. Even though these gentlemen have suspended cordial relations with Mr. Herrin since the senatorial gold brick was handed out, their advice is, of necessity, not the best that could be found. "The Examiner," on the other hand, had steadfastly fought for the good government of the city; had assisted to lay the foundations for a new Charter; taken active part in the Charter fight of 1895, had assisted the Charter Convention of 1896 in its work; had fought for the Freeholders nominated by the Charter Convention, had fought practically alone the campaign that secured the adoption of the Charter that those Freeholders drew, and had given him its support in three campaigns, without reward or promise of reward, other than the belief that the best interests of the community would be promoted by the course taken. Why should he not consult "The Examiner," as he would consult any other friend?

The American people love a brave fighter, and in Mayor Phelan they have a man after their own sort. He has met the assaults of his enemies, and has returned their blows with heavy interest. He accepts the responsibility of his office, and assures the people that if mistakes are made they are his mistakes, and he will correct them or answer to the voters for them. The Mayor shows himself the worthy leader of the people of San Francisco.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE NOTE

That Is What Woodman's Attorneys Want.

ARMORY HALL TO CHANGE HANDS

The Local Play House Becomes the Property of Mrs. A. A. Morehead—Deputy Constable W. E. Gee Enjoys a Day Dream While a Prisoner Escapes.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Jan. 10—In the matter of A. J. Landis vs. E. M. Woodman, administrator of the estate of Alfred Fuller, deceased, F. C. Lusk and John Gale, attorneys for defendant, have given notice that they will, on [illegible]esday, January 16, apply to the co[illegible] for an order requiring plaintiff to [illegible]mit the defendants to inspect and [illegible]ave photograph copies taken of th[illegible] alleged promissory note of Alfred Ful[illegible], upon which plaintiff bases his action

WILL USE THE CHARTER TO DEFEAT FRED ESOLA

May Have to Resign Before He Can Become Chief of Police.

"Bob" Hogan Anxious to Be Appointed Lees' Successor—Formally Announces His Candidacy--New Appointments.

DETECTIVE "BOB" HOGAN, WHO ASPIRES TO BE CHIEF OF POLICE.

> "All promotions in the department shall be made from the next lower rank, seniority of service and meritorious service to be considered."

THAT in the language of section 1, chapter VII of the charter. Upon it those opposed to the candidacy of Lieutenant Esola for the office of Chief of Police base their hopes that he will not be named as the successor of Isaiah W. Lees. They hold that the provision precludes the possibility of his appointment over the present captains, not to speak of the other lieutenants, his seniors on the force. Some stand will undoubtedly be made upon this point, although, in all likelihood, it will not avail to deprive Esola of the coveted prize.

It is stated that this provision of the charter has been carefully considered by the advisers of Esola and has been put under the notice of the Mayor. In addition, it is also said, his Honor and several prominent attorneys consulted have given it as their opinion that it is not necessary, for a person to be eligible for the office of Chief of Police, to be a member of the department. This interpretation of the provision may be somewhat in the nature of a hint concerning the plan of Esola to overcome any objection to his promotion that may be raised by section 1, chapter VII of the charter. It is as much as to say there is nothing to prevent him, when the time comes, resigning his lieutenancy and becoming a private citizen. The transformation, then, from private citizen to Chief of Police could be easily made as indicated.

Whether or not Lieutenant Esola contemplates such action is not announced. It is plain, however, that his so doing might prove a staggerer for those who pin their faith in his defeat on the wording of section 1, chapter VII.

Detective Robert Hogan has declared himself a candidate for Chief of Police in opposition to Esola. He is being warmly supported by a number of lawyers and business men, and is hopeful of victory.

When seen at his home last night Hogan said: "Yes, it is true that I have entered the race for Chief of Police. I consider that I am as much entitled to the place as any of the candidates whose names have been mentioned. My record as a detective conclusively shows that I have the necessary ability to conduct the affairs of the Police Department. My friends are doing all in their power to have me succeed Lees, and unless I am very much mistaken I will capture the coveted plum."

Hogan has been connected with the department for a long number of years and is considered one of the shrewdest detectives in the country. While engaged in gathering evidence in the Benhayon murder case about ten years ago, Hogan accidentally stumbled on Lees' cute and was immediately "shelved." Since then he has been working in the office of the District Attorney, handling important criminal cases, and rendering meritorious service in convicting desperate criminals. A number of the most prominent lawyers in the city are exerting themselves to have him appointed successor to ex-Chief Lees.

Yesterday the Police Commissioners held another session and reduced Sergeant Harper to the ranks on account of disability. John M. Lewis of the Potrero station was promoted to the rank of sergeant to take Harper's place.

The following new policemen were appointed: T. L. Wolters, Bert Wren, John Hayes, Thomas J. Larkin, William Flynn, George Merchant, John Rohl, Charles Birdsall, Maurice Bohan Jr., John D. Shine, Percy McPartland, Timothy Cronin and James Graham.

Wren is assistant clerk in Judge Treadwell's court, but he will resign his position next Monday. He is a brother of Detective Ed Wren and one of the most popular young men in the city.

Birdsall is the son of Lieutenant Birdsall of the Central station and has a host of friends. Shine is the son of the United States Marshal and is regarded as one of the most promising of the new appointees.

The Commissioners will hold another meeting at 1 o'clock this afternoon. It is understood that they will retire several old officers. In order that Captains Hahon and Dunleavy might enjoy the benefits of the increased pension under the new charter the Commissioners have decided not to interfere with them. Monday noon the Commissioners will formally vacate their seats in favor of the incoming board.

PET COYOTE GETS FULL OF BEER AND FIGHTS THE FAMILY WASHING

JACKO, THE SANTA BARBARA COYOTE, THAT BREAKS BOTTLES OF BEER TO SLAKE HIS THIRST.

SHOULD any one desire a good-tempered coyote of predatory instincts and a thirst for bottled beer, Jacko may fill the bill. He has already absorbed all the beer, photographic wills, cream, bromide prints of forged bonds and other delicacies belonging to Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert.

Theodore doesn't want any more coyote in his, and is now trying to unload the frivolous beast on the new Park Commissioners. Knight & Heggerty have prepared a petition to that effect, and when Reuben Lloyd gets a new dress suit he will make the presentation speech, provided the Commissioners accept the coyote.

When Jacko was two months old Kytka shanghaied him from his native Santa Barbara wilds and gave him a good home at 2504 Howard street. Now Kytka knows how sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have an ungrateful coyote that gets drunk and tips the laundry off the line.

Until Jacko became addicted to bottled beer he was a model coyote. He played about the house like a pet dog and formed a war alliance with a bull-terrier to fight Mr. Kytka's Angora cats. One day in the cellar Jacko knocked over and broke a bottle of beer. He lapped up the contents and straightway became an ungovernable dipsomaniac. While intoxicated he has been known to make a high dive from the second story window and otherwise whoop things up.

Taking a pint bottle of beer in his teeth, Jacko losses it up and lets the bottle fall on the concrete basement floor. The bottle breaks and the coyote licks up a jag. On Monday he always breaks two bottles, and then his conduct, according to the washlady, is something fierce. The bull-terrier and the cats take refuge in the attic, and as there is nothing else for him to fight, the coyote tackles the laundry on the line.

Kytka had the clothes line elevated, but Jacko gets there just the same. He bounds six feet in the air, grabs a sheet and bites large chunks therefrom or rips it fore and aft. In three jumps a new sheet looks like a Japanese screen. Kytka says that since the coyote took to fighting the laundry his shirts are nothing but bosoms.

When the beer gives out, Jacko makes lofty leaps to the top shelf and capsizes the cream jug. Once he mixed beer and cream, went dotty under the influence and Kytka ...

LAW INVOKED BY FRED DELANOY.

ANONYMOUS LETTER WRITER TO BE PUNISHED.

THE THREATENING MISSIVE IS REFERRED TO THE POSTAL AUTHORITIES.

Inspectors Will Make a Search for the Hidden Enemy of the Tormented Alameda Man.

ALAMEDA, January 1.—Fred N. Delanoy's mysterious Nemesis did not overlook him to-day, and he found two of the anonymous and threatening communications, instead of one as usual, on opening his mail this morning. One was a postal card, postmarked at Alameda January 4th, and with the following threat written in ink:

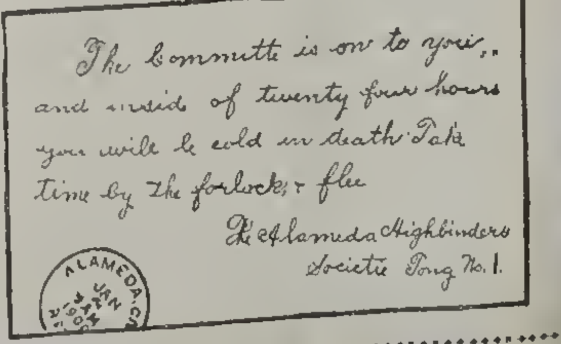
The committee is on to you, and inside of twenty-four hours you will be cold in death. Take time by the forelock and flee. THE ALAMEDA HIGHBINDER SOCIETY, TONG No. 1.

The same mail brought Delanoy an envelope inclosing an ordinary piece of cardboard, on which was drawn a large tombstone, with skull and crossbones, and the words, "More! Second Warning. The White Caps."

The pictorial [illegible] was mailed in San Francisco at 8:30 o'clock last night, and, like the former missives, was addressed with typewritten characters.

Delanoy's anonymous death correspondent made a serious error in seeking to speed a warning of the sudden death of his victim on a postal card, as the United States postal authorities have a harsh way of dealing with writers of scurrilous or threatening postal cards. Delanoy to-day stated his intention of turning the matter over to the Postoffice Inspectors at San Francisco.

THE POSTAL CARD SENT TO DELANOY.



The Committe is on to you, and insid of twenty four hours you will be cold in death Take time by the forlock & flee
The Alameda Highbinders Societie Tong No. 1.

Delanoy made complaint yesterday to the local postal inspectors and left in their possession the anonymous postal. The inspectors will investigate the case and assist Delanoy to determine the identity of the writer. As soon as the identity of the writer is known his arrest and prosecution will follow.

The postal inspectors can take no official action in the matter of the anonymous letters received by Delanoy. The letters not being indecent in character, [illegible] not denied to him the privilege of transmission through the mails. This [illegible] does not, however, extend to a postal card containing threats such as appear on the card received by Delanoy. Any action the postal authorities may take will be based solely on the sending of the card, although it is likely that the letters may aid in determining the identity of the author.

LETTERS THAT MAY HANG.

District Attorney of Merced County Here on an Important Mission.

District Attorney F. G. [illegible] of Merced county is here to obtain expert opinion on certain mysterious letters found on the body of Charles A. Thomas, who was murdered by Marguerita Silva. Proof of the authorship of the epistles may go far toward the final decision in the case.

The letters are anonymous, [illegible] to be from some one [illegible]. The handwriting considerably [illegible] that of both Thomas and Miss Silva. They bear allegations against [illegible] girl's character which point both ways. If the girl wrote the letters she probably did so in order that [illegible] free to go with her other [illegible]. If Thomas wrote them, it was in order to have documents in his possession which would put the girl more completely in his power.

The letters were examined recently in the office of Knight & Heggerty by Expert Theodore Kytka.

coyote two miles through the ... in his bare feet.

"... not equal to the strain of keeping a ... grown coyote with a jag," the detective ... Willis said last night, "and if the ... Commissioners will build a nice sunny ... for him they can have Jasko ... reform if locked up in the Park."

...ER 30, 1899.

MURDER THE CHARGE AGAINST MISS SILVEY

THE BETRAYED WOMAN AND THE YOUNG MAN WHOSE LIFE SHE TOOK IN AVENGING HER WRONGS.

MERCED, December 29.—C. A. Thomas, the newspaper reporter who was shot Wednesday night by the girl he had betrayed, died this morning without having made an ante-mortem statement regarding the tragedy or the events leading up to it.

The attending physician thought Wednesday evening that the wounded man could not live through the night, and as a consequence the District Attorney remained up until early morning, expecting at any moment to be called upon to take the ante-mortem statement. But Thomas himself never gave up hope of recovering, and therefore a statement from him would be valueless as evidence. When the end came this morning it came so suddenly that the watchers by the bedside had no time to send for either the doctor or the District Attorney.

Margaret Silvey, the girl who fired the shot that brought Thomas to his death, is almost crazed with grief and fright, although she stoutly maintains that she was fully justified in committing the act. She is twenty-two years old, of average brightness, and thoroughly understands the seriousness of the deed and the possible consequences. Thus far she has expressed no regret for the part she performed in the tragedy. When arrested Wednesday night, immediately after the shooting, she was taken before Justice of the Peace George L. Crocker, who admitted her to bail in the sum of $1,000. Friends at once went to her assistance, furnished the bond, and she was released. When Thomas' death was announced this morning Sheriff Warfield went to the girl's home and took her to the County Jail, where a charge of murder was placed against her. Her attorney applied to Judge Crocker to admit her to bail, but he has not yet done so, though it is expected he will because of the general sentiment that there is no possibility of her conviction, and the additional fact that there is no decent place in the County Jail for her accommodation, there being no place for women there except those already occupied by denizens of the tenderloin.

Some believe the girl did exactly right in killing the man who had wronged her, and think she should be speedily tried and acquitted. On the other hand, Thomas had many friends in the community, and they contend that she was knowingly a party to all of his actions. They argue that when she went to Fresno with Thomas several weeks ago she knew what she was doing; that when she returned to Merced and set up housekeeping for him as his wife she did so fully realizing her position.

As a matter of fact, however, Miss Silvey did not know, until her brother took her away from Thomas' home a week ago, that the man she had been living with already had a wife and children somewhere beyond the Rockies. It was her brooding over this fact that undoubtedly nerved her to commit the deed, for it is known that after being taken from her lover a week ago she wanted to return to him, and was only prevented from doing so by her family forcibly detaining her.

The Examiner" correspondent called on Thomas last evening and asked if he wished to make any statement regarding the affair. He replied that he had no statement to make, but that in the event of his recovery, which is hoped for, he would vindicate himself. The girl, he said, had been talked to and ... by her family until she had ... with jealousy, and he was ... was not the one most responsible for the cowardly attempt on his life.

Thomas was about thirty-five years old. He came from the East four years ago, worked on the Modesto papers for a few months, then went to La Grange as leader of the La Grange Band. He remained there but a few weeks, then came to Merced, and has been employed here ever since as local editor of the "Star." He was a prominent member of the local military company, and will be buried by that organization.

Deputy Coroner O'Brien this afternoon summoned a jury to view the remains, but the inquest will not be held until next Tuesday.

CONVICTED HIS FATHER'S FRIENDS.

Jan 14 — 1900

Killed Song Birds, by Invitation, on McIsaac's Ranch, and the Son Prosecuted the Hunters.

SAN RAFAEL, January 13.—Law and duty compelled District Attorney Hugh McIsaac to convict two of his father's friends and guests to-day for illegal killing of game. Mr. McIsaac Sr. invited his old chums over from San Francisco for a day's shooting. They got the wrong kind of birds and were fined $20 each after being convicted by McIsaac Jr.

The victims of this streak of ill-luck are O. Poelo, a liquor dealer at 125 Fourth street, and L. Casino, a merchant at Fifth and Howard streets. At the solicitation of John McIsaac they visited his ranch near Nicasio early yesterday morning and put in the day shooting. Birds were numerous and both marksmen bagged good strings of a variety classed as song birds, and which are protected by the State.

On the train the hunters boarded for San Rafael rode Constable Agnew and Deputy Sheriff Miller. They spotted the forbidden birds, arrested Poelo and Casino at the ferry and took them back to San Rafael for trial.

District Attorney McIsaac was shocked on coming into court to find his father's friends and honored guests in limbo. He stood between love and duty, and duty triumphed. With the evidence at hand young McIsaac soon secured a conviction and the unhappy merchants paid over $20 each and left the court-room feeling like anything but sportsmen.

MRS. ANN HARRIS DIES AT HER HOME.

She Was Eighty-Four Years Old and Had Been in Feeble Health.

OAKLAND, January 11.—Mrs. Ann Harris, who was the plaintiff in the sensational litigation against her brother, Josiah H. Ames, died last night at 10 o'clock at her home, 638 Thirty-second street, where she had been living for several years, with Mrs. John Ames, a sister-in-law. Mrs. Harris has been in feeble health. She was eighty-four years of age. She was victorious in the suit she brought to compel her brother Josiah to make restitution on account of about $150,000 in properties which he had handled for her. In this litigation she had charged her brother with misappropriating her fortune, which she had intrusted to him for investment.

The case was one of more than ordinary interest because of the prominence of Mr. Ames. He was at one time Warden of the State Penitentiary at San Quentin. Mrs. Harris' estate consists of considerable real property in this city, all of which it is understood has been deeded to Mrs. John Ames. Mrs. Harris leaves no children.

...ANUARY 16, 1900.

SULLIVAN NOW CHIEF OF SACRAMENTO POLICE FORCE

Special Dispatch to The Call

JOHN E. SULLIVAN, Sacramento's New Chief of Police.

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15.—The appointment of John E. Sullivan as Chief of Police sent in last week by Mayor Clark, was confirmed by the Board of Trustees to-night and Sullivan will receive his star as the head of the municipal police department. The selection is regarded as an excellent one and it is generally believed that Chief Sullivan will make a splendid record in office. He is temperate in habits and courteous in manner, while he has ability of a character which should permit him to master the trying requirements of the position.

Chief Sullivan was born at Providence, R. I., in 185... He has been a resident of Sacramento for twenty-three years, during twenty-two of which he served as an employe of the Southern Pacific. For sixteen years he was connected with the Sacramento paid fire department and was for twelve years foreman of Engine Company No. 1. He resigned from the department and from the employ of the railroad company in 18.. to take a position as deputy in the office of County Assessor Berkey.

The appointment is declared by his friends not to have been dictated by party interests, but solely by consideration of the personal friendship existing between Mayor Clark and Sullivan and because of the Mayor's recognition of his ability.

SAY CHECK WAS FORGED.

Merchants Victimized by a Scheming Woman.

Jan 15, '00

SHE CLAIMED TO BE ARMY CHAPLAIN'S WIFE.

BOUGHT GOODS AND RECEIVED CHANGE FOR BOGUS PAPER.

Denver Bank Returns an Order to Pay, Pronouncing Signature Spurious, and Investigation Follows.

Serious trouble is in store for a woman, who claims to be Mrs. M. A. Swift and says she is the wife of the Army chaplain of that name, unless she can prove her innocence of uttering forged checks upon local merchants. Such are the charges made, and the scandal consequent is all the greater by the association with it of the name of the spiritual adviser of one of the regiments now doing service in the Philippines.

When the police ascertain the whereabouts of the accused woman she will be given an opportunity to refund a considerable sum of money alleged to have been obtained upon fictitious checks bearing, it is charged, the forged name of Chaplain Swift, and to explain by whom the checks were signed.

The scandal was brought to public attention yesterday, when A. S. Mangrum of the hardware firm of Mangrum & Otter consulted the police and applied for a warrant for the arrest of the person who claims to be Mrs. Swift, on the charge of uttering a forged check in the sum of $30, which was drawn upon the First National Bank of Denver, Col. It was signed "Henry Swift, Chaplain, U. S. A.," and indorsed upon the back in the name of Mrs. M. A. Swift. The check was given in payment for a small heating stove and other goods of the value of $14 75. When it was accepted the difference, $15 25, was paid in cash.

The paper was deposited in a local bank and by that agency forwarded to Denver for collection. It came back with the words written across it: "Payment refused, for signature is a forgery." With the bogus check was a notary's certificate acknowledging the teller's statement that the signature was not genuine. Then search was made in this city, on Angel Island and in other places for the alleged Mrs. Swift, but no trace of her was found. As a last resort the assistance of the police was asked.

Though merchants are slow to acknowledge that they have been victimized, it is understood, that Mangrum & Otter are not the only ones who have suffered by similar forgeries. It is said that a down-town grocery firm handled one of the checks amounting to $146 and that another of the bits of paper calling for the payment of $60 was accepted by Nathan, Dohrmann & Co. The check which Mangrum & Otter cashed was dated November 29, 1899, and was presented in payment for the goods on January 5th. Though it is not charged that the person who uttered the check forged the chaplain's name, the similarity between the writing of the signature at the bottom of the check and the indorsement on the back is sufficiently noticeable to cause comment.

Swift is chaplain of the Thirteenth Infantry and is now in Manila. He went to his post last May, and it is said that his wife accompanied him, but returned later and at her own request was assigned to quarters on Angel Island by General Shafter. According to the statements of officers of the post Mrs. Swift has not occupied the apartments assigned to her, but a number of packages of household effects have from time to time arrived at the island addressed to her.

A. S. Mangrum, who sold some goods to the person who introduced herself as the wife of the chaplain, is very anxious that she be located.

"The woman came into the store, and after making her purchases asked that they be sent to her quarters at Angel Island," said Mangrum yesterday. "She wanted them packed in boxes. She said that, being the wife of an Army chaplain, she might be called away at any time. She said also that for the same reason she did not carry much money with her, but that her husband always kept his account with the Denver bank and drew upon it as needed. Then she presented the check for $30, and as she seemed to be perfectly honest it was cashed without question. The next thing I knew about the matter was when the check was returned as a forgery. I went to the island and secured the goods and also learned some things about the Mrs. Swift, whom I should like to find."

Others acquainted with the woman, who says she is the chaplain's wife, tell queer tales of her. It is said, among other things, that letters, purporting to have been sent by the chaplain, and received by Captain Leeds, Postmaster at Alcatraz, asking that the Captain advance Mrs. Swift such money as she might need, are in the same handwriting as the signature to the check, which has been pronounced a forgery. The letters are postmarked from San Francisco, while the chaplain is in Manila. The woman's explanation of this fact has been that they were brought across on a transport by a friend and mailed in this city.

THE LETTER TELLS TALES.

Jan 7 — 1900

Light on the Murder of Charles Thomas at Merced.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY ON AN IMPORTANT MISSION.

BRINGS ANONYMOUS WRITING FOR EXAMINATION BY THE EXPERTS.

Kytka Finds That It Is in the Hand of the Man Who Was Shot—It May Be of Help to the Defense.

F. G. Ostrander, District Attorney of Merced county, is here on a mission that is likely to have an important bearing on the Thomas murder case. He has come from Merced in order to get expert opinion as to the anonymous letter found in the possession of Charles A. Thomas at the time of his murder. As Ostrander explained yesterday the identity of the letter writer is a matter of grave consequence and will go far toward assisting to establish certain material facts concerning the relations of the murdered man and Marguerite Silvey, the murderess.

"The letter in question," said Ostrander when seen at the Lick yesterday afternoon, "was sent from Bakersfield and was dated within a day or two of a certain letter which Miss Silvey received from her Bakersfield lover, H. J. Haley. Haley broke off the engagement existing between them. The anonymous letter showed some of the characteristics of the handwriting of both Thomas and the Silvey girl and apparently could have been written by either one of them. The important thing about the letter was that it attacked Miss Silvey's character. Had it been written by the girl it would have indicated that she wanted to sever her relations with Thomas and cling to the man in Bakersfield to whom she had been engaged. Had the letter been written by Thomas to himself it was unquestionably designed to enable Thomas to hold a club over the girl's head.

"I was inclined to think that the letter was written by Thomas, but to establish the fact beyond question I brought it here and submitted it to the scrutiny of an expert and I now have his statement that the handwriting is that of the murdered man. Thomas wrote the letter and addressed it to himself. I believe there is no question of this.

"I do not know what use may have been made of the letter, but it furnishes no legal justification for the murder. In fact, the Silvey girl has no defense, unless she puts up a plea of insanity. There may have been some moral justification, but absolutely none in law. In spite of this, however, the girl is entitled to some sympathy. Her relatives are morally culpable more than she, in permitting the shooting. If any killing had to be done they should have done it themselves."

The anonymous letter was experted by Theodore Kytka, and at a meeting held yesterday afternoon in the office of Knight & Heggerty the Merced District Attorney was assured that there could be no question as to the identity of the writer.

The crime with which the Silvey girl is charged was committed December 27th in Merced. Thomas, who was employed as a reporter on the Merced Weekly Star, was called from his office into the hall of the newspaper office early in the evening, and as he stepped through the door he was shot by Miss Silvey, who was accompanied by a relative. Thomas died two days later and Miss Silvey was charged with the murder. Her preliminary examination will be held on Wednesday next. Thomas and the girl had been intimate for some time previous to the shooting. The two went to Fresno a few weeks before the killing, and upon their return fitted up housekeeping apartments, Miss Silvey telling her people that she had married Thomas. The story was disbelieved and serious trouble ensued between the girl and her relatives. The denouement of the affair was the fatal shooting of the young newspaper man.

OBJECT TO THE TALESMEN.

Legal Fight Made by Dr. Rodley of Oroville, Charged With Perjury.

OROVILLE, January 23.—The trial of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, charged with perjury in connection with the alleged forgery of the will of the late Alfred Fuller, began to-day in the Superior Court of Butte county. Attorneys for the defendant filed an exception to the entire venire of talesmen, on the ground of irregularity of proceedings in selecting and certifying the list of names. The District Attorney at once moved that the matter be investigated and had subpenas issued for the members of the Board of Supervisors, who will be in court to-morrow morning to explain how they selected the jury. The irregularities complained of are mostly minute details, in which it is claimed that the law is not fully complied with. In case the panel is declared to be legally drawn the trial will proceed.

Judge Gray of the Superior Court of this county is presiding. The defendant filed an affidavit declaring Judge Gray disqualified by reason of adverse opinion previously formed and expressed, but counter-affidavits were filed to-day by District Attorney Sproul and by Judge Gray, and Gray will preside.

FULLER'S NOTE TO DR. LANDIS

Administrator Demands Privilege of Making Photographs

Sale of Randall Rice Real Estate to W. H. Marshall is Confirmed—Woods Case

Special to the Record

OROVILLE, January 10.—E M Woodman, as defendant in the action entitled Landis vs Woodman, through his attorneys John Gale and F C Lusk, has notified Landis and his attorneys that on Tuesday, Jan. 16th, he will apply to the Court for an order requiring the plaintiff to permit him to inspect and have photographic copies taken of the alleged promissory note of the late Alfred Fuller, and for other and further relief as may be deemed just.

The sale of the Randall Rice real estate to W H Marshall has been confirmed. The purchase price was $4000.

L C Faulkner has been appointed a referee to take testimony in the divorce case of Lydia Woods vs Geo R Woods.

The inventory and appraisement of the Victor Noyot estate shows that money has come into the hands of the administrator to the amount of $465.35; claim against E F Coutolenc for $1000; mining claim and improvements $50; total $1,515.35.

D L Barnes, H R Pegden and H A Ham, have inventoried and appraised the Elizabeth Pegden estate as follows: Realty, Lot 4, blk 36, Chico, with improvements, $900; lot 4, blk F, of Bidwell's Extension to Chico, with improvements, $600; total $1500. The estate is community property.

Miss Fannie Evers has waived her right to administer upon the estate of her deceased husband, Henry Evers, and requests the appointment of Thos J Evers, a son. The estate consists of realty consisting of 360 acres of foothill land, with improvements, valued at $1000; personal property consisting of horses, cows, calves, hogs, harness, wagon and household furniture, valued at $210; total $1210.

In the suit of Moulton vs Evans, which was transferred here from Colusa county for trial, plaintiff has filed an amended complaint.

The inventory and appraisement of the Chris Gilman estate shows a total valuation of $383 65; of which amount $215 60 is cash, and the appraisement of the Mrs. E Nash estate places the total valuation of $100.

SCOTT ON THE DEFENSIVE.

Candidate for Tax Collector Testifies in His Own Behalf.

Jan 3 — 1900

CLAIMS A HOME IN THIS CITY.

Takes the Position That His Residence Here Began in July, 1894.

J. Harry Scott, who received the highest number of votes for the office of Tax Collector at the recent municipal election, spent some time on the witness stand in Judge Seawell's court today in an attempt to show that he possesses the qualifications necessary to that office. He devoted his greatest efforts to showing that he has resided in San Francisco for over five years.

Upon taking the stand Scott testified that he was born in San Francisco in 1862. He has resided here continuously ever since, with the exception of a few years spent in Santa Cruz and in San Jose. In October, 1893, he established his home in San Jose. He remained in that city until July, 1894, when he gave up his house and sent his wife to San Francisco.

"It was my intention at that time," said Scott, "to re-establish my home in this city. In fact, I consider that with the removal of my wife to San Francisco I transferred my home to this city, and that her home became my residence. Business interests compelled me to remain in San Jose after my wife came to San Francisco. However, I did not continue my home there, and I consider that I had no residence in that city after the month of July, 1894."

Before Scott entered upon his defense several witnesses were heard in opposition to his claims. Of these R P Doolin was the most prominent. He was the Democratic candidate for Tax Collector at the recent election. During the latter part of November he went to San Jose to investigate Scott's career in that city. He testified that he found that Scott did not remove to San Francisco until 1895. Scott did not move into his residence in the Nightingale block on Haight street until February 27 or 28, 1895.

Doolin denied on cross-examination that a conspiracy had been entered into between himself and Tax Collector Sheehan to deprive Scott of his office. He stated that Sheehan was making the present contest on his own responsibility.

4

JUSTIFICATION WAS NOT SHOWN

Margaret Silvey Held for Murdering Young Thomas.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

MERCED, January 10.—The preliminary examination of Miss Margaret Silvey, charged with the murder of her lover, C. A. Thomas, a reporter on the "Star," on December 11th, was held at the Courthouse to-day by Justice Crocker. District Attorney Ostrander and F. W. Henderson appeared for the prosecution and J. W. Knox for the defense. The defendant, Miss Silvey, appeared in court attended by her father and brother. She wore a heavy veil and was very nervous, the excitement attending the murder of her sweetheart, by whom she had been betrayed, having left a marked effect on her.

Charles Harris, proprietor of the "Star," told about the tragedy which occurred in the hallway leading to his office. Dr. Lilley and Dr. O'Brien followed with minor testimony, the latter describing the murdered man's wound.

Constable J. H. Smith testified that he arrested Miss Silvey after she shot Thomas, overtaking her while she was on her way to her father's office in the lumber yard. After he had made the arrest Lacey Silvey, a brother of the defendant, came up. Smith told him his sister had killed Thomas. Lacey then said something to the effect that he had feared she would shoot Thomas and wanted to go with her, but she would not let him.

This statement from the girl's brother would seem to assist materially in establishing a case against her, as it tends to show that the murder was premeditated.

Mrs. Lenora Silvey, sister-in-law of the defendant, who accompanied Miss Silvey to the "Star" office on the evening Thomas was shot, told of Miss Silvey coming to her apartments in the Academy building on the evening of the murder. She said she accompanied her downtown to the "Star" office to see Thomas, the girl saying she "wanted to have a little talk with him." When they reached the top of the stairs leading to the "Star" office Mrs. Silvey waited while Miss Silvey met Thomas coming out of the office. Thomas stood with his hand on the doorknob and Miss Silvey a few feet away. Witness could not hear the conversation. Suddenly a pistol shot was fired and Thomas ran back into the office.

The case was then submitted to Judge Crocker, who held Miss Silvey to answer to the Superior Court, without bonds, on a charge of murder. Miss Silvey will, therefore, go to jail pending her trial. She had been released before on $10,000 bonds.

When the defendant heard the decision of the Judge she gave way completely and was carried downstairs in a fainting condition.

The Silvey-Thomas tragedy and its developments are the talk of the town, and considerable excitement exists. Thomas took the Silvey girl away from town some months ago and returned, claiming her as his wife. The story of a marriage was not believed by the girl's parents, and after the pair had lived together several months Miss Silvey admitted to her parents that they were not married. The realization that she had been wronged weighed on the girl and she finally sought revenge by murdering her lover. At the time of the murder the sympathy of the community was with her, but as the case develops the public is inclined to believe she was to some extent to blame in the matter, and that when she killed Thomas it was not justifiable homicide.

LEFT LITTLE TO HER BROTHER.

MRS. ANN HARRIS' WILL FILED FOR PROBATE.

JOSIAH AMES DISINHERITED WITH A LEGACY OF FIVE DOLLARS.

Ten Thousand-Dollar Estate Goes to the Children of Her Deceased Brother, John Ames.

Oakland Branch Office of the "Chronicle,"
[illegible]

OAKLAND, January 6. The will of the late Mrs. Ann Harris, whose litigation for several years with her brother, Josiah P. Ames, had brought her into public notice, was filed for probate today by E. Wilder Churchill of Napa, who is named as executor without bonds. Mrs. Harris' will disposes of the estate, which is estimated to be of the value of about $10,000, to the children of her deceased brother, John Ames. The children are also entitled under the will to all money recovered under whatever judgments may be rendered in favor of the estate against Josiah P. Ames in the suits now pending. Mrs. Harris remembered the brother, with whom she has been at war, with a bequest of $5. The will is dated April 14, 1898, and recites that the decedent was 81 years of age. Churchill is named as executor, and in case he refuses to act or for any reason he failed to act, William C. Ames is to execute the terms of the will.

Mrs. Harris' litigation with her brother, Josiah P. Ames, was the result of a dispute over valuable property which, she alleged, her brother was holding as his own, whereas she claimed that in reality he was but holding it in trust for her. Two suits were brought in the Superior Court of this county. One was an action for an accounting which has never come to trial, and the other a suit to determine the ownership of valuable bonds of the Dayton and Ohio Railroad, on which a judgment was rendered in favor of Mrs. Harris for $61,100.

The judgment was rendered several months ago by Judge Ogden, but the case is still unsettled, as the defendant's attorneys are preparing a bill of exceptions on an appeal to the Supreme Court. It is said that a motion for a new trial will be made.

RECORDS ARE STILL INTACT.

Jan 5 — 1900

SENSATIONAL STORY WAS WITHOUT BASIS.

ROGUES' GALLERY HAS NOT BEEN REMOVED FROM POLICE HEADQUARTERS.

Chief Lees Allowed the City to Retain Books Which Had Been Compiled at His Own Expense.

A great pile of books filled with photographs and descriptions and records of criminals gathered together at police headquarters proves the falsity of the published story that Chief of Police Lees had carried away the city's rogues' gallery when he retired from office. In addition to this mute testimony, Captain Wittman, who is directing the affairs of the department in the name of Acting Chief of Police Tobin, and Arnop Bainbridge, head of the criminal identification bureau, declare that there is no truth in the story.

"The collection of photographs and descriptions and pictures is intact," said Captain Wittman. "These records were taken out of the case in which they are usually kept, as the case is to be removed to-day to the new Hall of Justice. The rogues' gallery will remain here until the department removes to its new quarters, and it will then be taken to the Hall of Justice and put back into the case from which it has been temporarily taken."

"All our records from 1860 to the present day are here," said Arnop Bainbridge, pointing to the pile of books on the desk behind him. "All that Chief Lees took away was his private collection of daguerreotypes and ambrotypes, taken in the early days of the department, and we have copies of about all of these. These pictures were taken prior to 1860. Our books have everything since that date. The gallery is the property of the city, and no one has had any thoughts of taking it away. As to records, we have all of our own here and several books which Chief Lees has compiled at his own expense, paying $2500 out of his own pocket for the work. Instead of being handicapped by a lack of records, the police officials under the new charter will have one of the finest rogues' galleries ever owned by a municipality."

"There is no truth in the story," said Chief Lees. "I haven't taken the gallery. It is the property of the city, and it is still in the office to which it belongs. There are several records compiled at my expense, but they also are still in the possession of the city. Nothing has been taken away except a few of my personal belongings. As to the story that I am to start a private detective agency in opposition to the Pinkertons, there is nothing in it. I am not going to start any agency. I have had no trouble with the Pinkertons, and the state of their feelings toward me is shown by a great basket of flowers which they sent to me on the day of my retirement. Our relations always have been and still are most cordial."

Police Captain John Seymour, who is mentioned as a party to the private detective agency enterprise, also denies the story, and says that he has never even considered such a plan.

BOOMING WEEK IN OROVILLE

Hundreds of People Desire to Attend the Trial

Indications Are That Judge John C. Gray Will Preside Regardless of Dr Rodley's Protest

There will be a throng of people in Oroville during the coming week to attend the Rodley trial, and the word comes from the county seat that the courtroom will not be sufficient in size to accommodate the Oroville people who desire to attend.

From Chico quite a number intend to go solely for the purpose of witnessing the trial, while fully thirty people have been subpoenaed as witnesses for the defense. Nearly all of the witnesses for the defense from here will be called for the purpose of proving the reputation of the defendant. The selection of these witnesses was made by Attorney Guy R. Kennedy who is thoroughly conversant with the views of the majority regarding Dr. Rodley.

It is not probable that the real trial of the case will be begun today, as the affidavit filed by Dr. Rodley in support of a motion that he be permitted to have trial before a Judge other than Judge Gray will necessitate a hearing, in which arguments of some length will be made, and it is possible that testimony will be taken for the purpose of supporting the affidavit that Judge Gray has expressed himself in a manner that would indicate prejudice.

The general opinion both in Oroville and Chico is that Judge Gray will try the case regardless of Dr. Rodley's protest.

Some are of the opinion that an effort will be made by defendant to secure a delay, as is customary in many criminal cases. Such is not probable, as Dr. Rodley was very strongly opposed to the first continuance and was only persuaded to ask for it after his attorneys insisted that if he was to be his own lawyer, their services would not be required. They realized that a continuance was necessary, and Rodley finally gave in to his attorneys.

There is no basis upon which to forecast the length of the trial, but guesses place the time at from two to six weeks.

C H Dane leaves this morning for Oroville for the purpose of attending and reporting for the RECORD the Rodley trial. He will remain in Oroville until the close of the trial.

URDAY, JANUARY 20, 19

In the case of the People vs. Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, a stipulation has been filed by J D Sproul, representing the People and Guy R. Kennedy, counsel for Rodley, wherein it is stipulated that John Bruce, Sr., of Dump Precinct, who was drawn as a juror to appear on Jan. 23d, for the trial of the cause, be excused and his attendance dispensed with, for the reasons that on account of age and physical disabilities he is incapacitated from serving, said Bruce being at present sick and unable

THE RODLEY TRIAL.

Butte County Clerk Tells of Conversations With the Accused.

OROVILLE, January 25.—In the Rodley forgery case today Mrs. Minnie Jones, former court reporter, read the entire testimony of Dr. Rodley, given when Alfred Fuller's will was probated. County Clerk H. T. Batchelder was called to the stand and said that in February, 1898, Dr. Rodley came to him at Oroville and asked for a private interview. He asked him (Batchelder) if he could identify the signature of Fuller. He said that there was [illegible] Fuller. He said he could certify to the signature for him if he could ... Witness told him that Fuller had never asked him to sign any document as a witness. He said in explanation that he inferred the doctor wished him to sign a will. A few days later he received a letter from Dr. Rodley, asking him to come to Chico. He went there, and the doctor showed him a will signed by Alfred Fuller, and asked him if that was the signature of Fuller and if he could sign as a witness. Witness replied that he could not sign anything unless Fuller had requested him to do so. He said Dr. Rodley took the will from his safe and returned it to the same place. He was questioned at length concerning the letter and the two interviews and will return to the stand to-morrow.

RODLEY WANTS ANOTHER JUDGE

Says that Judge Gray is Biased and Prejudiced.

AFFIDAVITS FILED THIS MORNING

Avers that Judge Gray has Formed and Expressed a Belief as to the Guilt of Rodley—Information Filed Charging Schuyler Binney With Murder.

Special to the ENTERPRISE

OROVILLE, Jan. 22.—The first gun in the Rodley case was fired this morning, and the defendant has petitioned for a new judge to try the case.

The affidavit of defendant Rodley was filed this morning and states that Rodley could not have a fair and impartial trial before Judge Gray, the Judge of the Superior Court in and for Butte county.

The affidavit states that defendant could not receive a fair and impartial trial at the hands of Judge Gray for the reason of prejudice and bias, as this:

"That Judge Gray has formed and has expressed to others a fixed opinion concerning the merits of the said case, adverse to defendant, and has taken an active part in support of the prosecution of said action outside of his official duties; that said opinion formed and expressed is not by said Judge formed upon public rumors or statements in public journals or common notoriety, but is formed upon statements of others who claim to know the facts.

"Defendant insists upon his rights to a fair and impartial trial, and makes this affidavit under Section 17, Code of Civil Procedure."

District Attorney Sproul accepted service of the notice to-day, but the People and the District Attorney waive no rights in the acceptance of said notice.

The case will come up at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon and as the defendant will fight "every inch of the ground," it is expected the case will consume some 14 or 15 days. Grove L. Johnson of Sacramento, George D. Collins of San Francisco, and Guy R. Kennedy of Chico, will appear for the defense and will have a special reporter. It is expected by the defense that the entire panel of 75 jurors will be exhausted and the case promises to be one of the most stubbornly fought contests held in Butte County for many years past.

In the case of the People vs. S. Binney, the District Attorney this morning filed an information charging Binney with the crime of murder.

The case will probably follow immediately after the Rodley and Houseworth trials.

In the matter of the estate of A. Fuller, Richard White has power of attorney from Franklin Fuller, to represent him in the hearing on the petition of Wm. Fuller to determine his heirship and his rights to the estate.

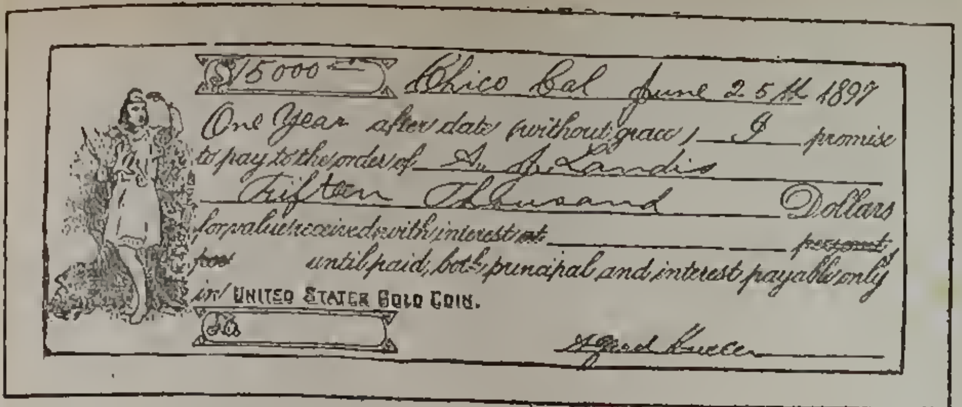
Estate Randall Rice—Return of sale of real estate filed and set for hearing Feb. 5. The real estate, consisting of 246 acres of land in Tp. 21, R. 3 E, was sold to W. A. Park for $492.

Estate Henry Piersall—Return of sale of real estate, consisting of lots 7 and 8, block 12, Oakdale, to Fetters & Williams for $294, filed and set for hearing Feb. 2.

Estate John Heirftl—Order of publication of notice to creditors entered.

Estate Wm. Tubbs—Bond of E. B. Cullins in the sum of $350 filed and letters of administration entered.

NOTE THAT FIGURES PROMINENTLY IN THE ALFRED FULLER WILL CONTEST AT CHICO.



$15000 — Chico Cal June 25th 1897

One Year after date (without grace) I promise to pay to the order of A. J. Landis Fifteen Thousand Dollars for value received with interest at — per cent — until paid, both principal and interest payable only in UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

No —

Alfred Fuller

EXPERT THEODORE KYTKA leaves this city to-day for Oroville to photograph and pass upon the merits of the $15,000 note which Dr. A. J. Landis has presented against the estate of the late Alfred Fuller of Chico. The Public Administrator holds this note to be a forgery and has refused payment. He further claims that the Grand Jury will have more work to do in the affairs of this estate when he gets his evidence ready to present.

This note has been submitted to three experts, who have all pronounced the signature to be a forgery. These deductions were made from photographs taken in Oroville. Copies of these were sent to Kytka and with the use of a microscope and other tests he pronounced the note spurious, but refused to give expert testimony unless he was permitted to take original photographs and make enlargements. This, he says, will show the characteristics for eyes not expert in these matters. He will simply have to point the way. The attorneys for Landis bitterly opposed the granting of this concession, but the Public Administrator fought hard, and the Judge made an order that Kytka make the needful copies on January 27th. This time was set because Kytka had to make the trip to Oroville to be a witness in the criminal proceedings against Dr. J. E. Rodley, whose trial commences to-morrow.

Kytka takes the great camera which looks like a telescope and will make a thirteen-foot enlargement of the signature of the note in question. It was such tell-tale enlargements which Kytka made when the will brought out more than a year after the death of Fuller was pronounced a forgery. This, with the confession of Garner, one of the witnesses to the will, combined to make a big sensation. It was then that Dr. J. E. Rodley, who had been Mayor of Chico, was arrested; Garner, who signed the will with him, and Mrs. Houseworth, to whom, according to the terms of the will, all the property was left. Kytka showed that the will was in the handwriting of Mrs. Houseworth and that Fuller had not signed it. Former proceedings in this case have been civil. Criminal action is now at hand, Dr. Rodley having to answer first. The attorneys originally engaged by Rodley have deserted him and Grove L. Johnson and George Collins will now appear for him. The estate is valued at $50,000, all in cash.

ERASED DEMANDS PASS TREASURY

Jan 21 - 00

William Welch, a laundryman, has a grievance against the city's financial department, and he threatens to take it before the Grand Jury. He has lost $50, as warrants assigned to him and which were procured by some unexplained process by Max Goldberg, a warrant broker.

The warrants in question were $20 for expressage for the head janitor, and $30 for washing towels for December, both of which were made out in the name of Matt Smith, formerly head janitor. On a former occasion it appears Smith had not paid Welch's laundry bill, and Supervisor Collins made him assign these two demands to Welch. At that time the warrants were in the custody of John Ryan, the Warrant Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, and he saw them endorsed.

This demand is assigned to William Welch. (Signed) Matt Smith.

With this endorsement the demands, with numerous others, were sent by Nick Fitzgerald, a messenger-janitor, to the Auditor's office on December 29th for the Auditor's signature. In due time the bunch of demands was returned to the Supervisor's Warrant Clerk, but he found that the two Smith warrants, assigned to Welch, were missing. The rest were all checked off, and in accordance with the usual procedure they were taken by the various payees. Welch called on Ryan for his warrants and was referred to the Auditor's office. There he was informed that they had been paid to Max Goldberg on January 2d.

An investigation was held. The two demands were found in the treasury with the name of Welch erased with a knife from each assignment and that of Goldberg substituted. When the investigation reached the Auditor's department the claim was made that the demands came there with Goldberg's name on them. Fitzgerald, who carried them from the Supervisor's office with other demands, declared positively he did not know that the demands were in the bundle, and he protested that he took them direct to the Auditor. Goldberg had a claim against Smith for money advanced, and now there are many officials wondering who was his friend in the city's financial department. Goldberg was interviewed relative to the warrant last night. He said:

"I know nothing about the tampering with this warrant, and I court an investigation. I have nothing to hide from a Grand Jury. Smith owed me and I urged him hard. He assigned the claim to me, and my messenger went out and collected it. The scratching lies between Smith and the officers who handled the paper. To me it is all a mystery."

JUDGE JOHN C. GRAY,
Before whom Dr. J. Ellis Rodley will come up for trial.

RODLEY'S TRIAL TO BE BEFORE JUDGE GRAY

Affidavits Presented in Reply to Sworn Statements Made By Defendant

PANEL OF JURORS CHALLENGED

Attorneys for the Prisoner Fighting Upon Technicalities—Accused Has Endured Months of Imprisonment Well

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, January 23.—After several weeks of lonely confinement in the tank at the county jail, Dr. Rodley was to-day ushered into the superior courtroom to pass through a trial, upon the result of which depends only the question of whether he shall go to State prison for a term of years or again be a free man. Imprisonment is the only question. Guilty or not guilty, his life is ruined and his property must be given up in his defense. It is a fight to avoid the prison.

Notwithstanding the rumors to the contrary, Dr. Rodley is enduring the confinement in the county jail magnificently. He is in excellent health, and has not lost none of that robust appearance which he has always possessed on account of good living. He seemed cheerful as he entered the courtroom, though quite naturally embarassed on being ushered forth as a prisoner in the presence of many of his old friends. Mrs. Rodley and Mrs. F. J. Hauck were with the Doctor in court. Attorneys Geo. D. Collins of San Francisco and Guy R. Kennedy of Chico were present to appear for the defendant, and District Attorney Sproul appeared for the People.

While Dr. Rodley was represented yesterday by only Attorneys Kennedy and Collins, he will have a trio as soon as the trial gets fairly under way, as Grove L. Johnson will appear immediately after the jury has been secured.

In response to the affidavit filed by Dr. Rodley yesterday to the effect that he believes Judge Gray to be prejudiced and biased against him, and unable to give him a fair trial on account of the prejudice, two affidavits were filed this morning—one by District Attorney Sproul and the other by Judge Gray.

The affidavit filed by Sproul set forth that he has been the District Attorney of Butte county during the year past and he was thoroughly conversant with all the testimony given by the various witnesses; he also had conversed frequently with Judge Gray, regarding the unfortunate affair, and the latter at no time made any intimation regarding what the testimony of any witness was or would be; that he never in all of the conversations had with him ever expressed himself in a manner indicating any prejudice. On the other hand, Judge Gray had stated to the affiant that he viewed the case with sorrow and regret, for Dr. Rodley had been a friend of his especially in politics, and at elections he had cared well for the interests of him, (Gray). He had also stated that if the evidence as he had heard it was, is true, the case for the prosecution appeared to be a strong one. Affiant declared that Judge Gray is not prejudiced nor biased, and that he has done nothing in the preliminary proceedings to indicate prejudice, and he believes that Judge Gray will give the defendant a fair trial.

Judge Gray's affidavit was a general denial of the allegations of Rodley. He sets forth that he entertains no prejudice against the defendant, has not talked with the witnesses in this case, and that he will give the defendant a fair trial.

The affidavits settle this matter for the present and Judge Gray will try the case, as he certainly has a right to do.

It was not long after the opening of court when it became apparent that the attorneys for the defense propose to fight every step of the way. The list of seventy-five jurors was read, and then came the line-up of those who believed they possessed legitimate excuses for being dismissed. Eighteen were excused.

Attorney Collins then challenged the remainder of the panel on several grounds. He objected to the order of the Court directing the Supervisors to make a selection of 300 jurors, claiming that it was not made in conformity with the Code. He criticised the returns made by the Sheriff in that they did not show whether service was made on the jurors in person or whether the subpoenas were left at their homes. He also claimed that the certificate of the Supervisors was defective, in that erasures of names had been made and other names substituted without any notations being made on the certificate to show who had made the changes. Further, he objected for the reason that H. T. Holms was drawn and H. P. Holms was substituted.

The challenge was argued at some length, and District Attorney Sproul stated that he did not propose to jeopardize the rights of the people by hasty action, and he asked that testimony of the Supervisors be taken. An adjournment was therefore taken until this morning at 10 o'clock, when the testimony on the questions raised will be taken.

Believes He Cannot Receive a Fair and Impartial Trial Before Him

SPROUL OBJECTS TO THE FILING

Defendant Declares That the Court Has Been Taking An Active Part in His Prosecution

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, January 22.—The affidavit of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley subscribed and sworn to before Court Commissioner, John Guldery, wherein he objects to being tried before Judge John C. Gray, was filed to-day. Rodley avers that he cannot have a fair and impartial trial before said Judge, by reason of the "prejudice and bias" of said Judge. He further avers that the Judge has formed, has now, and has expressed to others, a fixed opinion concerning the merits of the case adverse to and against affiant and has taken an active part in support of the prosecution, outside of his official duties; that such expressed opinion is not founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals or common notoriety, but is founded upon statements of others who claimed to know the facts involved in the charge upon which affiant is about to be tried, therefore he insists upon a fair and impartial trial and makes affidavit under section 170 of Code of Civil Procedure. The objection of District Attorney Sproul to the filing of the affidavit on any legal ground, is on file on the ground that the same is irrelevant and not in due form of law, and he refuses to waive any right on the part of the people that they may have to object to any hearing thereon.

Franklin Fuller has given power of attorney to represent him in the Wm. Fuller matter, to Richard White. Wm. Fuller is the alleged new heir and son of Alfred Fuller.

JUDGE GRAY TO HEAR THE CASE

He Files a Counter Affidavit.

Jan 23 - '00

OBJECTIONS FROM THE DEFENSE

Declare the Jurors Were Irregularly Drawn, and that the Sheriff's Manner of Service Was Not in Conformity With the Code of Civil Procedure.

Special to the Enterprise.

OROVILLE, Jan 23.—The prediction that the attorneys for Dr. J. Ellis Rodley would fight every point was evidenced yesterday in the filing of the affidavit in opposition to Judge Gray hearing the case.

This morning both District Attorney Sproul and Judge Gray filed counter affidavits in which every allegation contained in the Rodley affidavit was denied, and the case will proceed in Judge Gray's Court.

Another evidence that defense was determined to grasp at every straw was demonstrated in the fact that Attorney Collins of San Francisco objected to the entire proceeding of the empanelling and subpoenaing of the 300 trial jurors.

When the case was called this morning the court-room was crowded to its utmost capacity, many ladies being present, and many more striving to gain an entrance who were crowded out by those who were earlier on the scene.

The first proceeding in this case, which is exciting so much interest, was the reading of the list of the 75 jurors called for this case. Then came the usual excuses of jurors for dismissal, some claiming business affairs as an excuse for discharge, while others had sickness in the family, were hard of hearing, and numerous other pleas. Of the 75 jurors summoned, 18 were excused on the various excuses offered. Attorney Collins then entered a challenge to the balance of the panel, to which the District Attorney entered a denial. This brought out a warm argument.

Attorney Coll[illegible] stated that he had [illegible]ered the challenge to the jurors on the following grounds: First—That the Sheriff's return on the subpoena was defective; that the manner of service was not in conformity with certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Second—That the order of the court requiring the Board of Supervisors to make a selection of 300 jurors was not in conformity with the Code.

Third—That the certificate of the Supervisors regarding the selection of the 300 jurors was defective.

The District Attorney denied all of these challenges, and the members of the Board of Supervisors were subpoenaed to appear in court at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning to give verbal testimony regarding the manner of selecting the 300 trial jurors.

SELECTION OF JURORS IS NOW PROGRESSING

Judge Gray Decides That the Panel Was Legally Drawn and Must Stand.

FOUR OF FIRST TWELVE TAKEN

Strong Indication That Rodley Will Make a Desperate Effort to Discredit Colonel Batchelder's Testimony

Jan — 24, 1900

The continuation of the trial of Dr. J Ellis Rodley this morning in the Superior Court was marked by a dull monotone of legal quibbles that to the outsider seem entirely foreign to the matter at issue. That the case will be a long and hardly fought legal battle, the tactics of Attorney Collins, for the defense, leaves no reason to doubt. His objections to the validity of the drawing of the present jury panel are based upon purely technical grounds, but they serve to draw out the case and add at least one day's proceedings to the record. At convening of court this morning the attendance was large and the seating capacity of the room is already severely taxed, although it is difficult to see how the proceedings could have any public interest.

Judge Gray announced as preliminary to the proceedings that Mrs. McCallan of Glenn county would act as official reporter with Miss Gray as assistant. Mrs. F Hall of San Francisco was also present, acting as the reporter for the defense. The Court also announced and it was made a part of the record that he denied the application of the defense for a change of Judge, to which an exception was noted.

The five Supervisors from the various districts were placed upon the stand as well as Deputy Clerk Belding and Sheriff Wilson to testify regarding the manner in which the three hundred names from the body of the county were selected, how their fitness according to the assessment roll was determined, and why certain erasures and substitutions were made. The Supervisors agreed in their statements that the list was prepared in regular session, personally selected according to the population of the various districts, and that they received no suggestions as to the fitness of certain names. The deputy clerk told how he had written in certain names and erased others because they were found not to be on the assessment roll, and that the changes were made before the list was attested and filed. Attorney Collins is striving to show that the panel and the entire list of jurymen for the year were not drawn in a strict compliance with the statute. There was little doubt however that the objections would be overruled on the ground that even if it was not strictly complied with no material right of the defendant had been interfered with. The examination of these witnesses occupied all the time up to the noon recess.

On convening of Court for the afternoon session the hearing on the motion for disallowing the panel of jurymen was continued, and brief arguments were made by Attorney George D Collins in favor of the motion, and District Attorney Sproul against it.

Notice.

All persons having bills against or who are indebted to Dr. J. Ellis Rodley will please call and settle with Mrs. Rodley at Guy R. Kennedy's office each day from 2 to 4 p. m. d23-tf

Judge Gray decided the question at once by determining that the panel was legally drawn and that no material rights of the defendant would be materially injured by its acceptance. Hence, the motion was denied, to which ruling Attorney Collins interposed an exception.

The impanelment of jurymen was then commenced. The first twelve drawn from the box were: Joseph Goss, L W Wakeham, Thos Truxell, George Duensing, Charles Crane, H P Helms, J R Moseley, J N Cole, John Jaeckel, E R Van Ness, F S Rowe and E J Brandt.

The prosecution had four questions to ask the jurymen, but the defense had a long series of inquiries to make regarding their qualifications. They wanted to know of the jurymen whether they were acquainted with the principal actors, and particularly, whether, in case H. T. Batchelder went on the stand and made a statement of facts, and Dr. Rodley went on the stand and made statements directly contrary, they would believe Batchelder or Rodley. It is apparent from the nature of the questions asked the jurymen by the defense, that an effort will be made to discredit the testimony of H. T. Batchelder, and it is a matter of rumor that the basis of the attack on his testimony will be somewhat sensational.

John Garner, hale and hearty, was brought into the courtroom at the request of the defense in order that he might be identified when the jurymen were asked if they were acquainted with him. It was an embarrassing ordeal for Garner.

Out of the first twelve jurymen, Truxel, Duensing, Cole, Helms and Brandt were challenged by the defense for cause, they having formed a fixed opinion, and the challenges were allowed. Van Ness was also challenged, but the challenge was disallowed. Jaeckel was peremptorily challenged by the prosecution, and Crane and Rowe were peremptorily challenged by the defense.

Of the twelve first called four passed the muster, they being as follows: Joseph Goss of Durham, L Wakeham of Bangor, J R Moseley of Berry Creek and E R Van Ness of Paradise. These four were ordered into the charge of Sheriff Wilson, and the Sheriff was given instructions to keep all local papers from them and if they are allowed to read the San Francisco or any other papers, all reference to the case must be cut out before the papers are delivered to them.

An adjournment was then taken until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

DR. J. ELLIS RODLEY.
Now on trial for perjury in conection with the Alfred Fuller Will.

MRS. CRAVEN'S DEPOSITION. 1900

Cannot Be Found in County Clerk's Office. Jan 24

Pence & Pence, attorneys for Mrs. Nettie R. Craven in her litigation to secure part of the estate of James G. Fair, learned, on applying at the County Clerk's office for a deposition of Mrs Craven, that it was missing. The deposition was taken in 1896 and was filed when County Clerk Curry was in charge of the office. In the box where the deposition should have been was a card on which was written "See Harry Piper." Piper was Curry's chief deputy. The deposition was made at the time that Mrs. Craven brought suit on the two deeds for city property which she said Fair had given her. County Clerk Deane directed a thorough search for the document yesterday, but it could not be found. Piper, when questioned, stated that the deposition had been replaced in the box when he last saw it. Former Assistant District Attorney Hosmer had it during the prosecution of Notary Cooney for alleged perjury in connection with the deeds, but he said that he gave it back to Piper. The loss is not serious, as the attorneys supposed to Mrs. Craven have a certified copy of the deposition. County Clerk Deane and his deputies are not to blame for the loss.

LEGALLY DRAWN

So Decided Judge Gray This Morning.

FOUR HAVE BEEN SELECTED.

But All Were Subjected to a Series of Searching Questions as to Their Qualification to Sit in Butte County's Famous Case

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Jan. 24, 5 p. m.—The usual crowd was present in the courtroom this morning when the Rodley case was called. There was nothing of a sensational nature developed throughout the day, the early part of the forenoon being occupied in examining the members of the Board of Supervisors and other county officers regarding the manner in which the list of 300 trial jurors was drawn.

Deputy Clerk Belding was called and gave testimony regarding the drawing of jurors, after which the motion to throw out the entire panel was argued at length by Attorneys Collins and Sproul. After hearing the arguments the court overruled the motion of Collins to throw out the panel and the tedious task of selecting jurors was commenced.

The attorneys for the defense subjected the various jurymen to a very searching examination, and up to the hour of adjournment four jurymen were selected. They are:

E. R. Van Ness, L. Wakeman, J. R. Moseley and Joseph Goss.

That the case is creating much interest is evidenced by the large number of people in attendance who come from long distances to hear the proceedings of Butte's famous case.

At 5 o'clock an adjournment was taken to 9:30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

THIEF ARRESTED AFTER FIVE SHOTS.

JOSEPH E GILLIGAN went to jail yesterday morning, but not until five shots had been fired and four policemen had joined in the chase. It was Gilligan's second arrest within a year for theft, and this time a charge of forgery was added to that of burglary. The capture of Gilligan was brought about by the vigilance of Policemen Hurd and Snowball. At 4:30 o'clock yesterday they saw Gilligan, heavily laden with bundles, pass Grant avenue and Geary street. As he was acting suspiciously Gilligan was halted and asked his business. He had a bundle of laundered clothes, two boxes of cigars and a bottle of beer with him, and explained that he was taking the articles to his room at 507 Jones street. The cigars, he said, had been bought by him with money given him by a woman working in a restaurant on McAllister street. Policeman Hurd decided to make an investigation and took Gilligan to 507 Jones street. The landlady there said that she had ejected Gilligan last Sunday for failure to pay his rent. Hurd then started with Gilligan for the restaurant on McAllister street, but at the corner of Ellis and Leavenworth streets the suspect made a dash for liberty. Hurd fired five shots in the air to frighten the fleeing man, and soon Policemen Keys, Burns, Joy and Snowball were hurrying to the scene of the shooting. Gilligan ran into a house on the corner of Hyde and Turk streets and the police put the place in a state of siege. Policeman Burns went inside and found Gilligan concealed in a room on the top floor.

At the McAllister-street restaurant, which is opposite the City Hall and its police station, it was learned that a burglary had been committed. The rear window had been entered, and the things found on Gilligan stolen by some one, who had then left the place by the front door. There was no doubt but that Gilligan was the thief and he was booked at the City Prison on a charge of burglary.

Detective Anthony was detailed by Captain of Detectives Bohen to look up Gilligan's recent record. He learned that the thief passed a forged check on Clancy's saloon on McAllister street last Friday. The check was for $12, drawn on the First National Bank, and bore the forged signature of John T Sullivan, proprietor of the Oriel Hotel. He borrowed $5 on that bit of worthless paper, and probably negotiated other paper of its kind, as when arrested he had a number of blank checks of the First National Bank. He was booked on a charge of forgery and others may follow.

Gilligan's picture is already in the police rogues' gallery. In April of last year, while he was employed as a waiter in the Park Hotel, corner of Twenty-sixth and Mission streets, he stripped ten rooms of everything that could be crowded into a valise, making three trips before he succeeded in getting all of his plunder to his room down town on Jessie street. He was arrested by Detectives Fitzgerald and Graham and booked on ten charges of petty larceny. On April 20, 1899, he was sent to the County Jail for six months. At the time of his former arrest Gilligan had several blank checks in his pocket, but there was no evidence that he had ever committed forgery.

MRS. MINNIE HOUSEWORTH.

RODLEY JURY IS SELECTED

The Twelve Men Who Will Try the Case.

DEFENSE' CHALLLENGE EXHAUSTED

The Time of Selecting the Jury Was Much Less Than Was Expected—District Attorney Sproul Makes the Opening Statement to the Jury.

Special to the ENTERPRISE

OROVILLE, Jan. 25.—When Court was called at 9:30 this morning the work of selecting jurymen was renewed, and, contrary to the general expectation, progressed quite rapidly. Up to the time of adjournment at 11:50, five more jurymen had been secured, and as the defense had exhausted their peremptory challenges, it is believed the entire number will be selected before 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The law gives the defense the right to 10 peremptory challenges, and before this mornings session was concluded the entire number of challenges allowed them had been exhausted. The prosecution is allowed 5 peremptory challenges, and of this number District Attorney Sproul has used but 2. Should the attorneys wish to challenge any of the jurors this afternoon they can only do so by showing, from the answers made by the jurors to questions propounded, that said juror is disqualified by fact that he is prejudiced, is not on the assessment roll, or is in some other way wholly unfit to sit in the case.

As there are yet 17 on the list of 75 jurors drawn for this case it is quite likely that the entire jury will be selected from the venire of 75.

Those selected this morning are: Jas. Cozart, Hurleton; J. E. Crum, Bidwell's Bar; Hiram Chaplin, Palermo; Henry Huschman, Paradise; A. J. Batt, Forbestown.

The questions asked by the defense are along the line of what they know about the case, what they have read about the case, have they formed an opinion from what they have heard or read, have they heard any statements made regarding the case by persons professing to know the facts and if they have formed an opinion, can that opinion be changed by evidence produced.

One of the principal questions asked by the defense, and one which seems to bear significance as to one line of defence is as follows:

"Do you know H. T. Batchelder?"

"What is the character of your acquaintance with him?"

The examination of jurors brought out some peculiar and very conflicting opinions. One man, while under fire of a volley of questions stated emphatically that although [illegible] much [illegible] he had read [illegible] the case in the San Francisco papers, what he had read made no impression on his mind. He took no county papers, because there was "nothing in them anyhow."

Another man read the Butte county papers, had done so for many years, and believed all he read in them. He could see no reason for his county paper misrepresenting the facts in any case, whether of vital or minor importance, and he does not believe they were in the habit of doing so.

THE JURY SELECTED.

The Remaining Three Were Selected This Afternoon.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Jan. 25, 3 p. m.—The remaining three jurymen to try the case of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, charged with perjury in connection with the Fuller will case, were secured this afternoon. The three last selected are: B. E. Shaw, Biggs; Joel M. Nelson, Durham; N. Woodward, Chico.

The jury as selected is composed of the following men:

Jas. Goss, Durham; L. Wakeham, Bangor; J. R. Mosley, Berry Creek; E. R. Van Ness, Paradise; Jas. Cozart, Hurleton; J. E. Crum, Bidwell's Bar; Hiram Chaplin, Palermo; Henry Buschman, Paradise; A. J. Batt, Forbestown; B. E. Shaw, Biggs; J. M. Nelson, Durham; N. Woodward, Chico.

After the list of 12 jurors had been selected and the oath administered, the indictment found by the Grand Jury was read to them and the plea stated.

District Attorney Sproul then made his opening statement to the jury, in which he stated to them just what he expected to prove.

Deputy Clerk C. F. Belding was the first witness introduced by the prosecution, for the purpose of establishing the identity of the will which has caused such conviction.

The witness was asked if he was Deputy Clerk in 1897, to which question the defense objected on the ground that the records of the clerk's office were the best evidence as to when the will was admitted to probate.

In order to give time for looking up the records an adjournment was taken to 1:30 to-morrow morning.

It is quite probable that a recess will be taken from to-morrow noon to Monday morning.

AWAITING A DECISION IN THE FAIR WILL CASE.

Attorney Reuben H. Lloyd Not Willing to Fight Mrs. Craven-Fair Until the Trust Is Settled.

Exam. Jan. 28

Attorney Reuben H. Lloyd surprised the lawyers interested in the James G. Fair estate litigation by announcing, in Judge Troutt's court yesterday, that if the California Supreme Court should decide the trust clause of the Fair will to be invalid as contended by his heirs, that decision might lead to a speedy settlement of many points now disputed in the courts, and he therefore asked for a postponement of two weeks in the trial of Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair's claim for a family allowance.

Mr Lloyd is attorney for Mrs. Theresa Oelrichs and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt, daughters of Senator Fair, and explained that a decision in regard to the trust clause in the Fair will is expected soon. It would be unwise, he thought, to take up Mrs. Craven-Fair's case at this time, because, while the fight was in progress, a decision might be handed down by the Supreme Court that might change the legal aspect of the situation, and possibly might make further proceedings in this direction unnecessary.

Attorney Lafe Pence, of the law firm of Pence & Pence, attorneys for Mrs Craven-Fair, was not willing to have a continuance granted on the strength of what might, would or could happen, his client was ready for trial, and objected to further delay.

Judge Troutt explained that his time will be occupied for the next fortnight, and he therefore put over the trial until Monday, February 12th.

After the adjournment of court Mr. Lloyd explained that he and his associates, representing the two daughters, had argued to the Supreme Court that former Judge Slack's decision, declaring the trust clause invalid, ought to be sustained. If this view should prevail in the Supreme Court it would put the entire estate in the hands of the heirs and would greatly simplify any steps they might see fit to take in the settlement of the litigation now pending.

Mr Lloyd was asked if this was an intimation that the children of Senator Fair would be willing to compromise with Mrs. Craven-Fair, or would recognize her claim to the Lick House property under the so-called pencil deeds, or in regard to a family allowance as Senator Fair's widow.

To this Mr Lloyd responded that he did not intend to intimate anything, as he did not know what his clients would do, even if the decision comes their way; but that it would change the status of the litigation in many important particulars.

Mr. Pence said he didn't know what the attorneys for the children of Senator Fair expected to gain by delay, unless that, possibly, they hoped to obtain, by compromise, part of the Lick House property, to which his client holds a deed.

Alfred Fuller.

If all the things of earth are known in Heaven and hell, what must be the pleasure of Alfred Fuller as he realizes the trouble into which all those have fallen who have endeavored to feather their nests with the wealth he so regretted to leave behind him.

As far as can be learned, this queer old fellow submitted himself but once to the camera, and that was over twenty years ago when he was residing near Sonora, where the photograph was taken. A reproduction of that photograph is herewith presented.

TASK OF SECURING A JURY IS COMPLETED

Attorney Collins Causes Hours of Delay on the First Inquiry For Testimony

Jan 26 1900

SEARCHING FOR MISLAID PAPERS

Prosecution Must Prove That Belding Was the Legally Appointed Deputy Clerk—Mrs Housecworth Appears

Special to THE RECORD.

OROVILLE, Jan. 25.—When court convened this morning at half past nine o'clock the attendance was not as large as on previous days, but before noon the room had filled up, and although nothing but the examination of jurors was the order, public interest seems in its unabated. The four jurymen who were chosen yesterday appeared freshly shaven and with the appearance of having passed a restful night in the custody of the Sheriff. They have comfortable quarters in the jury room where beds are provided them and their meals are brought in to them from a restaurant.

Four jurymen having been selected yesterday, the trial proceeded with the drawing of eight more names. The series of questions was almost identical with those asked yesterday, except occasionally the defense asked if the talesmen were acquainted with G. W. Mowrey, the foreman of the Grand Jury which indicted Rodley.

Of the first eight Geo. Gable was challenged by the defense for having a fixed opinion and the challenge was allowed. A. Greenwood was excused because he was not on the assessment roll. R. J. Hampton was challenged by the defense, but the challenge was not allowed and he was afterward peremptorily challenged and excused. E. Flenegan was excused for having an opinion and Frank Cress on account of defective hearing. Of the number Jas. Cozort of Hurleton, J. E. Crum of Bidwell Bar and A. J. Hatt of Forbestown were acceptable to both sides and were sworn to try the cause.

Five more were then drawn, Jacob Schorr of Chico was excused on account of defective hearing and R M Coon, J S Henelson and W R Stevenson were challenged by the defense, the three latter peremptorily. H Huschmann of Paradise was sworn to try the case. Of the next lot H Chaplin of Palermo was the only one satisfactory to the defense, A W Morse, M Ditzler and D Heckman being challenged. This left three to be selected. J I Gulick and Emmons White were peremptorily challenged by the defense and J H Messenger excused for not being on the assessment roll. The next three met with the same fate, A F Chase being excused because he was not on the assessment roll and A M Honodel and S A McCoy were challenged by the defense. At this point the defense announced that it had exhausted its peremptory challenges, the prosecution having used but one. At the hour of the noon recess P R Welsh, E B Shaw and Joseph Copeland were awaiting examination touching their qualifications to serve.

When Court reconvened for the afternoon session, the examination of jurors was resumed. P R Welch of Oroville was first called, and was excused on challenge by the defense, as it was apparent that he entertained a very fixed opinion. William Copeland was peremptorily challenged by the defense.

E B Shaw was acceptable to both sides, and was sworn in.

J M Nelson of Durham and N Woodward of Chico answered all questions satisfactorily to the prosecution and defense, and were sworn in. The defense had exhausted its allowance of peremptory challenges and had to accept both.

These two completed the jury, which is composed as follows: Joseph Goss of Durham, L Wakeman of Bangor, J. R. Moseley of Berry Creek, E. R. Van Ness of Paradise, James Cozort of Hurleton, J. F Crum of Bidwell Bar, A. J. Batt of Forbestown, H. Buschmann of Paradise, H. Chaplin of Palermo, E. B. Shaw of Biggs, J. M. Nelson of Durham and N. Chapman of Chico.

Attorney Guy R. Kennedy.

The general opinion is that the jury is an exceptionally intelligent and capable one, and that their judgment will be accepted by the public as final.

Judge Gray announced that all of the jurymen of this panel who were not taken, are dismissed until next Tuesday morning, and that those from Chico will look into the Chico RECORD to ascertain if they are needed on that day.

At this point Attorney Collins interposed an objection to the reading of the indictment charging Dr. Rodley with perjury. His objection was based on the ground that it was not an indictment under the law.

The objection was overruled and an exception was taken.

Deputy Clerk Belding then read the indictment.

District Attorney Sproul followed with his opening statement for the People. He set forth the many facts which he expected to prove. He told of the life and death of the old miser, of how the will was brought before the court, the appearance of the will, of the testimony of Dr. Rodley that he had with John Garner attested the will in Fuller's presence. He would prove that Dr. Rodley had obtained the signature of John Garner as an attesting witness by promising to pay him $3000. In fact, he declared in detail that he would prove all those facts showing a conspiracy to rob the estate of Alfred Fuller which were brought out at the trial of the contest of the will bequeathing to Mrs. Housew[orth] nearly the entire estate.

District Attorney Sproul having announced that he would not attack the previous good character of Dr. Rodley, Judge Gray informed the attorneys for the defendant that they would be limited to eight witnesses with whom to establish the good character of their client.

Attorney Collins took an exception to this ruling.

The taking of testimony was then begun, Deputy Clerk C. F. Belding being called to the stand. The first question asked brought out an objection from Attorney Collins which caused a delay of several hours, thus making it still more apparent that the defense will fight on technicalities from start to finish.

The initial question asked by Sproul which caused the trouble was whether witness was the Deputy County Clerk in 1898. Collins objected on the ground that the documents were the best evidence. Belding was dispatched to get the documents, and in the meantime the attorneys entered into a lengthy argument, in which new questions were raised which seemed to tangle things up still further. It was urged by Attorney Collins that it was necessary to prove that C. F. Belding was in fact the legally appointed deputy when he was administering oaths.

The discussion led up to the creation of a great desire on the part of the prosecution to find the certificates of appointment of Belding as Deputy Clerk, not only by Batchelder, but by ex-Clerk Lausen and ex-Clerk Harkness. A subpoena was issued for Lausen. It was nearly 6 o'clock when court adjourned, and up to that hour the desired papers had not been found.

Tonight it is understood that the searchers are on track of the missing documents.

In the trial of a case of so much importance as the one at hand, it is essential that an attorney be employed who is thoroughly conversant with local conditions which may have bearing upon the case. Of the attorneys in Butte county, Dr. Rodley selected Guy R Kennedy of Chico. While Mr. Kennedy is acting in a secondary capacity in Court, he is not to receive less credit for the able manner in which the interests of the defense are being cared for. The technicalities to be relied upon will be studied by both Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Collins, but the important work of securing evidence and digging up all data for the defense has been and is being done by Mr. Kennedy. Collins and Kennedy are certainly a strong team, and Rodley, if found guilty, can never say that his case was not ably handled.

(Continued on 4th Page.)

Attorney Grove L. Johnson, who was heralded shortly after Rodley's arrest as being the defendant's leading attorney, has not as yet appeared on the scene, and it is rumored today that he will not appear, the reason given being that he cannot afford to be away from his place in the State Legislature during the extra session. It is possible, however, that Dr. Rodley is not exceedingly anxious that he should appear, as it has been stated on quite excellent authority that Grove L's charges are rather high; that his proposition to Rodley called for $100 per day, and for the payment of the money each morning for each day's service.

Mrs. Houseworth, the beneficiary under the will, was brought from her cell in the jail to the courtroom this morning for the purpose of identification by the jurymen. Mrs. Houseworth had the appearance of having passed through a long, severe illness, and her manner in the courtroom was not such as to indicate any bravado.

NEW MEN GO INTO OFFICE, AND, AT LAST, THE CITY'S NEW CHARTER TAKES EFFECT,

An Orderly and Quiet Change Save for the Ruffianly Behavior of Sheehan's Gang.

One of Them Shoots Another During the Vain Attempt of the Ex-Tax Collector to Cling to Office.

JOHN O'BRIEN THE WOUNDED DEPUTY

The Health Board Stays Awhile to Argue and Then Withdraws With No Show of Force.

Organization Is Quickly Effected in All the Departments and Many New Attaches Are Chosen.

SHEEHAN AND SCOTT "MIX MATTERS."

smashed his skull if it had struck him. The shouting, struggling, shoving, cursing and panting mob swayed back and forth, the Scott men gaining ground and pushing the Sheehan men toward the inside room.

Strangely enough, the one pistol shot, instead of beginning a general fusillade, had the effect of calming the fighters to some extent. After the sharp report they confined their efforts to tackling and line-bucking, instead of clubbing and fist-fighting. But the temper of the antagonists was uncontrolled, and no doubt serious results would have followed had not a large squad of police tardily appeared as Attorney Ruef was dodging the deadly inkstands.

"Arrest that man!" shouted Ruef, pointing to Charles E. Broad, a Sheehan heeler.

Several of the policemen had seen Broad throw the inkstands, and he was quickly hustled out of the room. The police also arrested Ben Salomon, Scott's chief deputy, on suspicion of shooting O'Brien.

The police threw themselves into the thick of the fray and soon had the combatants separated, though they were not able to stop the noise. Shouting and cursing filled the room. Detached scrimmages were started here and there, only to be quickly squelched by the bluecoats.

replied Mayor Phelan. "This matter is in court. Why couldn't you wait for the decision of the court? The Board of Health gave way, pending a legal decision. Where were the police?"

Nobody could reply to this last question. The police, though in the same building, and aware of impending battle, did not appear in force until the damage had been done.

"Well," concluded Mayor Phelan, "all I can say is it is a disgrace to San Francisco. You both ought to lose the office for this. But, anyway," shrugging his shoulders, "it's all in one family."

This shot at the Republicans raised a laugh, at the height of which the Mayor withdrew, leaving the trouble as mixed as ever.

Auditor Wells called on Scott during the truce and made an arrangement to take over the license office. He recognized Scott officially as Tax Collector. This had a weakening effect upon the Sheehan crowd, which rapidly lost the spirit of fight.

After a truce of several hours Deputy Sheriff Fred Heyer appeared on the scene [illegible] Attorneys Ruef and Tuska [illegible] on behalf of Scott from Judge Bahrs. It was Judge Bahrs' first act as Presiding Judge. The Court's order directed Sheehan and his men to refrain from resisting or hindering Scott in the discharge of the Tax Collector's duties, from intruding in the office, from barricading the doors or windows and from remaining in the offices or rooms of the Tax Collector. The complaint set forth that Scott was elected last November under the new charter, that he had received his certificate of election, had taken the oath of office and filed the certificate in the County Clerk's office, and that his bond in the sum of $100,000 had been approved by the Mayor and the Auditor. It recited also Sheehan's attempt with armed men to shut Scott out of the office, and the barring of the doors and windows, and stated that Sheehan windows, and stated that Sheehan threatened to continue his efforts to keep Scott from performing the duties of Tax Collector. The injunction is to run until a further order by Judge Bahrs is made. A bond of $1000 on the injunction was given, with Oscar H. Curtaz, F. P. Haynes and J. H. J. Seyden as sureties.

This marked the defeat of Sheehan. His attorney, with the permission of Scott, took an hour to deliberate over the matter. Garret McEnerney was consulted and advised capitulation; so, at 4:45 o'clock, Sheehan called his cohort together and made a short but tearful talk, dismissing them. Sheehan, followed by his men, went out of a back door. There was no demonstration. A [illegible] and they are hereby required to file with the Secretary of this Board, prior to noon of Thursday, January 11, 1900, their written applications for such appointment.

Resolved, That any and all persons objecting to any candidate for the office of Chief of Police be and they are hereby required to file with the secretary of the Board, prior to 5 P. M. of Saturday, January 13, 1900, their written objections to such candidate, setting forth fully the grounds of such objections.

Among the members of the department in attendance upon the meeting were ex-Chief Lees and Captains Wittman, Gillen and Spillane. The veteran ex-Chief addressed the Board at some length, it being his final speech before retiring to private life after a continuous service of over forty-seven years in the department. He was listened to with the greatest interest and respect by the Commissioners. Chief Lees first gave a detailed account of the funds in his possession and control, which he was prepared to turn over to the Commissioners or their duly authorized representative. He next referred to the records and descriptions of prisoners, and the photographs, sometimes called the "rogues' gallery." He said that the [illegible] had been instituted [illegible] sequently the Legislature provided a contingent fund. He had caused the first photographs to be duplicated, so that the gallery, as he would turn it over to the Commissioners, was absolutely complete from its organization. The originals which he had paid for were at his home, where they belonged. They would be of no use to any one but himself in the event he should conclude to write a history of the department. In conclusion the Chief declared, with much feeling:

"I have been connected with this department for forty-seven years, and, wherever I am, Lees will always say it is the most perfect police department on earth. There is no department equal to it either in personnel or in its records."

In the afternoon the Commissioners made a tour of inspection of the various branches of the department. It has been arranged that Captain Wittman will continue to conduct the affairs of the department under Acting Chief Biggy the same as he did when Commissioner Tobin occupied a similar position.

OLD HEALTH BOARD MAKES NO CONTEST.

After Vain Hunt for Favorable Opinion, New Charter Men

SHEEHAN AND SCOTT "MIX MATTERS."

SAN FRANCISCO changed her form of municipal government at noon yesterday. The new charter, which is the subject of close scrutiny by students of municipal politics all over the United States, is now in force and effect. The process of assuming the new and expanded garb of government was an interesting one, and was watched at the City Hall yesterday by about 1000 citizens.

With the exception of a disgraceful scene in the Tax Collector's office, caused by the retiring Collector, E. I. Sheehan, in attempting to resist the authority of Tax Collector Joseph H. Scott to take possession of his office, the transition was devoid of excitement. Rumors of violent resistance to the new law and its representatives proved groundless. The good sense and adaptability of the American character were revealed except in the case of Sheehan, whose gang of ruffians, slinking back like beaten hounds, served as a type of the old spirit of lawlessness which, it is to be hoped, is forever overthrown.

The Mayor acquired new and vastly extended powers yesterday. Centralization of authority in him goes very far in the new charter. Though Mayor Phelan's appointments in the various commissions were announced some time ago, deep interest was manifested yesterday upon the convening of the Board of Supervisors, over which the Mayor presides. Mayor Phelan read his annual message, taking a survey of the scope of the Board's authority and responsibility under the new organic law. The new committees were announced, and the Board adjourned to meet next Monday.

The Mayor was also in evidence at the meeting of the Board of Health. Here a bitter contest was expected, the old Board giving promise of resisting all attempts to remove it. An arrangement was made, however, after much argument, whereby the old Board retired and was declared dissolved.

The new Board of Police Commissioners organized by electing George A. Newhall president. Commissioner W. J. Biggy was appointed the representative of the Board pending the election of a Chief of Police to succeed I. W. Lees, and Police Captain Wittman was placed in charge of the department under Commissioner Biggy. The Board gave no hint as to when it will elect a new Chief.

The Civil Service Commission began its work early, and the first competitive examination for a position under the new charter was held. This position is that of secretary and chief examiner of the Commission. There were thirty-five applicants.

The Fire Commissioners re-elected Chief Sullivan, Captain Comstock and Marshal Towe. The Board will meet again this morning.

The Board of Public Works placed Commissioner Mendell in the chair, and inspected the offices of the Surveyor and the Street Superintendent. C. E. Grunsky was elected City Engineer, and J. Leo Parks secretary to the Board. Daily meetings will be held at 10 A. M.

The Election Commissioners organized by electing Commissioner Wells chairman. The work of Registrar Steppacher was commended. A number of appointments were made.

Other boards and offices were filled by the choices of the people and of the Mayor without friction or delay. By 2 o'clock the entire city government, with the exception of the Tax Collector's office, had passed under the sway of the new charter. By 5 o'clock the obstreperous ex-Collector gave way, and the whole machinery of the city was working smoothly.

BATTLE IN OFFICE OF TAX COLLECTOR.

One of Sheehan's Rowdies Shoots Another--Scott Wins in the End.

FIFTY men, all young and husky, were engaged in a free fight in the Tax Collector's office at the City Hall yesterday. The battle was caused by the refusal of Edward I. Sheehan, the retiring Collector, to surrender the office to Joseph H. Scott, whose term began at noon. Sheehan had previously barricaded the office and posted behind the counters about twenty-five stout fellows, some of them prize-fighters, to defend the place. When his fortifications were completed Sheehan gave out the word that the office would not be surrendered without bloodshed. He kept his word, but the bloodshed was small. Only one shot was fired, the victim being John O'Brien, a Sheehan deputy, who was shot by one of Sheehan's own men in the heat of combat.

Sheehan and his commando were on the anxious seat all the morning. John B. Williams, a burly private detective, stood at the little gate leading behind the counter, and permitted no man to pass unless he bore the Sheehan badge and gave the Sheehan countersign. Sheehan, with a shaggy black beard and black slouch hat, stood behind the breastworks peering like a pirate over the poop of a Spanish privateer. His "deputies," hired for the occasion, stood nervously fanning themselves and narrowly watching the door. A small crowd, scenting trouble, gathered in the office outside the counter. In the crowd were a half dozen detectives in citizens' dress.

As 12 o'clock approached the room was still. The crowd increased rapidly, but everybody stood about trying to appear unconcerned, and the Sheehan defenders grew more and more nervous. Two or three policemen appeared and stood near the doorway. It was the calm before the storm.

The preliminary skirmish occurred at the door a few minutes after 12 o'clock. A. Ruef, attorney for Scott, started toward the counter and was stopped by the officer at the door. Ruef tried to tell his business, but an angry murmur behind him drowned his words. He was pushed forward, brushing the policeman aside, and Scott followed. The crowd in the corridor, numbering several hundred, then made a break to enter. Three officers struggled with them. Ruef stopped the disturbance by calling out the names of the men who had been appointed deputies by Collector Scott, and were entitled to enter. These the police permitted to pass, all others being barred out. Everybody in the room except those having business was ejected.

Ruef advanced to the counter and shook hands with John S. Drumm, Garret McEnerney's assistant, who was with Sheehan as his legal adviser. The Sheehan crowd glared at Ruef and Scott with trepidation, moving uneasily along behind the counter. Sheehan edged toward the little gate to make sure that the keeper was doing his duty. A big hubbub continued at the door, where scores of men were trying to get past the police.

Scott and Ruef made their way to the little gate, and there met Sheehan. The two Tax Collectors looked at each other in embarrassed fashion, while Ruef introduced Scott to Sheehan. "This is Mr. Scott," said Ruef. "He is the new Tax Collector, and after receiving his certificate and duly qualifying he has come to take possession of the office."

The certificate of election was exhibited.

"As my term of office began at noon I come to demand possession," said Scott.

Sheehan was very pale.

"On the advice of my attorney," he said, in a low voice, "I decline to deliver the office to Mr. Scott and absolutely refuse to do so."

"Then, Mr. Scott, it is your duty to take possession," said Ruef. "Gentlemen, take possession!"

"Get ready!" shouted somebody behind the counter.

Then the fight was on. Scott shot up into the air and over the counter before the astonished gatekeeper could collect his wits. Scott's men pressed up to the counter. There was a great shuffling and scrambling. Sheehan's men reached under the counter and drew out clubs they had improvised from the legs of office stools. Ruef made a lunge for the counter and was pushed back. Scott was in the thick of the fray with half a dozen men trying to throw him to the floor. Alex Greggains, the pugilist, was one of Scott's supporters. He bounded over the counter and brushed away two or three Sheehan men, fighting his way toward Scott. Two or three others followed him.

One of the Sheehan men drew a revolver and edged back from the crowd as it pressed over the counter. He fell back about eight feet and then fired. The bullet went through the neck of John O'Brien, a Sheehan henchman, standing six or eight feet from the man who fired the shot. O'Brien sank to the floor.

The pressure of the crowd outside stopped like magic. The police ran into the room, but were tossed about like straws in a gale. Half a dozen spectators, pale with fear, dashed out of the door and raced up the corridor. Everybody expected a fusillade of shots.

The next figure to be distinguished in the mass of struggling men was that of Attorney Ruef, standing upon the counter. He was looking for a spot to jump into the fray, when a Sheehan man ran up and struck him with a high stool. Ruef wrenched it from the man's hands and slammed it upon his head. The stool flew out over the heads of the crowd and Ruef jumped. He landed in the thick of a Sheehan crowd and was jammed back against the counter and his hat smashed. By this time Scott was twenty feet inside the office, fighting like a Trojan.

Tim Sullivan, a Sheehan man, jumped up, plucked the globes off a chandelier and handed them into the crowd. They flew into a thousand pieces. Somebody seized Sheehan by the whiskers and pushed him backward. His hat flew off, revealing a bald head that hardly matched his piratical beard. He fought with desperation, but fell back rapidly before the onslaught.

The crash of electric-light bulbs and gas globes, the slamming of big books and the smashing in of hats added to the hubbub of scuffling feet and angry exclamations. It was impossible to distinguish more than a word here and there, but these words were shot like bullets from a rapid-fire gun. The Scott forces scrambled over the counter in a rush and bore the Sheehan crowd back toward the eastern end of the long room. Books were snatched from their places and hurled over the heads of the mob. Paper files sailed through the air, to the imminent peril of the combatants' eyes. The stool-leg clubs flew thick. Trousers ripped, hats danced about as in a heavy sea, coats slipped awry and splotches of ink from flying inkstands bespattered more than one face.

The Scott men surrounded Sheehan, who was pulling and retreating toward his private office. At least ten men were upon and around him, and it looked as if he would be torn to pieces. Scott had been joined by his supporters and was not in such straits as at first. Attorney Ruef leaped upon a high table and shouted at the men surrounding Sheehan. His words could not be heard two feet away. He continued yelling until a big glass inkstand flew past his neck and crashed into the wall. Ruef dodged and whirled to face his assailant. Another inkstand was hurled at him, which he dodged. It would have ... had the combatants separated, though they were not able to stop the noise. Shouting and cursing filled the room. Detached scrimmages were started here and there, only to be quickly squelched by the bluecoats.

Police Captain Wittman elbowed his way through the howling mob to Sheehan and drew him over to Scott. Sheehan's black whiskers were quivering with excitement and fatigue. Scott was minus his hat and his clothes were covered with dust. Ruef edged through the crowd to Scott's side.

"Now this thing has got to stop!" shouted Wittman. "There seem to be two Tax Collectors here. We'll allow you both to stay, but there must not be any more fighting. Each of you must name the deputies who are entitled to stay here and everybody else will have to get out."

"We want Sheehan to go first," said Ruef.

"Well, that won't work, Ruef," replied Wittman.

Wittman called to Lieutenant Martin and put him in charge of the squad. "You may permit both sides to stay here for the time being," said Wittman, "but there must be no more fighting."

As Wittman withdrew Lieutenant Martin stood Scott and Sheehan side by side and searched them for weapons. None was found. Then Sheehan and Scott told off their men, who were permitted to remain and the outsiders were forced out. The police "went through" each fighting man and secured in all four revolvers.

Sheehan's force remained in the rear, occupying a little inside office, while Scott's force took possession of the main office. In an incredibly short time Scott was mildly puffing away at a cigar and jokes began to fly through the crowd, which had begun to see the ridiculous side of the situation. The police moved about, overawing the fighting men. Scott's men got at the books and with savage delight painted Scott's name with a big red stamp over that of Sheehan. Ruef cracked jokes and picked up pieces of crockery and wrote touching souvenir sentiments upon them. One he handed to Scott. It read, "E. I. Sheehan to Joseph H. Scott, January 8, 1900."

A little old man with a shiny plug hat stepped to the counter with a tax notice in his hand. He stopped suddenly, stared at the brass-buttoned men lining the counter, noted the fragments of glass, spilled ink and torn books and asked breathlessly, "Are you doing business to-day?"

"Well, I guess yes," said Sergeant Michael Joseph Conboy, "this is our busy day."

Salomon, who had been taken to the Central Station, soon reappeared. Half a dozen witnesses to the shooting said he was the wrong man. He was searched by the police, and a pistol was found upon him, but all the chambers were full. John Doyle, a Sheehan man, said he was a witness to the shooting, and that Salomon was the man who fired. He said he was the intended victim, but ducked just as Salomon fired. Doyle swore to a complaint before Judge Cabaniss charging Salomon with assault with intent to commit murder, and Salomon was rearrested and released on bail. O'Brien, the wounded man, was so slightly hurt that he got up after the bullet was extracted, and went looking for the man who had shot him.

During the truce, while the Scott men held the fort and the Sheehan men eyed them, expecting at any moment a renewal of hostilities, Mayor Phelan appeared. He did not see Sheehan, but confined his talk to Scott and Ruef.

"What does all this mean?" he asked. "Don't you know this is supposed to be a law-abiding city?"

Scott intimated that Sheehan was the man to reply to that question. Ruef produced Scott's election certificate, signed by Mayor Phelan, and asked the Mayor if Scott was not right in taking possession, so long as he was held responsible for the office after 12 o'clock.

"Well, a plague on both your houses,"

... consulted and advised capitulation; so, at 4:45 o'clock, Sheehan called his cohort together and made a short but tearful talk, dismissing them. Sheehan, followed by his men, went out of a back door. There was no demonstration. A Sheehan deputy showed Scott's deputies how to open the big safe, and by 5 o'clock Scott was in peaceful possession.

BIGGY WILL ACT AS CHIEF FOR A TIME.

New Police Commission Delays Choice of Successor to Lees.

THE NEW Board of Police Commissioners assembled at noon in the rooms that have been occupied by the Commissioners for many years. The old Board, which had been in session since 10:30 A. M., passing upon the details of pension cases, retired and the new members took their seats. They were called to order by William Thomas, there also being present W. J. Biggy, Dr. W. F. McNutt and George A. Newhall, constituting all the members of the Board.

Dr. McNutt was elected temporary chairman and H. O. Beatty temporary secretary, subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commissioners. Beatty is a son of Chief Justice Beatty of the Supreme Court and is employed in the law office of Commissioner Thomas. His selection for the position of temporary secretary of the Board is regarded as purely complimentary, it being understood that he does not desire to hold the position permanently. The Commissioners have expressed a wish that they be given a practicing lawyer for their secretary and they expect the Civil Service Commissioners to furnish them with a candidate having the desired qualifications. On motion of Biggy notification of the action of the Board was ordered transmitted to the Civil Service Commissioners.

The secretary prepared the ballots for the official terms of the members. They were placed between the leaves of a copy of the charter, with the ends slightly protruding. The result of the drawing was as follows: McNutt, one year, Thomas two, Biggy three and Newhall four. The result of the drawing was ordered transmitted to the Board of Supervisors and the Auditor.

On motion of Biggy George A. Newhall was elected permanent president of the Board for the term of one year. Newhall on taking his seat made a brief speech, thanking his associates for electing the youngest member of the Board to the office of president.

A resolution by Biggy declaring all the present rules and regulations of the department in force until such time as they shall be amended or repealed by the new Commissioners was adopted.

The following by Thomas was adopted without dissent:

Resolved, That, pending the appointment of a permanent Chief of Police and until the further order of this Board Commissioner Biggy is hereby appointed as the representative of this Board in the management of the present police force. Notice of the appointment was ordered filed with the Civil Service Commission and also with the Auditor.

By resolution of McNutt 8 o'clock Tuesday evening was fixed as the time for holding the regular weekly meeting of the Board.

Commissioner Biggy then presented the following, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That all persons who are candidates for the office of Chief of Police be

After Vain Hunt for Favorable Opinion, New Charter Men Are Seated.

WITH NO legal standing as municipal officers and fearful of forcible removal, the members of the Burns Board of Health retired yesterday at noon in favor of Mayor Phelan's appointees under the charter. Dr. Coffey skirmished around all the morning in a vain effort to obtain a legal opinion that would uphold him in refusing to give up his job. Attorney-General Ford was communicated with, but declined to define the legal status of the old Board of Health, on the ground that the body was provided with an attorney of its own, George A. Knight, and that for him to offer advice would be an unwarranted interference with that attorney's duties. Charles J. Heggerty, George Knight's partner, gave an unfavorable opinion, but Dr. Coffey declared that he would not relinquish his position unless forced to do so. Drs. Payne and Barbat were not so belligerent in their attitude, and, when they saw that they had no legal backing, voted with Mayor Phelan to retire involuntarily, and reserving the right to bring suit.

The old Board was called to order at 12 o'clock by Mayor Phelan. The clerk stated that the Attorney-General had promised a reply to the communication requesting an opinion, but could not attend the meeting. In lieu of an opinion by the Attorney-General, Mayor Phelan presented and the clerk read an opinion by City and County Attorney Franklin K. Lane. The County Attorney stated that the legal life of the old Board ended at 12 o'clock and that the life of the new one began at that hour. Drs. Payne and Coffey, seeing that their hope of a favorable legal opinion had gone, fell back upon the "municipal affair" contention. Dr. Barbat threw cold water on that, however, by failing to see that the Board had any other than municipal duties. He wanted to retain his job, though, and was willing to wait a while for an opinion by the Attorney-General. With Payne and Barbat undecided as to what they were going to

7,297 WANT ADS
WERE PUBLISHED IN THE Sunday Examiner
During the Month of December.
In the Other Papers - - - - - 3,635
And - - - - - 3,056 Respectively.
Total in Other Two Papers. - - 6,691

An American Paper for the American People
The Examiner.
VOL. LXX. SAN FRANCISCO: SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 14 1900. NO. 14

THE WEATHER.

FORECAST MADE AT SAN FRANCISCO FOR THIRTY HOURS ENDING MIDNIGHT JANUARY 14, 1900: SAN FRANCISCO AND VICINITY—Cloudy Sunday, probably light rain, warmer in afternoon; light southeasterly winds.
ALEXANDER G. McADIE,
Forecast Official.

CHARGES MADE AGAINST ESOLA AND PROMPTLY REFUTED

Light on the Amazing Conspiracy of I. W. Lees, R. A. Crothers and John Curtin to Ruin the Lieutenant.

THE culmination of the attacks that have recently been made upon Frederick L. Esola, Lieutenant of Police, who is generally regarded as the most prominent candidate for the position of Chief of Police, was reached yesterday when Fremont Older, an attache of the "Bulletin," filed with the Police Commissioners charges against that young officer. The climax has been awaited with interest by the community, because of the notorious virulence of the little coterie of conspirators by whom Lieutenant Esola has been maligned. The filing of written charges was demanded by him and by his counsel. A hearing has been ordered by the Police Commissioners for next Monday, when the fullest inquiry will be made. When it is concluded the courts will be called upon by the slandered officer to deal with the defamers as they deserve.

IT may well be doubted if this State has in its annals a case of conspiracy paralleling in baseness that whereby Isaiah W. Lees, Robert A. Crothers and John Curtin are seeking to ruin the reputation of embellishments of base abuse known to his unscrupulous mentality.

There came a day, however, when Lees made up his mind that nothing would avail to save him—that his reign could not be

ESOLA AN EFFICIENT OFFICER, SAYS EX-COMMISSIONER ALVORD

If charges are made that Lieutenant Esola has been an inefficient officer and neglectful of his duties, it is a surprise to me. I cannot recall that any complaint was ever made against Lieutenant Esola while I was a Police Commissioner. I know that Chief Crowley has always spoken well of him, and so has Mr. Tobin. I often thought that Chief Crowley, while at the head of the department, was sometimes too severe and exacting. He was always a stern disciplinarian, and for that reason it is highly improbable that Esola, if inefficient or derelict in his duty, could have deceived the Chief. It is equally positive that if Esola had been incompetent or faithless, no one would have brought such fact to the attention of the Commission quicker than Chief Crowley would have done. I never heard anything said against Lieutenant Esola's character as an officer and a man.

—Statement made to "The Examiner" by former Police Commissioner William Alvord, President of the Bank of California.

Frederick L. Esola, and thus to prevent him from becoming the head of the Police Department of San Francisco.

The story of this conspiracy may now be told, for at last its details are known and extended beyond the hour when the new charter should become effective. Then he set himself to continue as matter of vengeance the campaign he had instituted with another motive. He vowed that since he

TELLS THE SIMPLE STORY OF AN HONORABLE LIFE

THE charges made against my standing as a man make it appropriate, if not necessary, that my reply should be broader than the specific facts charged against me. I will therefore give, as near as I can recall them, all of the facts of my history.

My parents were both natives of Italy, and were poor. My father was a laboring miner. My parents were married at Sacramento October 11, 1866. They had four sons, all of whom were born in Amador County. The youngest died while an infant. The other three are myself, Frederick L. Esola, and my brothers Joseph and Frank.

I was born August 11, 1867; my brother Joseph is nearly two years younger than I, and my brother Frank nearly two years younger than my brother Joseph.

Unhappy differences arose between my parents in the early seventies, and they separated. My mother took upon herself the rearing of her children and went to live with her brothers, all of whom were miners and are well known in Sutter Creek and Amador county, in this State. They are Domenico Boro, at present foreman or assistant foreman of the Argonaut mill in Jackson, Amador County; Charles Boro, a man of considerable property in Sutter Creek, Amador County; and Antone Boro, recently deceased, who was a man of considerable property in Amador County. My uncles have acquired all of their property since my birth, and they were all men who started out in life as laborers.

A MOTHER'S EARLY STRUGGLES.

After living with my uncles for two years after the separation of my parents, my mother opened a boarding-house at Sutter Creek, which she conducted until about the year 1881, when she moved to Amador City, where she conducted another boarding-house for three years following. All of the residents of both of those places are well acquainted with my mother, and my uncles, my brothers and myself, and can vouch for all of us.

In July, 1884, my mother [illegible] San Francisco. For a short period of time we lived on Second street, near Howard. After that time we moved to Kearny, between Vallejo and Green, subsequently to Broadway, between Montgomery and Kearny; afterwards to Green, between Stockton and Dupont, then to the corner of Vallejo and Stockton; and finally to 420 Montgomery avenue, where I have lived with my mother for the last seven years, except when I was obliged in the performance of my duties to lodge temporarily near the police stations.

During the first two years of our life in San Francisco my brothers Joseph and Frank attended school while my mother and I labored to maintain the family. My mother was a seamstress and followed that calling for two years. At the end of that time she opened a boarding house on Broadway, between Montgomery and Kearny streets. This house was generally, and almost exclusively, resorted to by acquaintances of my family who came from Amador County to live in San Francisco. The character of the house can be abundantly established by respectable people. The boarding-house was resorted to, of course, by people of small means.

HELPING TO MAINTAIN THE FAMILY.

Between July, 1884, and the year 1887, I labored in various places and followed various pursuits, taking such work as I could get to assist my mother to maintain our family. During that time I worked at Hall's boiler factory on Beale street; for Williamson, the plumber and gasfitter, on Sutter street, near Stockton; at Day's carriage factory, on Sutter street, near Stockton; at Meyrisch's cigar factory, at Clay and Battery; in the barrel department of the American Sugar Refinery, and also in the refinery itself. I made several trips on the steamer Orizaba, owned by Goodall, Perkins & Co., as a deck boy.

I believe that all the persons with whom or for whom I have labored will vouch for my respectability.

In 1887 I was appointed Sergeant-at-Arms to the Democratic caucus in the Assembly. Shortly after that time I was appointed a guard at San Quentin. I served as a guard in that prison under Wardens Shirley and John McComb. I was a guard there for nearly four years. I quit the prison under these circumstances: I quarreled with Mr. Maloney, who was my superior officer. I was informed that I would have to apologize to Mr. Maloney in order to remain as a guard. I declined to do so, and quit under those circumstances. There was no other cause.

I never smuggled any opium into the prison and such a charge never was made until this case.

During my stay at the prison Captain Edward A. Reddy, Superintendent of the Almshouse, was captain of the guard. He can vouch for my standing and conduct while there. In addition to Captain Reddy, there are a number of other gentlemen who were connected with the prison at that time, who can vouch for me and to the same effect. Among these are Mr. Joseph Ellis, State clerk at the prison; Major E. H. Tharp, Commissary; Captain Varney, Captain Gooch and Captain Dougherty.

JOINED THE POLICE FORCE OF THIS CITY.

FREDERICK L. ESOLA, LIEUTENANT OF POLICE.

was paid $25 by one W. G. Maloney, likewise an employee of the "Bulletin."

The affidavit set forth in substance the matter contained in the anonymous statement handed the Mayor; but it did not mention names of persons who could be called to support it, as did the secret document. However, it held one pregnant sentence through which a pen had scratched a line. That sentence by innuendo aspersed the virtue of Esola's mother. The lady thus maligned, it need scarcely be written, is of excellent character, of whom nothing discreditable could truthfully be said.

his appointment to the force, that his appointment would give "The Examiner" an undue advantage in the gathering of news, and that his accession to the Chieftaincy

CALUMNY EXPOSED

Sutter Creek Neighbors of the Esolas Indig-

partment of San Francisco.

The story of this conspiracy may now be told, for at last its details are known and the blow the conspirators have plotted to strike has been delivered.

When Frederick L. Esola began to be thought of as a fit man for Chief of Police, Isaiah W. Lees began to train upon him the batteries of his wrath, and from that day to this the old detective has pursued the young lieutenant as one pursues who is animated by a clear-cut desire to destroy.

Early in his campaign against Esola, Lees chose as efficient aids John Curtin, a detective, and Robert A. Crothers the proprietor of the "Bulletin." The three consulted and plotted steadily to the end they had in view—the retaining for Lees of the office of Chief of Police and the breaking down of the reputation of Esola, the only man Lees deemed a formidable rival.

Lees never lost an opportunity of throwing difficulties in the way of the Lieutenant he feared, nor of inspiring the notion that the young officer was incompetent; Curtin scoured the highways and the byways for rumors and appearances damaging to Esola or members of Esola's family; Crothers printed in his paper every word of slander the three could gather together and tricked the slanders out in all the em-

[...] set himself to continue as matter of evidence the campaign he had instituted with another motive. He vowed that since he could not be Chief of Police the young man who had dared aspire should never be; and in the pursuit of this new policy he was given the eager support of Curtin and Crothers.

During the last week in 1899 the three conspirators were closeted for hours every night in room 700 of the California Hotel—a room occupied by Fremont Older, an employee of the "Bulletin." There and then they plotted to make a final and extreme effort to blacken the good repute of Esola.

As a result of these nightly meetings a typewritten paper was prepared. Nobody signed it. Nobody dared to sign it. The paper was a mendacious assault on the unsullied name of Frederick L. Esola. It purported to set forth with great particularity a number of proofs that he had been for years a scoundrel.

The unsigned paper was by Fremont Older, an attache of the "Bulletin" and a creature of Crothers, handed to Mayor Phelan.

The next day—January 3d—an affidavit made its appearance.

The affidavit was made by a disreputable fellow named Meaders. For making it he

A FAITHFUL AND EFFICIENT MAN, SAYS EX-COMMISSIONER TOBIN

During my term of office as a Police Commissioner I never heard anything derogatory to Lieutenant Esola. No complaint was ever made against him, nor was his efficiency or faithfulness ever questioned. From my knowledge of the man, I consider him a faithful and efficient officer.

—Statement made to "The Examiner" by former Police Commissioner R. J. Tobin.

PROMINENT MEN OF AMADOR RESENT "BULLETIN" CALUMNIES

AMADOR, January 13.—Having known both Lieutenant F. L. Esola and his mother for several years, we, the undersigned, attest to their good character and irreproachable citizenship, and we consider the charges of the "Bulletin" against their good name to be utterly false and a malignant attempt to injure an energetic and deserving man. We challenge the "Bulletin" to find a citizen in Amador county who would say anything derogatory concerning the character of either of them.

C. R. DOWNS, JULIUS CHICHISOLA,
J. A. PHIPPS, B. WHITE,
C. L. CULBERT, FRED SETZER.

and Captain Dougherty.

JOINED THE POLICE FORCE OF THIS CITY.

After I quit the prison I went to work at Brush Creek in Butte county, in a sash and blind factory. After that time I procured employment with the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad [...] system, drilling and breaking rock for the roadbed. After a time I was appointed as a brakeman on the road, and worked there until I was appointed a member of the police force in San Francisco in 1892. Mr. J. W. Burgin, president of the road, and Mr. Corbaley, the Superintendent at that time, know my history while connected with that road.

Concerning my connection with the Police Department, it is not necessary for me to say anything. I refer you to ex-Chief of Police Crowley and to the Commissioners who were in office during my connection with the department.

I know James Alexander Meader, whose affidavit was filed with the Police Commissioners this afternoon. When I was employed at Meyriach's cigar factory I made the acquaintance of a young woman employed there, whose maiden name was Annie Rigney, and who now is the wife of James Alexander Meader. It was through her that I became acquainted with Meader. I knew him while our family lived on Kearny and Broadway streets.

The charge that I was ever known as Fred. Harrington or Bill Harrington is untrue. The statement in the affidavit of Meader that I ever committed a theft with him at Ehlers' grocery, or any other place, is a lie. And all of the details concerning that alleged theft, so far as they relate to me, are lies. I never heard of them until I saw them in an anonymous document handed to Mayor Phelan by some one who, I believe, was Mr. Fremont Older, managing editor of the "Bulletin."

In support of my statement I refer to Mr. Ehlers, the grocer, himself.

It is also a lie that I ever stole a milk can from a doorway.

THE TRUTH ABOUT MEADER.

It is true that while I was in Bodeker's grocery one day Meader took some soap. Mr. Bodeker, and I with him, gave chase to follow Meader. That I was in any manner connected with the theft of the soap is absolutely untrue, and this can be vouched for by Mr. Bodeker himself.

I never sold, either in conjunction with Mr. Meader or otherwise, to John Turano, the proprietor of the "New Model," any soap or anything else. I do not know Turano and was never in his place, to my best recollection.

The story that I met Meader in the McKenzie House is equally untrue.

The falsity of Meader's statement in this regard may be shown independent of my statement by the statement of O'Connell, who is mentioned to have been connected with the affair.

So far as Adam Stroh is concerned, I never saw him and never knew him until he was arrested since I became a member of the police force.

The statement that I ever robbed Charles McCloskey, or anybody else, is a downright lie.

The statement about the theft of four sacks of potatoes is also a lie; and Daniel O'Connell may be interviewed upon the subject.

The charge in relation to my ever having been arrested was simply this: One New Year's eve, upon the hill, while I was standing on a corner, some boys on the hill came along and struck me, and we had a fight, and the officer came along and arrested me for it. When it was called in the Police Court it was dismissed. I never was arrested before in my life; and on that occasion it was for fighting on the street, which I did in self-defense.

Two very respectable ladies living in that neighborhood—Miss Harrington and Mrs. John Creeber, well known at North Beach—witnessed the entire affair, and will corroborate what I say about it.

For some years past Mr. Meader has been addicted to the excessive use of liquor. I have had an acquaintance with him for some time past. I am told by people acquainted with his condition that he is reputed to be out of his mind. I am also informed that he was paid $25 for the making of this affidavit by Mr. Meloney, a reporter on the "Bulletin." The affidavit which he made was prepared, I understand, in the "Bulletin" office. I understand that he was accompanied by Mr. R. A. Crothers, the proprietor of the "Bulletin," to the notary's office, when he signed it.

CROTHERS WILL HAVE TO ANSWER.

In conclusion, all that I have to say is this. That, as soon as the matter of the Chief of Police is settled by the Board of Police Commissioners, I propose to hold Mr. Crothers accountable in the courts. He has had this affidavit in his possession for ten days, but has failed to publish it, I have assumed, for fear of the consequences. I do not desire to import any side controversies into the issue now before the Police Commissioners, but, whatever the result of the questions before that body may be, I propose to obtain a vindication in the courts.

FREDERICK L. ESOLA.

Patrick Crowley, Ex-Chief of Police, Commends the Character of Esola.

I never heard anything against Lieutenant Esola either as a policeman or a citizen while I was Chief of the Police Department. No complaint was ever filed against him. I never had the slightest reason to question Esola's efficiency or his faithful attention to his duties. Had there been any just cause for complaint, I should certainly have known of it. For a time I had Esola assigned to duty in the Chinese quarters, and I thought he made a very good record there. As I have already stated, I do not know that Esola's name was ever before the Police Commissioners except in a way in every respect favorable. I have always thought well of him, and know of no reason for changing that opinion.

P. CROWLEY.

maligned, it need scarcely be written, is of excellent character of whom nothing discreditable could truthfully be said.

Fremont Older took one copy of this affidavit to M. H. De Young of the "Chronicle" and another to the managing editor of the "Call," and he urged the "Chronicle" and the "Call" to publish it and to make it the basis of attacks upon Esola. Neither paper could be persuaded to touch the thing.

Since Older's failure to get the affidavit into print in the "Chronicle" and "Call," the "Bulletin" has continued day after day to publish calumnies concerning Esola and to hint at the dreadful disclosures it could make if it would; but it has not printed the affidavit it sought to unload on the "Chronicle" and the "Call." It knew the affidavit to be flatly libelous and unprivileged, and it preferred to get its neighbors into trouble.

And yesterday the conspirators played their last card. They filed formal charges and as a basis for those charges they produced the affidavit they themselves had cooked up—the affidavit they had not dared print under circumstances imposing personal responsibility in like proceedings.

The charges will be examined by the Police Commissioners in due form of course; and when the Police Commission have done with them, Lieutenant Esola will invoke the aid of the courts in getting at the facts of this disgraceful conspiracy and dragging the conspirators into the light.

CHARGES AND REFUTATION

What the Conspirators Allege and How the Facts Proves Them Slanderers.

The charges filed by Older recite that Esola is the associate of degraded and criminal people, that he has been guilty of robbery and petty larceny, that he was discharged for cause from a position as guard at San Quentin prison, that he is not capable of filling the office of Chief of Police, that he has not been attentive to police duties since Sutter Creek Neighbors of the Esolas Indignant at Crothers-Lees' Conspiracy.

SUTTER CREEK, January 13.—The attacks made upon the characters of Mrs. Esola and her family have caused great indignation here. "The Examiner" correspondent has interviewed a large number of leading citizens who were neighbors of the family, and they are shocked that anyone should attempt to sully the names of the Esolas.

In the absence of ex-Senator Voorhies, Mrs. Voorhies said: "Mrs. Esola was my neighbor for years. A woman of lovelier character never lived. Her life seemed to be entirely devoted to bringing her sons up properly, and the result any mother might be proud of. Shame on anyone who would say aught against such a woman. Senator Voorhies, though [...] politically from Fred Esola, used his influence to get him on the police force in San Francisco, and he has never had occasion to regret it. Another son is foreman at the Bunker Hill mine, and is respected and esteemed by all who know him. You may use the Senator's name and my name in that connection."

The Brignolis, leading merchants, said: "We have known Mrs. Esola since a time preceding her marriage, and can say that she and her sons are honored by everyone in this community."

John Brown, ex-Assessor, spoke in the same emphatic way. Tears came to the eyes of Mrs. Brown when she was told that the character of Mrs. Esola had been attacked. "How could they even in politics do such a cruel thing?" she observed. "The lady was my neighbor for years and reared a family that any mother might be proud of."

Carlton Downs said: "Put me down as one who will testify to the excellent characters of the mother and sons."

Henry Hayden said: "The man who says anything against the character of Mrs. Esola or her sons simply lies."

Charles Soracco, merchant, declared: "Politics must be getting low when so dastardly an attack is made upon the character of so noble a woman as Mrs. Esola. It would be impossible to find a person in Sutter Creek who would say anything but praise of her and her sons, and the man who would attempt to besmirch their characters would not be able to remain in this community one hour."

DISTRICT ATTORNEY OF AMADOR STRONGLY COMMENDS ESOLA

JACKSON, January 13.—I have known Frederick L. Esola since his childhood. He was born and raised in this county, and has a host of friends here. I can personally testify to his honesty and sterling worth. His reputation and that of his family in this community is first-class in every respect.

C. P. VICINI, District Attorney of Amador County.

THE CIVIC GOVERNMENT IS NOW IN NEW HANDS

Commissions Organize and Elect Necessary Officers.

ALL the commissions appointed under the new charter by Mayor Phelan organized yesterday by electing the necessary officers and took charge of their departments of the civil government. The members of the old Board of Health gave way after a big show of resistance. The names of the deputies and clerks appointed are given below:

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

John H Hansen, secretary, $150; Miss M F. Cusick, stenographer, $75.

ELECTION COMMISSIONERS.

Thomas J. Walsh, secretary and Registrar of Voters, $200, C. C. Pratt, James H Dignan, J. H Zemansky, D J. Gordon, clerks for sixty days at $100 a month. H. Guttstedt, Cameron H. King Jr., clerks for thirty days at $100 a month.

PARK COMMISSIONERS.

Philip Fay Jr., secretary, $125; Miss M B. Fairman, accountant, $100.

FIRE COMMISSIONERS.

D T. Sullivan, Chief Engineer, $4,000; J. C Gorman, secretary, $2 400, Charles Towe, J F. O. Comstock, Fire Marshals.

POLICE COURTS.

Department 4—Judge G H. Cabaniss; Prosecuting Attorney, James Hanley, $200. Department 3—Judge, Alfred J Fritz, Prosecuting Attorney, R. V Whiting, $200 Department 2—Judge, C T Conlan, Prosecuting Attorney, Charles Weller, $200. Department 1—Judge, F P Mogan, Prosecuting Attorney, I. Harris, $200, Charles Peery chief bond clerk, $200, T I Fitzpatrick, John J. Greely, William G. Burke, warrant clerks, $125; D. Long, Frank Vernon, reporters, $200. Bailiffs—Department 1, Patrolmen Love and Coghlin; Department 2, Patrolmen Owens and McGrayn; Department 3, Sergeant Duncan and Patrolman J. J. Conlan; Department 4, Patrolmen Hall and Fleming

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

J Leo Parke, secretary, $150, C. E. Grunsky, City Engineer, $5,000, A. J. Donovan, Street Superintendent (temporary), $200.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE.

Under Sheriff, G. A. Hare; attorney, W. J. Herrin, chief bookkeeper, S. Simon; chief jailor at No. 1, Frank Coryn; superintendent of jails Nos. 2 and 3, A. J. Martin; assistant bookkeepers, D. Lauer and L. Jacobs; office deputies—P. J. Walsh, E. H. Brandt, F. Dugon, J. F. Wulzen, Otto Lemcke, L. W. Hollingsworth, J G Waibel, E. M. Greene, J. Curlett, T. Atkinson; commissary, I P. Kincaid, bookkeeper for branch jails, J. G. Hecker; bailiffs for courts—Department 1, G. H. Williams; No. 2, C. R Burton; No. 3, W H. Smith; No. 4, J. C. Nobmann; No 5, C. Troell; No. 6, D. J. McCarthy; No. 7, H. J. Strehl; No. 8, George D Troy; No. 9, T. Murphy; No. 10, D. M. Short; No. 11, Joseph Winrow; No 12, W. F Dasha, unassigned, C T. McCarthy and R. H Mowbray; jailors—T. Costello, J. C. Symons, J. Gallagher, T. F. Bryant, J. F Harvey, J. McCarthy, J. J. Moran, J. N. Colter, John Davidson, Charles Metzner; matron at jail No. 3, Mrs. I P. Kincaid; driver of van, D G. Kingley; guards at branch jails Nos. 2 and 3—J. Costello, Samuel Gamble, L. Winters, J. McGeough, D A Sweeney, O. W Freund, D J. Wulzen, J Demartini, R D Squires, A. Murphy, James Toomey, H. Hinds, M Rodgers, P. de Valli, William R Nixon, X. Gaugloff, J. Sohl, J. D Kersey, F E Wallace, William Meyers, order to pay that paper about $6,000 for printing resolution for the work in question. He said the resolution was erroneously passed to print, and should have been adopted. "The motion was made to adopt," said he, "but the Mayor inadvertently said 'passed to print.'"

On Holland's motion to rescind, the board, excepting Byington, voted aye. Holland moved immediately after the motion prevailed to adopt the resolution as requested by the "Post." The motion was carried, Byington voting no. The effect of this move is to pay out of the Treasury about $6,000 without giving the Mayor an opportunity to veto it.

Half an hour later the Mayor met the incoming Charter board in the Supervisors' committee-room. Only Aigeltinger, Attridge, Kalben and Collins remained to extend the customary courtesies to their successors.

When the Charter Supervisors entered the meeting-chamber they were shown to seats arranged in three semi-circles facing the Mayor's bench in the center. Immediately in front of the clerk's desk a space was reserved for the ex-Mayors, who will sit with the board and participate in the proceedings, without having, however, the right to vote. The gallery and benches were crowded with interested spectators.

The Mayor announced that as there was [illegible]

my office to Mr. Scott. I absolutely refuse to do so."

"It is our duty, then, Mr. Sheehan," [illegible] Ruef, "to take it. [illegible] take possession of the office."

Scott tried to open the gate, but Sheehan's burly Horatius punched him.

Two men, the next instant, lifted Scott on top of the gate and Scott plunged forward with Ruef at his side and Alex Greggains, Jack Fitzgerald, Charlie Sweeney and some other deputies behind him. Scott jumped at Sheehan and grabbed him by the throat. The two grappled.

Scott's men tore the counter gate from its lock and strong hinges. The Sheehan warriors hurled heavy inkstands and a huge volume of tax records at the invaders. Then Scott plunged forward like a genuine Roderick Dhu and his men went with him. The advance was after the manner of a football wedge, but clubs and fists were flying, missiles filled the air, and the liveliest kind of a free-for-all fight was in progress. The captured gate, torn from its fastenings, had been hurled at the Sheehan crowd.

Detectives Reynolds, Eagan, Cody and Gibson were trying to quell the riot. Captain Bohen, knowing how helpless his handful of men were, had ordered up a whole battalion of police, and fifty uniformed men were already on the way.

Men were on the desks and counters [illegible]

There Was Some Discussion in the City Hall Yesterday Concerning the Office of Tax Collector.

Many contradictory statements were made about the firing of the revolver.

Writing Expert Theodore Kytka, who was looking on, says that he saw the shot fired and that the man with the pistol was a stout man, about forty years old, with a dark moustache and that he wore dark clothing. This is entirely different from the description of Salomon.

Attorney Ruef caused the arrest of Charles E. Broad, alleging that the latter hit him with a heavy inkstand. Broad was charged with making an assault with a deadly weapon. Attorney George B. Keane, associated with Ruef, went through the fight and was struck several times.

Collector Scott's necktie was torn away during the row and was not recovered, and Attorney Ruef lost a pearl pin to the enemy. None of the principals on either side was [illegible] the honors of war and bearing their side arms."

Sheehan and his adherents, who had just partaken of a hearty luncheon of sandwiches and pie, washed down by black coffee, had regained their self-composure, and left the premises in the utmost good temper, several of Scott's deputies courteously bidding good evening as at ten minutes to 5 o'clock they filed out, leaving Scott and his men in undisputed possession of the office.

"It is a disgrace to San Francisco," said the Mayor. "We have an orderly government here, and the man who organized such a gang to come in here by force deserves to forfeit his office. I hope you will both lose. It's a disgrace to the city, but it's all in one family."

board, prior to noon of Thursday, January 11, 1900, their written applications for such appointment.

Resolved, That any and all persons objecting to any candidate for the office of Chief of Police, be and they are hereby requested to file with the Secretary of the board, prior to 5 p. m. of Saturday, January 13, 1900, their written objections to such candidates, setting forth fully the grounds of such objections.

The new Commissioners were received in private by the old board, and it was not until the latter had retired that the public were invited to witness the organization of the new board. Captains Wittman, Spillane, Dunleavy and Gillen were present in full uniform. I. W. Lees, late Chief of Police, was also in attendance.

Dr. McNutt was elected temporary chairman and H O. Beatty, a son of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was elected temporary secretary. The latter's appointment was ordered transmitted to the Civil [illegible]

Heads of Departments Select Deputies to Serve Under Them.

M. Conlan, M. Butley; keepers—P. E. McCarthy, John Harney, Frank Chapman, H. J. McMahon, J. F. Mooney, W. W. Whan, George D. O'Neill, H. D. Lawrie.

TAX-COLLECTOR'S OFFICE.

Chief deputy, Morris Levy; cashier, Oscar Curtaz; cashier license department, Harry Baehr; deputies—Edward Casey, P. M. J. Kelly, Al Lewald, George Tiddes, John Fitzgerald, Ben J. Solomon, James McCabe, J. H. Nelson, J F. Leyden, W. F. Howe, J. K. Jones, Herman Enkel, J. J. Cooney, John Hegler; extra clerks—Henry J. Byrne, Joseph Tillson, Meyer Cohn, William O'Neil Ben Levy, Morris Schwartz, J. Voisinette, Claire F. Kuerr, E. H. Herrick, David L. Reynolds, John Caplace, J. M. Clark, John J. Hoar, Edward Fitzgerald, J. J. Boyle, William M Villette, Fred Smith, James Campbell, James Bodyd.

COUNTY CLERK'S OFFICE.

Chief deputy, Joseph Goddard; Thomas O'Neill, Frank Grimes, W. J. Kennedy, W. C. Ratsch, R. H. Fitzgerald, A. A. Watson, A B. Mahoney, C. C Morris, R. J. Welch, J B. Martin, J. R. McElroy, W. B. Jost, O A. Tolle, J. P. Rice, J. J. Groom, J. A Fenton, R. E. Conway, J. J. Greif, D. V. Graham, W B. Lee, Nelson Doolittle, J. E Sutton, E. M. Thompson, T. C. Maher, F. C. Danforth, J J. Cassidy, V. F. Northrop, A. Houston, Charles Corey, Joseph Riordan, G. Valero, W. R. A. Johnson, Carl Meuller, J. C. Flood, T. L. Doran, J. B. Reilly, Isadore Erb, D. C. Van Nostrand, J. V. Harrison, P. W. Lannon, P. A. McGuehin, John Houston, Frank Meyers, P. Hirleman, Oscar Herold, Drew Harrigan, Joseph McAuliffe.

AUDITOR'S OFFICE.

William W. Wells, Chief Deputy; Daniel J Leary, Benning Wentworth, deputies; Horace L. Crocker, N E. Maison, clerks.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.

Eugene N Deuprey, John T. Greany, William H. Alford, deputies, $300, chief clerk, John B. Tungate; clerk, Wallace L. Thompson; stenographer, Louis H. Ward.

TREASURER'S OFFICE.

J. O. Reis, Chief Deputy; Septimus de Greayer, Colonel McClung and F. B. Perkins, deputies.

RECORDER'S OFFICE.

Chief Deputy, Fred S. Myrtle, deputies, Max Warshauer and Charles M. Stoltz, copyists, L. Brannan, M. Harris, James W. Farrell, Eli Landry, Thomas Kelly, P. J. Hagerty, John T. Kane, William E. Foley, Eugene Sullivan, E. T. Russell, Thomas Hyland, Harmon McKisick, William H. Garnett, P. Paul Vlauntin, John Nolan, C. O. M. Cosgrave and William Sullivan.

ASSESSOR'S OFFICE.

William J. Blattner, J Bennett, H. L. Bienfield, R. V. Crosky, J. Campodonico, F. J. Corbett, H. Dahl, John Ferris, P. J. Fay, Charles Gildea, John Ginty, A. B. Henderson, H. O. Hess, Moses Heins, E. Howerton, H. S. Hagan, M. C. Haley, W. B. Joyce, W. H. Kline, J. Lalley, A. D. Miesegaes, A. W. Murphy, M. W. Pratt, F. L. Putman, W. H. Reilly, George Tyrell, W. H. Wiggins Jr., W. B. Pritchard.

CITY ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.

Assistants—G. Whitfield Lane, W. I. Brobeck, Hugo K. Asher, Walter E. Dorn; clerk, Richard M Sims; messenger, P. Allen Joy.

organization was effected by the election of Rolla V. Watt as President. He was nominated by Commissioner Hecht. Commissioner Grady [illegible] Joseph C. Gorman for permanent secretary. Mr. Gorman was unanimously elected. Upon taking his seat, Mr. Watt made a brief address, saying the new board hoped to keep the department up to its present state of efficiency.

On motion of Commissioner Mahoney, D. T. Sullivan was elected Chief Engineer of the department. The Commissioners then drew lots for office. The result was as follows: Hecht, one year; Mahoney, two years; Grady, three years; Watt, four years.

Upon the recommendation of the Underwriters' Fire Patrol, as required by the charter, Charles Towe was elected Fire Marshal and J. F. O. Comstock Assistant Fire Marshal. The Secretary was instructed to notify the Civil Service Commissioners of the appointments made by the board, and an adjournment was then taken until 9 o'clock this morning.

During the proceedings George F. Maxwell, the retired Secretary, served several notices upon the members, setting forth the claims he makes to the retention of the office of Secretary. He set forth that he has been a member of the Fire Department continuously since April 9, 1878, in various capacities. He was appointed clerk of the department on December 22, 1888, and by Sections [illegible] of the applicants. "Nobby" Clark was detected by President Freud copying from a copy of the Charter. Clark said that he wanted "to get the exact language of the Charter." He was ruled out. Two other contestants were seen cheating. Their names were noted for future reference. The result of the examination will be known in a few days.

At noon the commission assumed office in the old quarters of Judge Campbell, opposite the registration office in the City Hall. Commissioner Freud was formally elected President, and work was at once begun registering laborers. Long lines of men had been waiting in the corridors since the early morning, all anxious to get enrolled. The work of registration was done by clerks from the Merchants' Association. By 4 o'clock they had registered five hundred laborers, nearly enough for all the city departments under civil service. Fifteen hundred applications for examination to the classified civil service were issued.

The Board of Election Commissioners met in the rooms adjoining the Registration office and organized by electing Jeremiah Deasy chairman. The bonds of the secretary and Registrar were fixed at $10,000. A resolution was adopted commending Jacob Steppacher, the retiring Registrar, for his efficiency and faithfulness.

The Board of Public Works organized in the former rooms of the City and County Surveyor. Colonel Mendell was elected President. The board decided to meet daily [illegible] cepting, without having, however, the right to vote. The gallery and lobbies were crowded with interested spectators.

The Mayor announced that as there was no quorum of the old board, under the provisions of the Charter the Supervisors elected November last, having duly qualified, would take their seats. The roll was then called and Supervisors Booth, Boxton, Brandenstein, Comte, Connor, Curtis, d'Ancona, Duboce, Dwyer, Fontana, Helms, Jennings, Maguire, McCarthy, Reed, Sanderson and Tobin answered present. Supervisor Hotaling arrived later.

The outgoing Supervisors introduced their successors and, after brief remarks by former Mayors Alvord and Ellert, the Mayor's message was read.

BATTLE FOR TAX COLLECTOR'S OFFICE WITH CLUBS AND PISTOLS

(Continued From Page One.)

and the same he is entitled to possession of this office, and has come to take it. Will you kindly deliver possession to him?"

This was all polite and gentle, with the thugs ranged in massive column at each side of the gate.

Mr. Sheehan said in perfect courteousness still: "Acting on advice of my attorney, I decline to deliver possession of tain Bohen, knowing how helpless his handful of men were, had ordered up a whole battalion of police, and fifty uniformed men were already on the way.

Men were on the desks and counters, hitting anybody that was opposed to them. The narrow floor spaces were packed with the struggling, shouting rioters. The chandeliers were shattered. Clubs made by taking the legs from long office-stools were clattering and banging above and about the heads of the combatants. Suddenly, in all the confusion, a pistol shot was heard. The smoke arose close to the line at which the factions were fighting.

The shot caused a panic among the spectators outside of the counter, and intensified the furious fight within. There would almost certainly have been murder, and probably more than the first pistol shot would have been heard, but at that moment the police reinforcements burst in through the door and swept over the howling mob with clubs in motion. Lieutenant Mooney and Sergeants Conboy and Coogan, with fifty men, followed the instructions of Captain Bohen, and within two minutes after the firing of the revolver the hostilities had practically ceased.

Ben Salomon was pointed out as the man who had done the shooting and he was arrested by Detective Reynolds and Patrolman Phil Hering. Those who accused Salomon say that he shot downward. O'Brien was wounded in the neck by the bullet, but the injury was not dangerous. He walked to the receiving hospital and was discharged by the surgeons at 1:30 o'clock.

associated with Ruef, went through the fight and was struck several times.

Collector Scott's necktie was torn away during the row and was not recovered, and Attorney Ruef lost a pearl pin to the enemy. None of the principals on either side was scarred, nor was any of them very much hurt.

Mayor Phelan, accompanied by Colonel Sullivan, called at the Tax Collector's office at 2:30 o'clock and sharply rebuked Scott and Ruef for the assault they had led.

Mayor Phelan took note of the city property that had been destroyed and then left the place. Attorney Ruef, who had declared to the Mayor that forcible entry was necessary, said that by "all in one family" the Mayor assumed to blame the Republican party for all the trouble, as both factions were Republican.

Immediately after the battle Attorney Tuska appeared before Judge Bahrs on behalf of Scott and applied for an injunction to restrain Edward I. Sheehan, John Doe, Richard Roe and others from interfering with Tax Collector J. Harry Scott in the discharge of his duties. In the complaint Mr. Sheehan was mentioned as a citizen and not as a contestant for the office of Tax Collector. It was set forth that Sheehan had intruded himself into the office and refused to leave, thus interfering with and hindering the transaction of public business.

Attorney John S. Drum, representing Sheehan, objected to the issuance of an injunction, suggesting a suit to test tenure of the office.

Presiding Judge George H. Bahrs replied that no such matter appeared in the pleadings and besides he did not understand how Sheehan could lay claim to the right to hold over, since the Supreme Court had decided that the office to which he was elected was a mere municipal office, and the office to which he was elected as well as the corporation which he had been elected to serve had been legislated out of existence.

The injunction was therefore allowed to issue, and the case was assigned to Judge Carroll Cook for trial.

When the order was served on Sheehan, he said he deemed it his duty to obey the order of the Court, and that though he did not abandon his legal rights he was willing to retire and await the decision of the Court. He suggested but one condition for his speedy departure, and that was that there should be no hooting or shouting or other demonstration of derision during the withdrawal of himself and his deputies.

"That's all right," said Scott laughingly. "We'll treat the boys civilly and will allow them to retreat in dignified manner, with party government here, and the man who organized such a gang to come in here by force deserves to forfeit his office. I hope you will both lose. It's a disgrace to the city, but it's all in one family."

"I was elected to the office and was entitled to the place, so I took it," said Scott late in the afternoon. "I have an idea that this thing is not exactly all right so far as this unusual redress is concerned, but do not consider that my side was to blame. We simply did what we considered our duty. I have the office and intend to keep it, unless turned out by the court."

Wm. J. Tuska, attorney for Scott, said: "I saw the shot fired and could recognize the man if I saw him again. It seems to me that the shooter had no intention of injuring any one, but fired only to make a noise and scare somebody. I saw the man draw his revolver and fire at the floor, and if the bullet struck anybody it must have rebounded after its impact with the floor. In fact, I do not believe that the firing of that pistol injured or wounded any one. At the time the shot was fired nobody fell and nobody cried out as if hurt, but the row inside the counter kept right on. It seems to me possible that the injury to O'Brien's neck might have been caused by a stroke from a stool leg or from a flying piece of a glass lamp shade."

"We were prepared to resist intruders," said Sheehan, waving his hand in the direction of a formidable pile of wagon-spokes and stool legs lying behind the counter. "We thought we could stand them off all right, but it seems that we were mistaken, for they were too heavy for us.

DR. W. F. M'NUTT

GEORGE A. NEWHALL

W. J. BIGGY

WILLIAM THOMAS

THE NEW BOARD OF POLICE COMMISSIONERS ORGANIZING

BIGGY CHOSEN ACTING CHIEF

Relieves Captain Wittman and Assumes Command.

The most important work done by the new Police Commission was the appointment of Commissioner W. J. Biggy as Acting Chief of Police.

On taking his office, Acting Chief Biggy relieved Captain Wittman of the authority he has exercised since former Commissioner Tobin was made temporary Chief. Wittman was sent back to his former command and the Acting Chief at once assumed active command of the department. He took Captain Bohen, head of the staff of detectives, into his office.

The new Police Commissioners will not fully consider the appointment of a Chief of Police before next Saturday. That question was one of the first settled after the organization of the board yesterday.

The purpose of the board is set forth in the following resolution, presented by Commissioner Biggy, which was adopted:

Resolved, That all persons who are candidates for the office of Chief of Police be, and they are hereby requested, to file with the Secretary of the was also in attendance.

Dr. McNutt was elected temporary chairman and H. O. Beatty, a son of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was elected temporary secretary. The latter's appointment was ordered transmitted to the Civil Service Commissioners, and then the Commissioners drew lots for their terms of office. Commissioner McNutt drew one year, Thomas two, Biggy three and Newhall four.

Commissioner Biggy nominated Commissioner George A. Newhall for President. He was unanimously elected. He said a few words in acknowledgment, took the presiding officer's chair and proceeded with the business. It was resolved that all the rules and regulations of the department should continue in force until ordered changed. Then Commissioner Biggy's resolution on candidates for Chief was adopted.

After the time for regular meetings had been fixed at 8 p. m. Tuesdays, Commissioner Thomas introduced a resolution appointing Commissioner Biggy temporary Chief. It was unanimously adopted.

That practically finished the business of the board. Former Chief Lees then addressed the Commissioners. He stated that he was responsible upon his official bond for considerable property in the custody of the property clerk, which he desired to turn over to the board or any person appointed by it, so that he might be relieved from further liability. All the public moneys in his custody, he said, had been transferred to the Treasurer. He had also transferred to the Police Benevolent Association certain small sums arising from rebates on cloth for uniforms and from contributions. These moneys were not public funds and belonged to the members of the department collectively. Lees stated that Captain Moran, the former property clerk, who has retired from the department, had remained to aid the former Chief in settling up the affairs of the clerk's office and transferring the property. Lees asked that the Captain be paid for his work out of the contingent fund. This was agreed to.

In conclusion, Lees announced that he desired to transfer to the Commissioners the "Rogues' Gallery." He presented a long catalogue of all the books and albums in the gallery, which he said was complete from 1853 to date.

Acting Chief Biggy will take account of stock in the property clerk's office, and upon his report the board will receipt to the former Chief for the property, and thus release his bondsmen.

After the adjournment of the board the new Commissioners, escorted by Lees and four captains, inspected the offices of the Police Department and the City Prison. The board will meet again this morning.

MAXWELL MAKES MANY PROTESTS

Claims to Be Secretary of the Fire Board.

The only incident out of the ordinary in connection with the organization of the new Board of Fire Commissioners was the protest filed by George F. Maxwell, the retiring secretary, against the election by the board of his successor in office.

The board met in the Fire Commissioners' rooms at noon. The old Commissioners were present and withal it was a very pleasant gathering. In behalf of the retiring board, Colin M. Boyd delivered a brief speech, in which he highly praised the department for its organization and general efficiency. David I. Mahoney briefly responded in behalf of the new board.

The Commissioners organized by electing Mr. Mahoney temporary Chairman and John H. Grady temporary secretary. Permanent of Secretary. He set forth that he has been a member of the Fire Department continuously since April 9, 1878, in various capacities. He was appointed clerk of the department on December 23, 1883, and by Sections 3 and 10 of the Act of March 28, 1874, became, by virtue of that office, Secretary of the board. He protested against the election of Gorman, claiming that the board was without lawful authority to appoint any one but himself Secretary. He demanded that the resolution appointing Gorman be rescinded and another be adopted appointing himself.

Maxwell depends on the following sections of the charter to sustain his position:

Sections 1 and 2, Article IX, Chapter II of the Charter (Stats. 1899, pp. 236 and 337) read as follows:

"Section 1. The Board of Fire Commissioners shall immediately after their appointment and qualification proceed to reorganize the Fire Department in conformity with the provisions of this charter. In so doing the board shall make its appointment of officers and members from the persons constituting the force in the service of the Fire Department at the time this charter goes into effect. Such officers and members shall not be required to pass any civil service examination. All future appointments and promotions shall be made subject to the provisions of Article XIII of this charter. If any reduction is made in the force of the department the Commissioners may temporarily discharge those persons whose discharge shall be most conducive to the efficient reorganization of the department; but in case of a subsequent increase of the force, those temporarily discharged shall be reappointed without civil service examination and assigned to the same rank in which they were at the time of their discharge.

"Sec. 2. No officer, member or employee of the department shall be dismissed or transferred except for cause, nor until after a trial. The accused shall be furnished with a written copy of the charges against him at least three days previous to the day of trial. He shall have the right to appear in person and by counsel and examine witnesses in his behalf. All witnesses shall be examined under oath, and all trials shall be public."

Garret McEnerney, Maxwell's attorney, will institute legal proceedings to-day to establish his client's claim to the office now held by Gorman.

APPLYING FOR PUBLIC WORK

Five Hundred Laborers Have Registered.

The Civil Service Commission began the day's work at 9 a. m., when it conducted the examination for Chief Examiner of the commission, in the assembly room of the Mills Building. About forty applicants for the position took the examination.

One incident relieved somewhat the strain resolution was adopted commending Jacob Steppacher, the retiring ... for his efficiency and faithfulness.

The Board of Public Works organized in the former rooms of the City and County Surveyor. Colonel Mendell was elected President. The board decided to meet daily at 10 a. m. in the Surveyor's office, on the third floor of the City Hall.

Many of the clerks in the Superintendent of Streets office are retained temporarily. The board may act to-day upon the City Engineer's office, the janitors of public buildings, employees needed in school building work and the Street Superintendent's office.

The Board of Park Commissioners met in the Park Lodge and organized by electing Adolph Spreckels President. Lots were drawn for terms of service. Commissioners Spreckels and McDonald each drew a four-year term, Commissioner Lloyd, three years; Commissioner Stanton, two years, and Commissioner Zeile, one year.

The Board of Education organized by electing C. W. Mark President. The Superintendent was authorized to appoint his own stenographer at $75 a month. The board decided to appoint a clerk at $100 a month and a messenger at $75.

The new Police Judges will to-day determine by lot which two of the four magistrates hold office for four years. The terms of the unlucky two will expire in 1902.

BOERS WON'T PERMIT US TO ACT FOR ENGLAND.

WASHINGTON, January 8.—The Transvaal Government has thrown a diplomatic bombshell in assuming an attitude in regard to the American representation of British interests within its territory, that is regarded here as directly at variance with the courtesy that marks the relations between friendly nations.

The United States have been notified by the Boer Government that it cannot permit W. Stanley Hollis, the American Consul at Pretoria, to represent the interests of Great Britain in the South African republic during the period of the war, in the fullest sense of such representation, but that he will, in his personal capacity, be allowed to continue to care for the British prisoners of war in confinement in Pretoria. The only reason given by the Boers is that they did not want any British representative in their territory.

Slashed Her Bosom Friend.

SACRAMENTO, January 8.—Mrs. Elliott became insanely jealous of the attention paid her bosom friend, Mable Carlton, by her husband, so she procured a razor to-night and inflicted a gash on her rival's face that extends from her nose across her left cheek.

INFALLIBLE KYTKA SWEARS AND SWEARS

The Penman Fastens the Guilt on Mrs. Storke.

INCRIMINATING LETTERS

The Expert Certain the Accused Woman Wrote Them.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 6.—The Storke libel case reached its climax this morning, so far as the work of the prosecution is concerned, when Expert Kytka, following up yesterday's preliminary testimony, explained why he considered the writing of the disputed letters in the case to have been done by the same hand that wrote certain other writings admittedly those of Mrs. Storke.

Before the witness came to the technical part of his testimony, it became necessary for the prosecution to introduce in evidence the great body of anonymous correspondence that flooded this city at the time Mrs. Storke's crime is alleged to have been committed. Whispers of the character of these letters had gone the rounds among a few of those who had been connected with the case, but the general public had never known what they were. They were simply execrable in their vulgar simplicity. They were of three kinds. One set urged young men to visit a certain house, the respectability of which has never been questioned. When the letters were written, it was occupied by three respectable women, one of whom, a lady physician, was professionally connected with Winchester. Other letters were to neighbors concerning the house, and the worst were in the form of invitations to decent young girls to go to the same house for ignoble purposes.

The reading of these letters stirred the wrath of all who heard them.

Through the means of these and other writings, Mr. Kytka made out his case. His chief exhibit was an immense photograph, several feet square, of the word "acknowledged," as found in certain admitted writings and in the letter upon which Mrs. Storke was indicted. The general appearance of the words, enlarged as they were 11 times, was almost identical, and the expert pointed out the many exact resemblances. The letters throughout were shown to have been made by the same strokes and the witness laid great stress upon the fact that in writing the word the pen had been taken up from the paper in six places, the places being the same in each example. This removal of the pen caused several letters to be separated, and these small points, Mr. Kytka said, were conclusive to his mind. They were points that no forger could, by any possibility, imitate. It was beyond the human power of imitation. Some of the strokes might have been made by a forger, but the perfect agreement of all was something conclusive.

Several capital letters, found in both the Winchester letter and in a copy of a Justice Court complaint written recently by the defendant, were illustrated by blackboard drawings. The capital G, found frequently in the specimens, was drawn rather than written, and the capitals H and B were peculiarly and similarly made. The expert simply piled example upon example and the jury examined the original documents. Several jurymen found and called attention to letters made as the witness had indicated. During the whole of this testimony the defendant continually called the attention of her counsel to certain peculiarities in the exhibits. The defense will undoubtedly endeavor to show that the letters were written and the blame thrown upon Yda Addis by those who wish to see the last of her here.

One other link of evidence was brought out through Kytka's testimony. Certain clippings were introduced, pasted upon tissue paper. A like piece of tissue found in Mrs. Storke's room was exhibited, and these, the expert swore, were of the same quality, composition and texture. A paint stain on the back of one of the anonymous letters was also identified as a stain of yellow ochre paint, which, as Mrs. Storke has done considerable painting, was against her.

The defense will probably get to the cross-examination of the witness some time to-morrow afternoon, although it is possible that there will be no cross-examination.

Kytka says he will go from here to Paris, leaving just as soon as the Storke case is over. He will be employed there by M. Zola and will work [illegible] upon the disputed writings of the [illegible] case.

YDA ADDIS STORKE CASE.

Judgment Finding Her Guilty of Criminal Libel Affirmed.

The judgment of the Superior Court of Santa Barbara county in the case of Mrs. Yda Addis Storke has been affirmed by the Supreme Court and the verdict of guilty of criminal libel stands.

The Grand Jury of Santa Barbara county found a true bill for criminal libel against her, and in the Superior Court she was found guilty and sentenced to one year's imprisonment. The Supreme Court found no error in the proceedings. Mrs. Storke, as Yda Addis, a newspaper woman, threatened suit against ex-Governor John G. Downey for breach of promise of marriage, and was afterward married to C. A. Storke, an attorney of Santa Barbara. Divorce proceedings were brought by the wife, and a term of fighting in the courts was the outcome. The husband was elected District Attorney of Santa Barbara county, and was such officer when his ex-wife was indicted. An anonymous letter was received by Mrs. Emelie Thompson, which reflected upon the character and business standing of Dr. E. H. Winchester. This was traced to Mrs. Storke, and her arrest and conviction followed.

HOW THE SHEEHANS WERE DRIVEN OUT.

Witnesses Tell About the Shooting at the Row in the Tax-Collector's Office.

Ben I. Salomon, who is accused of having shot John O'Brien in the neck during the Sheehan-Scott row at the Tax Collector's office on January 8th, was before Police Judge Cabaniss yesterday for hearing. Finlay Cook acted as Prosecuting Attorney, with District Attorney Byington at his side for the purpose of watching the case. Attorney D. J. Murphy conducted the defense.

O'Brien, the first witness, testified that he saw Salomon fire the shot which struck him in the neck. He admitted that he was under instruction to prevent Scott's men from going behind the counter. He had the leg of a stool to use as a club if there should be any occasion for clubbing.

"Did you hit anybody with that club?" asked Attorney Murphy.

"I did not," replied Mr. O'Brien.

Did you raise it to strike anybody?

I may have raised it, but I'm sure that I didn't hit anybody.

Didn't the Sheehan forces all have weapons or clubs?

They may have had.

Now, as a matter of fact, didn't the whole Sheehan crowd have weapons?

They may have had—I don't know.

Didn't you see any others with clubs?

Yes; two or three.

Did you see any [illegible] thrown?

No, I didn't.

Did you see a pistol in Charles E. Brand's hand?

I did not.

How long did you stay in the room after you were shot?

About five minutes.

You were conscious all the time?

Yes, sir.

Standing up and walking about?

Yes, sir.

John Doyle, one of the leaders of the Sheehan forces, was the second witness. He declared that he had seen Salomon draw a pistol and shoot. His testimony corresponded with O'Brien's statements.

On cross-examination Mr. Doyle stated that he had not received any instructions to prevent Scott and his men from taking the office, that he took no active part in the trouble, though he was in the middle of the crowd, and that he had no club nor weapon. Ben Salomon had been in the office during the forenoon, excited and apparently intoxicated.

Attorney Murphy led the witness to say that he did not actually see Salomon shoot, as he ducked under the counter when the pistol was drawn.

Mr. Doyle was evasive in many of his answers and Judge Cabaniss warned him twice to be less "flippant." He hesitated about a minute before he denied that he had a personal encounter with "Jack" Fitzgerald and that Fitzgerald knocked him down.

P. J. Hagan, Sheehan's chief deputy, testified that he heard the pistol report, but did not see who did the shooting. Then the hearing was continued to next Wednesday afternoon.

NOT WRITTEN BY FULLER.

Claim, However, That the Disputed Will Was Signed by Him.

OROVILLE, January 20.—There were no new developments in the Rodley perjury case to-day. Witnesses Mining Judge John Shannon, Mrs. Monti[illegible], W. M. Marvin, Justice of the Peace [illegible] of Chico and Expert Theodore Kytka were placed on the stand. Numerous letters, documents, receipts, etc., were shown to be in the handwriting of the late Alfred Fuller. Defense late in the afternoon acknowledged that the will was not in the handwriting of Fuller, but claimed that the signature was his. A long and stubborn fight was made to keep testimony which would prove the [illegible] penmanship of Fuller. A still harder fight was made to prevent the testimony of Expert Kytka.

SALOMON IS EXONERATED.

Charge of Assault to Murder Dismissed by Judge Cabaniss.

The preliminary examination of Ben I. Salomon, accused of attempting to murder John O'Brien during the battle on January 8th, for the possession of the Tax Collector's office, ended yesterday in the dismissal of the charge against Salomon.

The witnesses who testified yesterday were Theodore Kytka, George Fletcher, Wallace Wedelmann and H. P. Lambert. The latter is City Clerk of Alameda and merely happened to be around when the trouble began. All four witnesses gave testimony favorable to Salomon. Witness Kytka was positive that Salomon had not fired the shot that wounded O'Brien. The other witnesses gave similar testimony, and at the conclusion of the preliminary examination Police Judge Cabaniss ordered that the charge be dismissed.

BIG CLAIM AGAINST DELGER ESTATE

Pronounced by Handwriting Experts to Be a Clumsy Forgery—Arrests May Follow.

Another sensation has been given to the residents of Oakland to gossip about. The promissory note which James J. Lampling presented several days ago against the estate of Frederick Delger, the late multi-millionaire, for $10,000 has been pronounced a forgery of the crudest kind by two local handwriting experts.

Arrests in all probability will follow, and the affair is being watched with the keenest interest.

Frederick Delger died at his home at Nineteenth street and Telegraph avenue in April, 1898, and left an estate valued at many millions of dollars. In fact, it is claimed by the residents of the bay city that Delger's belongings comprised half of the city of Oakland.

About ten years ago James J. Lampling, so it is claimed by the relatives of the Delger family, entered the employment of the late Frederick Delger. He was assigned to the exalted duties of a brick cleaner. Being a man of fair education and superior ambitions, he forged ahead, step by step, and soon controlled the confidence of his employer. The Delgers claim that Lampling's first position under the late capitalist was that of collector. The friends of Lampling are just as sure that he was manager.

However, Mr. Lampling's duties occasionally [illegible] to collect [illegible] bills [illegible] the elder Delger for his signature.

Immediately after the death of Frederick Delger his son, E. L. Delger, who is State agent for the Bankers' Association of Des Moines, took charge of the estate of his father. He had been named as one of the executors. The will of the deceased was presented to the Superior Court of Oakland for probate, and nothing was heard of the promissory note held by Lampling until January 3d of this year. He presented it to the Probate Court for collection and the Judge appointed the Oakland City Bank custodian.

The younger Delger doubted the genuineness of the signature on the paper and immediately asked the Court's permission to have the signature examined, which was granted him. He immediately sent for Theodore Kytka, the well-known handwriting expert, and showed him the admitted signature of his father, as on the note, and several admitted signatures. Mr. Kytka carefully examined the handwriting, and after two weeks of expecting pronounced the signature on the Lampling note a crude forgery. The paper was then taken to George Hesketh, another handwriting expert, and his findings were identical with those of Kytka.

The disputed note is alleged to have been executed on January 3, 1897, and reads as follows:

OAKLAND, Jan. 3, 1897.

$10,000—

I promise to pay, after three years from date, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars to James J. Lampling.

FREDERICK DELGER.

No consideration is named in the note. The California statutes, however, hold that a consideration must be named in all promissory notes, but this matter is only secondary. It is singular, however, that Lampling never mentioned the existence of the note, and only presented it one year and seven months after the death of the millionaire, or on the day of maturity.

It is alleged that even the bank officials, who hold the note in escrow, ridicule the signature.

The note, when originally presented to the Probate Court as a claim against the Delger estate, created a small sensation, but when the experts' findings leaked out in Oakland yesterday the matter was discussed on nearly every street corner, and people shook their heads.

E. L. Delger could not be located at his mother's mansion in Oakland, and all inquiry made at his residence, Twenty-fifth and Fair Oaks streets, this morning could elicit no information as to the whereabouts of the gentleman. That Mr. Delger knew that a reporter sought an interview, which he did not wish to grant, is demonstrated by the fact that he took his mother's housekeeper to task today for having furnished The Report's representative with his local address.

However, the matter of the alleged forgery is not denied by the Delgers and is common property in the Delger mansion. The employes of the household freely discuss it. They are sure, so they claim, that arrests will be made, and do not hesitate to denounce Lampling.

The handwriting experts who examined the note have been instructed to prepare photographs of the signatures, both admitted and disputed, so that they can be produced in court at an hour's notice.

The Delger home in Oakland is situated in the center of a lot one block square.

Mrs. Frederick Delger, widow of the millionaire, is an invalid.

MEN CANNOT PAY FOR A LEES TESTIMONIAL.

Police Commissioners Declare That Members of the Department Cannot Be Assessed.

The Board of Police Commissioners, at a meeting yesterday afternoon, decided that the men of the Police Department could not be assessed or, as members of the department, be asked to contribute toward a testimonial to be presented to ex-Chief Lees. Soon after I. W. Lees retired from the Police Department a few of his friends got together and [illegible] for a testimonial expressing the esteem in which he was held by the policemen. It was completed a few days ago and it is an engrossed affair, elaborately framed and [illegible] an easel. It was set up in the assembly room of the Central police station and when it made its first appearance it was the first intimation that the patrolmen and many of the officers received that a presentation was to be made to the former chief. A provision of the new charter forbids employes of the city making any such presentation and for that reason the Police Commissioners would not grant their sanction. The patrolmen feel that they have a grievance in the matter. They declare that they should have been consulted because they are expected to pay for the engrossing and framing of the testimonial, which amounts to about $250, or at least that the patrolmen and sergeants should have had some representation.

The testimonial bears the signatures of the police captains, some of the lieutenants and a number of ex-members of the police force. None of the sergeants or the patrolmen are represented and the men do not think they have been treated fairly.

SHE WOULD NOT TRUST BROTHER WITH HER WILL

Mrs. Ann Harris Took Precautions.

Oakland Office San Francisco Call,
908 Broadway, Jan. 29.

In a letter left by Mrs. Ann Harris accompanying her will is revealed the bitter feeling she entertained for her brother, Josiah P. Ames, whom she cut off with a bequest of $5 and whom she had sued to recover $175,000 worth of bonds and securities.

The will was admitted to probate to-day by Judge Greene. E. Wilder Churchill, husband to a niece of Mrs. Harris, was appointed executor, and he related in court that he had received the will in a sealed envelope from his father, Edmund S. Churchill, a Napa banker. The older Mr. Churchill corroborated his son's statement and said he received the will in a package in December, 1898, a letter accompanying it from Mrs. Ann Harris. This letter was made public for the first time to-day. It reads:

My Dear Mr. Churchill: Please find inclosed my will. Kindly take charge of it and deliver it to your son, E. Wilder Churchill, after my death. Having had so much trouble with my brother Josiah, I desire my will shall be in safe hands. Having done so much for him I am determined he shall have no more.

ANN HARRIS.

It was supposed that the estate to be administered upon would amount to nearly $250,000, but it appears from testimony taken to-day that Mrs. Harris disposed of most of her property by deed prior to her death, leaving only about $100 in personal effects and a $60,000 judgment obtained against her brother, Josiah P. Ames, recently. Her property she left to the children of her other brother, John Ames, deceased.

MRS. TEVIS RECEIVES THREATENING LETTERS.

Demands Made on the Widow of the Late Millionaire for Five Thousand Dollars Under Penalty of Death.

MRS. SUSAN TEVIS, the widow of the late Lloyd Tevis, the millionaire, has been singled out by either a crank or a dangerous criminal as the object of threats and blackmail. Three letters have been addressed to her within the last three weeks and although the police have been able through the aid of a handwriting expert to discover beyond scarcely any doubt the identity of the writer no steps have been taken to place him under restraint. While the authorities refuse to state exactly the cause for such a course they tacitly admit that the man is still at liberty because those who are the most concerned in the affair have expressed a desire not to prosecute him. The reasons for such a course upon the part of those the most interested in the welfare of Mrs. Tevis are, at present, unknown.

Charles Maurice Eaton is the name of the man who is strongly suspected of having written the threatening letters to Mrs. Tevis. He says that his father and Tevis were pioneers together and that he is nothing more than a friend of the family. Whether this acquaintance which he claims has anything to do with the leniency which is admitted by the officers to have been shown him or whether Eaton is granted immunity from arrest and prosecution from some other cause is known only to those intimately acquainted with the case.

About three weeks ago a letter was found addressed to Mrs. Tevis at her residence, 1316 Taylor street. This communication was evidently from a man, and demanded $5000. A woman or a man dressed in black would, the writer said, call at the house for the money. If the sum demanded was not forthcoming the life of Mrs. Tevis would pay the forfeit, for she would be waylaid upon the first opportunity and either shot or stabbed to death. On the same night, the letter continued, that she was to be murdered another accomplice would set fire to her residence. The communication was written in a bold style of penmanship and was signed "Moritz."

Although the letter had a disquieting effect upon the female members of the household, Dr. Harry Tevis, the son of the recipient of the communication, decided that it had evidently been sent by some harmless crank, and dismissed the matter from further thought. Several mornings after this, however, the family was again thrown into a state of perturbation by the arrival of a second threatening letter. This note also was addressed to Mrs. Susan Tevis, and was found under the front door by the butler. The second communication renewed the threats of the former letter, and said that the writer was determined to leave the city, but that he required $5000, and as the Tevises were the only family he knew who were wealthy enough to supply him with that amount, he applied to them. He had no money or friends. The writer grew bolder in the second letter and named a place where a boy would be sent to receive the money. This letter was also signed "Moritz."

Dr. Tevis decided that the anonymous writer might be reckless enough to attempt the life of Mrs. Tevis so, thoroughly alarmed, he at once hurried to the police headquarters with the two letters and acquainted Acting Chief Biggy and Captain of Detectives Bohen with the details of the threats against his mother's life and the circumstances of the receipt of the communications. Dr. Tevis expressly cautioned the authorities not to divulge the facts of the occurrence. He was questioned closely regarding any possible enemies who might desire to accomplish the death of his mother, and was also asked to supply the authorities with letters which he had received from correspondents in order that the various styles of writing could be compared with that shown in the anonymous letters. Detectives Wren and Dinan were detailed upon the case.

Several days after the matter was turned over to the police for investigation a third letter was received, which reiterated the demands and threats contained in the previous communications and contained the following: "I will kill you surely and will destroy your house by fire." The writer also added that he had but a short time to remain in the city and he proposed to compel the payment of the sum demanded. This letter also was delivered to the authorities.

About the first person whom the authorities visited was Eaton, who resides at 120 Ellis street. While the police refused to state to what extent their dealings with Eaton had gone, he admitted last night that the detectives had left him a note requesting that he call upon them at the Central Police Station, as they wished to interview him upon the case. Eaton claimed that his father and the late Lloyd Tevis had been pioneers together, and that he, the present Eaton, had been born in San Francisco forty years ago. He admitted having written some letters of a business character to Dr. Tevis, and had also addressed some of a personal nature to Mrs. Tevis. He did not claim, however, that his friendship with the Tevises was of an intimate character. What he told the police was not stated by the detectives, but Eaton said that he was shown the three letters which had been sent to Mrs. Tevis, and he seemed to be well acquainted with their contents. Evidently the authorities did not then have sufficient evidence with which to incriminate Eaton, for he was allowed to depart.

Last Monday, however, the three letters were turned over to a handwriting expert to be compared with other writing, including some of Eaton's acknowledged letters to members of the Tevis family. As the result of the examination, which lasted until Wednesday, the handwriting expert gave as his positive opinion that Eaton was the author of the anonymous letters which had caused such alarm to the members of the Tevis household. Dr. Tevis was acquainted with the opinion, but the police who had been working in his interests in the matter received no instructions to take Eaton into custody, and in consequence the latter has been permitted to go and come at will.

This is not the only act of similar nature in which Eaton is accused of being concerned. It is said that some time ago an anonymous letter was sent to a newspaper office signed "Hase 1." The writer of that communication claimed to be a member of the half-world and pretended to relate certain occurrences which reflected upon the action of a police detective. The case was investigated, and after a careful inquiry the recipients of the communication decided that Eaton had been the writer.

The detectives admit that were it not for other interests than their own and of the city to be served in the present case, Eaton would receive the attention of the police within a short time.

One of the letters was sent through the mails, and as the using of the United States postal service for the purpose of conveying threats is a serious offense, this part of the affair may be brought to the attention of the Federal authorities, provided there is any desire upon the part of Dr. Tevis and others interested to prosecute Eaton.

As the result of the threatening letters the Tevis residence has been guarded by a special officer for the last three weeks.

Eaton, when seen last night at his room, said: "About two weeks ago I received a card from Detective Wren asking me to call at his office. I went there and he told me that threatening letters had been sent to Mrs. Tevis. He asked me if I had written to Mr. Tevis, and I said I had and identified some letters in my handwriting that he had there. I also told him that I had written to Mrs. Tevis. Then he handed me the threatening letters and asked me if that was my writing. I told him it was not, that I had never seen the letters before, and asked him if he suspected me. He replied that he did not, but that he was making the same inquiries of every individual who had written to the Tevises for some time past.

"My father and Lloyd Tevis were friends together forty years ago and I have lived in this city all my life. Dr. Tevis will make every effort to locate the writer and will spend thousands of dollars if necessary. If there were any suspicion that I wrote them you may be sure that I would not be as I am at perfect liberty. It was none of my business so I did not offer any suggestions to Detective Wren. I thought though, that it would have been an excellent plan to apparently agree to accede to the terms demanded by the writer and send the money to the place named and by that means secure trace of those who are in the plot, for such I believe it to be. I presumed, however, that the officer knew his business, so did not venture any suggestion of this character. I have been a paying teller in a bank for a number of years and was employed fifteen years in that capacity at San Luis Obispo."

THREATENS LIFE OF MRS. TEVIS

Police Are at Work Shadowing the Writer of Letters of the Blackmail Order.

The life of Mrs. Susan Tevis, wife of the late millionaire, Lloyd Tevis, has been threatened. Though anonymous letters she has been informed that she is to be murdered and that her mansion at 1316 Taylor street is to be burned by incendiaries unless she surrenders the sum of $10,000.

The first letter was received three weeks ago. It was written in a bold hand and was signed "Moritz." In this letter the man demanded $5000. He stated a lady in black or a gentleman in light suit would call at the house for the money, and that if it was not surrendered her life would pay the forfeit. She would be waylaid, and either stabbed or shot to death, the letter said. On the same night as the murder the torch of one of his accomplices would be applied to the Taylor-street home of the family.

No attention was paid to the first letter, as it was thought to be the momentary deed of a crank. A few mornings after the receipt of the first threatening letter the butler found another note under the front door, where it had been placed the previous night. It was addressed to "Mrs. Susan Tevis." Again the would-be assassin repeated his threats, stating he desired to leave the city. He had no money and no friends. The only family that he knew was that of Tevis, and they would have to pay him $5000.

Dr. Tevis, a son of Mrs. Tevis, was shown the letters, and with them he hurried to police headquarters. He was closeted with Captain of Detectives Bohen and "Acting" Chief Biggy for several hours. He was anxious that the matter be suppressed, as his mother did not want to gain newspaper notoriety. Bohen, and surprising as it may seem, even Biggy not only gave his word, but kept it. Five days after the visit of Dr. Tevis at the "Acting" Chief's office another letter was received at the Tevis home from the same writer. This was also turned over to the police.

Last Monday the fourth threatening letter was found under the door of the Taylor-street mansion.

In this communication the would-be murderer raised the amount he demanded for peace from $5000 to $10,000. He underlined the statement that he would murder Mrs. Tevis and reiterated that she had only a short time to live unless the money he demanded was forthcoming. He had not much more time to remain in the city, and needed the money. "I will kill you surely and will destroy your house by fire," is one of the statements in the last communication.

The Tevis family became more alarmed than ever, and every effort was made to have the police hurry their investigation.

The four letters, one of which had been sent by mail, were turned over to a handwriting expert and he established the identity of the penman. The man's given name is Moritz, as he signed it, and he is known to the Tevis family. He has on frequent occasions been arrested, and in police phraseology is known as an "all-around bad man."

As soon as the expert's report was filed, the best men from the "upper office" were detailed on the case.

The writer of the letters has been located and the lodging-house at 120 Ellis, where he resides, is under police surveillance. Whenever the man leaves the house he is followed by detectives and his every action noted. His accomplices are also known, and as soon as they appear at the Tevis home arrests will follow.

It is stated that the man "Moritz" has a questionable profession, but that he is well educated. The police refuse to give any information in the case. Captain Bohen and "Acting" Chief Biggy do not deny the truth of the matter, but reply to all questions reluctantly.

"Captain Bohen, is it not a fact that you are working on this case?" was asked.

"Well, that is no one's business. This Tevis case is not a public matter, it is a private one," replied the officer.

"However, Mrs. Tevis has never been in this office. If Dr. Tevis has, that's another matter."

Mr. Drumm, confidential clerk of the Tevis estate, at first admitted that the case was well in hand and then denied that Mrs. Tevis had ever received any threatening letters.

Mrs. Susan Tevis refused to be interviewed in the matter.

However, it is expected that arrests will be made early next week. The writer of the letters will have to answer to the United States Government, as well as to the municipality. One of the letters was sent by mail.

EATON WILL NOT BE PROSECUTED.

MRS. TEVIS UNAWARE THREATS WERE MADE.

NO FURTHER FEAR ENTERTAINED OF HER ANONYMOUS CORRESPONDENT.

The Incident Is Now Declared to Be Closed So Far as the Authorities Are Concerned in It.

Charles Maurice Eaton, who is accused by the police of having sent threatening letters to Mrs. Susan Tevis, the wife of the late Lloyd Tevis, the millionaire, is still enjoying his liberty, and from the statements made by the authorities yesterday nothing is likely to be done to bring him to task upon the present charge. There are several reasons for this, the principal one being the fact that Dr. Harry Tevis, son of Mrs. Tevis, told the police that he did not care to prosecute the man.

Mrs. Tevis has been in ill health for some time past, and consequently is too feeble to stand the strain of appearing in court as the complainant in a case of this sort, when it would be necessary for her to confront the man accused of having threatened to kill her and set fire to her home.

It is even said by intimate friends of the family that she has, thus far, been kept in ignorance of the existence of the threatening letters, and every attempt will be made by her family to see that she is not acquainted with the affair.

In consequence the incident is closed, so far as the authorities are concerned, for they do not entertain the slightest apprehension that any attempt will be made to carry the threats into execution.

In the course of an interview Eaton claimed that his father had been a friend of the late Lloyd Tevis, and that he was also known to members of the Tevis family. This statement was positively denied yesterday by Gordon Blanding, the son-in-law of Mrs. Tevis. "The claim," he said, "upon the part of Eaton that he or his father were friends of the late Lloyd Tevis is absolutely false. I knew the friends of Tevis, and I know that no such persons as the Eatons were among them. I know this to be a positive fact, and any statement from him to the contrary is false."

SAY THEIR FATHER WAS DRUGGED AND DELUDED.

The Children of an Old Ex-Mayor of Los Angeles File a New Contest of His Will.

LOS ANGELES, February 23.—An amended contest has been filed by the contestants of the will of Jose Mascarel, a rich old Frenchman and ex-Mayor, who died here October 6, 1891. The amended contest contains all the allegations already made by the Mascarel children and several new contentions. It is claimed, as before, that the old Frenchman was not of sound mind when he made the will in favor of the grandchildren of his first wife by her former marriage. It is alleged that during his last days he was persuaded by ex-Assemblyman H. G. Weyse, his attorney and friend, and by other persons to transfer away or otherwise dispose of his property without consideration. The charge is made that from August until his death in October Mascarel was kept practically under the constant influence of drugs and that the proponents of the will, entering into a conspiracy, brought spiritualists to Mascarel and had them tell him that the spirits advised his cutting off his own children. One of the persons accused of so influencing old Mascarel is Jesus Mascarel's widow, who is alleged to have lived with old Jose for many years, keeping him apart from his wife and family.

The proponents of the will have filed an answer denying these things. Judge Shaw set the trial for April 9th. Henry G. Weyse, one of the executors and special administrator of the estate, was cited to appear in court on March 2d to show why he should not be removed from office because he is an interested party in the litigation.

FAIR ESTATE SUITS MAY BE SOON ENDED ON AMICABLE ARBITRATION

Tentative Recognition of Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair's Claims.

WERE THE TRUSTEES OUT

Attorneys for the Senator's Children Would Advise a Compromise.

SPEEDY settlement of Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair's litigation against the Fair estate, it is believed, would follow a decision by the Supreme Court annulling the trust clause by which the late Senator James G. Fair attempted to put the bulk of his estate beyond the immediate control of his children—Charles L. Fair, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt. Upon representations that such a result might be brought about in the event of a decision by the Supreme Court invalidating the trust, Judge Troutt has postponed until February 12th the trial of Mrs. Craven-Fair's claim to a family allowance as the widow of Senator Fair. Attorneys for the Fair children assent to the suggestion that they would listen to a suggestion for a compromise. Pence & Pence, representing Mrs. Craven-Fair, say that she would expect to receive one-third of the estate.

Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair may realize her hope to share in the estate of the late Senator James G. Fair in a comparatively short time, provided the current of events turns her way, as she expects. Mrs. Craven-Fair and her legal advisers are ardent in their well-wishes for the welfare of the children of Senator Fair touching the decision of the Supreme Court on the question of the so-called trust clause of the will. Though opposed in many matters, Mrs. Craven-Fair devoutly wishes good luck to Charles L. Fair, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, children of Senator Fair, in their effort to oust the trustees from possession of their father's estate, which was worth $12,800,000 when he died, and which is estimated to have attained a valuation of $16,000,000 at the present time. She believes that a victory for the children would in a measure be a help to her, since it would clear the field and leave but one party with which to deal in her effort to obtain recognition as the widow of Senator Fair.

The trust clause in the Fair will out of which has arisen such a complication of litigation, following provisions for liberal bequests to personal friends and charitable organizations, reads thus:

All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, property and effects, personal and mixed, whatsoever and wheresoever situated, I give, devise and bequeath unto my trustees hereinafter named [W. S. Goodfellow, James S. Angus, L. F. Breese, Thomas G. Crothers] and T. G. Crothers, and to the survivors of them and to their successors in office, in trust for the following uses and purposes, that is to say:

To have and to hold the same in trust during the lives of my daughters Theresa A. Oelrichs and Virginia Fair and of my son Charles L. Fair, and during the life of the survivor of them and upon the death of such survivor to transfer and convey to the children or descendants of my said daughter Theresa the one-fourth part of said trust property and estate, and to the children or descendants of my said daughter Virginia the one-fourth part of said trust property and estate, and the remaining one-half of said trust property and estate to transfer and convey in equal shares to my brothers and sisters and to the children of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation. [The language of this clause is taken from the Civil Code of the State of California, Section 1386, Subdivision 3, as it now exists, and shall bear the same construction as said subdivision of said section, subject, however, to the provisions of paragraph "thirteenth" of this will.] In case either of my daughters die leaving no children or descendants, the one-fourth part of said trust property and estate herein directed to be transferred and conveyed to her children or descendants, shall be transferred and conveyed to the children or descendants of my other daughter, and if there be none the same shall be transferred and conveyed to my brothers and sisters and to the children of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation as aforesaid.

In trust further during the life or lives of my said daughters and son, and of the survivor of them, to hold, manage and control the said trust property and estate and monthly to pay over the net income derived therefrom to my said daughters and son in equal proportions, and upon the death of either of my said daughters to pay over the one-third of said net income to which she, if living, would be entitled, to her children or descendants, if any there be, otherwise to my surviving daughter and upon the death, during the life of my said son, of said surviving daughter having children or descendants, then to her said children or descendants, and if she leave no children or descendants then said portion of said net income to become a part of the rest and residue of my estate and to be disposed of as such under the provisions of this will, and upon the death of my said son to pay over the one-third of said net income to which he if living would be entitled to my said two daughters in equal proportions or to the survivor of them.

Yet the fate of future litigation in the Fair estate depends upon an "if." That is the phase given to the adjustment of the vast interests at stake in that controversy by recent declarations of attorneys for the children of Mr. Fair.

The "if" relates to the expected decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the validity of the trust clause. Should the decision of former Judge Slack be affirmed, the trust provision of the will must fall, and the children of Fair will demand immediate possession of the entire estate, to the exclusion of the trustees. In that event, an effort will be made to end the lawsuit of Mrs. Craven-Fair, who has laid claim to one-third of the property, alleging that she is the widow of the decedent.

Reuben H. Lloyd of the firm of Lloyd & Wood, representing Mrs. Theresa Oelrichs and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, daughters of Senator Fair, spoke openly in confirmation of such a plan in Judge Troutt's department of the Superior Court last week, and Charles J. Heggerty of the firm of Knight & Heggerty, attorneys for Charles L. Fair, only surviving son of James G. Fair, made an equally succinct statement to this effect yesterday.

"It would be merely a business proposition, that would meet with the approval of were possible to reach an agreement for a reasonable amount. It would be foolish to prolong the litigation."

MRS. NETTIE CRAVEN-FAIR.

Mr. Heggerty illustrated his meaning by adding: "If somebody had got possession of our client's watch, or had set up a claim to it in such a way as to bring the matter before the courts, and if we believed that a proper settlement and recovery of the watch could be obtained by arbitration with less delay and less expense than by fighting it out in the courts, we would deem it our duty to advise a compromise. That is the way in which we feel concerning Mrs. Craven. Her claim is before the courts in a way that gives her no opportunity to be heard, and though we consider her claims invalid, yet she might harass the children of Senator Fair for a long time. So far as our client is concerned, we would consider it wise to listen to any suggestion of a settlement that might be offered, and if an agreement could be reached to wind up the matter and end the dispute as soon as possible. It is a recognized principle that it is sometimes the right thing for a litigant to buy his peace even though he may not admit that his adversary is right."

Mr. Heggerty's avowal of his sentiment concerning the advice he would give his client in the event of the trust clause being annulled, renews interest in the remarks of Mr. Lloyd, who asked Judge Troutt for a postponement of a trial of Mrs. Craven-Fair's suit for family allowance on the ground that an understanding might be reached which possibly would obviate the necessity of irksome court proceedings. He told the Court that a decision in regard to the trust clause in the Fair will is expected soon. It would be improvident, he thought, to take up Mrs. Craven-Fair's case at this time, because, while the fight was in progress, a decision might be handed down by the Supreme Court that might change the legal aspect of the situation, and possibly might make further proceedings in this direction unnecessary.

Attorney Lafe Pence of the law firm of Pence & Pence, attorneys for Mrs. Craven-Fair, at that time said that he was not willing to have a continuance granted on the strength of what might, would or could happen; his client was ready for trial, and objected to further delay.

Judge Troutt said that his time would be occupied for the next fortnight, and he therefore put over the trial until Monday, February 12th.

After the adjournment of court, Mr. Lloyd explained that he and his associates, representing the two daughters, had argued to the Supreme Court that former Judge Slack's decision, declaring the trust clause invalid, ought to be sustained. If this view should prevail in the Supreme Court it would put the entire estate in the hands of the heirs and would greatly minimize the legal complications and make easy any steps the heirs might see fit to take in the settlement of the litigation now pending.

Mr. Lloyd was asked if this was an intimation that the children of Senator Fair would be willing to compromise with Mrs. Craven-Fair, or would recognize her claim to the Lick House property under the so-called pencil deeds, or in regard to a family allowance as Senator Fair's widow.

To this Mr. Lloyd responded that he did not intend to intimate anything, as he did not know what his clients would do, even if the decision comes their way, but that it would change the status of the litigation in many important particulars, he said, was apparent to all.

Lafe Pence was asked for his view of the situation, and said:

"If in the beginning of the litigation Mrs. Fair had been allowed without contest to take what Senator Fair gave her she would have been content. Now that the children of Senator Fair have placed the estate in such shape, that the annulment of the trust clause will result in declaring the estate claiming the valuable real estate at North Beach.

Pence & Pence have given notice that they will not consent to any further continuance of the trial which involves the claim of Mrs. Craven-Fair for family allowance.

"That case has been peremptorily set for February 12th," said Mr. Pence, "and we shall insist on having it go on at that time, whether there is a decision by the Supreme Court on the trust clause or not. In that trial the validity of Mrs. Fair's claim to be the widow of Senator Fair will be tried on its merits, and she will abide by the result of that trial."

CONFLICT OVER A CHECK.

Allegation That Hodson's Name on It Was Forged.

The answer of A. F. Booker in the suit brought against him by M. A. Frank to secure payment of a check for [illegible] was filed yesterday in the Superior Court. Booker said that the check, which was drawn on the Nevada Bank on November [illegible], was made at [illegible] county, and was made payable to J. [illegible] Hodson. He alleged that Hodson lost the check and payment of it was then stopped. On January [illegible] Hodson [illegible] the [illegible] of the check to Booker. Frank stated in his complaint that the check was indorsed by Hodson and delivered by him to L. H. [illegible], who transferred it to [illegible] and Ryan turned it over to Frank. Booker avers in his answer that Hodson did not indorse the check and that the indorsement is a forgery.

CONTESTS HIS MOTHER'S WILL

Frank P. Wickersham Wants His Share of the Estate.

BANKER'S HEIRS FIGHT FOR HIS MILLIONS.

BROTHER AND SISTER ACCUSED OF HAVING INFLUENCED MOTHER.

She Is Alleged to Have Been in a Paralyzed Condition at the Time She Signed Her Will.

The fight for the Wickersham millions, which began in June last and was compromised by an agreement between the heirs of the deceased banker of Petaluma two months later, has been renewed, and there is every indication that it will be contested to the bitter end.

When I. G. Wickersham, founder of the Wickersham Banking Company of Petaluma, died at that place some six months ago, he left a will by the terms of which he bequeathed an estate, consisting of interests in many of the banking corporations of this State, valued at about $900,000, to his wife and children. He made an exception, however, in the case of his son, Frank P. Wickersham, a former Supervisor of Fresno, to whom he bequeathed the sum of $10 only. On June 27th last Frank Wickersham filed a contest to this will upon the ground that his father was not of sound and disposing mind at the time of the alleged signing of the will, that undue influence was brought to bear upon him by other heirs, and that the will was void because the bequests therein contained were uncertain as to their objects, and not susceptible to enforcement. This contest was withdrawn in September last, Frank Wickersham having effected an agreement with his fellow-heirs whereby he should receive an equal share of the estate with them.

On February 10th last Mrs. Wickersham, wife of the late millionaire, died at Petaluma, leaving a will which was filed in the Superior Court of Sonoma county on February 19th by her son, Fred A. Wickersham. It was dated on September 2, 1899. After bequeathing $500 to St. John's Episcopal Church of Petaluma, $250 to Miss Catherine Bowers, an aged companion, and $50 to her son, Frank P. Wickersham, the deceased left all the rest of her estate to her children, Fred A. and Lizzie C. Wickersham, and her married daughter, Mrs. Mary Bergerin, in equal parts. Letters testamentary were issued to Fred Wickersham in response to his petition, and steps were immediately taken to probate this will.

Yesterday Frank P. Wickersham, through his attorneys, Riordan & Lande of this city, filed a contest to this will at Santa Rosa upon the ground that Mrs. Wickersham was not of sound and disposing mind at the time the will was signed, having been paralyzed for some months prior thereto; that fraudulent misrepresentations had been made by the other heirs to induce her to disinherit the contestant, and that undue influences had been brought to bear upon her to compel her to make the will in the interests of those heirs.

It is alleged in this contest that this will was not executed, attested or published as required by law, that it was not a holographic will, and was not signed by Mrs. Wickersham in the presence of the attesting witnesses, that the signature attached thereto was not made by her or with her authority, and that the alleged witnesses thereto did not sign it in her presence. It is further alleged that at the time of her death Mrs. Wickersham was 71 years of age, and had been for a long time prior thereto suffering from paralysis, which impaired her mental faculties to such a degree that she did not know what she was doing, and that she was induced to make such a will by being continually harassed, coerced and goaded by her daughter, Lizzie C. Wickersham, and her son, Fred A. Wickersham.

Fred A. Wickersham, to whom letters testamentary have already been issued, is vice-president of the bank at Petaluma founded by his father.

Frank P. Wickersham announces his determination to follow up this contest with a renewal of that entered against his father's will, so that the battle will probably be prolonged indefinitely.

SPEEDY settlement of Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair's litigation against the Fair estate, it is believed, would follow a decision by the Supreme Court annulling the trust clause by which the late Senator James G. Fair attempted to put the bulk of his estate beyond the immediate control of his children—Charles L. Fair, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt. Upon representations that such a result might be brought about in the event of a decision by the Supreme Court invalidating the trust, Judge Trout has postponed until February 12th the trial of Mrs. Craven-Fair's claim to a family allowance as the widow of Senator Fair. Attorneys for the Fair children assent to the suggestion that they would listen to a suggestion for a compromise. Pence & Pence, representing Mrs. Craven-Fair, say that she would expect to receive one-third of the estate.

Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair may realize her hope to share in the estate of the late Senator James G. Fair in a comparatively short time, provided the current of eventualities her way, as she expects. Mrs. Craven-Fair and her legal advisers are ardent in their well-wishes for the welfare of the children of Senator Fair touching the decision of the Supreme Court on the question of the so-called trust clause of the will. Though opposed in many matters, Mrs. Craven-Fair devoutly wishes good luck to Charles L. Fair, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, children of Senator Fair, in their effort to oust the trustees from possession of their father's estate, which was worth $12,000,000 when he died, and which is estimated to have attained a valuation of $16,000,000 at the present time. She believes that a victory for the children would in a measure be a help to her, since it would clear the field and leave but one party with which to deal in her effort to obtain recognition as the widow of Senator Fair.

The trust clause in the Fair will out of which has arisen such a complication of litigation, following provisions for liberal bequests to personal friends and charitable organizations, reads thus:

All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, property and effects, personal and mixed, whatsoever and wheresoever situated, I give, devise and bequeath unto my trustees hereinafter named [W. S. Goodfellow, James S. Angus, L. [illegible] Dresse (now deceased) and T. G. Crothers], and to the survivors of them and to their successors in office, in trust for the following uses and purposes, that is to say:

To have and to hold the same in trust during the lives of my daughters Theresa A. Oelrichs and Virginia Fair and of my son Charles L. Fair, and during the life of the survivor of them and upon the death of such survivor to transfer and convey to the children or descendants of my said daughter Theresa the one-fourth part of said trust property and estate, and to the children or descendants of my said daughter Virginia the one-fourth part of said trust property and estate, and the remaining one-half of said trust property and estate to transfer and convey in equal shares to my brothers and sisters and to the children of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation. (The language of this clause is taken from the Civil Code of the State of California, Section 1389, Subdivision 3, as it now exists, and shall bear the same construction as said subdivision of said section, subject, however, to the provisions of paragraph "sixteenth" of this will.) In case either of my daughters die leaving no children or descendants, the one-fourth part of said trust property and estate herein directed to be transferred and conveyed to her children or descendants, shall be transferred and conveyed to the children or descendants of my other daughter, and if there be none the same shall be transferred and conveyed to my brothers and sisters and to the children of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation as aforesaid.

In trust further during the life or lives of my said daughters and son, and of the survivor of them, to hold, manage and control the said trust property and estate and monthly to pay over the net income derived therefrom to my said daughters and son in equal proportions, and upon the death of either of my said daughters to pay over the one-third of said net income to which she, if living, would be entitled, to her children or descendants, if any there be, otherwise to my surviving daughter and upon the death, during the life of my said son, of said surviving daughter leaving children or descendants, then to her said children or descendants, and if she leave no children or descendants then said portion of said net income to become a part of the rest and residue of my estate and to be disposed of as such under the provisions of this will; and upon the death of my said son to pay over the one-third of said net income to which he if living would be entitled to my said two daughters in equal proportions or to the survivor of them.

Yet the fate of future litigation in the Fair estate depends upon an "if." That is the phase given in the adjustment of the vast interests at stake in that controversy by recent declarations of attorneys for the children of Mr. Fair.

The "if" relates to the expected decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the validity of the trust clause. Should the decision of former Judge Slack be affirmed, the trust provision of the will must fall, and the children of Fair will demand immediate possession of the entire estate, to the exclusion of the trustees. In that event, an effort will be made to end the lawsuit of Mrs. Craven-Fair, who has laid claim to one-third of the property, alleging that she is the widow of the decedent.

Reuben H. Lloyd of the firm of Lloyd & Wood, representing Mrs. Theresa Oelrichs and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, daughters of Senator Fair, spoke openly in confirmation of such a plan in Judge Trout's department of the Superior Court last week, and Charles J. Heggerty of the firm of Knight & Heggerty, attorneys for Charles L. Fair, only surviving son of James G. Fair, made an equally succinct statement to this effect yesterday.

"It would be merely a business proposition, that would meet with the approval of any sensible person, to end the litigation as soon as possible," said Mr. Heggerty. "Of course, no one can tell what the decision of the Supreme Court will be, but we have presented our reasons for thinking that the trust clause ought to be annulled. Now, if our argument is accepted as sound and the trust clause is knocked out by the affirmation of Judge Slack's decision, the entire estate will pass to the heirs at law, the children of Senator Fair. That would greatly simplify matters in the courts, for the trustees would no longer be entitled to bear the burden of the litigation, and those having claims against the estate could deal directly with the heirs. The position that the children of Senator Fair would take may be readily conjectured. They would be willing to terminate the controversy with all their opponents. I do not wish in any way to anticipate the result of any judicial decision in the matter, but since the direct question is put to me, I will say frankly that if the claim of Mrs. Craven were the only obstacle that stood in the way of our client coming into possession of his inheritance, we undoubtedly would recommend some kind of a settlement. We might not advise a compromise for any large sum, but if it were possible to reach an agreement for a reasonable amount, it would be foolish to prolong the litigation."

Mr. Heggerty illustrated his meaning by adding: "If somebody had got possession of our client's watch, or had set up a claim to it in such a way as to bring the matter before the courts, and if we believed that a proper settlement and recovery of the watch could be obtained by arbitration with less delay and less expense than by fighting it out in the courts, we would deem it our duty to advise a compromise. That is the way in which we feel concerning Mrs. Craven. Her claim is before the courts in a way that gives her an opportunity to be heard, and though we consider her claims invalid, yet she might harass the children of Senator Fair for a long time. So far as our client is concerned, we would consider it wise to listen to any suggestion of a settlement that might be offered, and if an agreement could be reached to wind up the matter and end the dispute as soon as possible. It is a recognized principle that it is sometimes the right thing for a litigant to buy his peace even though he may not admit that his adversary is right."

Mr. Heggerty's avowal of his sentiment concerning the advice he would give his client in the event of the trust clause being annulled, renews interest in the remarks of Mr. Lloyd, who asked Judge Trout for a postponement of a trial of Mrs. Craven-Fair's suit for family allowance on the ground that an understanding might be reached which possibly would obviate the necessity of irksome court proceedings. He told the Court that a decision in regard to the trust clause in the Fair will is expected soon. It would be improvident, he thought, to take up Mrs. Craven-Fair's case at this time, because, while the fight was in progress, a decision might be handed down by the Supreme Court that might change the legal aspect of the situation, and possibly might make further proceedings in this direction unnecessary.

Attorney Lafe Pence of the law firm of Pence & Pence, attorneys for Mrs. Craven-Fair, at that time said that he was not willing to have a continuance granted on the strength of what might, would or could happen. His client was ready for trial, and objected to further delay.

Judge Trout said that his time would be occupied for the next fortnight, and he therefore put over the trial until Monday, February 12th.

After the adjournment of court, Mr. Lloyd explained that he and his associates, representing the two daughters, had argued to the Supreme Court that former Judge Slack's decision, declaring the trust clause invalid, ought to be sustained. If this view should prevail in the Supreme Court it would put the entire estate in the hands of the heirs and would greatly minimize the legal complications and make easy any steps the heirs might see fit to take in the settlement of the litigation now pending.

Mr. Lloyd was asked if this was an intimation that the children of Senator Fair would be willing to compromise with Mrs. Craven-Fair, or would recognize her claim to the Lick House property under the so-called pencil deeds, or in regard to a family allowance as Senator Fair's widow.

To this Mr. Lloyd responded that he did not intend to intimate anything, as he did not know what his clients would do, even if the decision comes their way; but that it would change the status of the litigation in many important particulars, he said, was apparent to all.

Lafe Pence was asked for his views of the situation, and said:

"If in the beginning of the litigation Mrs. Fair had been allowed without contest to take what Senator Fair gave her she would have been content. Now that the children of Senator Fair have placed the estate in such shape, that the annulment of the trust clause will result in declaring the estate to be in a condition of intestacy, Mrs. Fair will maintain her position as the widow of Senator Fair and will ask for one-third of the estate—no more, no less."

"Mrs. Fair will not ask for any part of the two-thirds that the law says ought to go to the children of Senator Fair," remarked Charles Pence. "She will not seek to deprive them of any part of their share of the property."

It is apparent that the lawyers representing the children of Senator Fair do not so seriously consider the claims of Mrs. Craven-Fair, as she is called in the record, Mrs. Craven as the lawyers opposed to her call her, or Mrs. Fair as her own attorneys call her. They regard her deeds to the real estate as entirely futile, and express a willingness to meet her for the purpose of testing the validity of her marriage as soon as the deck is cleared for action by the coming decision of the Supreme Court touching the trust clause.

The estate is said to have increased in value under the management of the trustees, and as none of the heirs have been able to draw any money because of the litigation, the accumulations have been piled up in bank or have been invested in real estate. Among the suits filed by the trustees is one claiming the valuable real estate at North Beach.

Pence & Pence have given notice that they will not consent to any further continuances of the trial which involves the claim of Mrs. Craven-Fair for family allowance.

"That case has been peremptorily set for February 12th," said Mr. Pence, "and we shall insist on having it go on at that time, whether there is a decision by the Supreme Court on the trust clause or not. In that trial the validity of Mrs. Fair's claim to be the widow of Senator Fair will be tried on its merits, and she will abide by the result of that trial."

MRS. NETTIE CRAVEN-FAIR.

CONFLICT OVER A CHECK.

Allegation That Hudson's Name on It Was Forged.

The answer of A. F. Booker in the suit brought against him by M. A. Frank to secure payment of a check for $[illegible] was filed yesterday in the Superior Court. Booker said that the check, which was drawn on the Nevada Bank on November 25, 189[illegible], was made at Willows, Glenn county, and was made payable to J. P. Hudson. He alleged that Hudson lost the check and payment of it was then stopped. On January 16, 18[illegible], Hudson assigned his ownership of the check to another [illegible]. [illegible] stated in his complaint that the check was indorsed by Hudson and delivered by him to E. H. [illegible], who transferred it to F. E. Ryan, and Ryan turned it over to Frank. Booker avers in his answer that Hudson did not indorse the check and that the indorsement is a forgery.

900.

WANTED MONEY OR WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Susan Tevis Threatened in Some Blackmailing Letters.

KYTKA EXAMINES THE WRITING

Expert Declares Eaton's Penmanship Identical With That of Criminal Missives.

[illegible] threatening letter [illegible] to Mrs. [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible]. The writer [illegible] the name [illegible] and demanded [illegible] who would appear [illegible]. The penalty for failure to pay [illegible] death. Mrs. Tevis was ill and the letter was not [illegible].

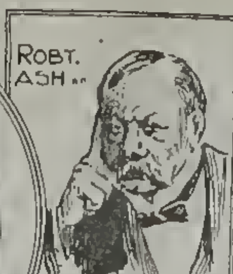
As no attention was paid to the first letter a second one [illegible]. It repeated the threat of death and [illegible] that failure to comply with the request would mean [illegible].

A few days after a third letter [illegible] upon Dr. H. Tevis [illegible] Tevis took [illegible] a [illegible] Dr. Tevis submitted to the detective [illegible] letters [illegible] and [illegible] from Charles Man[illegible] [illegible] a resemblance to that of the anonymous communications that Eaton was [illegible].

I [illegible] Eaton [illegible] last night and admitted that the letters [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] Mrs. Tevis [illegible] about [illegible] were [illegible].

Eaton's letters [illegible] were submitted to expert Theodore Kytka for analysis. After careful study for ten days he pronounced the threatening letters the disguised handwriting of Eaton, and so reported to the police. He said the case was beyond dispute, the [illegible] the [illegible] all the data submitted [illegible] there has been an arrest and probably there will be none.

RIPPEY SAID SHE WAS JAMES FAIR'S CHILD



LITTLE Charlotte B. Gregory ceased drawing pictures of the bailiff and listened with breathless interest yesterday morning when Attorney Robert Ash took the stand in Judge Troutt's court and said that Wesley C. Rippey told him that he could prove that James G. Fair Jr. was the father of the little girl. This evidence occasioned the first surprise during the trial of the contest instituted by Robert Ash of the will of the late Mrs. Catherine E. Gregory, who died recently, leaving an estate valued at $30,000. Mrs. Gregory was little Charlotte's foster mother, and by the terms of a will executed December 10, 1896, she devised her entire estate to the child, subject, however, to a life estate vested in Mrs. Martha Munson, proponent of the will, in whose care the deceased placed the child just prior to her death. This will, being of later date, defeated the purpose of a testament made by Mrs. Gregory March 22, 1892, in which she devised one-half of her estate to Ash, the contestant.

Ash testified that the later will was written by Wesley C. Rippey, the old man who shot John W. Mackay in Lick alley some years ago, and was not signed by Mrs. Gregory. Ash said that Rippey was a warm friend of Mrs. Munson and often told Mrs. Gregory that if the will was made to suit him matters would be all right as he could prove that the child was the daughter of young Jim Fair and that the latter's father had promised to pay $100,000 to keep the matter a secret and to protect the memory of his son.

Notwithstanding the statement alleged to have been made by Rippey, who is now dead, the parentage of the child will forever remain a secret. If Rippey had proofs they died with him, as did Mrs. Gregory's knowledge of little Charlotte's kin. The child is evidently fond of Mrs. Munson and unconcerned over the prominent place she occupies in the litigation.

After Ash had retired from the stand Mrs. Munson was called by the defense. She acknowledged that Rippey wrote the will, as alleged by the defense, but said that it was at Mrs. Gregory's suggestion.

"Mrs. Gregory did not want Ash to know that she had made another will," said Mrs. Munson, "but she felt that she had done considerable for him during her life, having purchased him several suits of clothes and assisted him in many other ways. She was anxious that her child should have the entire estate and knew that I would care for her, so she got Rippey to write the will, which was not published until after her death. The hearing of the case will go on next Monday.

WORRIED OVER A NAME ON A HOTEL REGISTER

LOUNGERS IN THE CORRIDORS CRITICIZE A SIGNATURE.

The question which is agitating the loungers in the corridors of the Palace Hotel is whether or not pre-emption of a name gives the pre-emptor a legal right to assume it after a certain time has elapsed without her right having been challenged.

This is a rather momentous question, and one involving more than is usually attached to the discussions that one hears around a hotel desk. It has had its origin in a name that has recently appeared on the hotel register, put there by one whom the courts of this State have declared has no right to it—one to whom others of the same name have offered many thousands of dollars if she would but forego the enjoyment of dragging it through the legal mire of a will contest.

The name on the register is "Mrs. N. C. Fair," and the woman who put it there is Mrs. Nettie Craven of legal memory.

Mrs. Craven returned to this city a few days ago to be present at the opening of the Fair will contest, which again appears on the calendar for Wednesday next. She is accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Koehler, formerly of the Columbia, whom she has been visiting in St. Louis.

Mrs. Koehler signs herself Mrs. Koehler, and the loungers find nothing to complain of. She has a right to the name, and it goes. But with her mother it is different. Mrs. Craven has never been able to establish her right to the cognomen of the dead millionaire. In fact the attempt she made to show that she was the spouse of the departed Senator failed most signally.

This fact seems to worry her but little. She uses the name just the same and with a freedom and abandon that would make it appear she had been accustomed to it for many a long year. It goes on all her orders, it is to be found at the bottom of every epistle she writes and it is used when she is addressed by her intimates. And all this notwithstanding the lesson she received when her attorneys were forced to erase it from the office door in the Parrott building.

This is what worries the loungers in the corridors of the big hostelry. Most of them are monreyed men and they shiver whenever they consider the possibilities that may be in store for them when numerous ladies of their acquaintance get on to the way the Fair name is handed out. If this is done for a mere bagatelle of $10,000,000 what will happen to them with their hoard of wealth? It is too much. They protest. Their names, for the most part, are anything but fair, but that makes no difference. They are worried over the visions of future trouble that the signature on the register has conjured up before their fevered imaginations and they wish to have the matter sifted to the bottom.

AWAITING A DECISION IN THE FAIR WILL CASE.

Attorney Reuben H. Lloyd Not Willing to Fight Mrs. Craven-Fair Until the Trust Is Settled.

Attorney Reuben H. Lloyd surprised the lawyers interested in the James G. Fair estate litigation by announcing, in Judge Troutt's court yesterday, that if the California Supreme Court should decide the trust clause of the Fair will to be invalid, as contended by his heirs, that decision might lead to a speedy settlement of many points now disputed in the courts, and he therefore asked for a postponement of two weeks in the trial of Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair's claim for a family allowance.

Mr. Lloyd is attorney for Mrs. Theresa Oelrichs and Mrs. Virginia Vanderbilt, daughters of Senator Fair, and explained that a decision in regard to the trust clause in the Fair will is expected soon. It would be unwise, he thought, to take up Mrs. Craven-Fair's case at this time, because, while the fight was in progress a decision might be handed down by the Supreme Court that might change the legal aspect of the situation, and possibly might make further proceedings in this direction unnecessary.

Attorney Lafe Pence, of the law firm of Pence & Pence, attorneys for Mrs. Craven-Fair, was not willing to have a continuance granted on the strength of what might, would or could happen. His client was ready for trial, and objected to further delay.

Judge Troutt explained that his time will be occupied for the next fortnight, and he therefore put over the trial until Monday, February 12th.

After the adjournment of court Mr. Lloyd explained that he and his associates, representing the two daughters, had argued to the Supreme Court that former Judge Slack's decision, declaring the trust clause invalid, ought to be sustained. If this view should prevail in the Supreme Court it would put the entire estate in the hands of the heirs, and would greatly simplify any steps they might see fit to take in the settlement of the litigation now pending.

Mr. Lloyd was asked if this was an intimation that the children of Senator Fair would be willing to compromise with Mrs. Craven-Fair, or would recognize her claim to the Lick House property under the so-called pencil deeds, or in regard to a family allowance as Senator Fair's widow.

To this Mr. Lloyd responded that he did not intend to intimate anything, as he did not know what his clients would do, even if the decision came their way, but that it would change the status of the litigation in many important particulars.

Mr. Pence said he didn't know what the attorneys for the children of Senator Fair expected to gain by delay, unless that, possibly, they hoped to obtain, by compromise, part of the Lick House property, to which his client holds a deed.

FAIR-CRAVEN CASE

Is Being Argued by Heavy-Weight Attorneys in the Supreme Court Today.

There was a large attendance in Department No. 1 of the Supreme Court this morning, Justices Harrison, Garoutte and Van Dyke sitting to hear the oral argument of a great array of heavy-weight legal talent in the Fair-Craven case.

The title of the action at bar is James S. Angus and others, executors of the will of the late James G. Fair, plaintiffs and respondents, against Nettie R. Craven et al., defendants and appellants; Virginia Fair, intervenor and respondent.

The appeal is the one prosecuted by Mrs. Nettie Craven, i. e. Mrs. Nettie Craven-Fair, against the judgment in the Superior Court, rendered by Judge Charles W. Slack in November, 1897.

Valuable real estate in this city is affected by the action, and the long wrangles between Mrs. Craven and the Fair estate give the proceedings an especial flavor of interest.

The appellant is represented by the following noted lawyers: H. M. Holmes, W. W. Foote, J. H. Dickinson, Dennell, Oatman & Delmas and A. Ruef. Counsel for respondents are Garret W. McEnerney, Bishop & Wheeler, Lloyd & Wood, Wilson & Wilson, Knight & Heggerty, Garber, Boalt & Bishop. Many of these attorneys were present when the case was called.

Mrs. Craven and her daughter and several friends were interested spectators during the session of the court.

In brief, the history of the action is as follows:

James G. Fair died in 1894 during the month of December, leaving an estate consisting of property, both real and personal, in various parts of the State. The executors claimed and took possession of the estate under the will. Mrs. Craven claimed an adverse interest in the estate in three particular parcels of real estate, situated respectively at the southwest corner of Pine and Sansome streets, on the south line of Pine street, west from the corner with Sansome, and the intersection of Mission and Eleventh streets.

The executors, under Section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, brought suit to determine said adverse claim. Mrs. Craven filed an answer, setting forth her claim, and also a cross-complaint in ejectment and restitution.

In her cross-complaint she set up that her interest accrued by reason of the execution to her by the deceased of certain deeds. The deeds were introduced, purporting to have been acknowledged before James J. Cooney, a notary.

Virginia Fair filed a complaint in intervention, claiming that as a child of James G. Fair she was the owner of a one-third interest in said property.

Judge Slack's findings were to the effect that the deeds offered and recorded by Mrs. Craven were false, and that Fair had not acknowledged them. He set aside her claim entirely in his decree.

Upon this judgment, as stated, the appeal is taken.

Attorney Delmas opened the argument for appellant this morning, and had not finished when the noon recess was taken. The court continued with the hearing at 2 P. M.

Attorney McEnerney and several other heavy-weights will take part in the argument.

FORGED EMPLOYER'S NAME.

Eric Erickson, a Wood Chopper, Was Skillful With a Pen.

SAN RAFAEL, January 21.—Carson canyon, a gulch that has furnished half a dozen murder mysteries within as many years, is again brought to public notice by a forger, who, in the guise of a woodchopper, worked himself into the good graces of John Enos, the proprietor of the camp. The man who gave his name as Eric Erickson, arrived at the woodchoppers' camp in the early part of November, working about a month, when he returned to San Francisco. On December 29th he turned up in San Rafael with an order on [illegible] for $40, signed by John Enos.

Salvador Pacheco, a partner in the firm, refused to cash the check until Erickson was identified. Erickson knew that Enos has a daughter living here, and it took him but a short time to learn of her whereabouts and by clever deception to induce her to make the necessary identification. Enos and Pacheco were apprised of the forgery for the first time yesterday when making their monthly settlement. Enos pronounced the order a forgery and refused to pay it. The order is written in Erickson's own hand, the signature alone being forged.

Sheriff Taylor was notified and immediately set to work to capture the offender. Since the crime was committed [illegible], another woodchopper at the camp, has received a letter from Erickson in which his address is given as [illegible] street. The San Francisco police authorities have been furnished with his description and requested to learn if he still lives there. Erickson, while at the camp, represented himself as a returned veteran of the Spanish war.

EXPERT'S REPORT ON THE DELANOY LETTERS

ALAMEDA, Jan. 28.—The report of a writing expert, who has been employed determining the authorship of the several anonymous communications received by F. N. Delanoy, will be given out for publication Monday. What the nature of its contents are none but interested parties know, but it is said that the direct accusations made against George W. Emmons by Delanoy are not sustained by the report.

The expert has been at work in the interest of Delanoy, E. K. Taylor, his attorney, and Emmons and Charles E. Naylor, his attorney. The work has been confined to the comparison of the handwriting in an anonymous letter received by Delanoy's wife ten years ago and the famous "Alameda Highbinder Society" postal card.

It was on the similarity between the writing on these two missives that Delanoy based his attack by innuendo on Emmons. He declared them to have been written by the same person and that they compared strikingly with Emmons' signature. He traced a connection between the several typewritten letters he received and Emmons by showing that the paper they are written on is the kind usually enwrapping newspaper blank, which is hauled by the drayage firm of which Emmons is a member.

Delanoy's first experience with anonymous letters was ten years ago. His wife received one attacking the character of her husband. Delanoy's next similar experience was January 1. A typewritten missive warned him to leave town under pain of death for disobedience. For a period after that he received a letter daily. The final missive came in the form of a postal card by "Tong No. 1, Alameda Highbinder Society," the members of which disavow it.

The expert, aside from clearing Emmons of any suspicion in the matter, does not seem to have done much toward clearing up the mystery.

FORGERY CHARGED.

John Lapique Must Answer to the Superior Court.

John Lapique was held to answer to the Superior Court yesterday by Police Judge Mogan on the charge of forgery.

Lapique is alleged to have forged the name of Phil Maysonnave to a note for $800, made payable to a Louise Lagarde. This note he afterward sold to a local bank for $400. A short time after the maturity of the note he entered suit in Judge Hebbard's court for the recovery of the amount. The case was thrown out of court by Judge Hebbard, who announced that in his opinion the note was a forgery, and suggested that Maysonnave have him arrested on that charge. Lapique forestalled matters by swearing out a warrant before Judge Treadwell for Maysonnave's arrest for perjury. The case was dismissed when it came up for trial. Maysonnave retaliated by causing Lapique's arrest on the forgery charge. Lapique claims to be a lawyer, and at a former trial on a similar charge defended himself.

The case was tried before Judge Belcher. Lapique was convicted and sentenced to twelve years in San Quentin. Through a technical flaw in the proceedings the decision of Judge Belcher was overruled and Lapique was set at liberty.

EXPERTS MAY DIFFER.

Prisoner Lapique Asks for a High-Priced Witness on His Behalf.

Attorney A. P. Van Duzer has announced to Judge Dunne of the Superior Court that he will insist on having the State pay the fee for an expert in handwriting called to testify on behalf of John Lapique, charged with forging the name of Philip Maysonnave to a note for $800 purporting to have been made in favor of Louise Lagarde.

Theodore Kytka was introduced as a witness for the prosecution and swore that he believed the signature of Maysonnave to be spurious. Lapique was holder of the note and sponsor for its genuineness. He sued to collect the amount and Judge Hebbard gave judgment against him. The woman, Lagarde, has disappeared. Maysonnave says she was without funds and denies that he had any business transactions with her.

When it was disclosed that Mr. Kytka was to testify against Lapique, his fee being paid by the State, a demand was made by Mr. Van Duzer for the summoning of expert Carl Eisenschimmel, who, Mr. Van Duzer said, would testify that the signature to the note is genuine. He continued:

"Your Honor, if the attorneys for the prosecution claim the right to call an expert in handwriting in an effort to prove that the defendant forged this note, we shall ask that the State employ an expert who may testify on behalf of the accused."

"Has this Court authority to grant such a request?" asked Judge Dunne, evidently surprised.

"I take it for granted that the State, which pays the salaries of the Judge and the officers of the court in order to try this man, and then pays the fee of an expert witness who testifies against the accused, ought to pay the fee of at least one other expert who will testify on behalf of the defendant and thus afford an equal opportunity for the prisoner, who is without funds, to present this phase of his defense," replied Mr. Van Duzer.

The Judge turned to Deputy District Attorney Greany, who said he never heard of such a proposition before.

Judge Dunne said he would hear argument on the point to-day. He did not understand that his authority extended that far, but his desire was to have the jury receive all possible light on the subject, and if Mr. Van Duzer could support his demand by legal precedents or decisions the expert for the defendant would be called.

Mar 7-1900

LAPIGNE CONVICTED.

Lawyers Van Duzer and Bergerot Engaged in an Altercation.

John Lapigne was convicted of forgery by a jury in Judge Dunne's department of the Superior Court yesterday. Just before the adjournment of court for the noon recess Attorney A. P. Van Duzer, counsel for the defendant, and P. A. Bergerot, special counsel for the prosecution, engaged in a wordy altercation. Mr. Van Duzer charged that Mr. Bergerot had gone outside the record and had stated untruths in his argument.

"I demand that he be required to come back this afternoon so that he may hear me when I denounce him as he deserves," said Mr. Van Duzer.

"If it were not for your gray hairs I'd knock your block off," said Mr. Bergerot.

George Van Duzer, a son of the defendant's attorney, stepped in and said: "I have no gray hairs, so you may try to—"

"Sit down," said Judge Dunne, and there was a sudden cessation of hostilities.

After adjournment the quarrel was resumed, during which Van Duzer said to Bergerot: "I will brand you as a coward if you do not return to hear me burn you up."

In his reply Van Duzer denounced Bergerot, but the latter did not return to hear the expounding of his unworth.

The passing of sentence on Lapigne is set for next Saturday.

Et

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY

MRS. BROOME AND HER FENCE AGAIN IN EVIDENCE.

End of the Trouble Scarcely in Sight—Sensation Sprung in the Storke Case—Charged With Passing Bad Coin.

SANTA BARBARA, June 8.—[Regular Correspondence.] Mrs. Frances Broome, who had so much trouble some weeks ago with the Marshal of this city, who tore down a hedge and fence at a point where the city claimed that her property projected in to the street, had another scene with the same officer at 11 o'clock this morning. At 10 o'clock some one notified the Marshal that Mrs. Broome had workmen putting back her fence on the same old line, and he at once consulted with the Mayor and City Attorney as to what course to pursue. It was finally decided that this fence, like the old hedge, constituted an obstruction to the street, and a gang of fifteen men was sent to tear it down. Upon reaching the spot the Marshal found Mrs. Broome overseeing the work on the fence, and when the first board was torn down she demanded of the Marshal under what authority he did the work. "You have no right here on my property," she said. "You are acting unlawfully and outrageously, and you know what you do is unlawful. The fence is upon my property and you have not shown me any authority for taking it down. It is on the proper line."

The Marshal showed his star as authority, and explained that he was working under orders from the Mayor and City Attorney.

"Well," she replied, "the Mayor and Council of this city are all conspiring together in acting in an unlawful way. They know they are wrong. I will put that fence up again as soon as you get it down, and I will put it up as often as you take it down. I know my rights. It is as unlawful for you to take my fence down as it was for them to enter Mrs. Storke's room while she was decoyed away from it by the Sheriff of this county. No matter how wicked she may be, she has her legal rights."

As the Marshal and his men went away she instructed her workmen to put the fence up again this afternoon. When asked what her course would be she said that the city was responsible for what had been done, and would be all the more responsible every time the fence was torn down. She said she had secured counsel in the suit for resisting an officer, now pending against her, and hinted that she would fight the case to the bitter end.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon a warrant was served upon Mrs. Broome arresting her under a city ordinance on a charge of obstructing the streets. She went before the Police Court once more and pleaded not guilty. At her request the trial, jury waived, will take place on the 20th inst. The penalty fixed under the ordinance is a fine of from $5 to $15, or imprisonment for ten days, or both. She said in the courtroom that it seemed very easy for the officers to arrest a woman who was standing up for her rights. The former case will probably be dismissed, but it is now thought that Mrs. Broome will be prosecuted to the limit. She has threatened to bring the case to the attention of the British government. She struck the Marshal with a pickax, and her hired man drew a gun when the officer went to tear away the hedge.

YDA ADDIS STORKE CASE.

A sensation was sprung by the prosecution in the Yda Addis Storke case. Mrs. Mattie Gross, an old friend of the defendant, testified that Mrs. Storke asked her to copy anonymous letters, saying that she could not disguise her hand but an expert could detect it, also that the defendant declared to the witness that she intended giving several people a bad scare, and hoped to live long enough to accomplish the ruin of Dr. Winchester and drive him from town. The evidence was not shaken by the cross-examination. Expert Kytka is pointing out many characteristics in common in the disputed and admitted writing. He will finish his direct testimony to-morrow.

MRS. CRAVEN'S DEPOSITION.

Cannot Be Found in County Clerk's Office.

Pence & Pence, attorneys for Mrs. Nettie R. Craven in her litigation to secure part of the estate of James G. Fair, learned, on applying at the County Clerk's office for a deposition of Mrs. Craven, that it was missing. The deposition was taken in 1896 and was filed when County Clerk Curry was in charge of the office. In the box where the deposition should have been was a card on which was written "See Harry Piper." Piper was Curry's chief deputy. The deposition was made at the time that Mrs. Craven brought suit on the two deeds for city property which she said Fair had given her. County Clerk Deane conducted a thorough search for the document yesterday, but it could not be found. Piper, when questioned, stated that the deposition had been replaced in the box when he last saw it. Former Assistant District Attorney Hosmer had it during the prosecution of Notary Cooney for alleged perjury in connection with the deeds, but he said that he gave it back to Piper. The loss is not serious as the attorneys supplied to Mrs. Craven have a certified copy of the deposition. County Clerk Deane and his deputies are not to blame for the loss.

Could Not Read the Will.

OAKLAND, Feb 22.—Public Administrator Hawes has applied for letters of administration upon the will of Mrs. Jane A. Hadger, the widow of Captain Hadger, who died a few days ago. The will is a mere scrawl upon a sheet of notepaper, and is so badly written as to be undecipherable. The will seems to be an effort to leave her property to her nurse, while she has several nephews and nieces who will claim her estate.

NEWHOUSE DISCHARGED.

Judge Dunne Dismissed the Forgery Accusation.

Superior Judge Dunne yesterday discharged George Newhouse, who had been held to answer for forgery and who was brought into the Superior Court on a writ of habeas corpus. He was arrested on complaint of E. A. Willets, with whom Newhouse has had litigation over mining transactions. The charge against Newhouse was that in 1896, while acting for Willets, he made out a bill that showed he had paid to the Fulton Engineering and Shipbuilding Works $[illegible] for pipe, and that he drew that amount from Willets, while in fact the purchase and payment were fictitious. On the habeas corpus proceeding Daniel W. McTheeney, Newhouse's attorney, raised points against the complaint and against the sufficiency of the testimony. Judge Dunne sustained him on all the grounds that he advanced. The Judge said that the essential elements of forgery are a false making of some instrument, a fraudulent intent and the probability that the writing, if genuine, would injure another. There was nothing to demonstrate that Willets would be injured if the writing in question were genuine. Even without any legal objection to the complaint Judge Dunne said the testimony taken in the Police Court was not sufficient to warrant Newhouse's detention, as it was not shown that he was the forger. The Judge remarked that the correct charge would be obtaining money by false pretenses.

MAY COMPROMISE.

The Fair-Craven Litigation May Soon Come to a Peaceful Issue.

Jan 10

Both sides in the present Craven-Fair litigation over the estate of the late James Fair are anxiously awaiting the decision of the Supreme Court as to whether or not the trust clause in the Fair will may be considered invalid. Should the trust clause be broken, matters will be greatly simplified for all parties concerned, as the property may be distributed among the heirs, and, if desired, a compromise may be effected with Mrs. Nettie R. Craven.

Attorney Reuben H. Lloyd, who represents Charles L. Fair, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, the Fair heirs, [illegible] to favor a compromise with Mrs. Craven. Such an arrangement, he [illegible] the matter been legally [illegible], would be the cheapest and most sensible solution of the problem. If, however, Mrs. Craven should demand an amount as great as the costs of further litigation would be, the chances are that the fight will be continued to the bitter end.

COURT NOTES.

Attorneys in the Fuller Case are Allowed Fees

OROVILLE, March 16.—In the matter of the estate of Alfred Fuller, an order has been entered allowing $3000 attorneys' fees—$1500 to Richard White and Carleton Gray and $1500 to Knight & Hagerty.

Estate Wm. Gerry—Mary Gerry has petitioned for letters of administration. The property consists of 1 share of paid up stock in the Pacific Coast Savings Society of San Francisco, which, with interest, amounts to $[illegible]. Set for hearing March 26.

Estate of W. W. and Garland W. Wright—Decree of settlement of final account of guardian entered.

DELGER HEIRS ALLEGE FORGERY

VALIDITY OF NOTE HELD BY LAMPING ATTACKED.

HANDWRITING EXPERTS ALSO DECLARE THE SIGNATURE IS NOT GENUINE.

Startling Developments in a Suit at Oakland Involving the Payment of Ten Thousand Dollars.

Oakland Branch Office of the "Chronicle," [illegible] Broadway, corner Ninth street.

OAKLAND, February 22.—It is now claimed that the purported signature of the late Frederick Delger attached to a promissory note for $10,000, made in favor of James J. Lamping, who for many years was the late multi-millionaire's confidential agent, is a forgery. Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, says the alleged signature bears no similarity in any respect to the genuine signature of Delger. Kytka was engaged two days in expertising the signature to the note, and declares that he had no trouble in discovering that it was a forgery. It is, he states, one of the plainest cases of forgery that has ever come under his observation. He has been directed by the Court to take a six-foot enlarged photograph of the note, which may be used as evidence in subsequent proceedings.

Delger's son, E. L. Delger, laughed when shown the Lamping note and the alleged signature of his father. He said the elder Delger could not have written the name as it appeared on the note. Expert Heurock also has declared the writing to be a forgery.

Those interested in the affair absolutely refuse to discuss it. H. H. Trowbridge, one of the heirs, declared tonight that he had nothing to say about the forgery charge, and referred the questioner to George D. Metcalf, attorney for the estate. Metcalf in turn declared that he would neither affirm nor deny the accusation. "Any information that is to be given out on that subject," said he, "will have to come from some one beside myself." When questioned as to who that person was he said he did not know.

James J. Lamping, the holder of the note, was not inclined to answer questions. "I [illegible] my case tried in the courts," said he, "and not in the newspapers. I am not surprised, however, that an attempt should be made to declare the signature to the note a forgery. The Delger heirs, of course, will never pay it if they can get out of it. No, I had not heard of the forgery charge until you mentioned it to me."

William [illegible] Davis, attorney for Lamping, said: "We stand on the facts and [illegible] [illegible], that Mr. Delger did sign the note and that Mr. Lamping [illegible] [illegible] to it. [illegible] that we will make our fight. I know nothing whatever [illegible] [illegible]."

Lamping [illegible] [illegible] expressed the belief that he would collect his note in spite of the attempt of the Delger [illegible] [illegible]. They, however, have [illegible] confident that they [illegible] [illegible] the note was not a just debt. Lamping's [illegible] was filed February [illegible], but since that time the [illegible] have been allowed the days' [illegible] [illegible] which to answer.

NEW CHARGES OF WRITING ANONYMOUS LETTERS ARE MADE BY MRS. YDA STORKE

Attorney Grant Jackson, Accused by Mrs. Storke.

SANTA BARBARA, June 13.—The defense in the Storke libel case is still carrying on the tedious cross-examination of Expert Kytka and seems to be going a long way around to get nowhere in particular. This morning things went so far that Judge Oster said he wished he could throw the Kytka blackboard out of the window.

This morning a sensation was sprung. A number of old record books from various offices in which Frank N. Gutierrez had been employed and along with them a small piece of paper, upon which appeared a few lines of writing, in another hand, were introduced in evidence.

The District Attorney at once objected but the defense stated that the paper was the work of one of the two men who would be accused by Mrs. Storke of having written the anonymous letter.

"Whose writing is this?" asked District Attorney Squiers.

"It is that of Grant Jackson," was the answer.

If a bombshell had exploded in the courtroom could not have been more surprised. Every one gasped, for Jackson is one of the best known attorneys in Santa Barbara county and has always borne an excellent reputation.

"You don't mean to say," said Judge Oster, "that Grant Jackson wrote the anonymous letters—the Martha Case letter?"

The attorney for the defense replied: "That is what we think, and we mean to produce testimony to prove what we say."

Expert Kytka was shown the paper and said he would give his reasons later for believing that the persons who wrote it was not the one who wrote the letters upon which Mrs. Storke is indicted. Expert Kytka, during the afternoon, made a thorough study of the handwriting of Attorney Jackson and visited Mr. Jackson's office, where the alleged conspirator wrote for the expert several specimens of his penmanship. Kytka watched his manner of writing very closely and had him write with both pen and pencil. The experiments seemed to satisfy Kytka that his first theory was the correct one.

Jackson takes the matter complacently. He says he knows no charge can be established against him; but on account of his family he dislikes very much having been connected with so disagreeable a case.

Grant Jackson was born in Petaluma, where Major Jackson, his father, was at one time a well-known politician. He has practiced law here for eight years and has been one of the youngest leaders in his party. He was once a prominent candidate for the office of District Attorney. In January, 1894, he met Mrs. Storke for the first time, and became, with S. E. Crow, her counsel in the divorce case of C. A. Storke vs. Yda Addis Storke. This was the hardest fought divorce case ever tried before the Superior Court of this county. As an outgrowth of their association during the trial Jackson and Mrs. Storke became friends and continued so until about a year ago, when Mrs. Storke suddenly, and with no apparent cause, cut off the friendship. At this time the fury of the city over the writing of the anonymous letters was at its height, and the name of Mrs. Storke was mentioned as their author.

Jackson, together with a number of others of Mrs. Storke's friends, persuaded her to leave for Mexico. She departed at their solicitation, but upon returning displayed great bitterness against those very persons who had induced her to leave town for her own protection, and had even gone so far in three instances as to put up $50 apiece to pay the expenses of the trip. She now claims that in getting her to leave Jackson and others betrayed her friendship and were playing in with those who were afraid of having her in Santa Barbara, getting her to leave in order to place her in a bad light before the public.

It is understood that the defense has a number of other sensations to be sprung later in the case.

BARBARENOS ON THE QUI VIVE

Are Eagerly Awaiting Mrs. Storke's Defense.

All the Town Looking for Sensations in the Remarkable Case.

(Special Dispatch to "The Examiner.")

SANTA BARBARA, June 11.—The prosecution in the Storke case was allowed to rest this afternoon when the defense got through with its cross-examination of Expert Kytka. The day was spent in going over things that have been repeated at least thirty times during the last week, and it was the opinion of many that the case would last for a month, but Senator Boyce broke off his questions at [illegible] o'clock and let Kytka go.

[illegible] [illegible] will now have his expert back to San Francisco. He has been telephoning him to return for the last week, as there are several cases upon which the expert's opinions are desired.

The prosecution at once rested its case, which has been running in since May 20th. Four witnesses have testified that the handwriting of the anonymous letters is that of Mrs. Storke, and, in those [illegible], the District Attorney produced two witnesses who testified that Mrs. Storke had spoken bitterly of Winchester, [illegible] [illegible] that she hoped to live to accomplish his downfall. Kytka has endeavored to prove by a minute analysis of the writing and inks of the [illegible] of letters that the accused wrote the whole series of anonymous writings.

The defense now stands to prove that Frank N. Gutierrez and Attorney Grant Jackson were the men who wrote the letters, and Gutierrez will [illegible] [illegible] the witness stand to-morrow [illegible].

The people here still continue [illegible] in the case, and now that the defense has opened [illegible] [illegible] standing room will be at a premium in the courtroom.

MUST SERVE ONE YEAR

On Wednesday afternoon the Supreme Court handed down a decision upon the appeal of Mrs. Yda Addis-Stork of Santa Barbara from the judgment of conviction against her for criminal libel and a sentence of one year in prison. The judgment was affirmed, and Mrs. Addis-Stork will have to serve her time. The woman has been much before the courts. The affair which finally resulted in her conviction on a libel charge was the writing of an anonymous letter to Mrs. Emilie Thomson of Santa Barbara, making serious charges against Dr. E. B. Winchester. Subsequently she was accused of attempting to murder Attorney Grant Jackson while the latter was asleep. Many Barbarenos believe that the woman's mind was unbalanced.

HINDMAN'S WILL IS CONTESTED.

HENRY MONSON SAYS CODICIL IS SPURIOUS.

AS A LEGATEE, HE WAS DISINHERITED UNDER LAST DOCUMENT.

Other Heirs Are Protesting, and a Long and Bitter Contest by Them All Is Anticipated.

Oakland Branch Office of the "Chronicle," [illegible] Broadway, corner Ninth street.

OAKLAND, January 27.—Henry Monson, who was a legatee under the original will of the late Edmund Hindman and was subsequently disinherited by a codicil, filed voluminous papers in a contest to-day and will oppose the probating of the will and its two alleged codicils.

Edmund Hindman was a capitalist who left an estate which has been appraised at $135,000. He never married and left no direct heirs. His death occurred in this city on the 10th day of last January. A will executed by him February 9, 1882, was presented for probate, together with a codicil dated April 20, 1885, and a second codicil dated June 16, 1893.

In the original will a large legacy was left to the mother of Henry Monson. By the terms of the second codicil this legacy was revoked and the entire estate was bequeathed to Mrs. Elizabeth Beach, Lucius Bierce Jr. and Miss Lottie Clark, all residing in Eastern States.

It is against the second codicil that Henry Monson's contest is directed. His contention is that it is bogus and that the capitalist was old, sick and infirm when it is pretended to have been executed.

Charles Camden, Isaac T. Milliken and Edward C. Williams were appointed executors of Hindman's will on January 30th last year. The executors have been cited to appear in court on April 9th and respond to Henry Monson's contest.

Other heirs who were similarly cut off from legacies by the codicil of June 16, 1893, have contests pending in court, and a long and bitter controversy between them and the three legatees named in that codicil is anticipated.

Included in Hindman's estate is a valuable three-story brick business block on Eighth street, near Washington, in this city. He also left stocks and bonds.

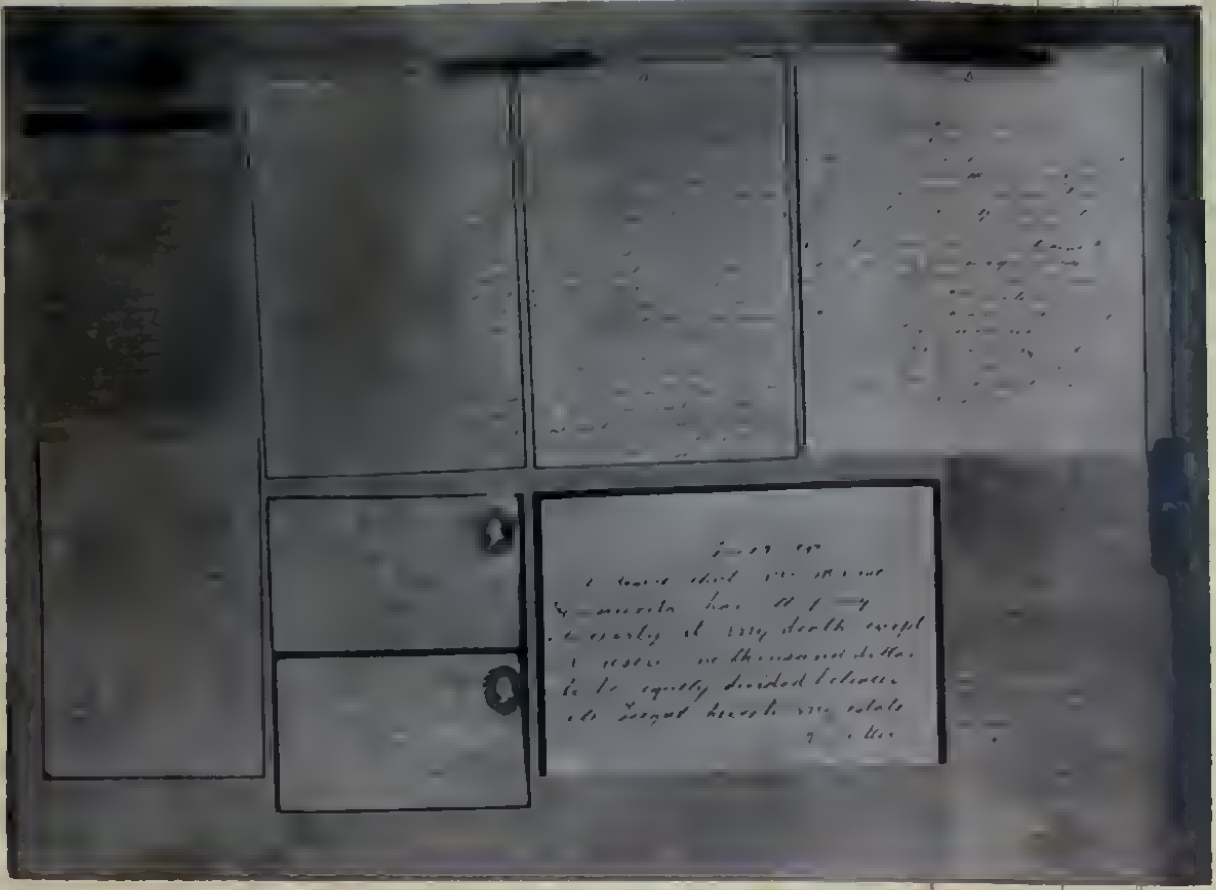
SAYS MRS. HOUSEWORTH WROTE FULLER WILL.

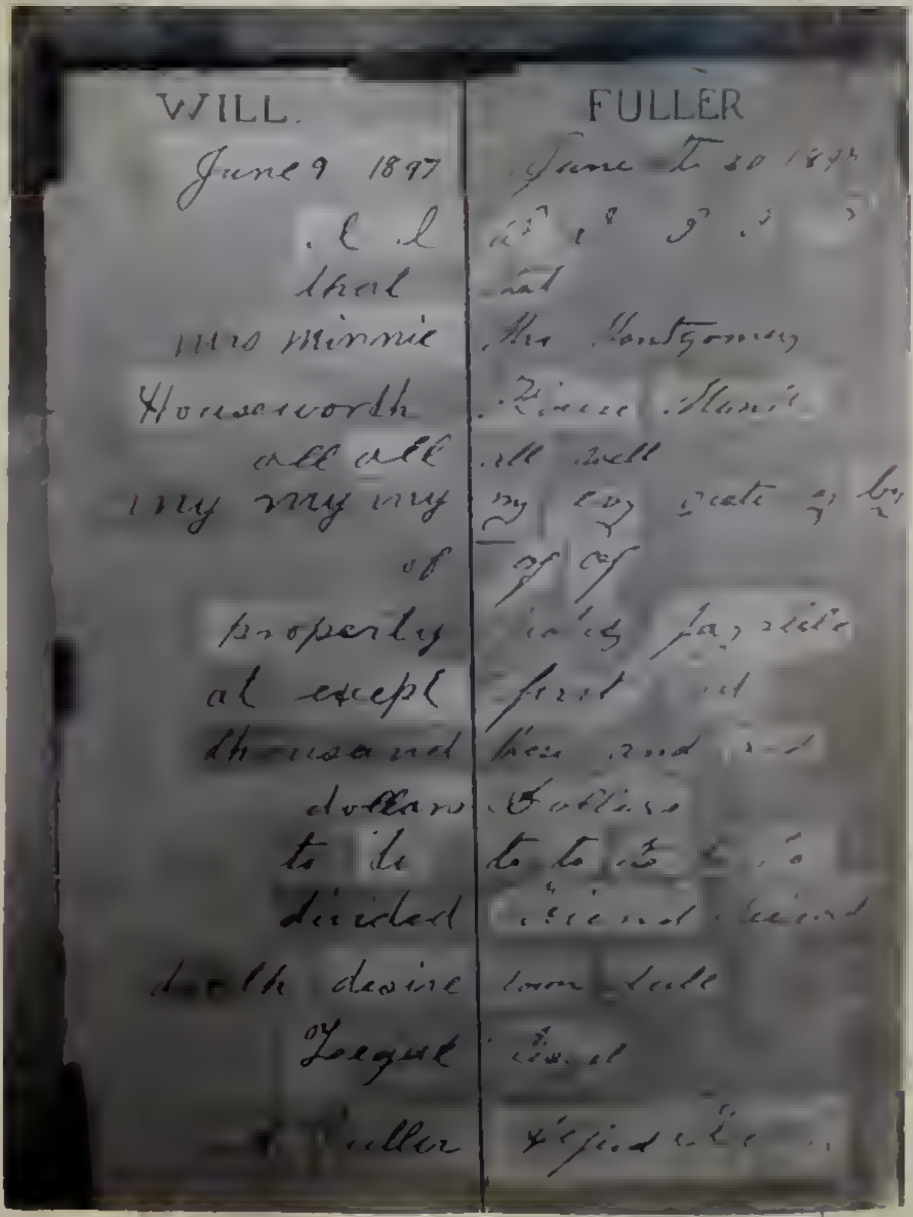
Expert Kytka Testifies in the Dudley Case—Other Strong Evidence Against the Woman.

OROVILLE, February 3.—The testimony in the Dudley case to-day was continued with Expert Kytka on the stand, who gave it as his opinion that Mrs. Houseworth wrote the Fuller will. J. B. Swearingen was a very strong witness for the prosecution. He stated that Mrs. Houseworth called him into the Hallam House in Chico and asked him to go up to her room. She told him Alfred Fuller left a will unsigned, but giving her his property. She said Dr. Dudley would sign the will as one witness if she could get some other man to sign for the second witness. He at first refused, but later told her he would see her again about it. She offered him $200 to sign, said she was to give Dr. Dudley that amount and she would not think of offering him less than she had offered the doctor.

Witness stated she met him or asked him to see her twice and then when he still refused she met him again and told him that it did not matter, now that she had got John Horner to sign the will. In one of these conversations she told him that she had the will in San Francisco, that she got an envelope, went into a corner grocery store in that city, had a man there direct it to Oroville and then she brought it to Chico. Watching the Postoffice she selected a time when no one would see her and then dropped it into the office. Then she went to Sacramento.

On his former testimony Swearingen had stated that he had at one time made Mrs. Houseworth improper proposals. He declared to-day that he did not understand the questions and stated most positively that he had done nothing of the kind. He had never been ordered from her room, had never asked her to leave her room unlocked that he might visit her, and that he had never promised her that he would sign the will under any circumstances.





WILL.
FULLER
June 9 1897
that Mrs Minnie Houseworth
all all my my my of property at except thousand dollars to be divided both desire
Legget
Fuller

TWELVE YEARS IN PRISON IS DR. RODLEY'S SENTENCE.

OROVILLE, February 9.—Dr. J. Ellis Rodley was to-day sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment for perjury in connection with the will of the late Alfred Fuller. His counsel, George D. Collins, asked for a new trial, which was refused. He then gave notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court. He served notice of the arrest of judgment on the Sheriff, so the prisoner will not be taken to San Quentin.

Rodley asked a trial at once on the charge of forgery. The District Attorney asked that this charge against him be dismissed, which was done.

DR. RODLEY IS A PERJURER

Takes the Jury Only Fifteen Minutes to Reach the Verdict.

APPARENTLY EXPECTED IT

Counsel Waives Time for Passing Sentence and He Will Know His Fate This Morning.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

OROVILLE, February 8.—The arguments of counsel in the case of the People vs. Rodley were concluded to-day, and the case went to the jury at 3:10 p. m. At 3:25 the bell rang and the jury filed in. They had chosen J. M. Nelson their foreman, and he read the verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, J. Ellis Rodley, guilty as charged."

The courtroom was filled and the hallway leading to it was packed with people anxious to hear the verdict, and stillness reigned within the room as Foreman Nelson read the words that branded Dr. J. Ellis Rodley a felon. Dr. and Mrs. Rodley sat together as the verdict was read, and neither showed signs of embarrassment nor excitement. The doctor scowled savagely at the jury, but there was evidently no hope in his breast that the verdict would be otherwise, and he accepted it stoically. Mrs. Rodley also sat unmoved.

Everybody here is glad of the verdict, and citizens are heard congratulating each other upon the fact that in Butte county justice can be administered to the wealthy and influential as well as to the lowly and unknown. After the verdict had been read and the jury polled, counsel for the defense created a surprise by waiving time for sentence, and to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock was set for passing sentence.

The trial of Rodley on the forgery charge is also set for 10 a. m. to-morrow.

TWELVE YEARS FOR DR. RODLEY

San Quentin Named as His Future Home.

THE FORGERY CASE IS DISMISSED

This Was Done on Motion of District Attorney Sproul—Mrs. Housworth's Trial to Be Set on Law Day in March—Confinement Telling on Her.

OROVILLE, February 9.—This morning in the Superior Court room Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, whom twelve men have without hesitation declared to be a perjurer, heard the sentence which, despite all of the credits which he could gain, would banish him to the State Prison at San Quentin for 7½ years.

Though the defense throughout the trial tried to cast a suspicion to the effect that Judge Gray was prejudiced, and was lending aid to the prosecution, his actions throughout the entire case have shown a feeling of leniency to the prisoner.

In passing sentence this morning it was noticeable that it was a sore trial to Judge Gray to pronounce the words which would banish this man, who but a few months ago enjoyed the confidence of all his acquaintances, to the State Prison for a term of years.

Like Col. Batchelder, Judge Gray had been a friend of Dr. Rodley, and it was with no feeling of pleasure, as the defense imagined it would be, that the Judge passed sentence. In fact the duty imposed upon him was so unpleasant that there was no dwelling upon enormity of crime, but Judge Gray merely passed the sentence of 12 years in the State Prison at San Quentin.

Before sentence was passed Attorney Collins presented, on the usual statutory grounds, a motion for a new trial, which was denied. Attorney Collins then interposed a motion in arrest of judgment which was also denied.

After sentence had been passed Attorney Collins filed a notice of appeal, and pending the decision on this appeal Dr. Rodley will continue to occupy his present quarters in the County Jail.

After disposing of the case District Attorney Sproul moved to dismiss the charge of forgery, and the attorney for defendant consenting, the motion was granted.

The trial of Mrs. Minnie Housworth, who is charged with being a co-conspirator with Dr. Rodley, will be set for trial at the March law day. The long incarceration which Mrs. Housworth has undergone is telling upon her and she will undoubtedly be glad of an opportunity of settling the matter either one way or the other.

Despite the fact that Mrs. Housworth has, to all outward appearances, been as cheerful as the two men who were arrested on the same charges which are placed against her, the continued close confinement and days of anxiety through which she has passed, have left their mark, and she is not the robust appearing woman that she was on the day of her arrest.

RODLEY'S TRIAL TO BE BEFORE JUDGE GRAY

Affidavits Presented In Reply to Sworn Statements Made By Defendant.

PANEL OF JURORS CHALLENGED

Attorneys for the Prisoner Fighting Upon Technicalities—Accused Has Endured Months of Imprisonment Well

Special to the RECORD.

OROVILLE, January 23.—After several weeks of lonely confinement in the tank at the county jail, Dr. Rodley was to-day ushered into the superior courtroom to pass through a trial, upon the result of which depends only the question of whether he shall go to State prison for a term of years or again be a free man. Imprisonment is the only question. Guilty or not guilty, his life is ruined and his property must be given up to his defense. It is a fight to avoid the prison.

Notwithstanding the rumors to the contrary, Dr. Rodley is enduring the confinement in the county jail magnificently. He is in excellent health, and has not lost one of that robust appearance which he has always possessed on account of good living. He seemed cheerful as he entered the courtroom, though quite naturally embarassed on being ushered forth as a prisoner in the presence of many of his old friends. Mrs. Rodley and Mrs. F. J. Hauck were with the Doctor in court. Attorneys Geo. D. Collins of San Francisco and Guy R. Kennedy of Chico were present to appear for the defendant, and District Attorney Sproul appeared for the People.

While Dr. Rodley was represented yesterday by only Attorneys Kennedy and Collins, he will have a trio as soon as the trial gets fairly under way, as Grove L. Johnson will appear immediately after the jury has been secured.

In response to the affidavit filed by Dr. Rodley yesterday to the effect that he believes Judge Gray to be prejudiced and biased against him, and unable to give him a fair trial on account of this prejudice, two affidavits were filed this morning—one by District Attorney Sproul and the other by Judge Gray.

The affidavit filed by Sproul set forth that he has been the District Attorney of Butte county during the year past and he was thoroughly conversant with all the testimony given by the various witnesses; he also had conversed frequently with Judge Gray, regarding the unfortunate affair, and the latter at no time made any intimation regarding what the testimony of any witness was or would be; that he never in all of the conversations had with him ever expressed himself in a manner indicating any prejudice. On the other hand, Judge Gray had stated to the affiant that he viewed the case with sorrow and regret, for Dr. Rodley had been a friend of his especially in politics, and at elections he had cared well for the interests of him, (Gray). He had also stated that if the evidence as he had heard it was, is true, the case for the prosecution appeared to be a strong one. Affiant declared that Judge Gray is not prejudiced nor biased, and that he has done nothing in the preliminary proceedings to indicate prejudice, and he believes that Judge Gray will give the defendant a fair trial.

Judge Gray's affidavit was a general denial of the allegations of Rodley. He sets forth that he entertains no prejudice against the defendant, has not talked with the witnesses in this case, and that he will give the defendant a fair trial.

The affidavits settle this matter for the present and Judge Gray will try the case, as he certainly has a right to do.

It was not long after the opening of court when it became apparent that the attorneys for the defense propose to fight every step of the way. The list of seventy-five jurors was read, and then came the line-up of those who believed they possessed legitimate excuses for being dismissed. Eighteen were excused.

Attorney Collins then challenged the remainder of the panel on several grounds. He objected to the order of the Court directing the Supervisors to make a selection of 300 jurors, claiming that it was not made in conformity with the Code. He criticised the returns made by the Sheriff in that they did not show whether service was made on the jurors in person or whether the subpoenas were left at their homes. He also claimed that the certificate of the Supervisors was defective, in that erasures of names had been made and

JUDGE JOHN C. GRAY,
Before whom Dr. J. Ellis Rodley will come up for trial.

DR. RODLEY IS ON TRIAL FOR FORGERY.

Chico Physician Before Butte County Jury—Accused of Committing to Secure Control of a Pioneer's Estate.

OROVILLE, January 25.—The trial of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley for forgery began in the Superior Court Tuesday, but nearly the entire day was spent in argument over the manner in which the jurymen had been selected. Attorney George Collins of San Francisco, who, with Guy Kennedy and Grove L. Johnson, are the attorneys for the defendant, objected to the order of the Court instructing the Supervisors to draw jurymen. He objected to the manner in which the Supervisors had selected the names, to the list of names as returned by the Supervisors to the Clerk and to the returns of the Clerk to the Sheriff. After much argument the Supervisors were summoned to appear in court and explain fully the manner in which the jurymen had been selected. Then Judge Gray overruled all of the objections of the defense and the selection of jurors began.

Yesterday afternoon and most of to-day was spent in getting a jury. Every peremptory challenge on the part of the defense was used. The first witness placed on the stand was Charles E. Belding, deputy county clerk. He was asked by the prosecution if he was deputy county clerk. To this Collins objected and said the records were the best evidence. He was informed that Belding had been appointed by H. [illegible] Lausen and the latter had been appointed by the Board of Supervisors. He then asked that the records be brought in to show the appointment of Lausen, his certificate of appointment, his oath of office and finally that Lausen be brought into court himself. This occasioned so much delay that court adjourned until to-morrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Dr. Rodley is accused of the crime of perjury in swearing that he signed the will of the late Alfred Fuller. The prosecution claims that Fuller had been dead for eight months when the defendant signed the will as a witness. The following are the names of the jurors to try the case: Joseph Gress, K. Wakinham, I. H. Moseley, F. B. Van Ness, A. F. Hatt, H. Chaplin, H. Bushmann, I. F. Crum, James Cotart, E. B. Shaw, J. M. Nelson and N. Woodward.

VOL XLVI. CHICO, CALIFORNIA, THU

SELECTION OF JURORS IS NOW PROGRESSING

Judge Gray Decides That the Panel Was Legally Drawn and Must Stand.

FOUR OF FIRST TWELVE TAKEN

Strong Indication That Rodley Will Make a Desperate Effort to Discredit Colonel Batchelder's Testimony

The continuation of the trial of Dr. J Ellis Rodley this morning in the Superior Court was marked by a dull monotone of legal quibbles that to the outsider seem entirely foreign to the matter at issue. That the case will be a long and hardly fought legal battle, the tactics of Attorney Collins, for the defense, leaves no reason to doubt. His objections to the validity of the drawing of the present jury panel are based upon purely technical grounds, but they serve to draw out the case and add at least one day's proceedings to the record. At convening of court this morning the attendance was large and the seating capacity of the room is already severely taxed, although it is difficult to see how the proceedings could have any public interest.

Judge Gray announced as preliminary to the proceedings that Mrs. McCallan of Glenn county would act as official reporter with Miss Gray as assistant. Mrs. F Hall of San Francisco was also present, acting as the reporter for the defense. The Court also announced and it was made a part of the record that he denied the application of the defense for a change of Judge, to which an exception was noted.

The five Supervisors from the various districts were placed upon the stand as well as Deputy Clerk Belding and Sheriff Wilson to testify regarding the manner in which the three hundred names from the body of the county were selected, how their fitness according to the assessment roll was determined, and why certain erasures and substitutions were made. The Supervisors agreed in their statements that the list was prepared in regular session, personally selected according to the population of the various districts, and that they received no suggestions as to the fitness of certain names. The deputy clerk told how he had written in certain names and erased others because they were found not to be on the assessment roll, and that the changes were made before the list was attested and filed. Attorney Collins is striving to show that the panel and the entire list of jurymen for the year were not drawn in a strict compliance with the statute. There was little doubt however that the objections would be overruled on the ground that even if it was not strictly complied with no material right of the defendant had been interfered with. The examination of these witnesses occupied all the time up to the noon recess.

On convening of Court for the afternoon session the hearing on the motion for disallowing the panel of jurymen was continued, and brief arguments were made by Attorney George D Collins in favor of the motion, and District Attorney Sproul against it.

Judge Gray decided the question at once by determining that the panel was legally drawn and that no material rights of the defendant would be materially injured by its acceptance. Hence, the motion was denied, to which ruling Attorney Collins interposed an exception.

The impanelment of jurymen was then commenced. The first twelve drawn from the box were: Joseph Goss, L W Wakeham, Thos Truxell, George Duensing, Charles Crane, H P Helms, J R Moseley, J N Cole, John Joeckel, E R Van Ness, F S Rowe and E J Brandt.

The prosecution had few questions to ask the jurymen, but the defense had a long series of inquiries to make regarding their qualifications. They wanted to know of the jurymen, whether they were acquainted with the principal actors, and particularly, whether, in case H. T. Batchelder went on the stand and made a statement of facts, and Dr. Rodley went on the stand and made statements directly contrary, they would believe Batchelder or Rodley. It is apparent from the nature of the questions asked the jurymen by the defense, that an effort will be made to discredit the testimony of H. T. Batchelder, and it is a matter of rumor that the basis of the attack on his testimony will be somewhat sensational.

John Garner, hale and hearty, was brought into the courtroom at the request of the defense in order that he might be identified when the jurymen were asked if they were acquainted with him. It was an embarrassing ordeal for Garner.

Out of the first twelve jurymen, Truxel, Duensing, Cole, Helms and Brandt were challenged by the defense for cause, they having formed a fixed opinion, and the challenges were allowed. Van Ness was also challenged, but the challenge was disallowed. Joeckel was peremptorily challenged by the prosecution, and Crane and Rowe were peremptorily challenged by the defense.

Of the twelve first called four passed the muster, they being as follows: Joseph Goss of Durham, L Wakeham of Bangor, J R Moseley of Berry Creek and E R Van Ness of Paradise. These four were ordered into the charge of Sheriff Wilson, and the Sheriff was given instructions to keep all local papers from them and if they are allowed to read the San Francisco or any other papers, all reference to the case must be cut out before the papers are delivered to them.

An adjournment was then taken until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Dr. J. Ellis Rodley.
Now on trial for perjury in conection with the Alfred Fuller Will.

All Pages Noway.

In order to secure more space for local and general news all the pages of the RECORD will be printed at night, thus making it possible to use the second and third pages for local as well as the outside pages. In order to accomplish this it is necessary to abandon the old custom of printing the inside during the afternoon of the day previous to the day of publication, and to print it in the future about 11 o'clock at night. This change will be a benefit to the readers, as local news can be handled with more detail. Read the second page for additional local news.

TASK OF SECURING A JURY IS COMPLETED

Attorney Collins Causes Hours of Delay on the First Inquiry For Testimony

SEARCHING FOR MISLAID PAPERS

Prosecution Must Prove That Belding Was the Legally Appointed Deputy Clerk—Mrs Houseworth Appears

Special to The Record

OROVILLE, Jan. 26.—When court convened this morning at half-past nine o'clock the attendance was not as large as on previous days, but before noon the room had filled up, and although nothing but the examination of jurors was the order, public interest seems to be unabated. The four jurymen who were chosen yesterday appeared freshly shaven and with the appearance of having passed a restful night in the custody of the Sheriff. They have comfortable quarters in the jury room where beds are provided them and their meals are brought in to them from a restaurant.

Four jurymen having been selected yesterday, the trial proceeded with the drawing of eight more names. The series of questions was almost identical with those asked yesterday, except occasionally the defense asked if the talesman were acquainted with G. W. Mowrey, the foreman of the Grand Jury which indicted Rodley.

Of the first eight Geo. Hable was challenged by the defense for having a fixed opinion and the challenge was allowed. A. Greenwood was excused because he was not on the assessment roll. R. J. Hampton was challenged by the defense, but the challenge was not allowed and he was afterward peremptorily challenged and excused. E. Finnegan was excused for having an opinion and Frank Cross on account of defective hearing. Of the number Jas. Cozort of Hurleton, J. E. Crum of Bidwell Bar and A. J. Batt of Forbestown were acceptable to both sides and were sworn to try the cause.

Five more were then drawn, Jacob Scherr of Chico was excused on account of defective hearing and R M Coon, J S Hamilton and W R Stevenson were challenged by the defense, the three latter peremptorily. H Bushmann of Paradise was sworn to try the case. Of the next lot H Chaplin of Palermo was the only one satisfactory to the defense, A W Morse, M Ditzler and D Beckman being challenged. This left three to be selected. J I Gellick and Emmons White were peremptorily challenged by the defense and J H Messinger excused for not being on the assessment roll. The next three met with the same fate, A F Chase being excused because he was not on the assessment roll and A M Honeful and S A McCoy were challenged by the defense. At this point the defense announced that it had exhausted its peremptory challenges, the prosecution having used but one. At the hour of the noon recess F R Welsh, E B Shaw and Joseph Copeland were awaiting examination touching their qualifications to serve.

When Court reconvened for the afternoon session, the examination of jurors was resumed. F R Welch of Oroville was first called, and was excused on challenge by the defense, as it was apparent that he entertained a very fixed opinion. William Copeland was peremptorily challenged by the defense.

E B Shaw was acceptable to both sides, and was sworn in.

J M Nelson of Durham and N Woodward of Chico answered all questions satisfactorily to the prosecution and defense, and were sworn in. The defense had exhausted its allowance of peremptory challenges and had to accept both.

These two completed the jury, which is composed as follows: Joseph Goss of Durham, L. Wakeman of Bangor, J. R. Moseley at Berry Creek, E. R. Van Ness of Paradise, James Cozort of Hurleton, J. F Crum of Bidwell Bar,

Attorney Guy R. Kennedy.

A. J. Batt of Forbestown, H. Bushmann of Paradise, H. Chaplin of Palermo, E B. Shaw of Biggs, J. M. Nelson of Durham and N Chapman of Chico.

The general opinion is that the jury is an exceptionally intelligent and capable one, and that their judgment will be accepted by the public as final.

Judge Gray announced that all of the jurymen of this panel who were not taken, are dismissed until next Tuesday morning, and that those from Chico will look into the Chico RECORD to ascertain if they are needed on that day.

At this point Attorney Collins interposed an objection to the reading of the indictment charging Dr. Rodley with perjury. His objection was based on the ground that it was not an indictment under the law.

The objection was overruled and an exception was taken.

Deputy Clerk Belding then read the indictment.

District Attorney Sproul followed with his opening statement for the People. He set forth the many facts which he expected to prove. He told of the life and death of the old miner, of how the will was brought before the court, the appearance of the will, of the testimony of Dr. Rodley that he had with John Garner attested the will in Fuller's presence. He would prove that Dr. Rodley had obtained the signature of John Garner as an attesting witness by promising to pay him $3000. In fact, he declared in detail that he would prove all those facts showing a conspiracy to rob the estate of Alfred Fuller which were brought out at the trial of the contest of the will bequeathing to Mrs. Houseworth nearly the entire estate.

District Attorney Sproul having announced that he would not attack the previous good character of Dr. Rodley, Judge Gray informed the attorneys for the defendant that they would be limited to eight witnesses with whom to establish the good character of their client.

Attorney Collins took an exception to this ruling.

The taking of testimony was then begun, Deputy Clerk C. F. Belding being called to the stand. The first question asked brought out an objection from Attorney Collins which caused a delay of several hours, thus making it still more apparent that the defense will fight on technicalities from start to finish.

The initial question asked by Sproul which caused the trouble was whether witness was the Deputy County Clerk in 1898. Collins objected on the ground that the documents were the best evidence. Belding was dispatched to get the documents, and in the meantime the attorneys entered into a lengthy argument, in which new questions were raised which seemed to tangle things up still further. It was urged by Attorney Collins that it was necessary to prove that C. F. Belding was in fact the legally appointed deputy when he was administering oaths.

The discussion led up to the creation of a great desire on the part of the prosecution to find the certificates of appointment of Belding as Deputy Clerk, not only by Batchelder, but by ex-Clerk Lawson and ex-Clerk Harkness. A subpoena was issued for Lawson. It was nearly 6 o'clock when court adjourned, and up to that hour the desired papers had not been found.

Tonight it is understood that the searchers are on track of the missing documents.

In the trial of a case of so much importance as the one at hand, it is essential that an attorney be employed who is thoroughly conversant with local conditions which may have bearing upon the case. Of the attorneys in Butte county, Dr. Rodley selected Guy R Kennedy of Chico. While Mr. Kennedy is acting in a secondary capacity in Court, he is not to receive less credit for the able manner in which the interests of the defense are being cared for. The technicalities to be relied upon will be studied by both Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Collins, but the important work of securing evidence and digging up all data for the defense has been and is being done by Mr. Kennedy. Collins and Kennedy are certainly a strong team, and Rodley, if found guilty, can never say that his case was not ably handled.

Attorney Grove L. Johnson, who was heralded shortly after Rodley's arrest as being the defendant's leading attorney, has not as yet appeared on the scene, and it is rumored today that he will not appear, the reason given being that he cannot afford to be away from his place in the State Legislature during the extra session. It is possible, however, that Dr. Rodley is not exceedingly anxious that he should appear, as it has been stated on quite excellent authority that Grove L's charges are rather high; that his proposition to Rodley called for $100 per day, and for the payment of the money each morning for each day's service.

Mrs. Houseworth, the beneficiary under the will, was brought from her cell in the jail to the courtroom this morning for the purpose of identification by the jurymen. Mrs. Houseworth had the appearance of having passed through a long, severe illness, and her manner in the courtroom was not such as to indicate any bravado.

DAMAGING TESTIMONY BY H. T. BATCHELDER

Story Told of Rodley's Efforts to Get Him to Attest the Will

WAS CALLED BY LETTER TO CHICO

Witness Thought He Had Destroyed the Writing—Had Kept all a Secret—Cross-Examination

Special to THE RECORD

OROVILLE, January 26. — The efforts to prove that C F Belding is the legally appointed deputy county clerk of Butte county, and therefore was qualified to administer oath to Dr. Rodley has been the cause of the much carrying back and forth between the clerk's office and the courtroom of books and documents and the officers of the court have resolved themselves into a seemingly endless procession of messengers laden with dusty documents from the forgotten archives of the county, in order that Mr. Collins of the defense may be fully satisfied that clear back till 1884 the county clerk's office has been legally filled. At the convening of court this morning relley after volley was fired at the attorneys for the defense from the documentary evidence cannon which had been brought into action during the night by the prosecution, and from the time when Ed Harkness was duly declared elected to the time when he resigned, the asking by petition for the appointment of H D Lauren, his election and his appointment of Belding as deputy were all proven to the entire satisfaction of everybody and the real taking of testimony was begun. To prove that Belding is the legal Deputy County Clerk had occupied about four hours of time yesterday and to-day.

Belding was again called to the stand to testify that he was in court on the 23d day of November 1893, but the defense objected that the documents were the best evidence, and there was consequently more official trailing back and forth from the courtroom bearing books and papers. Finally it was shown that he was in court and his minutes were read showing that Rodley was duly sworn and testified.

Mrs. Minnie James was sworn and read the minutes of the court taken during the time of the probate of the alleged will of Fuller, and the testimony of Rodley as given, of which the indictment is a summary.

Belding also identified the will of Fuller as the one which was identified by Rodley on the day the alleged crime of perjury was committed.

